is not that all that is required? Why am I, too, like the rest of the world, whose relation to God is so different, and whose judgment is so necessary, still brought into judgment?" This would be legitimate enough, probably, if it were not for what follows. But the slander of ver. 8, which forms part of the same question as τί ἔτι κἀγὼ κ.τ.λ., and to which reference is made again in chap. vi. 1, 15, had not the Jews, but the Apostle in his Christian character, for its object; hence it seems preferable to take the κἀγὼ as referring strictly to himself. That Paul would come into judgment, in spite of the fact that his faithlessness in becoming a Christian had only set off the faithfulness of God to Israel, no unbelieving Jew questioned: and Paul turns this conviction of theirs (with which, of course, he agrees, so far as it asserts that he will be judged) against themselves. If he, for his part, cannot evade judgment, on the ground that his sin (as they think it) has been a foil to God's righteousness, no more can they on their part: they and he are in one position, and must be judged together: to condemn him is to expose themselves to condemnation; that is his point. The argument of ver. 7 is both an argumentum ad hominem and an argumentum ad rem: Paul borrows from his opponents the premises that he himself is to be judged as a sinner, and that his lie has set off God's truth: there is enough in these premises to serve his purpose, which is to show that these two propositions which do not exclude each other in his case do not do so in their case either. But, of course, he would interpret the second in a very different way from them. The question is continued in ver. 8, though the construction is changed by the introduction of the parentheses with καθὼς and the attachment to λέγειν ὅτι of the clause which would naturally have gone with τί μή; If judgment could be evaded by sinning to the glory of God, so Paul argues, he and other Christians like him might naturally act on the principle which slander imputed to them—that of doing evil that good might come. No doubt the slander was of Jewish origin. The doctrine that righteousness is a gift of God, not to be won by works of law, but by faith in Jesus Christ, can always be misrepresented as immoral: "sin the more, it will only the more magnify grace" Paul does not stoop to discuss it. The judgment that comes on those who by such perversions of reason and conscience seek to evade all judgment is just. This is all he has to say.

Vers. 9-20. In these verses the Apostle completes his proof of the universality of sin, and of the liability of all men, without exception, to judgment. The τί οὖν of ver. 9 brings back the argument from the digression of vers. 1-8. In those verses he has shown that the historical prerogative of the Jews, as the race entrusted with the oracles of God, real and great as it is, does not exempt them from the universal rule that God will reward every man according to his works (ii. 6): here, according to the most probable interpretation of προεχόμεθα, he puts himself in the place of his fellow-countrymen, and imagines them asking, "Are we surpassed? Is it the Gentiles who have the advantage of us, instead of our having the advantage of them?"

Ver. 9. Τί οὖν; What then? i.e., how, then, are we to understand the situation? It is necessary to take these words by themselves, and make προεχόμεθα a separate question: the answer to τί could not be οὔ, but must be οὐδέν. The meaning of προεχόμεθα has been much discussed. The active προέχειν means to excel or surpass. Many have taken προεχόμεθα as middle in the same sense: So the Vulg. praecellimus eos? and the A.V. "Are we better than they?" But this use, except in interpreters of this verse, cannot be proved. The ordinary meaning of the middle would be "to put forward on one's own account, as an excuse, or defence". This is the rendering in the margin of the R.V. "Do we excuse ourselves?" If τί οὖν προεχόμεθα could be taken together, it might certainly be rendered, What then is our plea? but it is impossible to take προεχόμεθα in this sense without an object, and impossible, as already explained, to make this combination. The only alternative is to regard προεχόμεθα as passive: What then? are we excelled? This is the meaning adopted in the R.V. "Are we in worse case than they?" It is supported by Lightfoot. Wetstein quotes one example from Plut. de Stoic.contrad., 1038 D.: τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς πᾶσι προσήκει,

"Ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι δίκαιος οὐδὲ εἷς· 11. οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ συνιῶν,[1] οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ ἐκζητῶν τὸν Θεόν. 12. πάντες ἐξέκλιναν, ἅμα ἠχρειώθησαν[2]· οὐκ

[1] ο συνιων; om. ο ABG vulg.; ins. ℵDKL. The ο before εκζητων is also omitted BG, and in both places, in text though not in marg., by W. and H. (marg., ο ζητων). This ζητων is the reading in B.

[2] ηχρεωθησαν ℵAB[1]D[1]G. ουκ εστιν ποιων, so ABG; but ℵD have ο ποιων. W. and H. put the former in text, the latter in marg. The second ουκ εστιν is om. in B 67[2] and in the marg. of W. and H.

κατ᾽ οὐδὲν προεχομένοις ὑπὸ τοῦ Διός: "who are in nothing surpassed by Zeus". The word would thus express the surprise of the Jew at seeing his prerogatives disappear; "if this line of argument be carried further," he may be supposed to say, "the relative positions of Jew and Gentile will turn out to be the very reverse of what we have believed". This is the idea which is negatived in οὐ πάντως. Strictly speaking, the οὐ should modify πάντως, and the meaning be "not in every respect": in some respects (for instance, the one referred to in ver. 2), a certain superiority would still belong to the Jew. But to allude to this seems irrelevant, and there is no difficulty in taking the words to mean, "No: not in any way". See Winer, p. 693 f. "We are not surpassed at all, we who are Jews, for we have already brought against Jews and Greeks alike the charge of being all under sin." ὑπὸ ἁμαρτίαν, cf. vii. 14, Gal. iii. 22. The idea is that of being under the power of sin, as well as simply sinful: men are both guilty and unable to escape from that condition.

Ver. 10. The long series of quotations, beginning with this verse, has many points of interest. The καθὼς γέγραπται with which it is introduced, shows that the assertion of indiscriminate sinfulness which the Apostle has just made, corresponds with Scripture testimony. It is as if he had said, I can express my opinion in inspired words, and therefore it has God upon its side. The quotations themselves are taken from various parts of the O.T. without distinction; no indication is given when the writer passes from one book to another. Thus vv. 10-12 are from Ps. xiv. 1-3; ver. 13 gives the LXX of Ps. v. 9; ver. 14 corresponds best to Ps. x. 7; in vv. 15-17 there is a condensation of Is. lix. 7 f.; and in ver. 18 we have part of the first verse of Ps. xxxvi. No attention whatever is paid to the context. The value of the quotations for the Apostle's purpose has been disputed. It has been pointed out that in Ps. xiv., for instance, there is mention of a people of God, "a generation of the righteous," as well as of the godless world; and that in other passages only the contemporaries of the writer, or some of them, and not all men in all times, are described. Perhaps if we admit that there is no possibility of an empirical proof of the universality of sin, it covers the truth there is in such comments. Paul does not rest his case on these words of Scripture, interpreted as modern exegetical science would interpret them. He has brought the charge of sin against all men in chap. i. 17, in announcing righteousness as the gift of the Gospel; in chap. i. 18-32 he has referred to the facts which bring the charge home to Gentile consciences; in chap. ii. he has come to close quarters with evasions which would naturally suggest themselves to Jews: and in both cases he has counted upon finding in conscience a sure ally. Hence we do not need to lay too heavy a burden of proof on these quotations: it is enough if they show that Scripture points with unmistakable emphasis in the direction in which the Apostle is leading his readers. And there can be no doubt that it does so. As Gifford well says on ver. 18: "In the deep inner sense which St. Paul gives to the passage, 'the generation of the righteous' would be the first to acknowledge that they form no exception to the universal sinfulness asserted in the opening verses of the Psalm".

Ver. 10. Οὐκ ἔστιν δίκαιος οὐδὲ εἷς. There is something to be said for the idea that this is Paul's thesis, rather than a quotation of Ps. xiv. 3. Ps. xiv. 3 is correctly quoted in ver. 12, and the Apostle would hardly quote it twice: δίκαιος, too, seems chosen to express exactly the conclusion to which he means to come in ver. 20. Still, the words come after καθὼς γέγραπται: hence they must be Scripture, and there is nothing they resemble so much as a free rendering of Ps. xiv. 3.

ἔστι ποιῶν χρηστότητα, οὐκ ἔστιν ἕως ἑνός." 13. "τάφος ἀνεῳγμένος ὁ λάρυγξ αὐτῶν, ταῖς γλώσσαις αὐτῶν ἐδολιοῦσαν"· "ἰὸς ἀσπίδων ὑπὸ τὰ χείλη αὐτῶν". 14. "ὧν τὸ στόμα [1] ἀρᾶς καὶ πικρίας γέμει." 15. "ὀξεῖς οἱ πόδες αὐτῶν ἐκχέαι αἷμα· 16. σύντριμμα καὶ ταλαιπωρία ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς αὐτῶν· 17. καὶ ὁδὸν [e] εἰρήνης οὐκ ἔγνωσαν." 18. "οὐκ ἔστι φόβος Θεοῦ ἀπέναντι τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν." 19. οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι ὅσα ὁ νόμος λέγει, τοῖς [f] ἐν τῷ νόμῳ λαλεῖ· ἵνα πᾶν στόμα [g] φραγῇ, καὶ [h] ὑπόδικος γένηται πᾶς ὁ κόσμος

e Luke i. 79.
f Ch. iv. 10.
g Heb. xi. 33.
h Here only.

[1] στομα; after στομα B 17 read αυτων. This Hebr. idiom may be right, and W. and H. put αυτων in marg.

Ver. 11. οὐκ ἔστιν συνίων. For the form (συνίων or συνιῶν), see Winer, p. 97. If we read ὁ συνίων the meaning is, There is no one to understand: if the article (as in the LXX) be omitted, There is no one who has sense.

Ver. 12. ἠχρεώθησαν is the LXX rendering of נֶאֱלָחוּ, which means "to become sour," "to turn" (of milk): one and all they have become good for nothing. χρηστότητα usually signifies kindness, and so it is rendered in 2 Cor. vi. 6, Eph. ii. 7, Col. iii. 12, Tit. iii. 4 (cf. Rom. ii. 4, xi. 22: goodness): here it answers to Hebrew טוֹב and means "good". οὐκ ἔστιν ἕως ἑνός, non est usque ad unum (Vulg.), which may be even more exactly given in the Scottish idiom: there is not the length of one.

Ver. 13. τάφος . . . ἐδολιοῦσαν is an exact quotation of Ps. v. 10 (LXX). The original seems to describe foreign enemies whose false and treacherous language threatened ruin to Israel. For the form ἐδολιοῦσαν, see Winer, p. 91 (f.). The termination is common in the LXX: Wetstein quotes one grammarian who calls it Boeotian and another Chalcidic; it was apparently widely diffused. The last clause, ἰὸς ἀσπίδων κ.τ.λ., is Ps. cxxxix. 4, LXX.

Ver. 14. Ps. ix. 28, LXX, freely quoted: (Ps. x. 7, A.V.). αὐτῶν after στόμα (W. and H., margin) is a Hebrew idiom which the LXX has in this passage, only in the singular: οὗ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ.

Vers. 15-17. These verses are rather a free extract from, than a quotation of, Is. lix. 7, 8. They describe the moral corruption of Israel in the age of the prophet. According to Lipsius, σύντριμμα καὶ ταλαιπωρία refer to the spiritual misery which comes upon the Jews in the path of self-righteousness. But it is much more natural to suppose that the Apostle is pointing to the destruction and misery which human wickedness inflicts on others, than to any such spiritual results of it. It is as if he had said, "Wherever they go, you can trace them by the ruin and distress they leave behind". The same consideration applies to ver. 17. It does not mean, "They have failed to discover the way of salvation," but "they tread continually in paths of violence".

Ver. 18. Ps. xxxv. 2, LXX, with αὐτῶν for αὐτοῦ. This verse at once sums up and explains the universal corruption of mankind.

Ver. 19. At this point the first great division of the epistle closes, that which began with chap. i. 18, and has been occupied with asserting the universal prevalence of sin. "We know that whatever the law says, it says to those who are in the law," i.e., to the Jews. For the distinction of λέγειν (in which the object is the main thing) and λαλεῖν (in which the speaker and the mode of utterance are made prominent), see Trench, Synonyms, § lxxvi., and commentary on John viii. 43. It is most natural to suppose that by "the things the law says" Paul means the words he has just quoted from the O.T. These words cannot be evaded by the very persons to whom the O.T. was given, and who have in it, so to speak, the spiritual environment of their life. In this case, ὁ νόμος is used in the wider sense of the old revelation generally, not specifically the Pentateuch, or even the statutory part of Scripture. For this use of the word, cf. 1 Cor. xiv. 21, where ἐν τῷ νόμῳ introduces a quotation from Is. xxviii. 11: and John x. 34 (your law), xv. 25 (their law), both prefacing quota-τῷ Θεῷ. 20. διότι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου οὐ δικαιωθήσεται πᾶσα σὰρξ ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ· διὰ γὰρ νόμου ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας.

tions from Psalms (lxxxii. 6, xxxv. 19). At first sight there seems a disparity between the two parts of the verse. How does the fact that those who are under the law are impeached and condemned by such utterances of the law as those just quoted subserve the Divine intention to stop every mouth and make all the world answerable to God? We must suppose that all other men—that is, the Gentiles, who are not under the law—are convicted already; and that what is needed to prepare the way for the universal Gospel of grace is that those who have been under law should admit concerning themselves, what they are prompt enough to assert of all others ("sinners of the Gentiles": Gal. ii. 15), that they have not a word to say, and are liable to God's judgment. ὑπόδικος is a classical word, found here only in the N.T. Sanday and Headlam remark its "forensic" character.

Ver. 20. διότι means "because," not "therefore," as in A.V. The rendering "therefore" is perhaps due to the difficulty which the translators had in putting an intelligible meaning into "because". The sense seems to be: Every mouth must be stopped, and all the world shown to be liable to God's judgment, because by works of law no flesh shall be justified before Him. This last proposition—that no flesh shall be justified in this way—is virtually an axiom with the Apostle: it is a first principle in all his spiritual thinking, and hence everything must be true which can be deduced from it, and everything must take place which is required to support it. Because this is the fundamental certainty of the case, every mouth must be stopped, and the strong words quoted from the law stand where they do to secure this end. The explanation of this axiom is to be found in its principal terms—flesh and law. Flesh primarily denotes human nature in its frailty: to attain to the righteousness of God is a task which no flesh has strength to accomplish. But flesh in Paul has a moral rather than a natural meaning; it is not its weakness in this case, but its strength, which puts justification out of the question; to justify is the very thing which the law cannot do, and it cannot do it because it is weak owing to the flesh (cf. viii. 3). But the explanation of the axiom lies not only in "flesh," but in "law". "By the law comes the full knowledge of sin." (ἐπίγνωσις, a favourite Pauline word: fifteen times used in his epistles.) This is its proper, and indeed its exclusive function. There is no law given with power to give life, and therefore there are no works of law by which men can be justified. The law has served its purpose when it has made men feel to the full how sinful they are; it brings them down to this point, but it is not for it to lift them up. The best exposition of the passage is given by the Apostle himself in Gal. ii. 15 f., where the same quotation is made from Ps. cxliii. 2, and proof given again that it applies to Jew and Gentile alike. In ἐξ ἔργων νόμου, νόμος, of course, is primarily the Mosaic law. As Lipsius remarks, no distinction is drawn by the Apostle between the ritual and the moral elements of it, though the former are in the foreground in the epistle to the Galatians, and the latter in that to the Romans. But the truth would hold of every legal dispensation, and it is perhaps to express this generality, rather than because νόμος is a technical term, that the article is omitted. Under no system of statutes, the Mosaic or any other, will flesh ever succeed in finding acceptance with God. Let mortal man, clothed in works of law, present himself before the Most High, and His verdict must always be: Unrighteous.

Vers. 21-26. The universal need of a Gospel has now been demonstrated, and the Apostle proceeds with his exposition of this Gospel itself. It brings what all men need, a righteousness of God (see on i. 17); and it brings it in such a way as to make it accessible to all. Law contributes nothing to it, though it is attested by the law and the prophets; it is a righteousness which is all of grace. Grace, however, does not signify that moral distinctions are ignored in God's procedure: the righteousness which is held out in the Gospel is held out on the basis of the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. It is put within the sinner's reach at a great cost. It could never be offered to him—it could never be manifested, or indeed have any real existence—but for the propitiatory virtue of the blood of Christ. Christ a propitiation is the inmost soul of the Gospel for sinful men. If God had not set Him forth in this character, not only must we

21. Νυνὶ δὲ χωρὶς νόμου δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ πεφανέρωται, μαρτυρουμένη ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου καὶ τῶν [i] προφητῶν· 22. δικαιοσύνη δὲ Θεοῦ διὰ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας [1] τοὺς πιστεύοντας· οὐ γάρ ἐστι [k] διαστολή. 23. πάντες γὰρ ἥμαρτον, καὶ ὑστεροῦνται despair for ever of attaining to a Divine righteousness; all our attempts to read the story of the world in any consistency with the character of God must be baffled. Past sins God seemed simply to ignore: He treated them apparently as if they were not. But the Cross is "the Divine theodicy for the past history of the world" (Tholuck); we see in it how seriously God deals with the sins which for the time He seemed to pass by. It is a demonstration of His righteousness—that is, in the widest sense, of His consistency with His own character,—which would have been violated by indifference to sin. And that demonstration is, by God's grace, given in such a way that it is possible for Him to be (as He intends to be) at once just Himself, and the justifier of those who believe in Jesus. The propitiatory death of Jesus, in other words, is at once the vindication of God and the salvation of man. That is why it is central and fundamental in the Apostolic Gospel. It meets the requirements, at the same time, of the righteousness of God and of the sin of man.

[i] Matt. v. 17; Acts xiii. 15.
[k] Ch. x. 12; 1 Cor. xiv. 7.

[1] και επι παντας; so ℵ[3]DFGKL, but om. ℵ[1]ABC. The words are omitted by Lachm., Tischdf., Tregelles, W. and H., but retained by Weiss, who explains the omission by homœoteleuton. As επι παντας alone is found in very good MSS. of the vulg. and in John of Damascus, the received text may be a combination of this and the true reading.

Ver. 21. νυνὶ δὲ: but now. All time is divided for Paul into "now" and "then". Cf. Eph. ii. 12 f., τῷ καιρῷ ἐκείνῳ . . . νυνὶ δέ; 2 Cor. v. 16, ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν: the reception of the Gospel means the coming of a new world. χωρὶς νόμου: legal obedience contributes nothing to evangelic righteousness. It is plain that in this expression νόμος does not signify the O.T. revelation or religion as such, but that religion, or any other, conceived as embodied in statutes. It is statutory obedience which (as Paul has learned by experience) cannot justify. Hence νόμος has not exactly the same sense here as in the next clause, ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου κ. τῶν προφητῶν, where the whole expression is equal to the O.T., and the meaning is that the Gospel is not alien to the religion of Israel, but really finds attestation there. This is worth remarking, because there is a similar variation in the meaning of δικαιοσύνη between vv. 21 and 25, and in that of ἡ δόξα τοῦ θεοῦ between iii. 23 and v. 2. To deny that words which mean so much, and are applied so variously, can convey different shades of meaning, even within the narrow limits of a few verses, is to deny that language shares in the life and subtlety of the mind. πεφανέρωται: once for all the righteousness of God has been revealed in the Gospel. Cf. xvi. 26, Col. i. 26, 2 Tim. i. 10, 1 Peter i. 20, Heb. ix. 8, 26.

Ver. 22. δικαιοσύνη δὲ θεοῦ. The δὲ is explicative: "a righteousness of God (see on chap. i. 17) [ver. 21], and that a righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ". In the Epistle to the Hebrews Jesus Christ is undoubtedly set forth as a pattern of faith: ἀφορῶντες εἰς τὸν τῆς πίστεως ἀρχηγὸν καὶ τελειωτὴν Ἰησοῦν, Heb. xii. 2. Cf. Heb. ii. 13; but such a thought is irrelevant here. It is the constant teaching of Paul that we are justified (not by sharing Jesus' faith in God, as some interpreters would take it here, but) by believing in that manifestation and offer of God's righteousness which are made in the propitiatory death of Jesus. εἰς πάντας καὶ ἐπὶ πάντας: the last three words are omitted by ℵABC and most edd. If genuine, they add no new idea to εἰς πάντας; see Winer, p. 521. For διαστολή, cf. x. 12. The righteousness of God comes to all on the terms of faith, for all alike need it, and can receive it only so.

Ver. 23. ἥμαρτον must be rendered in English "have sinned"; see Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 54. ὑστεροῦνται expresses the consequence = and so come short of the glory of God. To emphasise the middle, and render "they come short, and feel that they do so," though suggested by the comparison of Mt. xix. 20 with Lk. xv. 14 (Gifford), is not borne out by the use of the N.T. as a whole. The most one could say is that sibi is latent in the middle: to their loss (not necessarily to their sensible or conscious loss) they come short. The present tense implies that but for sin men might be in enjoyment of "ἡ δόξα τοῦ θεοῦ". Clearly this cannot be the same as the future heavenly glory of God spoken of in v. 2: as in John v. 44, xii. 43, it must be the approbation or praise of God. This sense of δόξα is easily derived from that of "reputation," resting on the praise or approval of others. Of course the approbation which God would give to the sinless, and of which sinners fall short, would be identical with justification.

Matt. x. 8; 2 Cor. xi. 7; Rev. xxi. 6, xxii. 17.

τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, 24. δικαιούμενοι [1] δωρεὰν τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι, διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, 25. ὃν προέθετο ὁ Θεὸς

Ver. 24. δικαιούμενοι: grammatically, the word is intractable. If we force a connection with what immediately precedes, we may say with Lipsius that just as Paul has proved the universality of grace through the universality of sin, so here, conversely, he proves the universal absence of merit in men by showing that they are justified freely by God's grace. Westcott and Hort's punctuation (comma after τοῦ θεοῦ) favours this connection, but it is forced and fanciful. In sense δικαιούμενοι refers to πάντας τοὺς πιστεύοντας, and the use of the nominative to resume the main idea after an interruption like that of ver. 23 is rather characteristic than otherwise of the Apostle. δωρεὰν is used in a similar connection in Gal. ii. 21. It signifies "for nothing". Justification, we are told here, costs the sinner nothing; in Galatians we are told that if it comes through law, then Christ died "for nothing". Christ is all in it (1 Cor. i. 30): hence its absolute freeness. τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι repeats the same thing: as δωρεὰν signifies that we contribute nothing, τῇ αὐτοῦ χάριτι signifies that the whole charge is freely supplied by God. αὐτοῦ in this position has a certain emphasis. διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως τῆς ἐν Χ. Ἰ. The justification of the sinful, or the coming to them of that righteousness of God which is manifested in the Gospel, takes effect through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Perhaps "liberation" would be a fairer word than "redemption" to translate ἀπολύτρωσις. In Eph. i. 7, Col. i. 14, Heb. ix. 15, it is equal to forgiveness. Ἀπολύτρωσις itself is rare; in the LXX there is but one instance, Dan. iv. 29, in which ὁ χρόνος μου τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως signifies the time of Nebuchadnezzar's recovery from his madness. There is here no suggestion of price or cost. Neither is there in the common use of the verb λυτροῦσθαι, which in LXX represents גָּאַל and פָּדָה, the words employed to describe God's liberation of Israel from Egypt (Is. xliii. 3 does not count). On the other hand, the classical examples favour the idea that a reference to the cost of liberation is involved in the word. Thus Jos., Ant., xii. 2, 3: πλειόνων δὲ ἢ τετρακοσίων ταλάντων τὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως γενήσεσθαι φαμένων κ.τ.λ.; and Philo, Quod omnis probus liber, § 17 (of a Spartan boy taken prisoner in war) ἀπογνοὺς ἀπολύτρωσιν ἄσμενος ἑαυτὸν διεχρήσατο, where it is at least most natural to translate "having given up hope of being held to ransom". In the N.T., too, the cost of man's liberation is often emphasised: 1 Cor. vi. 20, vii. 23, 1 Pet. i. 18 f., and that especially where the cognate words λύτρον and ἀντίλυτρον are employed: Mc. x. 45, 1 Tim. ii. 6. The idea of liberation as the end in view may often have prevailed over that of the particular means employed, but that some means—and especially some cost, toil or sacrifice—were involved, was always understood. It is implied in the use of the word here that justification is a liberation; the man who receives the righteousness of God is set free by it from some condition of bondage or peril. From what? The answer is to be sought in the connection of i. 17 and i. 18: he is set free from a condition in which he was exposed to the wrath of God revealed from heaven against sin. In Eph. i. 7, Col. i. 14, ἀπολύτρωσις is plainly defined as remission of sins: in Eph. i. 14, Rom. viii. 23, 1 Cor. i. 30, it is eschatological.

Ver. 25 f. But the question whether the word ἀπολύτρωσις involves of itself a reference to the cost at which the thing is accomplished is after all of minor consequence: that cost is brought out unambiguously in ver. 25. The ἀπολύτρωσις is in Christ Jesus, and it is in Him as One whom God set forth in propitiatory power, through faith (or, reading διὰ τῆς πίστεως, through the faith referred to), in His blood. προέθετο in Eph. i. 9 (cf. Rom. i. 13) is "purposed"; but here the other meaning, "set forth" (Vulg. proposuit) suits the context much ἱλαστήριον διὰ τῆς πίστεως[1] ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι, εἰς [m] ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ, διὰ τὴν πάρεσιν τῶν προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων

m 2 Cor. viii. 24; Phil. i. 28.

[1] δια της πιστεως; so BC³D³KL 17, but om. της ℵC¹D¹F, Origen. Most critical edd. omit, but W. and H. give it a place in marg. Weiss puts it in text, and emphasises it with ref. to ver. 22.

better. ἱλαστήριον has been taken in various ways. (1) In the LXX it is the rendering of כַּפֹּרֶת, (A.V.) "mercy-seat". In one passage at least, Ex. xxv. 16, כַּפֹּרֶת is rendered ἱλαστήριον ἐπίθεμα, which is possibly a combination of two translations—a literal one, a "lid" or "covering"; and a figurative or spiritual one, "a propitiatory". Many scholars argue that Paul's use must follow that of the LXX, familiarity with which on the part of his readers is everywhere assumed. But the necessity is not quite apparent; and not to mention the incongruities which are introduced if Jesus is conceived as the mercy-seat upon which the sacrificial blood—His own blood—is sprinkled, there are grammatical reasons against this rendering. Paul must have written, to be clear, τὸ ἱλαστήριον ἡ μ ῶ ν, or some equivalent phrase. Cf. 1 Cor. v. 8 (Christ our passover). A "mercy-seat" is not such a self-evident, self-interpreting idea, that the Apostle could lay it at the heart of his gospel without a word of explanation. Consequently (2) many take ἱλαστήριον as an adjective. Of those who so take it, some supply θῦμα or ἱερεῖον, making the idea of sacrifice explicit. But it is simpler, and there is no valid objection, to make it masculine, in agreement with ὅν: "whom God set forth in propitiatory power". This use of the word is sufficiently guaranteed by Jos., Ant., xvi. 7, 1: περίφοβος δ' αὐτὸς ἐξῄει καὶ τοῦ δέους ἱλαστήριον μνῆμα . . . κατεσκευάσατο. The passage in 4 Macc. xvii. 22 (καὶ διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τῶν εὐσεβῶν ἐκείνων καὶ τοῦ ἱλαστηρίου [τοῦ] θανάτου αὐτῶν ἡ θεία πρόνοια τὸν Ἰσραὴλ προκακωθέντα διέσωσεν) is indecisive, owing to the doubtful reading.* Perhaps the grammatical question is insoluble; but there is no question that Christ is conceived as endued with propitiatory power, in virtue of His death. He is set forth as ἱλαστήριος(ν) ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι. It is His blood that covers sin. It seems a mere whim of rigour to deny, as Weiss does, that the death of Christ is here conceived as sacrificial. It is in His blood that Christ is endued with propitiatory power; and there is no propitiatory power of blood known to Scripture unless the blood be that of sacrifice. It is not necessary to assume that any particular sacrifice—say the sin offering—is in view; neither is it necessary, in order to find the idea of sacrifice here, to make ἱλαστήριον neuter, and supply θῦμα; it is enough to say that for the Apostle the ideas of blood with propitiatory virtue, and sacrificial blood, must have been the same. The precise connection and purpose of διὰ (τῆς) πίστεως is not at once clear. Grammatically, it might be construed with ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι; cf. Eph. i. 15, Gal. iii. 26 (?), Mk. i. 15; but this lessens the emphasis due to the last words. It seems to be inserted, almost parenthetically, to resume and continue the idea of ver. 22, that the righteousness of God which comes in this way,—namely, in Christ, whom God has set forth in propitiatory power in virtue of His death—comes only to those who believe. Men are saved freely, and it is all God's work, not in the very least their own; yet that work does not avail for any one who does not by faith accept it. What God has given to the world in Christ, infinitely great and absolutely free as it is, is literally nothing unless it is

* Seeberg, Der Tod Christi, S. 185, adduces it with the reading τοῦ θανάτου, to support the view that in ἱλαστήριον (as a substantive) Paul is thinking not of the concrete Kapporeth, but only of that on account of which this sacred article received its name; in other words, of a covering by which that is hidden from God's eyes on account of which He would be obliged to be angry with men. It is possible to take ἱλαστήριον as a substantive = a means of propitiation (as this passage from 4 Macc. shows, if we read τοῦ θανάτου), without special allusion to the כַּפֹּרֶת. But see Deissmann, Bibelstudien, S. 121 ff.

ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 26. πρὸς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ νῦν [n] καιρῷ, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον καὶ δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἐκ πίστεως

n Ch. viii. 18, xi. .

taken. Faith must have its place, therefore, in the profoundest statement of the Gospel, as the correlative of grace. Thus διὰ (τῆς) πίστεως, though parenthetic, is of the last importance. With εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ κ.τ.λ. we are shown God's purpose in setting forth Christ as a propitiation in His blood. It is done with a view to demonstrate His righteousness, owing to the passing by of the sins previously committed in the forbearance of God. God's righteousness in this place is obviously an attribute of God, on which the sin of the world, as hitherto treated by Him, has cast a shadow. Up till now, God has "passed by" sin. He has "winked at" (Acts xvii. 30) the transgressions of men perpetrated before Christ came (προ-γεγονότων), ἐν τῇ ἀνοχῇ αὐτοῦ. The last words may be either temporal or causal: while God exercised forbearance, or because He exercised it, men sinned, so to speak, with impunity, and God's character was compromised. The underlying thought is the same as in Ps. l. 21: "These things hast Thou done, and I kept silence: Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as Thyself". Such had been the course of Providence that God, owing to His forbearance in suspending serious dealing with sin, lay under the imputation of being indifferent to it. But the time had now come to remove this imputation, and vindicate the Divine character. If it was possible once, it was no longer possible now, with Christ set forth in His blood as a propitiation, to maintain that sin was a thing which God regarded with indifference. Paul does not say in so many words what it is in Christ crucified which constitutes Him a propitiation, and so clears God's character of the charge that He does not care for sin: He lays stress, however, on the fact that an essential element in a propitiation is that it should vindicate the Divine righteousness. It should proclaim with unmistakable clearness that with sin God can hold no terms. (The distinction between πάρεσις, the suspension, and ἄφεσις, the revocation, of punishment, is borne out, according to Lightfoot, Notes on Epp. of St. Paul, p. 273, by classical usage, and is essential here.) In ver. 26 this idea is restated, and the significance of a propitiation more fully brought out. "Yes, God set Him forth in this character with a view to demonstrate His righteousness, that He might be righteous Himself, and accept as righteous him who believes in Jesus." The words ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ refer to the Gospel Age, the time in which believers live, in contrast to the time when God exercised forbearance, and men were tempted to accuse Him of indifference to righteousness. πρὸς, as distinguished from εἰς, makes us think rather of the person contemplating the end than of the end contemplated; but there is no essential difference. τὴν ἔνδειξιν: the article means "the ἔνδειξις already mentioned in ver. 25". But the last clause, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ., is the most important. It makes explicit the whole intention of God in dealing with sin by means of a propitiation. God's righteousness, compromised as it seemed by His forbearance, might have been vindicated in another way; if He had executed judgment upon sin, it would have been a kind of vindication. He would have secured the first object of ver. 26: "that He might be righteous Himself". But part of God's object was to justify the ungodly (chap. iv. 5), upon certain conditions; and this could not be attained by the execution of judgment upon sin. To combine both objects, and at once vindicate His own righteousness, and put righteousness within reach of the sinful, it was necessary that instead of executing judgment God should provide a propitiation. This He did when He set forth Jesus in His blood for the acceptance of faith. (Häring takes the ἔνδειξις of God's righteousness here to be the same as the "revelation" of δικαιοσύνη θεοῦ in i. 17, or the "manifestation" of it in iii. 21; but this is only possible if with him we completely ignore the context, and especially the decisive words, διὰ τὴν πάρεσιν τῶν προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων.) The question has been raised whether the righteousness of God, here spoken of as demonstrated at the Cross, is His judicial (Weiss) or His penal righteousness (Meyer). This seems to me an unreal question; the righteousness of God is the whole character of God so far as it must be conceived as inconsistent with any indifference about sin. It is a more serious question if we ask what it is in Christ set forth by God in His blood which at once vindicates

Ἰησοῦ. 27. Ποῦ οὖν ἡ καύχησις; ἐξεκλείσθη. διὰ ° ποίου νόμου; o Acts iv. 7. τῶν ἔργων; οὐχί, ἀλλὰ διὰ νόμου πίστεως. 28. λογιζόμεθα οὖν [1]

[1] ουν; so BCD³KL 17, but γαρ ℵAD¹F, Origen-interp. The division of authorities here is like that in ver. 25, and the edd. decide in the same way. W. and H. put γαρ in text, ουν in marg. Weiss puts ουν in text. πιστει δικαιουσθαι ℵ³KL 17, but δικαιουσθαι πιστει ℵ¹ABCD.

God's character and makes it possible for Him to justify those who believe. The passage itself contains nothing explicit—except in the words ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι. It is pedantic and inept to argue that since God could have demonstrated His righteousness either by punishment or by propitiation, therefore punishment and propitiation have no relation to each other. Christ was a propitiation in virtue of His death; and however a modern mind may construe it, death to Paul was the doom of sin. To say that God set forth Christ as a propitiation in His blood is the same thing as to say that God made Him to be sin for us. God's righteousness, therefore, is demonstrated at the Cross, because there, in Christ's death, it is made once for all apparent that He does not palter with sin; the doom of sin falls by His appointment on the Redeemer. And it is possible, at the same time, to accept as righteous those who by faith unite themselves to Christ upon the Cross, and identify themselves with Him in His death: for in doing so they submit in Him to the Divine sentence upon sin, and at bottom become right with God. It is misleading to render εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον κ. δικαιοῦντα, "that He might be just and yet the justifier," etc.: the Apostle only means that the two ends have equally to be secured, not that there is necessarily an antagonism between them. But it is more than misleading to render "that He might be just and therefore the justifier": there is no conception of righteousness, capable of being clearly carried out, and connected with the Cross, which makes such language intelligible. (See Dorner, System of Christian Doctrine, iv., 14, English Translation.) It is the love of God, according to the consistent teaching of the New Testament, which provides the propitiation, by which God's righteousness is vindicated and the justification of the ungodly made possible. τὸν ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ is every one who is properly and sufficiently characterised as a believer in Jesus. There is no difficulty whatever in regarding Ἰησοῦ as objective genitive, as the use of πιστεύειν throughout the N.T. (Gal. ii. 16, e.g.) requires us to do: such expressions as τῷ ἐκ πίστεως Ἀβραάμ (iv. 16) are not in the least a reason to the contrary: they only illustrate the flexibility of the Greek language. See on ver. 22 above.

Vers. 27-31. In these verses the positive exposition of the righteousness of God as offered to faith through the redemption in Christ Jesus, is concluded. The Apostle points out two inferences which can be drawn from it, and which go to commend it to religious minds. The first is, that it excludes boasting. A religious constitution under which men could make claims, or assume anything, in the presence of God, must necessarily be false; it is at least one mark of truth in the Christian doctrine of justification that by it such presumption is made impossible. The second is, that in its universality and its sameness for all men, it is consistent with (as indeed it flows from) the unity of God. There can be no step-children in the family of God; a system which teaches that there are, like that current among the Jews, must be wrong; a system like the Christian, which excludes such an idea, is at least so far right. In ver. 31 an objection is raised. The whole system just expounded may be said to make Law void—to stultify and disannul all that has ever been regarded as in possession of Divine moral authority in the world. In reality, the Apostle answers in a word, its effect is precisely the reverse: it establishes law.

Ver. 27. ποῦ οὖν; where, since this is the case, is boasting? ἐξεκλείσθη: for the use of the tense, cf. ἐβλήθη and ἐξηράνθη in John xv. 6; it is equivalent to, "is peremptorily, or once for all, shut out". διὰ ποίου νόμου; By what kind of law? In other words, How is the "law," the divinely appointed spiritual order, or constitution, which excludes boasting, to be characterised? Is it by "the works" which it prescribes, and which those who live under it perπίστει δικαιοῦσθαι ἄνθρωπον, χωρὶς ἔργων νόμου. 29. ἢ Ἰουδαίων ὁ Θεὸς μόνον[1]; οὐχὶ δὲ καὶ ἐθνῶν; ναί, καὶ ἐθνῶν· 30. ἐπείπερ[2] εἷς ὁ [p] Θεός, ὃς δικαιώσει περιτομὴν ἐκ πίστεως, καὶ ἀκροβυστίαν διὰ τῆς πίστεως. 31. νόμον οὖν καταργοῦμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως; μὴ γένοιτο· ἀλλὰ νόμον ἱστῶμεν.[3] p 1 Tim. ii. 4 ff.

[1] μονον ℵACFKL 17; μονων B (W. and H. marg.). δε om. ℵABCDFK.

[2] For επειπερ ℵ¹ABCD² read ειπερ, and so most editors; but Weiss regards επειπερ (which is not found elsewhere in the N.T.) as the true reading.

[3] For ιστωμεν, ℵ¹ABCD²F, etc., read ιστανομεν.

form? No: its character is given when we call it a constitution or law of "faith". Νόμος in these brief questions is evidently used in a wide sense to denote the religious order or system under which men live, regarded as established by God, and having His authority; the O.T. religion and the N.T. religion, unlike, and in some ways opposed, as they are, are alike νόμος—divine institutes.

Ver. 28. λογιζόμεθα γάρ: see critical note. In λογιζόμεθα there is no idea of an uncertain conclusion: it rather suggests the confident self-consciousness of the reasoner. ἄνθρωπον is not "any human being," as if beings of another sort could be justified otherwise: it is like the German "man" or "one". Cf. 1 Cor. iv. 1, vii. 1, xi. 28, Gal. ii. 16. The sharp distinction drawn between faith and works of law, as characterising two different religious systems, shows that faith must not itself be interpreted as a work of law. In principle it is a renunciation of all such confidence as legal obedience inspires.

Ver. 29 f. ἢ Ἰουδαίων ὁ Θεὸς μόνον; The only way to evade the conclusion of ver. 28 would be to suppose—as is here presented by way of alternative—that God is a God of Jews only. But the supposition is impossible: there is only one God, and therefore He must be God of all, of Gentiles and Jews alike. This is assumed as an axiom by the Apostle. εἴπερ is the best attested reading, but the argument seems to require that it should "approximate to the sense of ἐπείπερ" (Simcox, Language of the N.T., p. 171), which is a variant: "if, as is the fact".* It is simplest to read ver. 30 as explaining and confirming what precedes: He is God of the Gentiles also, if as is the fact God is one; and (consequently) He will justify the circumcision on the ground of faith and the uncircumcision by means of faith. δικαιώσει is probably logical, rather than temporal, whether the reference be made to the last judgment, or to each case, as it arises, in which God justifies. Lightfoot insists on drawing a distinction between ἐκ πίστεως and διὰ τῆς πίστεως in this passage. "The difference," he says, "will perhaps best be seen by substituting their opposites, οὐ δικαιώσει περιτομὴν ἐκ νόμου, οὐδὲ ἀκροβυστίαν διὰ τοῦ νόμου: when, in the case of the Jews, the falsity of their starting-point, in the case of the Gentiles, the needlessness of a new instrumentality, would be insisted on." (Notes on Epistles of St. Paul, p. 274.) But a comparison of ii. 26, v. 1, ix. 30, Gal. iii. 8 (Weiss), shows that Paul does not construe the prepositions so rigorously: and in point of fact, what he does insist upon here is that justification is to be conceived in precisely the same way for Jew and Gentile. The ἐκ πίστεως and διὰ τῆς πίστεως serve no purpose but to vary the expression.

Ver. 31. νόμον οὖν καταργοῦμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως; Do we then annul "law" through the faith we have been discussing? Perhaps if Law were written with a capital letter, it would suggest the true meaning. The Apostle speaks as from the consciousness of a Jewish objector: is all that we have ever called Law—the whole Jewish religion—that divinely established order, and everything of the same nature—made void by faith? God forbid, he answers: on the contrary, Law is set upon a secure footing; for the first time it gets its rights. To prove this was one of the main tasks lying upon the Apostle of the New Covenant. One species of proof is given in chap iv.,

* But εἴπερ = if God is indeed one (which no Jew, the supposed interlocutor, would deny).

IV. 1. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν Ἀβραὰμ τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν εὑρηκέναι κατὰ σάρκα[1]; 2. εἰ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ ἐξ ἔργων ἐδικαιώθη, ἔχει καύχημα, ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν.[2] 3. τί γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; "Ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. 4. τῷ δὲ ἐργαζομένῳ ὁ μισθὸς οὐ λογίζεται κατὰ [a] χάριν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ ὀφεί- a Ver. 16.

[1] The T.R. Αβρααμ τον πατερα ημων ευρηκεναι is found in KLP, Theodoret and later fathers. For πατερα, προπατορα is read in ℵ[1]ABC[1], etc. ευρηκεναι stands before Αβρααμ in ℵACDFG lat. and Egypt. versions, etc. In B 47[1] ευρηκεναι is omitted. The omission (see commentary) gives the easiest and most suitable text. W. and H. omit it from their text but put it in marg. after ερουμεν. The R.V. omits it in marg., inserting it in text. Weiss retains it.

[2] προς τον θεον; om. τον ℵABCD[1]F.

where he shows that representative saints under the Old Dispensation, like Abraham, were justified by faith. That is the Divine order still, and it is securer than ever under the Gospel. Another kind of proof is given in chaps. vi.-viii., where the new life of the Christian is unfolded, and we are shown that "the just demands of the law" are fulfilled in believers, and in believers only. The claim which the Apostle makes here, and establishes in these two passages, is the same as that in our Lord's words: I came not to destroy (the law or the prophets), but to fulfil.

CHAPTER IV.—Vers. 1-8. The justification of Abraham, considered in relation to the doctrine just expounded in iii. 21-31. The point to be made out is that the justification of Abraham does not traverse but illustrates the Pauline doctrine.

Ver. 1 The force of οὖν seems to be that the case of Abraham, as commonly understood, has at least the appearance of inconsistency with the Pauline doctrine. "What, then, i.e., on the supposition that vers. 21-31 in chap. iii. are a true exposition of God's method, shall we say of Abraham, our forefather according to the flesh? Does not his case present a difficulty? For if he was justified by works (as one may assume), he has ground for boasting (whereas boasting, according to the previous argument, iii. 27, is excluded)." This seems to me by far the simplest interpretation of the passage. The speaker is a Jewish Christian, or the Apostle putting himself in the place of one. κατὰ σάρκα goes with τὸν προπάτορα ἡμῶν, because the contrast with another kind of fatherhood belonging to Abraham is already in the Apostle's thoughts: see ver. 11. If the reading εὑρηκέναι be adopted (see critical note), no change is necessary in the interpretation. To take κατὰ σάρκα with εὑρηκέναι, as though the question were: What shall we say that our forefather Abraham found in the way of natural human effort, as opposed to the way of grace and faith? is to put a sense on κατὰ σάρκα which is both forced and irrelevant. The whole question is, What do you make of Abraham, with such a theory as that just described?

Ver. 2 f. With ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς τὸν θεόν the Apostle summarily repels the objection. "You say he has ground of boasting? On the contrary, he has no ground of boasting in relation to God, For what does the Scripture say? Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to Him for righteousness." The quotation is from Gen. xv. 6, and is exactly as in the LXX, except that Paul writes ἐπίστευσεν δὲ τῷ θεῷ instead of καὶ ἐπίστευσεν τῷ θεῷ, which serves partly to bring out the contrast between the real mode of Abraham's justification, and the mode suggested in ver. 2, partly to give prominence to faith, as that on which his argument turned. The reading ἐπίστευσεν δὲ is also found in Jas. i. 23, Philo i., 605 (Mangey), as well as Clem. Rom., I., x., 6, and Just. Martyr, Dial., 92: so that it was probably current, and not introduced by Paul. It is assumed that something not in itself righteousness was reckoned to Abraham as righteousness; only on this assumption is boasting in his case excluded.

Ver. 4 f. The faith of Abraham, in whatever way it may be more precisely determined by relation to its object, agrees with Christian faith in the essential characteristic, that it is not a work. To him who works—der mit Werken umgehet: Luther—the reward

b Ver. 24; Acts ix. 42. c Ch. ii. 26, ix. 8.

λημα· 5. τῷ δὲ μὴ ἐργαζομένῳ, πιστεύοντι δὲ ᵇἐπὶ τὸν δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἀσεβῆ,[1] λογίζεται ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ εἰς ᶜδικαιοσύνην. 6. καθάπερ καὶ Δαβὶδ λέγει τὸν μακαρισμὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ᾧ ὁ Θεὸς λογίζεται δικαιοσύνην, χωρὶς ἔργων, 7. "Μακάριοι ὧν ἀφέθησαν αἱ ἀνομίαι, καὶ ὧν ἐπεκαλύφθησαν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι. 8. μακάριος ἀνὴρ ᾧ[2] οὐ μὴ is reckoned, not by way of grace (as in Abraham's case), but by way of debt. But to him who does not work, i.e., who does not make works his ground of hope toward God—but believes on Him who justifies the ungodly, his faith is reckoned for righteousness. Ver. 5 describes the category under which Abraham falls, but is not a generalisation from his case. The ἀσεβὴς (Gen. xviii. 23, Prov. xi. 31, chap. v. 6) is a person who has no claim to justification: if he is justified, it must be not on the ground of works, but freely, by God's grace, on which he relies through faith. Of course to believe in this grace of God is to do something; in that sense it is a work; but it is to do something which involves a complete renunciation of hope in anything we can do without God. It excludes merit, boasting, justification ἐξ ἔργων. Cf. Philo, i., 486 (quoted in Mayor on Jas. i. 21): δίκαιον γὰρ οὕτως οὐδὲν ὡς ἀκράτῳ καὶ ἀμιγεῖ τῇ πρὸς θεὸν μόνον πίστει κεχρῆσθαι . . . τὸ ἐπὶ μόνῳ τῷ ὄντι βεβαίως καὶ ἀκλινῶς ὁρμεῖν . . . δικαιοσύνης μόνον ἔργον. The whole Pauline gospel could be summed up in this one word—God who justifies the ungodly. Under that device, what room is there for any pretensions or claims of man? It is sometimes argued (on the ground that all God's actions must be "ethical") that God can only pronounce just, or treat as just, those who actually are just; but if this were so, what Gospel would there be for sinful men? This "ethical" gospel is identical with the Pharisaism in which Paul lived before he knew what Christ and faith were, and it led him to despair. It leads all men either to despair or to a temper which is that of the Pharisee rather than the publican of Luke xviii. What it can never beget is the temper of the Gospel. The paradoxical phrase, Him that justifieth the ungodly, does not suggest that justification is a fiction, whether legal or of any other sort, but that it is a miracle. It is a thing that only God can achieve, and that calls into act and manifestation all the resources of the Divine nature. It is achieved through an unparalleled revelation of the judgment and the mercy of God. The miracle of the Gospel is that God comes to the ungodly, with a mercy which is righteous altogether, and enables them through faith, in spite of what they are, to enter into a new relation to Himself, in which goodness becomes possible for them. There can be no spiritual life at all for a sinful man unless he can get an initial assurance of an unchanging love of God deeper than sin, and he gets this at the Cross. He gets it by believing in Jesus, and it is justification by faith. The whole secret of New Testament Christianity, and of every revival of religion and reformation of the Church is in that laetum et ingens paradoxon, θεὸς ὁ δικαιῶν τὸν ἀσεβῆ.

[1] ασεβη; for this ℵD¹FG have the form ασεβην, on which see Winer, p. 76.

[2] For ῳ ℵ³ACD³FKL ου is found in ℵ¹BD¹G (so LXX in ℵ¹AB). W. and H. put ου in text, ῳ in marg. ου is the better supported reading, but ῳ "naturally established itself as the more euphonious" (S. and H.).

Ver. 6 ff. καθάπερ καὶ Δαβὶδ: David is not a new illustration of this doctrine, but a new witness to it. The argument just based on Gen. xv. 6 is in agreement with what he says in the 32nd Psalm. The quotation exactly reproduces the LXX. λέγει τὸν μακαρισμὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου: "pronounceth blessing upon the man," etc. (R.V.): or, speaks the felicitation of the man. He does so in the exclamation with which the Psalm opens. Obviously to impute righteousness without works, and freely to forgive sins, are to Paul one and the same thing. Yet the former is not a merely negative idea: there is in it an actual bestowment of grace, an actual acceptance with God, as unlike as possible to the establishment of an unprejudiced neutrality between God and man, to which the forgiveness of sins is sometimes reduced.

Vers. 9-12. In these verses the justification of Abraham appears in a new light. In virtue of its ground in his faith, he is not only a forefather κατὰ λογίσηται Κύριος ἁμαρτίαν." 9. Ὁ [d] μακαρισμὸς οὖν οὗτος, ἐπὶ τὴν περιτομὴν, ἢ καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν ἀκροβυστίαν; λέγομεν γὰρ ὅτι ἐλογίσθη τῷ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ πίστις εἰς δικαιοσύνην. 10. πῶς οὖν ἐλογίσθη; ἐν περιτομῇ ὄντι, ἢ ἐν ἀκροβυστίᾳ; οὐκ ἐν περιτομῇ, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν ἀκροβυστίᾳ· 11. καὶ σημεῖον ἔλαβε περιτομῆς,[1] [e] σφραγῖδα τῆς δικαιοσύνης τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ· εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν πατέρα πάντων τῶν πιστευόντων [f] δι᾽ ἀκροβυστίας, εἰς τὸ λογισθῆναι καὶ αὐτοῖς τὴν

d Gal. iv. 15.
e 2 Cor. i. 22; Eph. i. 13, iv. 30.
f Ch. ii. 27.

[1] περιτομης ℵBC²DFKL, etc.; περιτομην AC¹, etc.

σάρκα (i.e., the natural ancestor of the Jews), but he is the spiritual ancestor of all believers. The faith which was imputed to him for righteousness constitutes him such; it is the same in essence as Christian faith; and so it is a vital bond between him and all who believe, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. God's method has been the same through all history.

Ver. 9. ὁ μακαρισμὸς οὖν οὗτος: This felicitation, then, what is its extent? Does it apply to the circumcision only, or to the uncircumcision also? Just as vers. 1-8 correspond to iii. 27 f., so do vers. 9-12 correspond to iii. 29-31. God is not the God of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles also, and the Apostle's purpose here is to show that the felicitation of the justified in Ps. xxxii. is not limited by circumcision. λέγομεν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.: for our proposition is, that his faith was reckoned, etc.

Ver. 10. πῶς οὖν ἐλογίσθη; To say that his faith was reckoned as righteousness, without mentioning circumcision, suggests that the latter was at least not indispensable; still it is not decisive, and so the further question must be asked, How—i.e., under what conditions—was his faith thus reckoned to him? Was it when he was circumcised or when he was uncircumcised? History enables Paul to answer, Not when he was circumcised, but when he was uncircumcised. Abraham's justification is narrated in Gen. xv., his circumcision not till Gen. xvii., some fourteen years later: hence it was not his circumcision on which he depended for acceptance with God.

Ver. 11 f. On the contrary, he received a sign in circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had while uncircumcised. Both sign (אוֹת) and seal (חוֹתָם) are frequently used by Rabbinical writers to describe circumcision as a symbol or pledge that one is in covenant with God. So even of heathens: "Og was circumcised, and Moses feared מפני אות ברית שלו, propter signum foederis ejus". But usually of Jews: "Jonah shewed Leviathan sigillum (חותמו) Abrahami patris nostri". See Schoettgen, Wetstein, or Delitzsch, ad loc. περιτομῆς (for which W. and H. have in margin περιτομήν) must be a genitive of apposition. With εἰς τὸ εἶναι the Divine purpose in this relation of circumcision to justification in the case of Abraham is explained. Things were ordered as has been described that he might be father of all that believe while uncircumcised (as he himself did)—that the righteousness in question might be imputed to them; and father of circumcision (i.e., of persons circumcised) in the case of those who are not only circumcised, but also walk in the steps of the faith which he had while not circumcised. It was God's intention that Abraham should be the representative and typical believer, in whom all believers without distinction should recognise their spiritual father; the Divine method of justification was to be inaugurated and illustrated in him, as it should hold good for all who were to be justified: accordingly the whole process took place antecedent to his circumcision, and in no circumstances has circumcision any essential relation to this great blessing. For its true meaning and advantage see on ii. 25. On οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον, see Simcox, Language of the N.T., 184. The grammar in ver. 12 is faulty, and Westcott and Hort suspect a primitive error. Either τοῖς before στοιχοῦσιν must be omitted, or it must be changed, as Hort suggests, into αὐτοῖς, if we are to express the meaning correctly. The sense required by the context is not open to doubt. For δικαιοσύνην· 12. καὶ πατέρα περιτομῆς τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς στοιχοῦσι[1] τοῖς ἴχνεσι τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ πίστεως τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἀβραάμ. 13. Οὐ γὰρ διὰ νόμου ἡ [g] ἐπαγγελία τῷ Ἀβραὰμ ἢ τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ, τὸ κληρονόμον αὐτὸν εἶναι τοῦ[2] κόσμου, ἀλλὰ διὰ δικαιοσύνης πίστεως. 14. εἰ γὰρ οἱ ἐκ νόμου κληρονόμοι, κεκένωται ἡ πίστις, καὶ κατήργηται ἡ ἐπαγγελία· 15. ὁ γὰρ νόμος g Ch. ix. 4; Gal. iii. 17 ff.; Eph. ii. 12; iii. 6.

[1] τοις στοιχουσιν is found in all MSS. but cannot be right; see note in commentary below. Om. τῃ before ακροβυστιᾳ ℵABCD[1]F.

[2] Om. του before κοσμου ℵABCD, etc.

δι᾽ ἀκροβυστίας cf. ii. 27. For the dative τοῖς ἴχνεσιν see Philipp. iii. 16, Gal. v. 16, 25. But cf. also Winer, p. 274.

Vers. 13-15. The argument of vers. 9-12 is reiterated and confirmed here in other terms. Abraham is the father of all believers: for it is not through law that the promise is given to him or his seed, that he should be heir of the world—a condition which would limit the inheritance to the Jews, but through the righteousness of faith—a condition which extends it to all who believe. We might have expected a quasi-historical proof of this proposition, similar to the proof given in 10 f. that Abraham's justification did not depend on circumcision. But the Apostle takes another and more speculative line. Instead of arguing from the O.T. narrative, as he does in Gal. iii. 14-17, that the promise was given to a justified man before the (Mosaic) law was heard of, and therefore must be fulfilled to all independently of law, he argues that law and promise are mutually exclusive ideas. For (ver. 14) if those who are of law, i.e., Jews only, as partisans of law, are heirs, then faith (the correlative of promise) has been made vain, and the promise of no effect. And this incompatibility of law and promise in idea is supported by the actual effect of the law in human experience. For the law works wrath—the very opposite of promise. But where there is not law, there is not even transgression, still less the wrath which transgression provokes. Here, then, the other series of conceptions finds its sphere: the world is ruled by grace, promise and faith. This is the world in which Abraham lived, and in which all believers live; and as its typical citizen, he is father of them all.

Ver. 13. ἡ ἐπαγγελία is the Divine promise, which is identical with salvation in the widest sense. The word implies that the promise is held out by God of his own motion. The peculiar content here assigned to the promise, that Abraham should be heir of the world, is not found in so many words in the O.T. Schoettgen, on ver. 3, quotes Mechilta, fol. 25, 2. "Sic quoque de Abrahamo legimus, quod mundum hunc et mundum futurum non nisi ea de causa consecutus sit, quia in Deum credidit, q.d., Gen. xv. 6. And Wetstein, Tanchuma, 165, 1: Abrahamo patri meo Deus possidendum dedit cælum et terram. These passages prove that the idea was not unfamiliar, and it may be regarded as an extension of the promises contained in Gen. xii. 7, xvii. 8, xxii. 17. But what precisely did it mean? Possibly participation in the sovereignty of the Messiah. Abraham and his seed would then be heirs of the world in the sense of 1 Cor. vi. 2, 2 Tim. ii. 12. So Meyer and many others. In the connection in which the words stand, however, this seems strained; and the "rationalising" interpretation, which makes the world Abraham's inheritance through the spread of Abraham's faith, and the multiplication of his spiritual children, is probably to be preferred. The religion which is conquering the world is descended from him, its power lies in that faith which he also had, and in proportion as it spreads he inherits the world. τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ: not Christ, as in Gal. iii. 16, but Abraham's descendants in the widest sense. διὰ δικαιοσύνης πίστεως: it was not as one under law, but as one justified by faith, that Abraham had the promise given to him. In the narrative, indeed, the promise (Gen. xii. 7) antedates the justification (Gen. xv. 6), but it is repeated at later periods (see above): and as ver. 14 argues, promise, faith and justification are parts of one spiritual whole.

Ver. 14. κεκένωται cf. 1 Cor. i. 17, ix. 15, 2 Cor. ix. 3. κατήργηται: a ὀργὴν κατεργάζεται· οὗ γὰρ[1] οὐκ ἔστι νόμος, οὐδὲ παράβασις. 16. διὰ τοῦτο ἐκ πίστεως, ἵνα κατὰ [h] χάριν, εἰς τὸ εἶναι βεβαίαν τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν παντὶ τῷ σπέρματι, οὐ τῷ ἐκ τοῦ νόμου μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ ἐκ πίστεως Ἀβραάμ, ὅς ἐστι πατὴρ πάντων ἡμῶν, 17. (καθὼς [i] γέγραπται, "Ὅτι πατέρα πολλῶν ἐθνῶν τέθεικά σε,") κατέναντι οὗ ἐπίστευσε Θεοῦ, τοῦ [k] ζωοποιοῦντος τοὺς νεκροὺς, καὶ καλοῦντος τὰ h Ver. 4.

i Gen. xvii. 5.
k Ch. viii. 11; 1 Tim. vi. 13.

[1] ου γαρ; so ℵ[3]DFKLP, but ℵ[1]ABC ου δε.

favourite word of Paul, who uses it twenty-five times.

Ver. 15. ὀργήν: wrath, i.e., the wrath of God. See on i. 18. Under a legal dispensation sin is stimulated, and brought into clear consciousness: men come under the wrath of God, and know that they do. This is the whole and sole result of "the law," and hence law cannot be the means through which God administers His grace, and makes man the heir of all things. On the contrary, to attain this inheritance man must live under a regime of faith. οὗ δὲ: δὲ is the true reading (see critical note), not γάρ: but where law is not, neither is there παράβασις. It would not have been true to say οὐδὲ ἁμαρτία, for Paul in chap. ii. recognises the existence and guilt of sin even where men live ἀνόμως; but in comparison with the deliberate and conscious transgression of those who live ἐν νόμῳ, such sin is comparatively insignificant and venial, and is here left out of account. The alternative systems are reduced to two, Law and Grace (or Promise).

Vers. 16-22. The Apostle can now develop, without further interruption or digression, his idea of the representative (and therefore universal) character of Abraham's justification. The New Testament cannot be said to subvert the Old if the method of justification is the same under both. Nay, it establishes the Old (iii. 31). This is the point which is enforced in the closing verses of chap. iv.

Ver. 16 f. Διὰ τοῦτο: because of the nature of law, and its inability to work anything but wrath. ἐκ πίστεως: the subject is the promise, considered in reference to the mode of its fulfilment. ἵνα κατὰ χάριν: χάρις on God's part is the correlative of πίστις on man's. εἰς τὸ εἶναι βεβαίαν κ.τ.λ. This is the Divine purpose in instituting the spiritual order of grace and faith: it is the only one consistent with universalism in religion. οὐ τῷ ἐκ τοῦ νόμου μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ ἐκ πίστεως Ἀβραάμ: there seems to be some inexactness in expression here. The seed which is "of the Law" ought to mean the Jews, as partisans of law in distinction from faith: then the seed which is "of the faith of Abraham" would mean the Gentiles. But the promise did not belong at all to the seed which was "of the law," i.e., to the Jews, as Abraham's natural descendants; even in them, faith was required. And the seed which is "of the faith" of Abraham is not quite appropriate to describe Gentile believers exclusively; the very point of the argument in the passage is that the faith of Abraham is reproduced in all the justified, whether Gentile or Jew. Still there seems no doubt that the persons meant to be contrasted in the two clauses are Jewish and Gentile believers (Meyer), not Jews and Christians (Fritzsche, who supplies σπέρματι before Ἀβραάμ): the difficulty is that the words do not exactly suit either meaning.

ὅς ἐστιν πατὴρ πάντων ἡμῶν. The πάντων is emphatic, and ἡμῶν expresses the consciousness of one who has seen in Abraham the spiritual ancestor of the new Christian community, living (as it does), and inheriting the promise, by faith. Opponuntur haec verba Judaeis, qui Abrahamum non nominant nisi cum adjecto אבינו pater noster (Schoettgen). When Paul speaks out of his Jewish consciousness, he shares this pride ("whose are the fathers," ix. 5); when he speaks as a Christian, to whom the Church is "the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16), and who can even say "we are the circumcision," he claims all the Jews boasted of as in reality the property of believers: it is Christians, and not Jews by birth, who can truly say "We have Abraham to our father". The earliest indication (an indirect one) of the Jewish pride in Abraham is perhaps seen in Is. lxiii. 16. That Abraham is the father of us all agrees with Scripture: Gen. xvii. 5 LXX. The ὅτι belongs to the quotation. If there is any parenthesis, it should only μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα. 18. Ὃς παρ' ἐλπίδα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ἐπίστευσεν, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸν πατέρα πολλῶν ἐθνῶν, κατὰ τὸ εἰρημένον, "Οὕτως ἔσται τὸ σπέρμα σου". 19. καὶ μὴ ἀσθενήσας τῇ πίστει, [l]οὐ [1] κατενόησε τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σῶμα ἤδη [m]νενεκρωμένον, ἑκατονταέτης που ὑπάρχων, καὶ τὴν νέκρωσιν τῆς μήτρας Σάῤῥας· 20. εἰς δὲ τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ διεκρίθη τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, ἀλλ' [n]ἐνεδυναμώθη τῇ πίστει, δοὺς δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ, 21. καὶ πληροφορηθεὶς ὅτι ὃ ἐπήγγελται, δυνατός

l Here only in Paul.
m Heb. xi. 12.
n Eph. vi. 10; 2 Tim. ii. 1; Heb. xi. 34.

[1] ου κατενοησεν; so DFKLP, Syr. and lat. Om. ου ℵABC, best MSS. of vulg., etc. All the critical edd. omit ου, though both readings are widely and early attested; though the sense is quite good either way, the authorities for the omission are undoubtedly stronger. ηδη ℵACDKLP; om. BF 47, etc. W. and H. bracket. Weiss omits.

be from καθὼς to σέ. As Abraham has this character in Scripture, so he has it before God: the two things are one and the same; it is his true, historical, Divine standing, that he is father of all believers. The attraction in κατέναντι οὗ ἐπίστευσεν θεοῦ is most simply resolved into κ. θεοῦ ᾧ ἐπίστευσε: but see Winer, p. 204, 206. In characterising the God whom Abraham believed, the Apostle brings out further the correspondence between the patriarch's faith and that of Christians. He is "God who makes the dead alive and calls things that are not as though they were". Such a reference to Isaac as we find in Heb. xi. 19 (λογισάμενος ὅτι καὶ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγείρειν δυνατὸς ὁ θεός) is not suggested here (yet see ver. 24), and hence it is better to take ζωοπ. τοὺς νεκροὺς of restoring vitality to Abraham, whose body was as good as dead. In the application, the things that are not are the unborn multitudes of Abraham's spiritual children. God speaks of them (hardly, issues his summons to them) as if they had a being. Faith in a God who is thus conceived comes nearer than anything else in Paul to the definition given in Heb xi. 1. On τὰ μὴ ὄντα, see Winer, p. 608.

Ver. 18 ff. Abraham's faith described. It was both contrary to hope (as far as nature could give hope), and rested on hope (that God could do what nature could not). εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸν πατέρα κ.τ.λ. (cf. ver. 11) is most properly taken to express the Divine purpose—that he might become father, etc. (see Moulton's note in Winer, p. 414); not result—so that he became. κατὰ τὸ εἰρημένον, Οὕτως κ.τ.λ., Gen. xv. 5: the passage is familiar, and the οὕτως is supposed to suggest its own interpretation—the stars of the heaven.

μὴ ἀσθενήσας . . . κατενόησεν, without becoming weak in faith, he considered his own body. "The participle ἀσθενήσας, though preceding the verb, is most naturally interpreted as referring to a (conceived) result of the action denoted by κατενόησεν." Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 145. This remark holds good only with the reading κατενόησεν: if we read οὐ κατ. the meaning is, He considered not his body quippe qui non esset imbecillis (Winer, p. 610). ἑκατονταετής που (circiter) ὑπάρχων: his great age was the primary and fundamental fact in the situation: this seems to be the suggestion of ὑπάρχων as distinct from ὤν. In ver. 20 (εἰς δὲ τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν) the δὲ contrasts with becoming weak, as he considered his body, the actual conduct of Abraham. "He did not waver in relation to the promise, in unbelief; on the contrary, he was strengthened in faith." On διεκρίθη, cf. Mt. xxi. 21, Jas. i. 6, Rom. xiv. 23. τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ: instrum. dative; because of unbelief. It is simplest to take τῇ πίστει as dative of respect, though Heb. xi. 11 can be adduced by those who would render: "he became strong, recovered his bodily vigour, by faith". The participles in ver. 21 are loosely attached to the principal verbs, and are really equivalent to co-ordinate clauses with καί. In his whole conduct on this occasion Abraham glorified God, and demonstrated his own assurance of His power. See Burton, § 145. δοὺς δόξαν τῷ θεῷ: for this Hebraism see Josh. vii. 19, Jer. xiii. 16, John ix. 24, Acts xii. 23. For πληροφορηθεὶς xiv. 5, Col. iv. 12.

Ver. 22. διὸ: because of this signal faith, evinced so triumphantly in spite of all there was to quell it. ἐλογίσθη: i.e., his faith was reckoned to him as righteousness. That which needs to be reckoned as righteousness is not in itself righteousness — on this the Apostle's argument rests in vers. 1-8; yet it is not arbitrarily that faith is so reckoned. The spiritual attitude of a man, who is conscious that in himself he has no strength, and no hope of a future, and who nevertheless casts himself upon, and lives by, the word of God which assures him of a future, is the necessarily and eternally right attitude of all souls to God. He whose attitude it is, is at bottom right with God. Now this was the attitude of Abraham to God, and it is the attitude of all sinners who believe in God through Christ; and to him and them alike it is reckoned by God for righteousness. The Gospel does not subvert the religious order under which Abraham lived; it illustrates, extends, and confirms it.

ἐστι καὶ ποιῆσαι. 22. διὸ καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην. 23. Οὐκ ἐγράφη δὲ δι' αὐτὸν μόνον, ὅτι ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ. 24. ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ἡμᾶς, οἷς μέλλει λογίζεσθαι, τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἐπὶ τὸν ἐγεί-

Vers. 23-25. Conclusion of the argument. Οὐκ ἐγράφη δὲ δι' αὐτὸν μόνον: cf. xiv. 4, 1 Cor. ix. 10, x. 6, 11, Gal. iii. 8. The formula for quoting Scripture is not ἐγράφη but γέγραπται: i.e., Scripture conveys not a historical truth, relating to one person (as here, to Abraham), but a present eternal truth, with some universal application. δι' ἡμᾶς: to show the mode of our justification. οἷς μέλλει λογίζεσθαι: to whom it (the act of believing) is to be imputed as righteousness. μέλλει conveys the idea of a Divine order under which things proceed so. τοῖς πιστεύουσιν is in apposition to οἷς: "believing as we do". (Weiss.) The object of the Christian's faith is the same as that of Abraham's, God that giveth life to the dead. Only in this case it is specifically God as He who raised Jesus our Lord. Cf. 1 Pet. i. 21, where Christians are described as those who through Christ believe in God who raised Him from the dead. In Abraham's case, "God that quickeneth the dead" is merely a synonym for God Omnipotent, who can do what man cannot. In Paul, on the other hand, while omnipotence is included in the description of God—for in Eph. i. 19, in order to give an idea of the greatest conceivable power, the Apostle can do no more than say that it is according to that working of the strength of God's might which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead—omnipotence is not the sole object of the Christian's faith. His spiritual attitude toward God is the same as Abraham's, but God is revealed to him, and offered to his faith, in a character in which Abraham did not yet know Him. This is conveyed in the description of the Person in relation to whom the Omnipotence of God has been displayed to Christians. That Person is "Jesus our Lord, who was delivered up for our offences, and raised for our justification". The Resurrection of Jesus our Lord entitles us to conceive of God's Omnipotence not as mere unqualified power, but as power no less than infinite engaged in the work of man's salvation from sin. In the Resurrection of Jesus, omnipotence is exhibited as redeeming power: and in this omnipotence we, like Abraham, believe. παρεδόθη is used in LXX, Is. liii. 12, and its N.T. use, whether God or Christ be the subject of the παραδιδόναι (Rom. viii. 32: Gal. ii. 20, Eph. v. 2), may be derived thence. There is considerable difficulty with the parallel clauses διὰ τὰ παραπτώματα ἡμῶν, and διὰ τὴν δικαίωσιν ἡμῶν. It is safe to assert that Paul did not make an abstract separation between Christ's Death and His Resurrection, as if the Death and the Resurrection either had different motives, or served ends separable from each other. There is a sort of mannerism in the expression here, as there is in xiv. 9, which puts us on our guard against overprecision. This granted, it seems simplest and best to adopt such an interpretation as maintains the same meaning for διὰ in both clauses. This has been done in two ways. (1) The διὰ has been taken retrospectively. "He was delivered up because we had sinned, and raised because we were justified"—sc. by His death. But though Paul writes in v. 9, δικαιωθέντες νῦν ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ, it is impossible to believe that he would have written—as this interpretation requires him to do—that we were justified by Christ's death, and that Christ was therefore raised from the dead by God. Justification is not only an act of God, but a spiritual experience; it is dependent upon faith (iii. 25); and it is realised in men as one by one, in the time determined by Providence, they receive the Gospel. Hence διὰ τὴν δικαίωσιν ἡμῶν at least must be prospective.* (2) The διὰ has been taken in both clauses prospectively. "He was delivered up on account of our offences—to make atonement for them; and he was raised on account of our justification—that it might become an accomplished fact." That this interpretation is legitimate, so far as the language goes, cannot be questioned; and if we avoid unreal separations between things that really form one whole, it is thoroughly Pauline. Paul does ascribe expiatory value to the death or the blood of Christ; in that sense it is true the work of Christ was finished on the Cross. But Paul never thought of that by itself; he knew Christ only as the Risen One who had died, and who had the virtue of His atoning death ever in Him; this Christ was One, in all that He did and suffered—the Christ who had evoked in him the faith by which he was justified, the only Christ through faith in whom sinful men ever could be justified; and it is natural, therefore, that he should conceive Him as raised with a view to our justification. But it would have been equally legitimate to say that He died for our justification. It is only another way of expressing what every Christian understands—that we believe in a living Saviour, and that it is faith in Him which justifies. But then it is faith in Him as One who not only lives, but was delivered up to death to atone for our offences. He both died and was raised for our justification; the work is one and its end is one. And it is a mistake to argue, as Beyschlag does (Neutest. Theologie, ii., 164), that this reference of faith to the Risen Christ who died is inconsistent with the vicarious nature of His expiatory sufferings. That His sufferings had this character is established on independent grounds; and to believe in the Risen Christ is to believe in One in whom the power of that propitiatory vicarious suffering abides for ever. It is indeed solely because the virtue of that suffering is in Him that faith in the Risen Lord does justify. For an exposition of the passage, in which the retrospective force is given to διὰ, see Candlish in Expositor, Dec., 1893. See also Bruce, St. Paul's Conception of Christianity, p. 160 ff. The identity in principle of Abrahamic and Christian faith is seen in this, that both are faith in God. But Abraham's is faith in a Divine promise, which only omnipotence could make good; the Christian's is faith in the character of God as revealed in the work of redemption wrought by Christ. That, too, however, involves omnipotence. It was the greatest display of power ever made to man when God raised Christ from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places; and the Christ so raised was one who had been delivered to death for our offences. That is only another way of saying that the ultimate power in the world—the omnipotence of God—is in the service of a love which provides at infinite cost for the expiation of sin. The only right attitude for any human being in presence of this power is utter self-renunciation, utter abandonment of self to God. This is faith, and it is this which is imputed to men in all ages and under all dispensations for righteousness.

ραντα Ἰησοῦν τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν ἐκ νεκρῶν, 25. ὃς παρεδόθη διὰ τὰ o Ch. v. 18. παραπτώματα ἡμῶν, καὶ ἠγέρθη διὰ τὴν ° δικαίωσιν ἡμῶν.

CHAP. V.—Vers. 1-11. The blessings of Justification. The first section of the epistle (chap. i. 18-iii. 20) has proved man's need of the righteousness of God; the second (chap. iii. 21-30) has shown how that righteousness comes, and how it is appropriated; the third (chap. iii. 31-iv. 25) has shown, by the example of Abraham, and the testimony of David, that it does not upset, but establishes the spiritual order revealed in the O.T. The Apostle now, like David, enlarges on the felicity of the justified, and especially on their assurance of God's love and of future blessedness. We may describe the contents of vers. 1-11 in the words which he himself applies (iv. 6) to the 32nd psalm: λέγει τὸν μακαρισμὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ᾧ ὁ θεὸς λογίζεται δικαιοσύνην χωρὶς ἔργων.

Ver. 1. δικαιωθέντες takes up emphatically the δικαίωσιν of iv. 25: Christ's death and resurrection have not been in vain: there are those who have actually been justified in consequence.

---

* This, however, does not prevent us from conceiving of the resurrection of Christ as His public vindication, and the sign of God's acceptance of the work which He achieved in His death: in a certain sense, therefore, as His justification.

V. 1. ΔΙΚΑΙΩΘΕΝΤΕΣ οὖν ἐκ πίστεως, εἰρήνην ἔχομεν [1] πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 2. δι' οὗ καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐσχήκαμεν τῇ πίστει [2] εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτην ἐν ᾗ ἑστήκαμεν·

[1] εχομεν is found in correctors of ℵ and B, in FG (not in the Latin of these bilingual MSS.) and many cursives; εχωμεν in ℵ¹AB¹CDKL cursives, vulg., Syr., etc. The authority for the latter seems therefore overwhelming; but besides the exegetical reasons which have led interpreters to prefer the former, and which are noticed in the commentary, we have to consider the frequency with which ο and ω are confused even in the best MSS. Thus Weiss (Textkritik, S. 44 f.) gives the following instances in which ω is certainly wrong, and is not adopted by any editor: αφωρισας, Gal. i. 15 in B; ην ως αγκυραν εχωμεν, Heb. vi. 19 in DE; δι' ης εγγιζωμεν, Heb. vii. 19 in A 31; διαταξωμαι, 1 Cor. xi. 34 in ADEFG 37, 44, 47; προεχωμεθα, Rom. iii. 9 in AL; θερισωμεν, 1 Cor. ix. 11 in CDEFGLP and many cursives; αιρησωμαι, Phil. i. 22 in B; εισερχωμεθα, Heb. iv. 3 in AC 17, 37; συνβασιλευσωμεν, 2 Tim. ii. 12 in ACLP 109; θερισωμεν, Gal. vi. 9 in ℵCFGLP cursives. These are only samples, and though the attestation is more divided in these and similar cases than in Rom. v. 1, they are quite enough to show that in a variation of this kind no degree of MS. authority could support a reading against a solid exegetical reason for changing ω into ο. That such solid reason can be given here I agree with the expositors named below.

[2] τῃ πιστει ℵ¹CKLP, vulg., Syr. Om. BDF old lat. W. and H. bracket.

Having, therefore, been justified (the Apostle says), εἰρήνην ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν θεόν. The MSS. evidence is overwhelmingly in favour of ἔχωμεν, so much so that W. and H. notice no other reading, and Tischdf. says "ἔχωμεν cannot be rejected unless it is altogether inappropriate, and inappropriate it seemingly is not". But this last statement is at least open to dispute. There is no indication that the Apostle has finished his dogmatic exposition, and is proceeding to exhortation. To read ἔχωμεν, and then to take καυχώμεθα as subjunctive both in ver. 2 and ver. 3 (as the R.V.), is not only awkward, but inconsistent with οὐ μόνον δὲ, ver. 3. If the hortative purpose dominated the passage throughout, the Apostle must have written μὴ: see Gifford, p. 122. It is better (reading ἔχωμεν) to take καυχώμεθα in ver. 2 with δι' οὗ, and co-ordinate it with τὴν προσαγωγήν: "through whom we have had our access, and rejoice, etc". Then the οὐ μόνον is in place. But the uninterrupted series of indicatives afterwards, the inappropriateness of the verb ἔχειν to express "let us realise, let us make our own," the strong tendency to give a paraenetic turn to a passage often read in church, the natural emphasis on εἰρήνη, and the logic of the situation, are all in favour of ἔχομεν, which is accordingly adopted by Meyer, Weiss, Lipsius, Godet and others, in spite of the MSS., see critical note. The justified have peace with God: i.e., His wrath (i. 18) no longer threatens them; they are accepted in Christ. It is not a change in their feelings which is indicated, but a change in God's relation to them.

Ver. 2. δι' οὗ καὶ: through whom also. To the fact that we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ corresponds this other fact, that through Him we have had (and have) our access into this grace, etc. προσαγωγὴ has a certain touch of formality. Christ has "introduced" us to our standing as Christians: cf. Eph. ii. 18, 1 Pet. iii. 18. τῇ πίστει: by the faith referred to in ver. 1. Not to be construed with εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτην: which would be without analogy in the N.T. The grace is substantially one with justification: it is the new spiritual atmosphere in which the believer lives as reconciled to God. καυχώμεθα, which always implies the expression of feeling, is to be co-ordinated with ἔχομεν. ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τῆς δόξης τοῦ θεοῦ: on the basis of hope in the glory of God, i.e., of partaking in the glory of the heavenly kingdom. For ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, cf. iv. 18: the construction is not elsewhere found with καυχᾶσθαι.

Ver. 3. οὐ μόνον δὲ ἀλλὰ καὶ καυχώμεθα: and not only (do we glory on that footing), but we also glory in tribulations. Cf. Jas. i. 2 ff. ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσιν does not simply mean "when we are in tribulations," but also "because we are": the tribulations being the ground of the glorying: see ii. 17, 23, v. 11, 1 Cor. iii. 21, 2 Cor. xii. 9, Gal. vi. 14.

a Ch. viii. 18, 21. b 2 Cor. ii. 9, xiii. 3; Phil. ii. 22; c Acts ii. 17 f., 33, x. 45. d Matt. xxvi. 41.

καὶ καυχώμεθα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τῆς [a] δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ. 3. οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ καὶ καυχώμεθα [1] ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσιν, εἰδότες ὅτι ἡ θλίψις ὑπομονὴν κατεργάζεται, 4. ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ [b] δοκιμήν, ἡ δὲ δοκιμὴ ἐλπίδα, 5. ἡ δὲ ἐλπὶς οὐ καταισχύνει, ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ [c] ἐκκέχυται ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν διὰ Πνεύματος Ἁγίου τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν. 6. Ἔτι γὰρ [2] Χριστὸς ὄντων ἡμῶν [d] ἀσθενῶν, κατὰ καιρὸν ὑπὲρ ἀσεβῶν ἀπέθανε.

[1] καυχωμεθα ℵADFKP; καυχωμενοι BC, Origen (twice). The participle is hardly open to suspicion on the ground of being conformed to ver. 11 (S. and H.); it is much rather the indicative (subjunctive ?) that is open to suspicion as a "mechanical repetition" (Alford) from the preceding verse. W. and H. put καυχωμεθα in text, καυχωμενοι in marg. By the rule proclivi lectioni praestat ardua Alf. and Treg. are rather justified for putting καυχωμενοι in the text.

[2] ετι γαρ ℵACD[1-3]KP; εις τι γαρ D[2]F; ut quid enim lat. Iren.-interp.; ει δε L Syr.; ει γε B. For a full discussion of the readings here, see S. and H. ad loc., or W. and H., Appendix, p. 108. W. and H. suspect some primitive error; while holding the text of B to give a more probable sense than any of the other variants, Hort thinks ειπερ would better explain all the variations and be equally appropriate. ετι after ασθενων ℵABCD[1]F.

Ver. 4. ὑπομονὴν κατεργάζεται: has as its fruit, or effect, endurance. ὑπομονὴ has more of the sense of bravery and effort than the English "patience": it is not so passive. ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ δοκιμήν: endurance produces approvedness—its result is a spiritual state which has shown itself proof under trial. Cf. Jas. i. 12 (δόκιμος γενόμενος = when he has shown himself proof). Perhaps the best English equivalent of δοκιμή would be character. This in its turn results again in hope: the experience of what God can do, or rather of what He does, for the justified amid the tribulations of this life, animates into new vigour the hope with which the life of faith begins.

Ver. 5. ἡ δὲ ἐλπὶς οὐ καταισχύνει: and hope, i.e., the hope which has not been extinguished, but confirmed under trial, does not put to shame. Ps. xxii. 6. Spes erit res (Bengel). Here the aurea catena comes to an end, and the Apostle points to that on which it is ultimately dependent. All these Christian experiences and hopes rest upon an assurance of the love of God. ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ θεοῦ κ.τ.λ. That the love of God to us is meant, not our love to Him, is obvious from ver. 6 and the whole connection: it is the evidence of God's love to us which the Apostle proceeds to set forth. ἐκκέχυται ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν (cf. Joel iii. 1, ii. 28, LXX, Acts x. 45): has been poured out in, and still floods, our hearts. διὰ πνεύματος ἁγίου τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν: the aorist τοῦ δοθέντος can hardly refer to Pentecost, in which case ἡμῖν would express the consciousness of the Christian community: the spirit was given to Christians in virtue of their faith (Gal. iii. 2), and normally on occasion of their baptism (1 Cor. xii. 13, Acts xix. 1 ff.): and it is this experience, possibly this event, to which the participle definitely refers. What the spirit, given (in baptism) to faith, does, is to flood the heart with God's love, and with the assurance of it.

Ver. 6. The reading εἴ γε is well supported, and yields a good sense ("so surely as": Evans), though the suggestion is made in W. and H. that it may be a primitive error for εἴ περ (see note on iii. 30). The assurance we have of the love of God is no doubt conditioned, but the condition may be expressed with the utmost force, as it is with εἴ γε, for there is no doubt that what it puts as a hypothesis has actually taken place, viz., Christ's death for the ungodly. Although he says εἴ γε, the objective fact which follows is in no sense open to question: it is to the Apostle the first of certainties. Cf. the use of εἴ γε in Eph. iii. 2, iv. 21, and Ellicott's note on the former. ἀσθενῶν: the weakness of men who had not yet received the Spirit is conceived as appealing to the love of God. ἔτι goes with ὄντων ἡμ. ἀσθενῶν: the persons concerned were no longer weak, when Paul wrote, but strong in their new relation to God. κατὰ καιρὸν has been taken with ὄντων ἡ. ἀ. ἔτι: "while we were yet without strength, as the pre-Christian era implied or required": but this meaning is remote, and must have been more clearly suggested. The anal-

7. [e] μόλις γὰρ ὑπὲρ δικαίου τις ἀποθανεῖται· ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ [f] τάχα τις καὶ τολμᾷ ἀποθανεῖν· 8. συνίστησι δὲ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἀγάπην εἰς ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεός,[1] ὅτι ἔτι ἁμαρτωλῶν ὄντων ἡμῶν Χριστὸς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀπέθανε. 9. πολλῷ οὖν μᾶλλον, δικαιωθέντες νῦν ἐν τῷ αἵματι

e Acts xxvii. 7 f., 16; 1 Pet. iv. 18.
f Philem. 15.

[1] ο θεος om. B.

ogy of Gal. iv. 4, Eph. i. 10, supports the ordinary rendering, "in due time," i.e., at the time determined by the Providence of God and the history of man as the proper time, Christ died. ὑπέρ: in the interest of, not equivalent to ἀντί, instead of: whether the interest of the ungodly is secured by the fact that Christ's death has a substitutionary character, or in some other way, is a question which ὑπέρ does not touch.

Ver. 7. Christ's death for the ungodly assures us of God's love; for the utmost that human love will do is far less. ὑπὲρ δικαίου: for a righteous man. Some make both δικαίου and τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ neuter: some who take δικαίου as masculine take τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ as neuter (so Weiss and Godet—"pour un juste, pour le bien"): but as Jowett says, the notion of dying for an abstract idea is entirely unlike the N.T., or the age in which the N.T. was written, while the opposition to Christ's dying for sinful persons requires that persons should be in question here also. The absence of the article with δικαίου corresponds to the virtually negative character of the clause: it is inserted before ἀγαθοῦ because the exceptional case is definitely conceived as happening. ἀποθανεῖται, gnomic; see Burton, § 69. Unless ἀγαθὸς is meant to suggest a certain advance upon δίκαιος, it is impossible to see in what respect the second clause adds anything to the first. Of course the words are broadly synonymous, so that often they are both applied to the same person or thing (Lk. xxiii. 50, Rom. vii. 12); still there is a difference, and it answers to their application here; it is difficult to die for a just man, it has been found possible (one may venture to affirm) to die for a good man. The difference is like that between "just" and "good" in English: the latter is the more generous and inspiring type of character. Cf. the Gnostic contrast between the "just" God of the O.T. and the "good" God of the N.T., and the passages quoted in Cremer, s.v. ἀγαθός. καὶ τολμᾷ: even prevails upon himself, wins it from himself.

Ver. 8. How greatly is this utmost love of man surpassed by the love of God. He commends, or rather makes good, presents in its true and unmistakable character (for συνίστησιν, cf. iii. 5, 2 Cor. vi. 4, vii. 11; Gal. ii. 18), His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, etc. ἑαυτοῦ is an emphatic His: His, not as opposed to Christ's (as some have strangely taken it), but as opposed to anything that we can point to as love among men: His spontaneous and characteristic love. ἔτι ἁμαρτωλῶν ὄντων ἡμῶν: they are no longer such, but justified, and it is on this the next step in the argument depends.

Ver. 9 f. πολλῷ οὖν μᾶλλον: The argument is from the greater to the less. The supreme difficulty to be overcome in the relations of man and God is the initial one: How can God demonstrate His love to the sinner, and bestow on him a Divine righteousness? In comparison with this, everything else is easy. Now the Apostle has already shown (iii. 21-30) how the Gospel meets this difficulty: we obtain the righteousness required by believing in Jesus, whom God has set forth as a propitiation through faith in His blood. If such grace was shown us then, when we were in sin, much more, justified as we have now been by His blood, shall we be saved from wrath through Him. ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς: the wrath to come: see note on i. 18. This deliverance from wrath does not exhaust Paul's conception of the future (see ver. 2), but it is an important aspect of it, and implies the rest. Verse 10 rather repeats, than grounds anew, the argument of ver. 9. εἰ γὰρ ἐχθροὶ ὄντες: this is practically equivalent to ἔτι ἁμαρτωλῶν ὄντων ἡμῶν. The state of sin was that in which we were ἐχθροί, and the whole connection of ideas in the passage requires us to give ἐχθροί the passive meaning which it undoubtedly has in xi. 28, where it is opposed to ἀγαπητοί. We were in a real sense objects of the Divine hostility. As sinners, we lay under the condemnation of God, and His wrath hung over us. This was the situation which had to be faced: Was g 1 Thess. i. 10. h 1 Cor. i. 31. i 2 Cor. v. 18 f.

αὐτοῦ, σωθησόμεθα δι' αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς [g] ὀργῆς. 10. εἰ γὰρ ἐχθροὶ ὄντες κατηλλάγημεν τῷ Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, πολλῷ μᾶλλον καταλλαγέντες σωθησόμεθα ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ· 11. οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ καὶ καυχώμενοι ἐν τῷ [h] Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, δι' οὗ νῦν τὴν [i] καταλλαγὴν ἐλάβομεν.

there love in God equal to it? Yes, when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son. κατηλλάγημεν is a real passive: "we" are the objects, not the subjects, of the reconciliation: the subject is God, 2 Cor. v. 19-21. Compare ver. 11: τὴν καταλλαγὴν ἐλάβομεν. To represent κατηλλάγημεν by an active form, e.g., "we laid aside our hostility to God," or by what is virtually one, e.g., "we were won to lay aside our hostility," is to miss the point of the whole passage. Paul is demonstrating the love of God, and he can only do it by pointing to what God has done, not to what we have done. That we on our part are hostile to God before the reconciliation, and that we afterwards lay aside our enmity, is no doubt true; but here it is entirely irrelevant. The Apostle's thought is simply this: "if, when we lay under the Divine condemnation, the work of our reconciliation to God was achieved by Him through the death of His Son, much more shall the love which wrought so incredibly for us in our extremity carry out our salvation to the end". The subjective side of the truth is here completely, and intentionally, left out of sight; the laying aside of our hostility adds nothing to God's love, throws no light upon it; hence in an exposition of the love of God it can be ignored. To say that the reconciliation is "mutual," is true in point of fact; it is true, also, to all the suggestions of the English word; but it is not true to the meaning of κατηλλάγημεν, nor to the argument of this passage, which does not prove anything about the Christian, but exhibits the love of God at its height in the Cross, and argues from that to what are comparatively smaller demonstrations of that love. ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ: the ἐν is instrumental: cf. ver. 9 ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ. The Living Lord, in virtue of His life, will save us to the uttermost. Cf. John xiv. 19.

Ver. 11. καυχώμενοι is the best attested reading, but hard to construe. It is awkward (with Meyer) to supply καταλλαγέντες with οὐ μόνον δὲ, and retain σωθησόμεθα as the principal verb: and not only (as reconciled shall we be saved), but also rejoicing, etc. There is no proportion between the things thus co-ordinated, and it is better to assume an inexact construction, and regard καυχώμενοι as adding an independent idea which would have been more properly expressed by the indicative (καυχώμεθα). But see Winer, 441. The Christian glories in God; for though "boasting is excluded" from the true religion (iii. 27), yet to make one's boast in God is the perfection of that religion. Yet the believer could not thus glory, but for the Lord Jesus Christ; it is in Him, "clothed in the Gospel," that he obtains that knowledge of God's character which enables him to exult. δι' οὗ νῦν τὴν καταλλαγὴν ἐλάβομεν. Nothing could show more unmistakably that the καταλλαγὴ is not a change in our disposition toward God, but a change in His attitude toward us. We do not give it (by laying aside enmity, distrust, or fear); we receive it, by believing in Christ Jesus, whom God has set forth as a propitiation through faith in His blood. We take it as God's unspeakable gift. Cf. 2 Macc. ii. 50. ὁ καταλειφθεὶς ἐν τῇ τοῦ παντοκράτορος ὀργῇ πάλιν ἐν τῇ τοῦ μεγάλου δεσπότου καταλλαγῇ μετὰ πάσης δόξης ἐπανωρθώθη. For an examination of the Pauline idea of reconciliation, see especially Schmiedel on 2 Cor. v. 21, Excursus.

Vers. 12-21. The treatment of the righteousness of God, as a Divine gift to sinners in Jesus Christ, is now complete, and the Apostle might have passed on to his treatment of the new life (chaps. vi.-viii.). But he introduces at this point a digression in which a comparison—which in most points is rather a contrast—is made between Adam and Christ. Up to this point he has spoken of Christ alone, and the truth of what he has said rests upon its own evidence; it is not affected in the least by any difficulty we may have in adapting what he says of Adam to our knowledge or ignorance of human origins. The general truth he teaches here is that there is a real unity of the human race, on the one hand in sin and death, on the other in righteousness and life; in the former aspect the race is summed up in Adam; in the latter, in Christ. It is a distinction, apparently, between the two, that the unity in Adam is natural, having a physical basis in the organic connection of all men through all generations; whereas the unity in Christ is spiritual, being dependent upon faith. Yet this distinction is not specially in view in the passage, which rather treats Adam and Christ in an objective way, the transition (morally) from Adam's doom to that of man being only mediated by the words πάντες ἥμαρτον in ver. 12, and the connection between Christ and the new humanity by οἱ τὴν περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος λαμβάνοντες in ver. 17.

12. Διὰ τοῦτο ὥσπερ δι' ἑνὸς ἀνθρώπου ἡ ἁμαρτία εἰς τὸν κόσμον εἰσῆλθε, καὶ διὰ τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ θάνατος, καὶ οὕτως εἰς πάντας

Ver. 12. διὰ τοῦτο refers to that whole conception of Christ's relation to the human race which is expounded in chaps. iii. 21-v. 11. But as this is summed up in v. 1-11, and even in the last words of v. 11 (through Him we received the reconciliation) the grammatical reference may be to these words only. ὥσπερ: the sentence beginning thus is not finished; cf. Mt. xxv. 14. There is a virtual apodosis in the last clause of ver. 14: ὅς ἐστιν τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος; the natural conclusion would have been, "so also by one man righteousness entered into the world, and life by righteousness". Cf. Winer, p. 712 f. By the entrance of sin into the world is not meant that sin began to be, but that sin as a power entered into that sphere in which man lives. Sin, by Divine appointment, brought death in its train, also as an objective power; the two things were inseparably connected, and consequently death extended over all men (for διῆλθεν, cf. Ps. lxxxvii. 17, Ez. v. 17) ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον. The connection of sin and death was a commonplace of Jewish teaching, resting apparently on a literal interpretation of Gen. iii. Cf. Sap. ii. 23 f. ὁ θεὸς ἔκτισεν τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἐπ' ἀφθαρσίᾳ . . . φθόνῳ δὲ διαβόλου θάνατος εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον. Cf. also Sir. xxv. 24, Rom. vi. 23, 1 Cor. xv. 56. Paul no doubt uses death to convey various shades of meaning in different places, but he does not explicitly distinguish different senses of the word; and it is probably misleading rather than helpful to say that in one sentence (here, for example) "physical" death is meant, and in another (chap. vii. 24, e.g.) "spiritual" death. The analysis is foreign to his mode of thinking. All that "death" conveys to the mind entered into the world through sin. The words ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον, in which the πάντες resumes πάντας of the preceding clause, give the explanation of the universality of death: it rests upon the universality of sin. ἐφ' ᾧ means propterea quod as in 2 Cor. v. 4 and perhaps in Phil. iii. 12. Winer, 491. But in what sense is the universality of sin to be understood? In other words, what precisely is meant by πάντες ἥμαρτον? Many interpreters take the aorist rigorously, and render: because all sinned, i.e., in the sin of Adam. Omnes peccarunt, Adamo peccante (Bengel). This is supported by an appeal to 2 Cor. v. 14, εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν· ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον: the death of one was the death of all; so here, the sin of one was the sin of all. It seems to me a final objection to this (grammatically quite sound) interpretation, that it really makes the words ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον meaningless. They are evidently meant to explain how the death which came into the world through Adam's sin obtained its universal sway, and the reason is that the sin of which death is the consequence was also universally prevalent. The sense in which this was so has been already proved in chap. iii., and the aorist is therefore to be taken as in iii. 23: see note there. Because all men were, in point of fact, sinners, the death which is inseparable from sin extended over all. To drag in the case of infants to refute this, on the ground that πάντες ἥμαρτον does not apply to them (unless in the sense that they sinned in Adam) is to misconceive the situation: to Paul's mind the world consists of persons capable of sinning and of being saved. The case of those in whom the moral consciousness, or indeed any consciousness whatever, has not yet awakened, is simply to be disregarded. We know, and can know, nothing about it. Nothing has been more pernicious in theology than the determination to define sin in such a way that in all its damning import the definition should be applicable to "infants"; it is to this we owe the moral atrocities that have disfigured most ἀνθρώπους ὁ θάνατος διῆλθεν, ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον. 13. ἄχρι γὰρ νόμου ἁμαρτία ἦν ἐν κόσμῳ· ἁμαρτία δὲ οὐκ [k] ἐλλογεῖται, μὴ ὄντος νόμου· 14. ἀλλ' [l] ἐβασίλευσεν ὁ θάνατος ἀπὸ 'Αδὰμ μέχρι Μωσέως καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς μὴ ἁμαρτήσαντας[1] ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμοιώματι τῆς k Philem. 18.

l Vv. 17, 21; Ch. vi. 12.

[1] τους μη αμαρτησαντας, so ℵABCD²G³K²L²; the μη was wanting in some MSS. known to Origen and in "most Latin MSS." known to Augustine: see W. and H., Appendix. However the omission may have originated, μη is undoubtedly the true text.

creeds, and in great part the idea of baptismal regeneration, which is an irrational unethical miracle, invented by men to get over a puzzle of their own making.

Ver. 13 f. These two verses are rather obscure, but must be intended (γὰρ) to prove what has been asserted in ver. 12. ἄχρι γὰρ νόμου = ἀπὸ 'Αδὰμ μέχρι Μωυσέως, ver. 14, the law meant being the Mosaic. The sin which was in the world before the law is not the guilt of Adam's fall imputed to the race as fallen in him, but the actual sin which individuals had committed. Now if law has no existence, sin is not imputed. Cf. iv. 15. The natural inference would seem to be that the sins committed during this period could not be punished. But what was the case? The very opposite of this. Death reigned all through this period. This unrestrained tyranny of death (observe the emphatic position of ἐβασίλευσεν) over persons whose sins cannot be imputed to them, seems at variance with the explanation just adopted of πάντες ἥμαρτον. Indeed Meyer and others use it to refute that explanation. The reign of death, apart from imputable individual sin, implies, they argue, a corresponding objective reign of sin, apart from individual acts: in other words, justifies the interpretation of ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον according to which all men sinned in Adam's sin, and so (and only so) became subject to death. But the empirical meaning of ἥμαρτον is decidedly to be preferred, and we must rather fill out the argument thus: "all sinned. For there was sin in the world before Moses; and though sin is not imputed where there is no law, and though therefore no particular penalty—death or another—could be expected for the sins here in question, yet all that time death reigned, for in the act of Adam sin and death had been inseparably and for ever conjoined." καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς μὴ ἁμαρτήσαντας ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμοιώματι κ.τ.λ.—even over those who did not sin after the likeness of Adam's transgression. For ἐπὶ, cf. Winer, p. 492. This describes not some, but all of those who lived during the period from Adam to Moses. None of them had like Adam violated an express prohibition sanctioned by the death penalty. Yet they all died, for they all sinned, and in their first father sin and death had been indissolubly united. And this Adam is τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος sc. 'Αδάμ. In the coming Adam and his relations to the race there will be something on the same pattern as this. 1 Cor. x. 6, 11, Heb. ix. 14, 1 Cor. xv. 22, 45, 49. Parallels of this sort between Adam and the Messiah are common in Rabbinical writings: e.g., Schöttgen quotes Neve Schalom, f. 160-2. "Quemadmodum homo primus fuit unus in peccato, sic Messias erit postremus, ad auferendum peccatum penitus;" and 9, 9 has "Adamus postremus est Messias". Cf. Delitzsch: Brief an die Römer, p. 82 f. The extent to which the thoughts of this passage on sin and death, and on the consequences of Adam's sin to his descendants, can be traced in Jewish writers, is not quite clear. As a rule (see above on ver. 12) they admit the dependence of death on sin, though Schöttgen quotes a Rabbi Samuel ben David as saying, "Etiamsi Adamus primus non peccasset, tamen mors fuisset". On the unity and solidarity of the race in sin and its consequences, they are not perfectly explicit. Weber (Die Lehren des Talmud, p. 217) gives the following summary: "There is an inherited guilt, but not an inherited sin; the fall of Adam has brought death upon the whole race, not however sinfulness in the sense of a necessity to commit sin; sin is the result of each individual's decision; it is, as far as experience goes, universal, yet in itself even after the Fall not absolutely necessary". This seems to agree very closely with the Apostle's teaching as interpreted above. It is the appeal to experience in Paul (πάντες ἥμαρτον), παραβάσεως Ἀδάμ, ὅς ἐστι τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος. 15. Ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς τὸ παράπτωμα, οὕτω καὶ τὸ χάρισμα. εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς παραπτώματι οἱ πολλοὶ ἀπέθανον, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ [m] δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι τῇ τοῦ ἑνὸς ἀνθρώπου Ἰησοῦ [n] Χριστοῦ εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐπερίσσευσε. 16. καὶ οὐχ ὡς δι' ἑνὸς ἁμαρτήσαντος, τὸ δώρημα· τὸ μὲν γὰρ κρίμα ἐξ ἑνὸς εἰς κατάκριμα, τὸ δὲ χάρισμα ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων εἰς δικαίωμα. 17. εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς[1] παραπτώματι ὁ θάνατος ἐβασίλευσε διὰ τοῦ ἑνός, πολλῷ μᾶλλον οἱ τὴν [o] περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος καὶ τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικαιοσύνης λαμβά-

m John iv. 10; Eph. iii. 7, iv. 7.
n 1 Tim. ii. 5.
o 2 Cor. viii. 2; Jas. i. 21.

[1] τω του ενος ℵBCKLPD lat.; εν τω ενι D-gr.; ἐν ενος 47, W. and H. marg.; εν ενι παραπτωματι AFG and Weiss. της δωρεας om. B 49, Origen twice; W. and H. bracket. Ιησου Χριστου; but Χ. Ι. in B, Origen.

crossing with a transcendent view of the unity of the race in Adam, which gives rise to all the difficulties of interpretation; but without this appeal to experience (which many like Bengel, Meyer and Gifford reject) the whole passage would hang in the air, unreal. There must be something which involves the individual in Adam's fate; that something comes into view in πάντες ἥμαρτον, and there only; and without it our interest dies. A sin which we commit in Adam (and which never becomes ours otherwise) is a mere fancy to which one has nothing serious to say.

Ver. 15. At this point the parallel of Adam and Christ becomes a contrast: not as the παράπτωμα (the word implies the Fall), so also is the χάρισμα (the gift which is freely provided for sinners in the Gospel, i.e., a Divine righteousness and life). οἱ πολλοὶ means "all," but presents the "all" as a great number. πολλῷ μᾶλλον: the idea underlying the inference is that God delights in mercy; if under His administration one man's offence could have such far-reaching consequences, much more reasonably may we feel sure of the universal influence of one Man's righteous achievement. This idea is the key-note of the whole chapter: see vers. 9, 10, 17. ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι is to be construed together: to repeat the article before ἐν χάριτι is not essential, and ἡ δωρεὰ is awkward standing alone. God's χάρις is shown in the gift of His Son, Christ's in His undertaking in obedience to the Father the painful work of our salvation. εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς like οἱ πολλοὶ is not opposed to "all," but to "one": it is indeed equivalent to "all," and signifies that the "all" are not few. The world is the subject of redemption; if the race suffered through the first Adam, much more may we argue that what has been done by the Second will benefit the race. ἐπερίσσευσεν: the word is prompted by Paul's own experience: the blessedness of the Christian life far outwent the misery of the life under condemnation.

Ver. 16. A fresh point of contrast. That which God bestows (for δώρημα, see Mayor on James i. 17) is not as through one that sinned: the analogy with Adam breaks down here. For the Divine judgment (κρίμα neutral) starting from one (person) resulted in condemnation (for all); whereas the free gift, starting from many offences (which appealed to the mercy of God), has resulted in a sentence of justification (for all). This abstract way of looking at the matter disregards what the Apostle insists on elsewhere, that this "sentence of justification" only takes effect for the individual on the condition of faith. The ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων in this verse is a decisive argument for the meaning given above to πάντες ἥμαρτον: redemption is not inspired merely by the fall of the race in Adam, but by its actual and multiplied offences, and this is its glory. ἐξ ἑνὸς: ἑνὸς is masculine, resuming the ἑνὸς ἁμαρτήσαντος of the previous clause; not neuter, with παραπτώματος anticipated from the following clause.

Ver. 17. This verse confirms the preceding. The argument is the same in kind as in ver. 15. The effects of the Fall are indubitable: still less open to doubt are the effects of the work of Christ. With οἱ τὴν περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος καὶ [τῆς δωρεᾶς] τῆς δικαιοσύνης λαμβάνοντες we again touch experience, and an empirical condition is attached νοντες ἐν ζωῇ βασιλεύσουσι διὰ τοῦ ἑνὸς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 18. Ἄρα οὖν ὡς δι᾽ ἑνὸς παραπτώματος, εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους, εἰς κατάκριμα· οὕτω καὶ δι᾽ ἑνὸς δικαιώματος, εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους, εἰς [p] δικαίωσιν ζωῆς. 19. ὥσπερ γὰρ διὰ τῆς παρακοῆς τοῦ ἑνὸς ἀνθρώπου ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν οἱ πολλοί, οὕτω καὶ διὰ τῆς [q] ὑπακοῆς τοῦ ἑνὸς

p Ch. iv. 25. q Heb. v. 8.

to the abstract universality suggested by ver. 12. The abundance of the grace and of (the gift which consists in) righteousness has to be received by faith. But when by faith a connection is formed with Christ, the consequences of that connection, as more agreeable to what we know of God's nature, can be more surely counted upon than the consequences of our natural connection with Adam. Part of the contrast is marked by the change from "death reigned" to "we shall reign in life," not "life shall reign in or over us". The future in βασιλεύσουσιν is no doubt logical, but it refers nevertheless to the consummation of redemption in the Messianic kingdom in the world to come. Cf. viii. 17, 21, Col. iii. 3 f., 2 Tim. ii. 12.

Ver. 18. With ἄρα οὖν (cf. vii. 3, 25, and often in Paul) the conclusion of the argument is introduced. It is simplest to take ἑνὸς in both clauses as neuter. "As through one offence the result for all men was condemnation, so also through one righteous act the result for all men is justification of life." The result in both cases is mediated; in the former, by men's actual sin; in the latter, by their faith in Christ. It has been questioned whether δικαίωμα can mean a "righteous act,"—that which Christ achieved in His death, conceived as one thing commanding the approval of God. This sense seems to be required by the contrast with παράπτωμα, but Meyer and others argue that, as in ver. 16, the meaning must be "a sentence of justification". "Through one justifying sentence (pronounced over the world because of Christ's death) the result for all men is justification of life." But this justifying sentence in vacuo is alien to the realism of Paul's thinking, and no strain is put upon δικαίωμα (especially when we observe its correspondence with παράπτωμα) in making it signify Christ's work as a thing in which righteousness is, so to speak, embodied. Lightfoot (Notes on Epistles of St. Paul, p. 292) adopts this meaning, "a righteous deed," and quotes Arist., Rhet., i., 13, τὰ ἀδικήματα πάντα καὶ τὰ δικαιώματα, and Eth. Nic., v., 7 (10): καλεῖται δὲ μᾶλλον δικαιοπράγημα τὸ κοινόν: δικαίωμα δὲ τὸ ἐπανόρθωμα τοῦ ἀδικήματος. This sense of an act by which an injustice is rectified is exactly suitable here. Through this the result for all men is δικαίωσις ζωῆς: for the genitive, see Winer, p. 235. Simcox, Language of the N.T., 85. When God justifies the sinner, he enters into and inherits life. But Lightfoot makes it gen. appos.

Ver. 19. The sense of this verse has been determined by what precedes. The γὰρ connects it closely with the last words of verse 18: "justification of life; for, as through, etc.". ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν: "were constituted sinners". For the word κατεστ. cf. Jas. iv. 4, 2 Pet. i. 8. It has the same ambiguity as the English word "constituted" (S. and H.); but we cannot say, from the word itself, whether the many constituted sinners, through the one person's disobedience, are so constituted immediately and unconditionally, or mediately through their own sin (to be traced back, of course, to him); this last, as has been argued above, is the Apostle's meaning. οὕτως καὶ διὰ τῆς ὑπακοῆς τοῦ ἑνός: the application of τῆς ὑπακοῆς has been disputed. By some (Hofmann, Lechler) it is taken to cover the whole life and work of Jesus conceived as the carrying out of the Father's will: cf. Phil. ii. 8. By others (Meyer) it is limited to Christ's death as the one great act of obedience on which the possibility of justification depended: cf. chap. iii. 25, v. 9. Both ideas are Pauline, but the last seems most congruous to the context and the contrast which pervades it. δίκαιοι κατασταθήσονται: "shall be constituted righteous"; the futureshows again that Paul is dealing with experience, or at least with possible experience; the logic which finds the key to the passage in Bengel's formula, Omnes peccarunt Adamo peccante, would have written here also δίκαιοι κατεστάθησαν. It is because Paul conceives of this justification as conditioned in the case of each of the πολλοί by faith, and as in process of taking place in one after another that he uses the future. A reference to the Judgment Day (Meyer) is forced: it is not then, but when they believe in Christ, that men are constituted δίκαιοι.

δίκαιοι κατασταθήσονται οἱ πολλοί. 20. Νόμος δὲ παρεισῆλθεν, ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα. οὗ δὲ ἐπλεόνασεν ἡ ἁμαρτία, ὑπερ-επερίσσευσεν ἡ χάρις· 21. ἵνα ὥσπερ ἐβασίλευσεν ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ, οὕτω καὶ ἡ χάρις βασιλεύσῃ διὰ δικαιοσύνης εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

Ver. 20 f. "The comparison between Adam and Christ is closed. But in the middle, between the two, stood the law" (Meyer). Paul must refer to it in such a way as to indicate the place it holds in the order of Providence, and especially to show that it does not frustrate, but further, the end contemplated in the work of Christ. παρεισῆλθεν: see ver. 12 above. Sin entered into the world; the Law entered into the situation thus created as an accessory or subordinate thing; it has not the decisive signficance in history which the objective power of sin has. Words in which the same prepositions have a similar force are παρεισάγω, 2 Pet. ii. 1; παρεισδύνω, Jude 4; παρεισφέρω, 2 Pet. i. 5: cf. Gal. ii. 4. There is often in such words, though not necessarily, the idea of stealth or secrecy: we might render "the law slipped in". ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα: the purpose expressed by ἵνα is God's: Winer, p. 575. The offence is multiplied because the law, encountering the flesh, evokes its natural antagonism to God, and so stimulates it into disobedience. Cf. Gal. iii. 19 ff., and the development of this idea in chap. vii. 7 ff. As the offence multiplied, the need of redemption, and the sense of that need were intensified. οὗ δὲ ἐπλεόνασεν ἡ ἁμαρτία: ἁμαρτία seems used here, not παράπτωμα, because more proper to express the sum total of evil, made up of repeated acts of disobedience to the law. "Sin" bulked larger, as "offence" was added to "offence". οὗ might seem to refer to Israel only, for it was there that the law had its seat; but there is something analogous to this law and its effects everywhere; and everywhere as the need of redemption becomes more pressing grace rises in higher power to meet it. ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν: "the ἐπλεόνασεν had to be surpassed" (Meyer). Cf. 2 Cor. vii. 4. Paul is excessively fond of compounds with ὑπέρ. The purpose of this abounding manifestation of grace is, "that as sin reigned in death, so also should grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord". ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ: it is more natural to oppose this to ζωὴ αἰώνιος, and regard death as "a province which sin had won, and in which it exercised its dominion" (Gifford), than to make it parallel (with Meyer) to διὰ δικαιοσύνης, and render "in virtue of death" (dat. instr.). Grace has not yet attained to its full sovereignty; it comes to this sovereignty as it imparts to men the gift of God's righteousness (διὰ δικαιοσύνης); its goal, its limit which is yet no limit, is eternal life. Some, however, construe εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον with διὰ δικαιοσύνης: through a righteousness which ends in eternal life: cf. εἰς δικαίωσιν ζωῆς, ver. 18. διὰ Ἰ. Χ. τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν: this full rhetorical close has almost the value of a doxology.

CHAPTER VI.—Vers. 1-14. In the fifth chapter, Paul has concluded his exposition of the "righteousness of God" which is revealed in the Gospel. But the exposition leaves something to be desired—something hinted at in iii. 8 ("Let us do evil that good may come") and recalled in v. 20 f. ("Where sin abounded, grace did superabound"). It seems, after all, as if the gospel did "make void the law" (iii. 31) in a bad sense; and Paul has now to demonstrate that it does not. It is giving an unreal precision to his words to say with Lipsius that he has now to justify his gospel to the moral consciousness of the Jewish Christian; it is not Jewish Christians, obviously, who are addressed in vi. 19 ff., and it is not the Jewish-Christian moral consciousness, but the moral consciousness of all men, which raises the questions to which he here addresses himself. He has to show that those who have "received the reconciliation" (v. 11), who "receive the abundance of the grace and of the gift of righteousness" (v. 17), are the very persons in whom "the righteous requirement of the law" is fulfilled (viii. 4). The libertine argument is rather Gentile than Jewish, though when Paul speaks of the new religion as establishing Law, it is naturally the Mosaic law of which he thinks. It was the one definite embodiment of the concept. The justification, to the moral consciousness, of the a Ch. xi. 22 f.; Col. i. 23; 1 Tim. iv. 16.

b Col. ii. 12.

VI. 1. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; [a] ἐπιμενοῦμεν[1] τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, ἵνα ἡ χάρις πλεονάσῃ; 2. μὴ γένοιτο. οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, πῶς ἔτι ζήσομεν ἐν αὐτῇ; 3. ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε ὅτι ὅσοι ἐβαπτίσθημεν εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν,[2] εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ ἐβαπτίσθημεν; 4. [b] συνετάφημεν οὖν αὐτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος εἰς τὸν θάνατον· ἵνα, ὥσπερ ἠγέρθη Χριστὸς ἐκ νεκρῶν διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ πατρός, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐν

[1] For επιμενουμεν read επιμενωμεν with ABCDF.

[2] Ἰησουν om. B and some cursives; W. and H. bracket. But this kind of omission is frequent; see Weiss, Textkritik, S. 88.

Gospel in which a Divine righteousness is freely held out in Jesus Christ to the sinner's faith, fills the next three chapters. In chap. vi. it is shown that the Christian, in baptism, dies to sin; in chap. vii., that by death he is freed from the law, which in point of fact, owing to the corruption of his nature, perpetually stimulates sin; in chap. viii., that the Spirit imparted to believers breaks the power of the flesh, and enables them to live to God.

Ver. 1. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; What inference then shall we draw, i.e., from the relations of sin and grace expounded in v. 20 f.? Are we to continue in sin (cf. xi. 22 f.) that grace may abound? Lightfoot suggests "the sin" and "the grace" just referred to. The question was one sure to be asked by some one; Paul recognises it as a natural question in view of his doctrine, and asks it himself. But he answers it with an indignant negative.

Ver. 2. μὴ γένοιτο, cf. iii. 4. οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ: the relative is qualitative: "we, being as we are persons who died to sin". For the dative, see vers. 10, 11, and Winer, p. 263. To have died to sin is to be utterly and for ever out of any relation to it. πῶς ἔτι ζήσομεν; how after that shall we live in it? impossible.

Ver. 3. But this death to sin, on which the whole argument turns, raises a question. It is introduced here quite abruptly; there has been no mention of it hitherto. When, it may be asked, did this all-important death take place? The answer is: It is involved in baptism. ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε ὅτι κ.τ.λ.: the only alternative to accepting this argument is to confess ignorance of the meaning of the rite in which they had been received into the Church. ὅσοι ἐβαπτίσθημεν: we all, who were baptised into Christ Jesus, were baptised into His death. The ὅσοι is not partitive but distributive: there is no argument in the passage at all, unless all Christians were baptised. The expression βαπτισθῆναι εἰς Χριστὸν does not necessarily mean to be baptised into Christ; it may only mean to be baptised Christward, i.e., with Christ in view as the object of faith. Cf. 1 Cor. x. 2, and the expression βαπτισθῆναι εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. In the same way βαπτισθῆναι εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ might certainly mean to be baptised with Christ's death in view as the object of faith. This is the interpretation of Lipsius. But it falls short of the argumentative requirements of the passage, which demand the idea of an actual union to, or incorporation in, Christ. This is more than Lipsius means, but it does not exclude what he means. The baptism in which we are united to Christ and to His death is one in which we confess our faith, looking to Him and His death. To say that faith justifies but baptism regenerates, breaking the Christian life into two unrelated pieces, as Weiss does—one spiritual and the other magical—is to throw away the Apostle's case. His whole point is that no such division can be made. Unless there is a necessary connection between justification by faith and the new life, Paul fails to prove that faith establishes the law. The real argument which unites chaps. iii., iv. and v. to chaps. vi., vii. and viii., and repels the charge of antinomianism, is this: justifying faith, looking to Christ and His death, really unites us to Him who died and rose again, as the symbolism of baptism shows to every Christian.

Ver. 4. This symbolism interpreted. συνετάφημεν οὖν αὐτῷ κ.τ.λ.: Therefore we were buried with Him (in the act of immersion) through that baptism into His death—burial being regarded as the natural sequence of death, and a kind of seal set to its reality. Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 3 f. It introduces a false abstraction to say καινότητι ζωῆς περιπατήσωμεν. 5. Εἰ γὰρ [c] σύμφυτοι γεγόναμεν τῷ [d] ὁμοιώματι τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως ἐσόμεθα· 6. τοῦτο γινώσκοντες, ὅτι ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν [e] ἄνθρωπος συνεσταυρώθη, ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας, τοῦ μηκέτι δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ. 7. ὁ γὰρ ἀποθανὼν δεδικαίωται [f] ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας. 8. Εἰ δὲ ἀπεθάνομεν σὺν Χριστῷ, πιστεύομεν ὅτι καὶ συζήσομεν αὐτῷ, 9. εἰδότες ὅτι Χριστὸς ἐγερθεὶς ἐκ νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔτι ἀποθνήσκει· θάνα-

c Here only, cf. Luke viii. 7.
d Ch. i. 23, v. 14, viii. 3; Phil. ii. 7; Rev. ix. 7.
e Eph. iv. 22; Col. iii. 9.
f Acts xiii. 39.

(with Meyer) that εἰς τὸν θάνατον means "unto death," not "unto His death": death in the whole context is perfectly definite. διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ πατρός: in nothing was the splendour of God's power revealed so much as in the resurrection of Jesus, Eph. i. 19 f. ἐν καινότητι ζωῆς: in life of a new quality; cf. vii. 6, 1 Tim. vi. 17: the construction makes the new quality of the life prominent. Winer, p. 296.

Ver. 5. This verse proves the legitimacy of the reference to a new life in the preceding one: union with Christ at one point (His death) is union with Him altogether (and therefore in His resurrection). εἰ γὰρ σύμφυτοι γεγόναμεν τῷ ὁμοιώματι τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ: it is simplest to take συμφ. and τῷ ὁμοιώματι together—if we have become vitally one with the likeness of His death; i.e., if the baptism, which is a similitude of Christ's death, has had a reality answering to its obvious import, so that we have really died in it as Christ died, then we shall have a corresponding experience of resurrection. τῆς ἀναστάσεως is also dependent on ὁμοιώματι: baptism, inasmuch as one emerges from the water after being immersed, is a ὁμοίωμα of resurrection as well as of death. It does not seem a real question to ask whether the ἀνάστασις is ethical or transcendent: one cannot imagine Paul drawing the distinction here. (On the word ὁμοίωμα, see Cremer.)

Ver. 6. All this can be asserted, knowing as we do that "our old man" = our old self, what we were before we became Christians—was crucified with Him. Paul says συνεσταυρώθη simply because Christ died on the cross, and we are baptised into that death, not because "our old man" is the basest of criminals for whom crucifixion is the proper penalty. The object of this crucifixion of the old man was "that the body of sin might be brought to nought". τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας is the body in which we live: apart from the crucifixion of the old self it can be characterised as "a body of sin". It may be wrong to say that it is necessarily and essentially sinful—the body, as such, can have no moral predicate attached to it; it would be as wrong to deny that it is invariably and persistently a seat and source of sin. The genitive is perhaps qualitative rather than possessive, though "the body of which sin has taken possession" (S. and H.) is a good paraphrase. See Winer, p. 235, 768. This body is to be reduced to impotence τοῦ μηκέτι δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς κ.τ.λ. "that we may no longer be slaves to sin". The body is the instrument we use in the service of sin, and if it is disabled the service must cease. For the gen. inf., see Burton, § 397.

Ver. 7. ὁ γὰρ ἀποθανὼν κ.τ.λ. Here we have the general principle on which the foregoing argument rests: death annuls all obligations, breaks all ties, cancels all old scores. The difficulty is that by the words ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας Paul introduces one particular application of the principle—the one he is concerned with here—as if it were identical with the principle itself. "Death clears men of all claims, especially (to come to the case before us) it clears us, who have died with Christ, of the claim of sin, our old master, to rule over us still." Weiss would reject the introduction into this clause of the idea of dying with Christ, on the ground that the words σὺν Χριστῷ bring it in as a new idea in the following verse. But it is no new idea; it is the idea of the whole passage; and unless we bring it in here, the quittance from sin (and not from any obligation in general) remains inexplicable. Weiss, in fact, gives it up.

Ver. 8. The Apostle now resumes his main thought. συνζήσομεν: see note on ἀνάστασις ver. 5: there is no conscious separation of ethical and transcendent life with Christ—to Paul it is one life.

Ver. 9. εἰδότες . . . οὐκέτι ἀποθνήσκει: The new life with Christ will be the same which Christ Himself lives, a life inaccessible to death. The post-resurrection life of Jesus was not His old life over τος αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔτι κυριεύει. 10. ὃ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ· ὃ δὲ ζῇ, ζῇ τῷ Θεῷ. 11. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς λογίζεσθε ἑαυτοὺς νεκροὺς μὲν εἶναι[1] τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, ζῶντας δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.[2] 12. Μὴ οὖν βασιλευέτω ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θνητῷ again; in that life death had dominion over Him, because He made Himself one with us in all the consequences of sin; but now the dominion of death has expired. The principle of ver. 7 can be applied to Christ also: He has died, and the powers which in the old relations had claims upon Him—death, e.g.—have such claims no more.

[1] νεκρους μεν ειναι ℵ³KLP; ειναι νεκρους μεν ℵ¹BC; om. ADF 17.

[2] τω κυριω ημων; om. ABDF, and edd.; ins. ℵCKLP.

Ver. 10. This is expanded in ver. 10. ὃ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ: the ὃ is 'cognate' accus. Winer, p. 209. "The death that He died, He died to sin once for all." The dative τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ must be grammatically the same here as in vers. 2, 11, but the interpretation required seems different. While He lived, Christ had undoubtedly relations to sin, though sin was foreign to His will and conscience (2 Cor. v. 21); but after He died these relations ceased; sin could never make Him its victim again as at the Cross. Similarly while we lived (i.e., before we died with Christ), we also had relations to sin; and these relations likewise, different as they were from His, must cease with that death. The difference in the reference of the dative is no doubt an objection to this interpretation, and accordingly the attempt has been made to give the same meaning to dying to sin in Christ's case as in ours, and indeed to make our dying to sin the effect and reproduction of His. "The language of the Apostle seems to imply that there was something in the mind of Christ in dying for us that was the moral equivalent [italics ours] to that death to sin which takes place in us when we believe in Him, something in its very nature fitted to produce the change in us." Somerville, St. Paul's Conception of Christ, p. 100 f. He died, in short, rather than sin—laid down His life rather than violate the will of God; in this sense, which is an ethical one, and points to an experience which can be reproduced in others under His influence, He died to sin. "His death on the Cross was the final triumph of His holiness over all those desires of the flesh that furnish to man unregenerate the motive power of His life." But though this gives an ethical meaning to the words in both cases, it does not give exactly the same ethical meaning; a certain disparity remains. It is more in the line of all Paul's thoughts to say with Holtzmann (N. T. Theol., ii., 118), that Christ by dying paid to sin that tribute to which in virtue of a Divine sentence (κρίμα, v. 16) it could lay claim, and that those therefore who share His death are like Himself absolved from all claims of sin for the future. For ἐφάπαξ, see Heb. vii. 27, ix. 12, x. 10. The very idea of death is that of a summary, decisive, never-to-be-repeated end. ὃ δὲ ζῇ κ.τ.λ. "The life that He lives He lives to God".

Ver. 11. In this verse the application is made of all that precedes. The death with Christ, the life with Christ, are real, yet to be realised. The truth of being a Christian is contained in them, yet the calling of the Christian is to live up to them. We may forget what we should be; we may also (and this is how Paul puts it) forget what we are. We are dead to sin in Christ's death; we are alive to God in Christ's resurrection; let us regard ourselves as such in Christ Jesus. The essence of our faith is a union to Him in which His experience becomes ours. This is the theological reply to antinomianism.

Ver. 12 f. Practical enforcement of vers. 1-11. The inner life is in union with Christ, and the outer (bodily) life must not be inconsistent with it (Weiss). ἐν τῷ θνητῷ ὑμῶν σώματι: the suggestion of θνητὸς is rather that the frail body should be protected against the tyranny of sin, than that sin leads to the death of the body. μηδὲ παριστάνετε . . . ἀλλὰ παραστήσατε: and do not go on, as you have been doing, putting your members at the service of sin, but put them once for all at the service of God. For the difference between pres. and aor. imper., see Winer, p. 393 f. ὅπλα ἀδικίας: the gen. is of quality, cf. Luke xvi. 8, 9. ὅπλα in the N.T. seems always to mean weapons, not instruments: see ὑμῶν [g] σώματι, εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ ἐν[1] ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ· 13. μηδὲ παριστάνετε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν ὅπλα ἀδικίας τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ· ἀλλὰ παραστήσατε ἑαυτοὺς τῷ Θεῷ ὡς[2] ἐκ νεκρῶν ζῶντας, καὶ τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν ὅπλα [h] δικαιοσύνης τῷ Θεῷ. 14. ἁμαρτία γὰρ ὑμῶν οὐ κυριεύσει· οὐ γάρ ἐστε ὑπὸ νόμον, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ χάριν.

g Ch. viii. 11.
h Ch. xiii. 12.

15. Τί οὖν; ἁμαρτήσομεν,[3] ὅτι οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑπὸ [i] νόμον, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ χάριν; μὴ γένοιτο. 16. οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ᾧ παριστάνετε ἑαυτοὺς δούλους εἰς ὑπακοήν, δοῦλοί ἐστε ᾧ ὑπακούετε, ἤτοι ἁμαρτίας εἰς θάνατον, ἢ ὑπακοῆς εἰς δικαιοσύνην; 17. χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, ὅτι ἦτε

i 1 Cor. ix. 20.

[1] αυτη εν C[3]KLP; om. ℵABC[1] 47, vulg.; αυτη only, DF, Orig.-inter. The received reading is apparently an attempt to combine the other two.

[2] ως DFKLP 17; but ωσει ℵABC 47.

[3] For αμαρτησομεν ℵABCDKLP read αμαρτησωμεν.

2 Cor. x. 4, 6, 7, and cf. ὀψώνια, ver. 23. ὡσεὶ ἐκ νεκρῶν ζῶντας: they were really such; the ὡσεὶ signifies that they are to think of themselves as such, and to act accordingly.

Ver. 14. They can obey these exhortations, for sin will not be their tyrant now, since they are not under law, but under grace. It is not restraint, but inspiration, which liberates from sin: not Mount Sinai but Mount Calvary which makes saints. But this very way of putting the truth (which will be expanded in chaps. vii. and viii.) seems to raise the old difficulty of iii. 8, vi. 1 again. The Apostle states it himself, and proceeds to a final refutation of it.

Ver. 15. ἁμαρτήσωμεν; deliberative: are we to sin because our life is not ruled by statutes, but inspired by the sense of what we owe to that free pardoning mercy of God? Are we to sin because God justifies the ungodly at the Cross?

Ver. 16. οὐκ οἴδατε: It is excluded by the elementary principle that no man can serve two masters (Matt. vi. 24). The δοῦλος is the exclusive property of one, and he belongs to that one εἰς ὑπακοήν, with obedience in view; nothing else than obedience to his master alone is contemplated. The masters here are ἁμαρτία whose service ends in death, and ὑπακοή (cf. v. 19) whose service ends in righteousness. δικαιοσύνη here cannot be "justification," but righteousness in the sense of the character which God approves. ἤτοι here only in N.T. = of course these are the only alternatives.

Ver. 17. Paul thanks God that his readers have already made their choice, and made it for obedience. ὅτι ἦτε . . . ὑπηκούσατε δὲ: the co-ordination seems to imply that Paul is grateful (1) that their servitude to sin is past—ἦτε having the emphasis; (2) that they have received the Gospel. Yet the two things are one, and it would have been more natural to subordinate the first: "that though ye were slaves of sin, ye obeyed," etc. ὑπηκούσατε εἰς ὃν παρεδόθητε τύπον διδαχῆς must be resolved into ὑ. τῷ τύπῳ τῆς διδαχῆς εἰς ὃν παρεδόθητε. The alternative is εἰς τὸν τύπον τῆς διδαχῆς ὃς παρεδόθη ὑμῖν (Kypke). But ὑπακούειν εἴς τι only means to be obedient with respect to something, not to be obedient to some one, or some thing, which is the sense required here. A true parallel is Cyril of Jerus. Catechet. lect. iv., § iii.: πρὸ δὲ τῆς εἰς τὴν πίστιν παραδόσεως; the catechumens were handed over to the faith. But what is the τύπος διδαχῆς to which the converts at Rome were handed over? Many, in the line of these words of Cyril, conceive of it as a "type of doctrine," a special mode of presenting the Gospel, which had as catchwords, e.g., "not under law but under grace," or "free from sin and slaves to righteousness," or more probably, "dying with Christ and rising with Him". In other words, Paulinism as modern theology conceives it. But this is an anachronism. It is only modern eyes that see distinct doctrinal types in the N.T., and Paul, as far as he knew (1 Cor. xv. 3-11), preached the same Gospel as the other Apostles. It is unnecessary, also, to the argument. In whatever form the Gospel won the obedience of men, it was inconsistent with their continuance in sin. Hence it seems nearer the truth to take τύπος διδαχῆς in a more general sense;

δοῦλοι τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ὑπηκούσατε δὲ ἐκ καρδίας εἰς ὃν παρεδόθητε τύπον διδαχῆς. 18. ἐλευθερωθέντες δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ἐδουλώθητε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ. 19. Ἀνθρώπινον λέγω διὰ τὴν ἀσθένειαν τῆς σαρκὸς [k] ὑμῶν. ὥσπερ γὰρ παρεστήσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν δοῦλα τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ τῇ ἀνομίᾳ εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν, οὕτω νῦν παραστήσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν δοῦλα τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ εἰς [l] ἁγιασμόν. 20. ὅτε γὰρ δοῦλοι ἦτε τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ἐλεύθεροι ἦτε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ. 21. τίνα οὖν καρπὸν εἴχετε τότε, ἐφ' οἷς νῦν ἐπαισχύνεσθε; τὸ γὰρ τέλος [1] ἐκείνων θάνατος. 22. νυνὶ δὲ ἐλευθερωθέντες ἀπὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, δουλωθέντες δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, ἔχετε τὸν καρπὸν ὑμῶν εἰς ἁγιασμόν, τὸ δὲ τέλος ζωὴν αἰώνιον. 23. τὰ γὰρ [m] ὀψώνια τῆς ἁμαρτίας θάνατος· τὸ δὲ χάρισμα τοῦ

k Matt. xxvi. 41.
l 1 Thess. iv. 3 f., 7; Heb. xii. 14.
m Luke iii. 14; 1 Cor. ix. 7; 2 Cor. xi. 8.

[1] το γαρ τελος ℵ[1]ACD[3]KLP; το μεν γαρ τελος ℵ[3]BD[1]F, Syr. As the reasons for omitting are obvious—the art. is already separated from the substantive, and there is really nothing to balance it—the μεν is probably original, and is retained by Lachmann, Weiss, and Tregelles (marg.), though omitted by W. and H.

it is teaching, of course in a definite form, but regarded chiefly in its ethical requirements; when received, or when men were handed over to it, it became a moral authority. Cf. Hort, Romans and Ephesians, p. 32 f. What is the time referred to in the aorists ὑπηκούσατε and παρεδόθητε? It is the time when they became Christians, a time really fixed by their acceptance of the Gospel in faith, and outwardly marked by baptism. Baptism is the visible point of separation between the two servitudes—to sin and to God.

Ver. 18. There is no absolute independence for man; our nature requires us to serve some master.

Ver. 19. ἀνθρώπινον λέγω διὰ τὴν ἀσθένειαν τῆς σαρκὸς ὑμῶν. Cf. iii. 5, Gal. iii. 15. Paul apologises for using this human figure of the relation of slave to master to convey spiritual truths. But what is "the weakness of the flesh" which makes him have recourse to such figures? Weiss makes it moral. The Apostle speaks with this unmistakable plainness and emphasis because he is writing to morally weak persons whose nature and past life really made them liable to temptations to libertinism. This seems to me confirmed by the reference, which immediately follows, to the character of their pre-Christian life. Others make the weakness rather intellectual than ethical, as if Paul said: "I condescend to your want of spiritual intelligence in using such figures". But this is not a natural meaning for "the weakness of your flesh," and does not yield so good a connection with what follows. δοῦλα τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ τῇ ἀνομίᾳ: ἀκαθαρσία defiling the sinner, ἀνομία disregarding the will of God. If εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν should remain in the text, it may suggest that this bad life never gets beyond itself. On the other hand, to present the members as slaves to righteousness has ἁγιασμός in view, which is a higher thing. ἁγιασμὸς is sanctification, primarily as an act or process, eventually as a result. It is unreal to ask whether the process or the result is meant here: they have no meaning apart.

Ver. 20. In every state in which man lives, there is a bondage and a liberty. In the old state, it was bondage to sin, and liberty in relation to righteousness. For τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ see Winer, 263.

Ver. 21 f. To decide which of the two lives, or of the two freedoms, is the true, Paul appeals to their fruits. The marked contrast between τότε and νῦν is in favour of those who put the mark of interrogation after τότε. "What fruit therefore had you then? Things of which you are now ashamed." The construction ἐφ' οἷς ἐπαισχύνεσθε is found also in Isa. i. 29: ᾐσχύνθησαν ἐπὶ τοῖς κήποις. If the point of interrogation is put after ἐπαισχύνεσθε, the answer "none" must be interpolated: and ἐκείνων supplied as antecedent to ἐφ' οἷς. νυνὶ δέ: But now, now that the situation is reversed, and you have been freed from sin and made slaves to God, you have your fruit εἰς ἁγιασμόν. He does not say what the fruit is, but we know what the things are which contribute to and result in ἁγιασμός: see ver. 19.

Ver. 23. The γὰρ introduces the Θεοῦ ζωὴ αἰώνιος ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν. VII. 1. Ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε, ἀδελφοί (γινώσκουσι γὰρ νόμον λαλῶ,) ὅτι ὁ νόμος κυριεύει τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ; 2. ἡ γὰρ ὕπανδρος γυνὴ τῷ ζῶντι ἀνδρὶ δέδεται νόμῳ· ἐὰν δὲ ἀποθάνῃ ὁ ἀνήρ, κατήργηται ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀνδρός. 3. ἄρα οὖν ζῶντος τοῦ ἀνδρὸς μοιχαλὶς χρηματίσει, ἐὰν γένηται ἀνδρὶ ἑτέρῳ· ἐὰν δὲ ἀποθάνῃ ὁ ἀνήρ, ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, τοῦ μὴ εἶναι αὐτὴν μοιχαλίδα, γενομένην ἀνδρὶ ἑτέρῳ. 4. ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ διὰ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς ἑτέρῳ, τῷ ἐκ νεκρῶν general truth of which what has been said of the Romans in ver. 21 f. is an illustration. "All this is normal and natural, for the wages of sin is death," etc. ὀψώνια 1 Macc. iii. 28, xiv. 32. The idea of a warfare (see ὅπλα, ver. 13) is continued. The soldier's pay who enlists in the service of sin is death. τὸ δὲ χάρισμα: but the free gift, etc. The end in God's service is not of debt, but of grace. Tertullian (quoted in S. and H.) renders χάρισμα here donativum (the largess given by the emperor to soldiers on a New Year's Day or birthday), keeping on the military association; but Paul could hardly use what is almost a technical expression with himself in a technical sense quite remote from his own. On ζωὴ αἰώνιος ἐν Χ. Ἰ. τῷ κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, see on v. 21.

Chapter VII. The subject of chap. vi. is continued. The Apostle shows how by death the Christian is freed from the law, which, good as it is in itself and in the Divine intention, nevertheless, owing to the corruption of man's nature, instead of helping to make him good, perpetually stimulates sin. Vers. 1-6 describe the liberation from the law; vers. 7-13, the actual working of the law; in vers. 14-25 we are shown that this working of the law is due not to anything in itself, but to the power of sin in the flesh.

Vers. 1-6. For ἢ ἀγνοεῖτε, cf. vi. 3. Chap. vi. contains the argument which is illustrated in these verses, and the question alludes to it: not to accept the argument that the Christian is free from all legal obligations leaves no alternative but to suppose the persons to whom it is addressed ignorant of the principle by which the duration of all legal obligations is determined. This they cannot be, for Paul speaks γινώσκουσι νόμον = to people who know what law is. Neither Roman nor Mosaic law is specially referred to: the argument rests on the nature of law in general. Even in ὁ νόμος, though in applying the principle Paul would think first of the Mosaic law, it is not exclusively referred to.

Ver. 2 f. An illustration of the principle. It is the only illustration in which death liberates a person who yet remains alive and can enter into new relations. Of course there is an inexactness, for in the argument the Christian is freed by his own death, and in the illustration the wife is freed by the husband's death; but we must discount that. Paul required an illustration in which both death and a new life appeared. κατήργηται ἀπό: cf. ver. 6, Gal. v. 4: she is once for all discharged (or as R.V. in Gal. "severed") from the law of the husband: for the genitive τοῦ ἀνδρός, see Winer, 235. χρηματίσει = she shall be publicly designated: cf. Acts xi. 26. τοῦ μὴ εἶναι αὐτὴν μοιχαλίδα κ.τ.λ.: grammatically this may either mean (1) that she may not be an adulteress, though married to another man; or (2) so that she is not, etc. Meyer prefers the first; and it may be argued that in this place, at all events, the idea of forming another connection is essential: cf. εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς ἑτέρῳ, ver. 4 (Gifford); but it is difficult to conceive of innocent remarriage as being formally the purpose of the law in question, and the second meaning is therefore to be preferred. Cf. Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 398.

Ver. 4. ὥστε καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ: the inference is drawn rather from the principle than from the example, but καὶ ὑμεῖς means "you as well as the woman in the illustration," not "you Gentiles as well as I a Jew". The last, which is Weiss's interpretation, introduces a violent contrast of which there is not the faintest hint in the context. The meaning of ἐθανατώθητε is fixed by reference to chap. vi. 3-6. The aorist refers to the definite time at which in their baptism the old life (and with it all its legal obligations)

a Matt. xiii. 23; Col. i. 6, 10. b Gal. v. 24.

ἐγερθέντι, ἵνα ᵃ καρποφορήσωμεν τῷ Θεῷ. 5. ὅτε γὰρ ἦμεν ἐν τῇ σαρκί, τὰ ᵇ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου ἐνηργεῖτο ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν ἡμῶν, εἰς τὸ καρποφορῆσαι τῷ θανάτῳ· 6. νυνὶ δὲ κατηργήθημεν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, ἀποθανόντες ἐν ᾧ κατειχόμεθα, ὥστε δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς[1] ἐν καινότητι πνεύματος, καὶ οὐ παλαιότητι γράμματος.

7. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ὁ νόμος ἁμαρτία; μὴ γένοιτο· ἀλλὰ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔγνων, εἰ μὴ διὰ νόμου· τήν τε γὰρ ἐπιθυμίαν οὐκ came to an end. διὰ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χτοῦ: Weiss rejects as opposed to the context the "dogmatic" reference to the sacrificial death of Christ as a satisfaction for sin; all the words imply, according to him, is that the Christian, in baptism, experiences a ὁμοίωμα of Christ's death, or as it is put in vi. 6 is crucified with Him, and so liberated from every relation to the law. But if Christ's death had no spiritual content—if it were not a death "for our sins" (1 Cor. xv. 3), a death having the sacrificial character and atoning virtue described in iii. 25 f.—there would be no reason why a sinful man should be baptised into Christ and His death at all, and in point of fact no one would be baptised. It is because Christ's death is what it is, a sin-expiating death, that it draws men to Him, and spiritually reproduces in them a reflex or counterpart of His death, with which all their old relations and obligations terminate. The object of this is that they may belong to another, a different person. Paul does not say ἑτέρῳ ἀνδρί: the marriage metaphor is dropped. He is speaking of the experience of Christians one by one, and though Christ is sometimes spoken of as the husband or bridegroom of the Church, there is no Scripture authority for using this metaphor of His relation to the individual soul. Neither is this interpretation favoured by the use of καρποφορήσωμεν; to interpret this of the fruit of the new marriage is both needless and grotesque. The word is used frequently in the N.T. for the outcome of the Christian life, but never with this association; and a reference to vi. 21 shows how natural it is to the Apostle without any such prompting. Even the change from the second person (ἐθανατώθητε) to the first (καρποφορήσωμεν) shows that he is contemplating the end of the Christian life quite apart from the suggestions of the metaphor. Christ is described as τῷ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγερθέντι, because we can only belong to a living person. τῷ θεῷ is dat. comm. God is the person interested in this result.

[1] ημας om. BFG. Most edd. (W. and H., Lachm., and Treg.) bracket it; Weiss omits, but allows that the case is disputable.

Ver. 5. Contrast of the earlier life. "ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ" is materially the same as "ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον"; the same state of the soul is described more from within and more from without. The opposite would be ἐν τῷ πνεύματι, or ὑπὸ χάριν. τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν are the passions from which acts of sin proceed: Gal. v. 24. τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου: it is through the law that these passions become actualised: we would never know them for what they are, if it were not for the law. εἰς τὸ καρποφορῆσαι τῷ θανάτῳ: there is no allusion to marriage here any more than in ver. 4. Death is personified here as in v. 17: this tyrant of the human race is the only one who profits by the fruits of the sinful life.

Ver. 6. νυνὶ δὲ but as things stand, considering what we are as Christians. κατηργήθημεν: cf. ver. 2. We are discharged from the law, by our death to that in which we were held. But what is this? Most expositors say the law; Philippi even makes τοῦ νόμου the antecedent of ἐν ᾧ, rendering, we have been delivered, by dying, from the law in which we were held. This construction is too artificial to be true; and if we supply τούτῳ with ἀποθανόντες, something vaguer than the law, though involving and involved by it (the old life in the flesh, for instance) must be meant. ὥστε δουλεύειν κ.τ.λ.: "enabling us to serve" (S. and H.): for ὥστε with inf. in N.T., see Blass, Gramm. des N.T. Griech., § 219. ἐν καινότητι πνεύματος κ.τ.λ. = in a new way, which only the possession of the spirit makes possible, not in the old way which alone was possible when we were under the letter of the law. For the Pauline contrast of πνεῦμα and γράμμα, see 2 Cor. iii.; for οὐ in this expression, see Burton, § 481.

ᾔδειν, εἰ μὴ ὁ νόμος ἔλεγεν, "Οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις". 8. [c]ἀφορμὴν δὲ λαβοῦσα ἡ ἁμαρτία διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς κατειργάσατο [1] ἐν ἐμοὶ πᾶσαν c 2 Cor. xi. 12; Gal. v. 13; 1 Tim. v. 14.

[1] κατειργασατο ℵACFGKL; κατηργασατο B[1]DP. In chap. xv. 18 all editors with ℵABCP read κατειργασατο, and this is preferred here by Lachm., W. and H., and by Weiss in all places; but here Tischdf., Treg. and Alford read κατηργασατο. Variations in the treatment of the augment are very frequent in the MSS.

Vers. 7-13. The actual working of the law. A very close connection between the law and sin is implied in all that has preceded: especially in vi. 14, and in such an expression as τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου in vii. 5. This connection has to be examined more closely. The object of the Apostle, according to Weiss, is not to answer a false inference from his teaching, viz., that the law is sin, but to conciliate for his own mind the idea of liberation from the law with the recognition of the O.T. revelation. But the difficulty of conciliating these two things is not peculiar to the Apostle; it is because we all feel it in some form that the passage is so real to us. Our experience of law has been as tragic as his, and we too ask how this comports with the idea of its Divine origin. The much discussed question, whether the subject of this passage (vers. 7-24) is the unregenerate or the regenerate self, or whether in particular vers. 7-13 refer to the unregenerate, and vers. 14-24 to the regenerate, is hardly real. The distinction in its absolute form belongs to doctrine, not to experience. No one could have written the passage but a Christian: it is the experience of the unregenerate, we may say, but seen through regenerate eyes, interpreted in a regenerate mind. It is the Apostle's spiritual history, but universalised; a history in which one stage is not extinguished by the next, but which is present as a whole to his consciousness, each stage all the time determining and determined by all the rest. We cannot date the things of the spirit as simply as if they were mere historical incidents. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν, cf. vi. 1: What inference then shall we draw? sc. from the relations of sin and law just suggested. Is the law sin? Paul repels the thought with horror. ἀλλὰ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔγνων: ἀλλὰ may continue the protest = On the contrary, I should not have known sin, etc.; or it may be restrictive, abating the completeness of the negation involved in the protest. The law is not sin—God forbid; but, for all that, there is a connection: I should not have known sin but by the law. The last suits the context better: see ver. 21. On οὐκ ἔγνων without ἄν, see Winer, 383: it is possible, however (Gifford), to render simply, I did not know sin except through the law; and so also with οὐκ ᾔδειν. διὰ νόμου: of course he thinks of the Mosaic law, but the absence of the article shows that it is the legal, not the Mosaic, character of it which is in view; and it is this which enables us to understand the experience in question. τήν τε γὰρ ἐπιθυμίαν κ.τ.λ.: the desire for what is forbidden is the first conscious form of sin. For the force of τε here see Winer, p. 561. Simcox, Language of the N.T., p. 160. In the very similar construction in 2 Cor. x. 8 Winer suggests an anacoluthon: possibly Paul meant here also to introduce something which would have balanced the τε (I should both have been ignorant of lust, unless the law had said, Thou shalt not lust, and ignorant of other forms of sin unless the law had prohibited them). But the one instance, as he works it out, suffices him. It seems impossible to deny the reference to the tenth commandment (Exod. xx. 17) when the words οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις are quoted from "the law"; but the special modes of ἐπιθυμία prohibited are of no consequence, and it is beside the mark to argue that Paul's escape from pharisaism began with the discovery that a feeling, not an outward act only, might be sinful. All he says is that the consciousness of sin awoke in him in the shape of a conflict with a prohibitive law, and to illustrate this he quotes the tenth commandment. Its generality made it the most appropriate to quote.

Ver. 8. ἀφορμὴν λαβοῦσα means "having received," not "having taken" occasion. ἡ ἁμαρτία is sin as a power dwelling in man, of the presence of which he is as yet unaware. How it "receives occasion" is not stated; it must be by coming face to face with something which appeals to ἐπιθυμία; but when it has received it, it avails itself of the commandment (viz., the one prohibiting ἐπιθυμία) to work in us ἐπιθυμία of ἐπιθυμίαν· χωρὶς γὰρ νόμου ἁμαρτία νεκρά· 9. ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων χωρὶς νόμου ποτέ· ἐλθούσης δὲ τῆς ἐντολῆς, ἡ ἁμαρτία [d] ἀνέζησεν, 10. ἐγὼ δὲ ἀπέθανον· καὶ εὑρέθη μοι ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ εἰς ζωήν, αὕτη εἰς θάνατον. 11. ἡ γὰρ ἁμαρτία [e] ἀφορμὴν λαβοῦσα διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς ἐξηπάτησέ με, καὶ δι' αὐτῆς ἀπέκτεινεν. 12. ὥστε ὁ μὲν νόμος ἅγιος, καὶ ἡ ἐντολὴ ἁγία καὶ δικαία καὶ ἀγαθή. 13. Τὸ οὖν ἀγαθὸν ἐμοὶ γέγονε [1] θάνατος; μὴ γένοιτο· ἀλλὰ ἡ ἁμαρτία, ἵνα φανῇ ἁμαρτία, διὰ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ μοι κατεργαζομένη θάνατον, ἵνα γένηται καθ' [f] ὑπερβολὴν ἁμαρτωλὸς ἡ ἁμαρτία διὰ τῆς ἐντολῆς. 14. Οἴδαμεν γὰρ [2] ὅτι ὁ νόμος πνευματικός ἐστιν· ἐγὼ δὲ σαρκικός [3] εἰμι, πεπραμένος ὑπὸ

d Luke xv. 24, 32.
e Ver. 8.
f 1 Cor. xii. 31; 2 Cor. i. 8; iv. 17; Gal. i. 13.

[1] γεγονε KL; εγενετο ℵABCD.

[2] γαρ ℵBCFK; δε AD (Greek) L. See note [1] page 604.

[3] σαρκικος ℵ[3]LP; but σαρκινος ℵABCDF. The two words are constantly confused (Alford), but the change may have been made intentionally here with the idea that an ethical word was wanted.

every sort. It really is the commandment which it uses, for without law sin is dead. Cf. iv. 15, v. 13: but especially 1 Cor. xv. 56. Apart from the law we have no experience either of its character or of its vitality.

Ver. 9. ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων χωρὶς νόμου ποτέ: this is ideal biography. There is not really a period in life to which one can look back as the happy time when he had no conscience; the lost paradise in the infancy of men or nations only serves as a foil to the moral conflicts and disorder of maturer years, of which we are clearly conscious. ἐλθούσης δὲ τῆς ἐντολῆς κ.τ.λ. In these words, on the other hand, the most intensely real experience is vividly reproduced. When the commandment came, sin "came to life again"; its dormant energies woke, and "I died". "There is a deep tragic pathos in the brief and simple statement; it seems to point to some definite period full of painful recollections" (Gifford). To say that "death" here means the loss of immortality (bodily death without the hope of resurrection), as Lipsius, or that it means only "spiritual" death, is to lose touch with the Apostle's mode of thought. It is an indivisible thing, all doom and despair, too simply felt to be a subject for analysis.

Ver. 10. The result is that the commandment defeats its own intention; it has life in view, but it ends in death. Here also analysis only misleads. Life and death are indivisible wholes.

Ver. 11. Yet this result is not due to the commandment in itself. It is indwelling sin, inherited from Adam, which, when it has found a base of operations, employs the commandment to deceive (cf. Gen. iii. 13) and to kill. "Sin here takes the place of the Tempter" in Genesis (S. and H.).

Ver. 12. The conclusion is that the law is holy (this is the answer to the question with which the discussion started in ver. 7: ὁ νόμος ἁμαρτία;), and the commandment, which is the law in operation, holy and just and good. ἁγία means that it belongs to God and has a character corresponding; δικαία that its requirements are those which answer to the relations in which man stands to God and his fellow-creatures; ἀγαθή that in its nature and aim it is beneficent; man's weal, not his woe, is its natural end. There is no formal contrast to ὁ μὲν νόμος, such as was perhaps in the Apostle's mind when he began the sentence, and might have been introduced by ἡ δὲ ἁμαρτία; but a real contrast is given in ver. 13.

Ver. 13. The description of the commandment as "good" raises the problem of ver. 7 in a new form. Can the good issue in evil? Did that which is good turn out to be death to me? This also is denied, or rather repelled. It was not the good law, but sin, which became death to the Apostle. And in this there was a Divine intention, viz., that sin might appear sin, might come out in its true colours, by working death for man through that which is good. Sin turns God's intended blessing into a curse; nothing could more clearly show what it is, or excite a stronger desire for deliverance from it. The second clause with ἵνα (ἵνα γένηται καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἁμαρτωλὸς ἡ ἁμαρτία) seems co-ordinate with the first, yet intensifies it: personified sin not only appears, but actually turns out to be, beyond measure sinful through its perversion of the commandment.

τὴν ἁμαρτίαν. 15. ὃ γὰρ κατεργάζομαι, οὐ γινώσκω· οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω, τοῦτο πράσσω· ἀλλ' ὃ μισῶ, τοῦτο ποιῶ. 16. εἰ δὲ ὃ οὐ θέλω, τοῦτο ποιῶ, [g] σύμφημι τῷ νόμῳ ὅτι καλός. 17. νυνὶ δὲ οὐκ- gHere only.

Vers. 14-25. The last section of the chapter confirms the argument in which Paul has vindicated the law, by exhibiting the power of sin in the flesh. It is this which makes the law weak, and defeats its good intention. "Hitherto he had contrasted himself, in respect of his whole being, with the Divine law; now, however, he begins to describe a discord which exists within himself" (Tholuck).

Ver. 14. ὁ νόμος πνευματικός: the law comes from God who is Spirit, and it shares His nature: its affinities are Divine, not human. ἐγὼ δὲ σάρκινός εἰμι, πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν: I, as opposed to the law, am a creature of flesh, sold under sin. σάρκινος is properly material = carneus, consisting of flesh, as opposed to σαρκικός, which is ethical=carnalis. Paul uses it because he is thinking of human nature, rather than of human character, as in opposition to the Divine law. He does not mean that there is no higher element in human nature having affinity to the law (against this see vers. 22-25), but that such higher elements are so depressed and impotent that no injustice is done in describing human nature as in his own person he describes it here. Flesh has such an exclusive preponderance that man can only be regarded as a being who has no affinity for the spiritual law of God, and necessarily kicks against it. Not that this is to be regarded as his essential nature. It describes him only as πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν: the slave of sin. To speak of man as "flesh" is to speak of him as distinguished from God who is "Spirit"; but owing to the diffusion of sin in humanity, and the ascendency it has acquired, this mere distinction becomes an antagonism, and the mind of "the flesh" is enmity against God. In σάρκινος there is the sense of man's weakness, and pity for it; σαρκικός would only have expressed condemnation, perhaps a shade of disgust or contempt. Weiss rightly remarks that the present tense εἰμι is determined simply by the ἐστιν preceding. Paul is contrasting the law of God and human nature, of course on the basis of his own experience; but the contrast is worked out ideally, or timelessly, as we might say, all the tenses being present; it is obvious, however, on reflection, that the experience described is essentially that of his pre-Christian days. It is the unregenerate man's experience, surviving at least in memory into regenerate days, and read with regenerate eyes.

Ver. 15. Only the hypothesis of slavery explains his acts. For what I do οὐ γινώσκω, i.e., I do not recognise it as my own, as a thing for which I am responsible and which I can approve: my act is that of a slave who is but the instrument of another's will. οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω κ.τ.λ. There is "an incomprehensible contradiction in his action". κατεργάζεσθαι is to effect, to bring about by one's own work; πράσσειν is to work at, to busy oneself with, a thing, with or without success, but with purpose; ποιεῖν is simply to make or produce.

Ver. 16. ὃ οὐ θέλω takes up ὃ μισῶ the negative expression is strong enough for the argument. In doing what he hates, i.e., in doing evil against his will, his will agrees with the law, that it is good. καλός suggests the moral beauty or nobility of the law, not like ἀγαθή (ver. 12) its beneficial purpose.

Ver. 17. Νυνὶ δὲ οὐκέτι ἐγὼ κατεργάζομαι αὐτό. ἐγὼ is the true I, and emphatic. As things are, in view of the facts just explained, it is not the true self which is responsible for this line of conduct, but the sin which has its abode in the man: contrast viii. 11 τὸ ἐνοικοῦν αὐτοῦ πνεῦμα ἐν ὑμῖν. "Paul said, 'It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me,' and 'I live, yet not I, but Christ that liveth in me'; and both these sayings of his touch on the unsayable" (Dr. John Duncan). To be saved from sin, a man must at the same time own it and disown it; it is this practical paradox which is reflected in this verse. It is safe for a Christian like Paul—it is not safe for everybody—to explain his failings by the watchword, Not I, but indwelling sin. That might be antinomian, or manichean, as well as evan-ἔτι ἐγὼ κατεργάζομαι αὐτό, ἀλλ' ἡ οἰκοῦσα[1] ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία. 18. Οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι οὐκ οἰκεῖ ἐν ἐμοὶ (τουτέστιν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου,) ἀγαθόν· τὸ γὰρ θέλειν [h] παράκειταί μοι, τὸ δὲ κατεργάζεσθαι τὸ καλὸν οὐχ εὑρίσκω.[2] 19. οὐ γὰρ ὃ θέλω ποιῶ ἀγαθόν· ἀλλ' ὃ οὐ θέλω κακόν, τοῦτο πράσσω. 20. εἰ δὲ ὃ οὐ θέλω ἐγώ,[3] τοῦτο ποιῶ, οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ κατεργάζομαι αὐτό, ἀλλ' ἡ οἰκοῦσα ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία. 21. Εὑρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον τῷ θέλοντι ἐμοὶ ποιεῖν τὸ καλόν, ὅτι ἐμοὶ τὸ κακὸν παράκειται. 22. [i] συνήδομαι γὰρ τῷ νόμῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ κατὰ τὸν ἔσω h Only here and ver. 21.

i Here only.

[1] For οικουσα ℵB read ενοικουσα, which is right.

[2] ουχ ευρισκω DFKLP; ου alone without ευρισκω ℵABC.

[3] θελω εγω ℵAKLP, Syr.; om. εγω BCDEFG. W. and H. omit εγω from text but put it in marg. Weiss thinks if it had been inserted after the apodosis had been written it would have been before ου θελω, and as it might easily be omitted to conform to ver. 16, the first clause of which is verbally the same, he counts it genuine, though admitting that the case is difficult.

gelical. A true saint may say it in a moment of passion, but a sinner had better not make it a principle.

Ver. 18. It is sin, and nothing but sin, that has to be taken account of in this connection, for "I know that in me, that is in my flesh, there dwells no good". For τοῦτ' ἔστιν see on i. 12. ἐν ἐμοὶ = ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου = in me, regarded as a creature of flesh, apart from any relation to or affinity for God and His spirit. This, of course, is not a complete view of what man is at any stage of his life. τὸ γὰρ θέλειν παράκειταί μοι: θέλειν is rather wish than will: the want of will is the very thing lamented. An inclination to the good is at his hand, within the limit of his resources, but not the actual effecting of the good.

Ver. 19. In this verse there is a repetition of verse 15, but what was there an abstract contrast between inclination and action is here sharpened into the moral contrast between good inclination and bad action.

Ver. 20. The same conclusion as in ver. 17. If the first ἐγὼ is right, it must go with οὐ θέλω: Paul distinguishes himself sharply, as a person whose inclination is violated by his actions, from the indwelling sin which is really responsible for them.

Vers. 21-23 summarise the argument. εὑρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον . . . ὅτι: most commentators hold that the clause introduced by ὅτι is the explanation of τὸν νόμον. The law, in short, which Paul has discovered by experience, is the constant fact that when his inclination is to do good, evil is present with him. This sense of law approximates very closely to the modern sense which the word bears in physical science—so closely that its very modernness may be made an objection to it. Possibly Paul meant, in using the word, to convey at the same time the idea of an outward compulsion put on him by sin, which expressed itself in this constant incapacity to do the good he inclined to—authority or constraint as well as normality being included in his idea of the word. But ὁ νόμος in Paul always seems to have much more definitely the suggestion of something with legislative authority: it is questionable whether the first meaning given above would have occurred, or would have seemed natural, except to a reader familiar with the phraseology of modern science. Besides, the subject of the whole paragraph is the relation of "the law" to sin, and the form of the sentence is quite analogous to that of ver. 10, in which a preliminary conclusion has been come to on the question. Hence I agree with those who make τὸν νόμον the Mosaic law. The construction is not intolerable, if we observe that εὑρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον τῷ θέλοντι ἐμοὶ κ.τ.λ. is equivalent to εὑρίσκεται ἄρα ὁ νόμος τῷ θέλοντι ἐμοὶ κ.τ.λ. "This is what I find the law—or life under the law—to come to in experience: when I wish to do good, evil is present with me." This is the answer he has already given in ver. 7 to the question, Is the law sin? No, it is not sin, but nevertheless sin is most closely connected with it. The repeated ἐμοί has something tragic in it: me, who am so anxious to do otherwise.

Ver. 22 f. Further explanation: the [k] ἄνθρωπον· 23. βλέπω δὲ ἕτερον νόμον ἐν τοῖς μέλεσί μου ἀντιστρατευόμενον τῷ νόμῳ τοῦ νοός μου, καὶ [l] αἰχμαλωτίζοντά με [1] τῷ νόμῳ τῆς ἁμαρτίας τῷ ὄντι ἐν τοῖς μέλεσί μου. 24. ταλαίπωρος ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπος· τίς με ῥύσεται ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ θανάτου τούτου; 25. εὐχαριστῶ [2] τῷ Θεῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν. ἄρα οὖν αὐτὸς ἐγὼ τῷ μὲν νοῒ [3] δουλεύω νόμῳ Θεοῦ· τῇ δὲ σαρκὶ νόμῳ

k 2 Cor. iv. 16; Eph. iii. 16.
l 2 Cor. x. 5. 2 Tim. iii. 6.

[1] αιχμαλωτιζοντα με εν τω νομω ℵBDFKP; om. εν ACL, most cursives, Syr. and many fathers. The omission, according to Weiss, is manifestly made to simplify the expression. Lachm. omits; W. and H. bracket.

[2] ευχαριστω ℵAKLP, most cursives and fathers; W. and H. in marg. χαρις B., Sah., Orig. 1. This is the reading adopted in all the crit. edd. as the one from which the variants are most easily deduced (e.g., η χαρις του θεου D, vulg.; η χ. τ. κυριου F; χαρις δε τω θεω ℵ[1]C[2]).

[3] τω μεν νοι, om. μεν ℵ[1]FG, vulg., and Lat. fathers. The omission must be accidental, and all edd. except Tischdf. keep μεν.

incongruity between inclination and action has its roots in a division within man's nature. The law of God legislates for him, and in the inner man (Eph. iii. 16) he delights in it. The inner man is not equivalent to the new or regenerate man; it is that side of every man's nature which is akin to God, and is the point of attachment, so to speak, for the regenerating spirit. It is called inward because it is not seen. What is seen is described in ver. 23. Here also νόμος is not used in the modern physical sense, but imaginatively: "I see that a power to legislate, of a different kind (different from the law of God), asserts itself in my members, making war on the law of my mind". The law of my mind is practically identical with the law of God in ver. 22: and the νοῦς itself, if not identical with ὁ ἔσω ἄνθρωπος, is its chief organ. Paul does not see in his nature two normal modes in which certain forces operate; he sees two authorities saying to him, Do this, and the higher succumbing to the lower. As the lower prevails, it leads him captive to the law of Sin which is in his members, or in other words to itself: "of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage". The end therefore is that man, as a creature of flesh, living under law, does what Sin enjoins. It is the law of Sin to which he gives obedience.

Ver. 24. ταλαίπωρος ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπος· τίς με ῥύσεται; "a wail of anguish and a cry for help". The words are not those of the Apostle's heart as he writes; they are the words which he knows are wrung from the heart of the man who realises that he is himself in the state just described. Paul has reproduced this vividly from his own experience, but ταλαίπωρος ἐγὼ ἄνθρωπος is not the cry of the Christian Paul, but of the man whom sin and law have brought to despair. ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ θανάτου τούτου: "This death" is the death of which man is acutely conscious in the condition described: it is the same as the death of ver. 9, but intensely realised through the experience of captivity to sin. "The body of this death" is therefore the same as "the body of sin" in chap. vi. 6: it is the body which, as the instrument if not the seat of sin, is involved in its doom. Salvation must include deliverance from the body so far as the body has this character and destiny.

Ver. 25. The exclamation of thanksgiving shows that the longed-for deliverance has actually been achieved. The regenerate man's ideal contemplation of his pre-Christian state rises with sudden joy into a declaration of his actual emancipation as a Christian. διὰ Ἰ. Χ. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν: Christ is regarded as the mediator through whom the thanksgiving ascends to God, not as the author of the deliverance for which thanks are given. With ἄρα οὖν αὐτὸς ἐγώ the Apostle introduces the conclusion of this whole discussion. "So then I myself—that is, I, leaving Jesus Christ our Lord out of the question—can get no further than this: with the mind, or in the inner man, I serve a law of God (a Divine law), but with the flesh, or in my actual outward life, a law of sin." We might say the law of God, or of sin; but the absence of the definite article emphasises the ἁμαρτίας. VIII. 1. Οὐδὲν ἄρα νῦν κατάκριμα τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα.[1] 2. ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς ζωῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ [a] ἠλευθέρωσέ με[2] ἀπὸ τοῦ a John viii. 32-36; Ch. vi. 18, 22; Gal. v. 1.

[1] μη κατα σαρκα περιπατουσιν αλλα κατα πνευμα om. ℵ¹BCD¹F 47, Egypt. and Ethiopic versions, Orig. and Athan. and all crit. edd. The first part of the addition, μη . . . περιπατουσιν, is found in AD², vulg., Syr.; the rest, αλλα κατα πνευμα, in ℵ³D³KLP and most later authorities.

[2] ηλευθερωσεν με ACDKLP, vulg., Syr. For με, σε is found ℵBFG, and also in Latin and Syriac authorities. ημας is supported by Egypt. and Aeth. versions. The case is a very difficult one. σε is the harder reading, and Weiss, who adopts it, argues that it was changed into με under the influence of the preceding paragraphs in which the first person rules. Sanday and Headlam think σε can hardly be right because it is nowhere suggested in the context. W. and H. suspect a primitive error. "The distribution of documents, combined with internal evidence, favours the omission of both pronouns, which is supported by some MSS. of Arm(enian version), and perhaps by Orig. loc., Ruf. com.; σε, a very unlikely reading, is probably only an early repetition of -σε" (Appendix to N.T., p. 108).

character of law. αὐτὸς ἐγὼ: see 2 Cor. x. 1, xii. 13.

CHAPTER VIII. For the place of this chapter in the argument see chap. vi., ad init. The general subject is the life in the spirit, by which the power of sin is broken, and the believer enabled to live to God. It falls into three parts (1) vers. 1-11, in which the spirit as opposed to the flesh is described as the principle of righteousness and life; (2) vers. 12-27, in which it is regarded as a spirit of adoption, the first fruits of a heavenly inheritance for the children of God; and (3) vers. 28-39, in which Paul concludes the argument, glorying in the assurance of God's immutable love in Jesus Christ.

(1) Vers. 1-11. The Spirit as the principle of righteousness and life.

Ver. 1. οὐδὲν ἄρα νῦν κατάκριμα τοῖς ἐν Χ. Ἰ. The οὐδὲν is emphatic: condemnation is in every sense out of the question. νῦν is temporal: it distinguishes the Christian from the pre-Christian period of life. The bold assertion is an inference (ἄρα) from what is implied in the thanksgiving to God through Jesus Christ (vii. 25). The description of Christians as "those who are in Christ Jesus" goes back to the words of Jesus Himself in John xv.

Ver. 2. There is no condemnation, for all ground for it has been removed. "The law of the spirit of the life which is in Christ Jesus made me [thee] free from the law of sin and death." It is subjection to the law of sin and death which involves condemnation; emancipation from it leaves no place for condemnation. For the meaning of "the law" see on vii. 23. The spirit which brings to the believer the life which is in Christ Jesus brings with it also the Divine law for the believer's life; but it is now, as Paul says in Gal. iii. 21, a "νόμος ὁ δυνάμενος ζωοποιῆσαι," not an impotent law written on tables of stone, and hence righteousness comes by it; it proves more than a match for the authority exercised over man by the forces of sin and death. Paul would not have called the Divine law (even as a series of statutes) a law of sin and death, though he says τὸ γράμμα ἀποκτείνει; Sin and Death are conceived objectively as powers which impose their own law on unredeemed men.

Ver. 3. He now explains how this was done. It was not done by the law: that is the first point. If τὸ ἀδύνατον is active (= "the inability" of the law) we must suppose that Paul meant to finish the sentence, "was overcome," or "was removed" by God. If it is passive (= "that which is impossible" for the law), we must suppose he meant to finish it, "was achieved" or "accomplished" by God. There is really no way of deciding whether ἀδύνατον is active or passive, and the anacoluthon makes it impossible to tell what construction Paul had in his mind, i.e., whether ἀδύνατον is nominative or accusative. For the best examination of the grammar see S. and H. ἐν ᾧ probably refers to ἀδύνατον: the point at which the law was impotent, in which it was weak through the flesh. This is better than to render ἐν ᾧ "in that," or "because". For the meaning cf. vii. 18. What the law could not do, God did by sending τὸν ἑαυτοῦ υἱὸν His own Son. With the coming of so great a Person, νόμου τῆς ἁμαρτίας καὶ τοῦ θανάτου. 3. Τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου, ἐν ᾧ ἠσθένει διὰ τῆς σαρκός, ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ υἱὸν πέμψας ἐν [b] ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας κατέκρινε τὴν

[b] See Ch. vi. v.

uniquely related to God (for this is implied both here and in ver. 32, as contrasted with ver. 14), a new saving power entered the world. God sent His Son ἐν ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας. The connection implies that sending Him thus was in some way related to the end to be secured. But what do the words mean? ὁμοίωμα occurs in Rom. i. 23, v. 14, vi. 5, and also in Phil. ii. 7. This last passage, in which Christ is described as ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος, is the one which is most akin to Rom. viii. 3, and most easily illustrates it. There must have been a reason why Paul wrote in Philippians ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθ. γενόμενος instead of ἄνθρωπος γενόμενος, and it may well have been the same reason which made him write here ἐν ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας instead of ἐν σαρκὶ ἁμαρτίας. He wishes to indicate not that Christ was not really man, or that His flesh was not really what in us is σάρξ ἁμαρτίας, but that what for ordinary men is their natural condition is for this Person only an assumed condition (Holtzmann, N.T. Theol., ii., 74). But the emphasis in ὁμοίωμα is on Christ's likeness to us, not His unlikeness; "flesh of sin" is one idea to the Apostle, and what he means by it is that God sent His Son in that nature which in us is identified with sin. This was the "form" (and "form" rather than "likeness" is what ὁμοίωμα signifies) in which Christ appeared among men. It does not prejudice Christ's sinlessness, which is a fixed point with the Apostle ab initio; and if any one says that it involves a contradiction to maintain that Christ was sinless, and that He came in a nature which in us is identified with sin, it may be pointed out that this identification does not belong to the essence of our nature, but to its corruption, and that the uniform teaching of the N.T. is that Christ is one with us—short of sin. The likeness and the limitation of it (though the former is the point here urged) are equally essential in the Redeemer. But God sent His Son not only ἐν ὁμ. σ. ἁ. but καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας. These words indicate the aim of the mission. Christ was sent in our nature "in connection with sin". The R.V. renders "as an offering for sin". This is legitimate, for περὶ ἁμαρτίας is used both in the LXX (Lev. iv. 33 and passim, Ps. xl. 6, 2 Chr. xxix. 24) and in the N.T. (Heb. x. 6, 8) in the sense of "sin-offering" (usually answering to Heb. חַטָּאת, but in Isa. liii. 10 to אָשָׁם); but it is not formally necessary. But when the question is asked, In what sense did God send His Son "in connection with sin"? there is only one answer possible. He sent Him to expiate sin by His sacrificial death. This is the centre and foundation of Paul's gospel (iii. 25 ff.), and to ignore it here is really to assume that he used the words καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας (which have at least sacrificial associations) either with no meaning in particular, or with a meaning alien to his constant and dearest thoughts. Weiss says it is impossible to think here of expiating sin, because only the removal of the power of sin belongs to the context. But we cannot thus set the end against the means; the Apostle's doctrine is that the power of sin cannot be broken except by expiating it, and that is the very thing he teaches here. This fixes the meaning and the reference of κατέκρινεν. It is sometimes interpreted as if Christ were the subject: "Christ by His sinless life in our nature condemned sin in that nature," i.e., showed that it was not inevitable, and in so doing gave us hope; and this sense of "condemned" is supported by reference to Mt. xii. 41 f. But the true argument (especially according to the analogy of that passage) would rather be, "Christ by His sinless life in our nature condemned our sinful lives, and left us inexcusable and without hope". The truth is, we get on to a wrong track if we ignore the force of περὶ ἁμαρτίας, or fail to see that God, not Christ, is the subject of κατέκρινεν. God's condemnation of sin is expressed in His sending His Son in our nature, and in such a connection with sin that He died for it—i.e., took its condemnation upon Himself. Christ's death exhibits God's condemnation of sin in the flesh. ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ is to be construed with κατέκρινεν: the flesh—that in which sin had reigned—was also that in which God's condemnation of sin was executed. But Paul does not mean that by His sinless life in our nature Christ had broken the power of c Ch. ii. 26. ἁμαρτίαν ἐν τῇ σαρκί. 4. ἵνα τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ [c] νόμου πληρωθῇ ἐν ἡμῖν, τοῖς μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα. 5. Οἱ

d Ch. xii. 3, 16; Phil. ii. 5; Col. iii. 2. γὰρ κατὰ σάρκα ὄντες τὰ τῆς σαρκὸς [d] φρονοῦσιν· οἱ δὲ κατὰ πνεῦμα, τὰ τοῦ πνεύματος. 6. τὸ γὰρ [e] φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς θάνατος· τὸ δὲ

e Only in this ch. φρόνημα τοῦ πνεύματος ζωὴ καὶ εἰρήνη. 7. διότι τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς ἔχθρα εἰς Θεόν· τῷ γὰρ νόμῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐχ ὑποτάσσεται, f 1 Thess. ii. 4; iv. 1; Gal. i. 10. οὐδὲ γὰρ δύναται· 8. οἱ δὲ ἐν σακρὶ ὄντες Θεῷ [f] ἀρέσαι οὐ δύνανται. 9. Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ἐστὲ ἐν σαρκί, ἀλλ' ἐν πνεύματι, εἴπερ πνεῦμα

g 1 Cor. vii. 40. Θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν. εἰ δέ τις πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ οὐκ [g] ἔχει, οὗτος οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτοῦ. 10. εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρὸν δι' sin at one point for the human race; he means that in the death of His own Son, who had come in our nature to make atonement for sin, God had pronounced the doom of sin, and brought its claims and its authority over man to an end. This is the only interpretation which does not introduce elements quite alien to the Apostle's mode of thought.

Ver. 4. All this was done ἵνα τὸ δικ. τοῦ νόμου πληρωθῇ ἐν ἡμῖν: that the just requirement of the law (i.e., a righteous life) might be fulfilled in us. See note on iii. 31. ἐν ἡμῖν (not ὑφ' ἡμῶν), for it is not our doing, though done in us (Weiss). τοῖς μὴ κατὰ σάρκα κ.τ.λ. = inasmuch as we walk not, etc. This is the condition under which the Divine purpose is fulfilled: there is no physical necessity in it. κατὰ σάρκα: the flesh meant is our corrupt human nature. κατὰ πνεῦμα: the spirit is the Divine spirit which is given to those who are in Christ Jesus. It is in them "both law and impulse".

Ver. 5. The meaning of the sentence "is not contained in the repetitions of γὰρ by which it is hooked together" (Jowett). οἱ κατὰ σάρκα ὄντες are those whose nature is determined simply by the flesh; their "mind," i.e., their moral interest, their thought and study, is upon τὰ τῆς σαρκός: for which see Gal. v. 19 f. οἱ κατὰ πνεῦμα are those whose nature is determined by the spirit: for τὰ τοῦ πνεύματος see Gal. v. 22.

Ver. 6. τὸ γὰρ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς θάνατος: this does not so much mean that a man living after the flesh is without the life of God, as that death is the end of this line of conduct, chap. vi. 23, Gal. vi. 8. ζωὴ καὶ εἰρήνη: these on the other hand are conceived as present results involved in "the mind of the spirit". It is not arbitrary to distinguish thus: θάνατος in Paul is essentially the doom awaiting a certain life, ζωὴ and εἰρήνη possessions and experiences of the believer.

Ver. 7 f. The reason why the mind of the flesh terminates so fatally: it is hostility to God, the fountain of life. Alienation from Him is necessarily fatal. It is the flesh which does not (for indeed it cannot) submit itself to God; as the seat of indwelling sin it is in permanent revolt, and those who are in it (a stronger expression, yet substantially identically with those who are after it, ver. 5) cannot please God.

Ver. 9. Paul applies to his readers what he has said in vers. 5-8. ὑμεῖς is emphatic. You can please God, for you are not in the flesh, etc. εἴπερ has its proper force: "if, as is the fact": cf. iii. 30, viii. 17; and the excellent examination of other N.T. instances in Simcox, Language of the N.T., 171 f. Yet the possibility of the fact being otherwise in isolated cases, is admitted when he goes on: εἰ δέ τις πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ οὐκ ἔχει κ.τ.λ. For εἰ followed by οὐ see Winer, 599 f. οὗτος οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτοῦ: only the indwelling of Christ's spirit proves a real relation to Him.

Ver. 10. Consequences of this indwelling of Christ in the Christian. In one respect, they are not yet so complete as might be expected. τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρὸν: the body, it cannot be denied, is dead because of sin: the experience we call death is inevitable for it. τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ζωή: but the spirit (i.e., the human spirit, as is shown by the contrast with σῶμα) is life, God-begotten, God-sustained life, and therefore beyond the reach of death. As death is due to sin, so is this life to δικαιοσύνη. It is probably not real to distinguish here between "justification" and "moral righteousness of life," and to say that the word means either to the exclusion of the other. The ἁμαρτίαν, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ζωὴ διὰ δικαιοσύνην. 11. εἰ δὲ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἐγείραντος Ἰησοῦν[1] ἐκ νεκρῶν οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν, ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν Χριστὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν[h] ζωοποιήσει καὶ τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν, διὰ τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος αὐτοῦ πνεύματος ἐν ὑμῖν.

h Ch. iv. 17.

12. ἌΡΑ οὖν, ἀδελφοί, ὀφειλέται ἐσμὲν οὐ τῇ σαρκί, τοῦ κατὰ σάρκα ζῆν· 13. εἰ γὰρ κατὰ σάρκα ζῆτε, μέλλετε ἀποθνήσκειν· εἰ δὲ πνεύματι τὰς [i]πράξεις τοῦ σώματος θανατοῦτε, ζήσεσθε. 14. Ὅσοι γὰρ πνεύματι Θεοῦ [k]ἄγονται, οὗτοί εἰσιν υἱοὶ [l]Θεοῦ.[2] 15. οὐ

i Col. iii. 9. k Gal. v. 18. l Ver. 19; Gal. iii. 26, iv. 6 f.

[1] Ιησουν ℵ³CDFKLP. τον Ιησουν ℵ¹AB, W. and H., Weiss, Tdf., etc. τον before Χριστον is om. in ℵ¹ABCD¹, ²F and all edd. Χριστον is the reading of BD³FKLP, but Χριστον Ιησουν is found in ℵAD 31, 47, and many fathers, and is adopted by W. and H., not by Weiss. ζωοποιησει και; om. και ℵA 47; W. and H. bracket; Treg. brackets it in marg. δια το ενοικουν αυτου πνευμα BDEFGKLP it. vg. δια του ενοικουντος αυτου πνευματος ℵAC, many cursives, Copt., Arm., Aeth. This is a very old variant; Clem. Alex. has the gen., Iren., Tert. and Orig. the accus. The genitive (according to Weiss) probably owes its wide diffusion, though not its origin, to the interest taken in it by the orthodox in connection with the Macedonian controversy. It may have originated in an emendation conforming the structure to that of vi. 4 (δια της δοξης του πατρος). Edd. are divided. Lachm., Treg., and Weiss adopt the accusative, Tischdf. and W. and H. the genitive, but W. and H. put accusative in marg.

[2] For εισιν υιοι θεου ℵACD read υιοι θεου εισιν.

whole argument of chaps. vi.-viii. is that neither can exist without the other. No man can begin to be good till he is justified freely by God's grace in Christ Jesus, and no one has been so justified who has not begun to live the good life in the spirit.

Ver. 11. But though the present results of the indwelling of the spirit are not all we might desire, the future is sure. The indwelling spirit is that of Him who raised Jesus from the dead, and as such it is the guarantee that our mortal bodies also (as well as our spirits) shall share in immortality. The same argument, in effect, is used in Eph. i. 18-20. "The power that worketh in us" is the same with which "God wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places"; and it will work to the same issue in us as in Him. The reading in the last clause is very doubtful, but whether we take the accus. (according to which the indwelling of the spirit is the ground on which God raises our mortal bodies to undying life) or the genit. (according to which the spirit is itself the agent in this resurrection—a conception not found elsewhere in Scripture), in either case a share in the Christian resurrection is conditioned by the possession of the Spirit of Christ. It is clear from the alternation of πνεῦμα θεοῦ and πνεῦμα χριστοῦ in ver. 9 that the Spirit of Christ is the same as the Spirit of God, and the use of χριστὸς alone in the next verse shows that this same spirit is the alter ego of Christ. Cf. Phil. i. 19; Gal. iv. 6; Eph. iii. 17. This is one of the passages in which the presuppositions of the Trinitarian conception of God come out most clearly.

(2) Vers. 12-27. The Spirit as a spirit of adoption, the first-fruits of the inheritance of the children of God.

Ver. 12 f. The blessed condition and hopes of Christians, as described in these last verses, lay them under obligations: to whom, or to what? Not (ver. 12) to the flesh, to live according to it; to it they owe nothing. If they live after the flesh they are destined to die—the final doom in which there is no hope; but if by the spirit (i.e., God's Spirit) they put to death the doings of the body, they shall live—the life against which death is powerless. We might have expected τῆς σαρκὸς instead of τοῦ σώματος, but in the absence of the spirit the body in all it does is only the tool of the flesh: the two are morally equivalent.

Ver. 14. Ye shall live, for as many as are led by God's Spirit are God's sons, and life is congruous to such a dignity. υἱὸς suggests the rank and privileges of the persons in question; τέκνον (in ver. 16 f.) their kinship in nature to God. Yet γὰρ ἐλάβετε πνεῦμα δουλείας πάλιν εἰς φόβον, ἀλλ' ἐλάβετε πνεῦμα [m] υἱοθεσίας, ἐν ᾧ κράζομεν, Ἀββᾶ, ὁ πατήρ. 16. αὐτὸ τὸ πνεῦμα [n] συμμαρτυρεῖ τῷ πνεύματι ἡμῶν, ὅτι ἐσμὲν τέκνα Θεοῦ. 17. εἰ δὲ τέκνα, καὶ κληρονόμοι· κληρονόμοι μὲν Θεοῦ, συγκληρονόμοι δὲ Χριστοῦ· εἴπερ συμπάσχομεν, ἵνα καὶ [o] συνδοξασθῶμεν. 18. Λογίζομαι γὰρ ὅτι οὐκ ἄξια τὰ παθήματα τοῦ νῦν [p] καιροῦ πρὸς τὴν

m Ver. 23; Gal. iv. 5; Eph. i. 5 (ch. ix. 4).
n Ch. ii. 15; ix. i.
o 2 Tim. ii. 11 f.
p Ch. iii. 26.

this cannot everywhere be urged in the N.T.

Ver. 15. Sons, οὐ γὰρ ἐλάβετε πνεῦμα δουλείας. The aorist refers to the time of their baptism, when they received the Spirit. It was not the Spirit proper to slaves, leading them again to shrink from God in fear as they had done when under the law of sin and death, but πνεῦμα υἱοθεσίας, a spirit proper to those who were being translated from the servile to the filial relation to God. υἱοθεσία is a word used in the N.T. by Paul only, but "no word is more common in Greek inscriptions of the Hellenistic time: the idea, like the word, is native Greek" (E. L. Hicks, quoted in S. and H.), see Gal. iv. 5, Eph. i. 5. The word serves to distinguish those who are made sons by an act of grace from the only-begotten Son of God: τὸν ἑαυτοῦ υἱὸν ver. 3, τοῦ ἰδίου υἱοῦ ver. 32. But the act of grace is not one which makes only an outward difference in our position; it is accomplished in the giving of a spirit which creates in us a new nature. In the spirit of adoption we cry Abba, Father. We have not only the status, but the heart of sons. κράζομεν (often with φωνῇ μεγάλῃ) is a strong word: it denotes the loud irrepressible cry with which the consciousness of sonship breaks from the Christian heart in prayer. The change to the first person marks Paul's inclusion of himself in the number of those who have and utter this consciousness; and it is probably this inclusion of himself, as a person whose native language was "Hebrew" (Acts xxi. 40), to which is due the double form Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ. The last word certainly interprets the first, but it is not thought of as doing so: "we cry, Father, Father".

Ver. 16. The punctuation in W. and H. margin deserves notice. "In that we cry, Abba, Father, the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit," etc. Our own spirit tells us we are God's children, but the voice with which it speaks is, as we know, prompted and inspired by the Divine Spirit itself. For similar distinctions Gifford compares ii. 15 and ix. 1. τέκνα θεοῦ: τέκνα, not υἱοί, is used with strict propriety here, as it is the reality of the filial nature, not the legitimacy of the filial position, which is being proved.

Ver. 17. Yet this last is involved, for "if children, also heirs". Cf. Gal. iv. 7 where κληρονόμος is relative to υἱός; and all the passages in which the Spirit is regarded as "the earnest" of an inheritance: 2 Cor. i. 22, v. 5, Eph. i. 14. It is from God the inheritance comes, and we share in it with Christ (Mark. xii. 7). For what it is, see 1 Cor. ii. 9 f. The inheritance attached to Divine sonship is attained only on the condition expressed in the clause εἴπερ συμπάσχομεν ἵνα καὶ συνδοξασθῶμεν. On εἴπερ, see ver. 9. "Rom. viii. 17 gains in pathos, when we see that the share of the disciples in the Master's sufferings was felt to be a fact of which there was no question." Simcox, Language of N.T., p. 171. Paul was sure of it in his own case, and took it for granted in that of others. Those who share Christ's sufferings now will share His glory hereafter; and in order to share His glory hereafter it is necessary to begin by sharing His sufferings here.

Ver. 18. The passage extending from this verse to ver. 27 is described by Lipsius as a "threefold testimony to the future transfiguration which awaits suffering believers". In vers. 19-22 there is the first testimony—the sighing of creation; in vers. 23-25 the second, the yearning hope of Christians themselves, related as it is to the possession of the first fruits of the Spirit; and in vers. 26 f. the third, the intercession of the Spirit which helps us in our prayers, and lends words to our longing. λογιζόμεθα γὰρ κ.τ.λ. λογίζομαι is a favourite word with Paul: the instance most like this is the one in iii. 28. It does not suggest a more or less dubious result of calculation; rather by litotes does it express the strongest assurance. The insignificance of present suffering compared with future glory was a fixed idea with the Apostle, 2 Cor. iv. 17 f. For οὐκ ἄξια . . . πρὸς see Winer, 505 (d). With τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι cf. in Gal. iii. 23

μέλλουσαν δόξαν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι εἰς ἡμᾶς. 19. Ἡ γὰρ ἀποκαραδοκία τῆς κτίσεως τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν τῶν υἱῶν τοῦ [q]Θεοῦ ἀπεκδέχεται. 20. τῇ γὰρ [r]ματαιότητι ἡ κτίσις ὑπετάγη, οὐχ ἑκοῦσα, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸν ὑποτάξαντα, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι,[1] 21. ὅτι[2] καὶ αὐτὴ ἡ κτίσις ἐλευθερωθήσεται ἀπὸ τῆς δουλείας τῆς φθορᾶς εἰς τὴν ἐλευθερίαν τῆς δόξης τῶν τέκνων τοῦ

q Ver. 14.
r Eph. iv. 17.

[1] επ ελπιδι. In ℵBDFG we find εφ ελπιδι, and this is printed by Tischdf. and W. and H. The same mistake (?) occurs Rom. iv. 18 in CDFG, Rom. v. 2 in DFG, and Tit. i. 2 in D; cf. also αφηλπικοτες in FG Eph. iv. 19. In these circumstances it seems doubtful whether εφ' ελπιδι should be put in the text.

[2] For οτι ℵDFG read διοτι. The δι may easily have been omitted after ελπιδι, and therefore Tischdf. and Weiss read διοτι, though most edd. οτι.

τὴν μέλλ. πίστιν ἀποκαλ. The unusual order emphasises the futurity. εἰς ἡμᾶς = toward and upon us. The glory comes from without, to transfigure them. It is revealed at the ἀποκάλυψις (1 Cor. i. 7, 2 Th. i. 7, 1 Pet. i. 7, 13, iv. 13), the glorious second coming, of Christ, and is indeed His glory of which they are made partakers.

Ver. 19. First testimony to this glorious future: creation sighs for it. In some sense the hope and promise of it is involved in the present constitution of the world. For a fine speculative interpretation see E. Caird's Evolution of Religion, ii., 124 f. In Paul, however, the spirit of the passage is rather poetic than philosophical. Its affinities are with Gen. iii. 17, where the ground is cursed for man's sake: he conceives of all creation as involved in the fortunes of humanity. But this, if creation be personified, naturally leads to the idea of a mysterious sympathy between the world and man, and this is what the Apostle expresses. Creation is not inert, utterly unspiritual, alien to our life and its hopes. It is the natural ally of our souls. What rises from it is the music of humanity—not apparently so still and sad to Paul as to Wordsworth, but with a note of hope in it rising triumphantly above all the pain of conflict. ἀποκαραδοκία (Phil. i. 20) denotes absorbed, persistent expectation—waiting, as it were, with uplifted head. ἡ κτίσις is the world and all that it contains, animate and inanimate, as distinguished from man. τὴν ἀποκ. τῶν υἱῶν τοῦ θεοῦ: cf. 1 John iii. 2. With the revelation of the sons of God humanity would attain its end, and nature too.

Ver. 20. For creation was subjected to vanity, etc. ματαιότης is not classical, but is often used in the LXX, especially for הֶבֶל. The idea is that of looking for what one does not find—hence of futility, frustration, disappointment. ματαιότης ματαιοτήτων is the "vanity of vanities" in Eccl., the complaint of the utter resultlessness of life. Sin brought this doom on creation; it made a pessimistic view of the universe inevitable. ὑπετάγη: the precise time denoted is that of the Fall, when God pronounced the ground cursed for man's sake. Creation came under this doom οὐχ ἑκοῦσα ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸν ὑποτάξαντα: the last words seem best referred to God: it was on account of Him—that His righteousness might be shown in the punishment of sin—that the sentence fell upon man, carrying consequences which extended to the whole realm intended originally for his dominion. The sentence on man, however, was not hopeless, and creation shared in his hope as in his doom. When the curse is completely removed from man, as it will be when the sons of God are revealed, it will pass from creation also; and for this creation sighs. It was made subject to vanity on the footing of this hope; the hope is latent, so to speak, in the constitution of nature, and comes out, in its sighing, to a sympathetic ear.

Ver. 21. Contents of the hope. It makes no difference in meaning, whether we read ὅτι or διότι. αὐτὴ ἡ κτίσις: creation as well as man. ἡ δουλεία τῆς φθορᾶς: a system in which nothing continues in one stay, in which death claims everything, in which there is not even an analogy to immortality, is a system of slavery—in subjection to "vanity," with no high eternal worth of its own. From such a condition creation is to be emancipated; it is to share in the liberty which belongs to the glory of the children of God. When man's redemption is complete, he will find himself in a new world matching with his new condition (Isa. lxv. 17, 2 Pet. iii. 13, Rev. xxi. 1): this is

[a] Mark xvi. 15; Col. i. 15, 23.

[t] 1 Cor. i. 7; Gal. v. 5; Phil. iii. 20; Heb. ix. 28.

Θεοῦ. 22. οἴδαμεν γὰρ ὅτι πᾶσα ἡ [a] κτίσις συστενάζει καὶ συνωδίνει ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν· 23. οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτοὶ τὴν ἀπαρχὴν τοῦ Πνεύματος ἔχοντες, καὶ ἡμεῖς [1] αὐτοὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς στενάζομεν, υἱοθεσίαν [t] ἀπεκδεχόμενοι τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν. 24. τῇ γὰρ ἐλπίδι ἐσώθημεν. ἐλπὶς δὲ βλεπομένη οὐκ ἔστιν ἐλπίς· ὃ γὰρ βλέπει τις, τί καὶ ἐλπίζει [2]; 25. εἰ δὲ ὃ οὐ βλέπομεν ἐλπίζομεν,

[1] ημεις om. B 31, 73, 93, vulg. The rec. text is that of DFKLP. In ℵAC 47 the order of the words is εχοντες ημεις και αυτοι. This is followed by Tischdf. Lachm., Treg. and W. and H. bracket ημεις in this position; Weiss omits it altogether.

[2] The reading of B is ο γαρ βλεπει τις ελπιζει. This is adopted by W. and H., Weiss. Of the received text—ο γαρ βλεπει τις τι και ελπιζει—τι is wanting in ℵ, and και in DFG, vulg., Pesh. The reading of B is difficult, and seems to have been partially amended in different ways which are combined in the received text. For ελπιζει ℵ[1]A 47, marg., have υπομενει, and W. and H. give a place to this, as well as to the received text, in their margin.

Paul's faith, and the sighing of creation attests it.

Ver. 22. οἴδαμεν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.: How Christians know this Paul does not say. Perhaps we may say that the Christian consciousness of sin and redemption is in contact with the ultimate realities of the universe, and that no interpretation of nature can be true but one which, like this, is in essential harmony with it. The force of the preposition in συστενάζει and συνωδίνει is not that we sigh and are in pain, and creation along with us; but that the whole frame of creation, all its parts together, unite in sighing and in pain. Weiss is right in saying that there is no reference to the dolores Messiae; but in συνωδίνει there is the suggestion of the travail out of which the new world is to be born. ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν means up till now, without stopping, ever since the moment of ὑπετάγη.

Ver. 23. Second testimony to the glorious future. οὐ μόνον δὲ sc. ἡ κτίσις—not only all creation, but we Christians: we ourselves, τὴν ἀπαρχὴν τοῦ πνεύματος ἔχοντες. τοῦ πνεύματος is gen. of apposition: the spirit which Christians have received is itself the first fruits (elsewhere, the earnest: see on ver. 17) of this glory; and because we have it (not although: it is the foretaste of heaven, the heaven begun in the Christian, which intensifies his yearning, and makes him more vehemently than nature long for complete redemption), we also sigh in ourselves υἱοθεσίαν ἀπεκδεχόμενοι, τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν. The key to these words is found in i. 4. Christ was Son of God always, but was only declared to be so in power ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν, and so it is with believers. They have already received adoption, and as led by the spirit are sons of God; but only when their mortal bodies have been quickened, and the corruptible has put on incorruption, will they possess all that sonship involves. For this they wait and sigh, and the inextinguishable hope, born of the spirit dwelling in them, guarantees its own fulfilment. Cf. Phil. iii. 21; 1 Cor. xv. 51; 2 Cor. v. 2; and for ἀπολύτρωσις in this sense, 1 Cor. i. 30.

Ver. 24 f. This sentence explains why Paul can speak of Christians as waiting for adoption, while they are nevertheless in the enjoyment of sonship. It is because salvation is essentially related to the future. "We wait for it: for we were saved in hope." The dat. τῇ ἐλπίδι is that of mode or respect. Our salvation was qualified from the beginning by reference to a good yet to be. Weiss argues that the sense of ἐλπὶς in the second clause (res sperata) makes it "absolutely necessary" to take it so in the first, and that this leaves no alternative but to make τῇ ἐλπίδι dat. comm. and translate: "for, for this object of hope—eternal life and glory—were we delivered from eternal destruction". But the "absolute necessity" is imaginary; a word with the nuances of ἐλπίς in a mind with the speed of Paul's need not be treated so rigorously, especially as the resulting construction is in itself extremely dubious. Hope, the Apostle argues, is an essential characteristic of our salvation; but hope turned sight is hope no more, for who hopes for what he sees? We do not see all the Gospel held out to us, but it is the object of our Christian hope nevertheless; it is as true δι' ὑπομονῆς ἀπεκδεχόμεθα. 26. Ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα [u] συναντιλαμβάνεται ταῖς ἀσθενείαις [1] ἡμῶν· τὸ γὰρ τί προσευξώμεθα καθὸ δεῖ, οὐκ οἴδαμεν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ τὸ Πνεῦμα [v] ὑπερεντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν στεναγμοῖς ἀλαλήτοις· 27. ὁ δὲ ἐρευνῶν τὰς καρδίας οἶδε τί τὸ φρόνημα τοῦ πνεύματος, ὅτι κατὰ Θεὸν ἐντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἁγίων. 28. Οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι τοῖς ἀγαπῶσι τὸν Θεὸν πάντα συνεργεῖ [2] εἰς ἀγαθόν, u Luke x. 40.

v Here only in N.T.

[1] For ταις ασθενειαις ℵABCD have τῃ ασθενειᾳ. υπερ ημων CKLP; but om. ℵABDF.

[2] After συνεργει, ο θεος is found in AB. W. and H. bracket it, but Lachm. and Weiss regard it as the true text. It was omitted as cumbrous and unnecessary. Cf. i. 28, where ο θεος is omitted in ℵA in much the same way; here it is wanting in ℵACDFKL.

and sure as the love of God which in Christ Jesus reconciled us to Himself and gave us the spirit of adoption, and therefore we wait for it in patience. For διὰ cf. ii. 27. ὑπομονή: in 1 Thess. i. 3 we have ἡ ὑπομονὴ τῆς ἐλπίδος ὑμῶν used of a suffering but steadfast Church: ὑπομονὴ is the constancy which belongs to and characterises hope in dark days. In the pastoral epistles (1 Tim. vi. 11; Tit. ii. 2) instead of the πίστις, ἀγάπη, ἐλπίς, of earlier letters, Paul writes πίστις, ἀγάπη, ὑπομονή, as if he had discovered by experience that in this life "hope" has mainly to be shown in the form of "patience".

Ver. 26. Third testimony to the glorious future: the sighing of creation, our own sighing, and this action of the Spirit, point consistently to one conclusion. συναντιλαμβάνεται, cf. Luke x. 40. The weakness which the Spirit helps is that due to our ignorance: τὸ γὰρ τί προσευξώμεθα καθὸ δεῖ οὐκ οἴδαμεν. The article makes the whole clause object of οἴδαμεν: Winer, p. 644. Broadly speaking, we do know what we are to pray for—the perfecting of salvation; but we do not know what we are to pray for καθὸ δεῖ—according as the need is at the moment; we know the end, which is common to all prayers, but not what is necessary at each crisis of need in order to enable us to attain this end. ἀλλὰ αὐτὸ τὸ πνεῦμα ὑπερεντυγχάνει στεναγμοῖς ἀλαλήτοις. ὑπερεντυγχάνει is found here only in N.T., but ἐντυγχάνειν in this sense in vers. 27, 34, Heb. vii. 25. In Rom. xi. 2 with κατὰ = to make intercession against. ἀλαλήτοις does not mean "unspoken" but "unutterable". The στεναγμοὶ of believers find expression, adequate or inadequate, in their prayers, and in such utterances as this very passage of Romans, but there is a testimony to the glory awaiting them more profound and passionate than even this. It is the intercession of the Spirit with στεναγμοὶ ἀλάλητοι—groanings (or sighs) that baffle words. αὐτὸ τὸ πνεῦμα is undoubtedly God's Spirit as distinguished from ours, yet what is here affirmed must fall within Christian experience, for Paul says in the next verse that He Who searches the hearts knows what is the mind of the Spirit in this unutterable intercession. It is in the heart, therefore, that it takes place. "The whole passage illustrates in even a startling manner the truth and reality of the 'coming' of the Holy Ghost—the extent to which, if I may venture to say it, He has separated Himself—as Christ did at His Incarnation—from His eternal glory and blessedness, and entered into the life of man. . . . His intercession for us—so intimately does He share all the evils of our condition—is a kind of agony" (R. W. Dale, Christian Doctrine, p. 140 f.).

Ver. 27. This intercession, with which our heart goes, though it is deeper than words, the Heart Searcher understands. τί τὸ φρόν. τοῦ πνεύματος: what the Spirit is set upon, the whole object of its thought and endeavour. ὅτι, viz., that He intercedes κατὰ θεόν in agreement with God's will, see 2 Cor. vii. 9-11. ὑπὲρ ἁγίων on behalf of those who are God's. Both the intercession of Christ and the intercession of the Spirit are represented in the N.T. as made on behalf of those who are in Christ—saints, the Church, not mankind in general.

Vers. 28-39. Conclusion of the argument: the Apostle glories in the assurance of God's eternal and unchangeable love in Jesus Christ.

οἴδαμεν δὲ = further, we know: in a sense this is one ground more for bew Eph. i. 5, 11; 1 Cor. ii. 7.

x Phil. iii. 21 (10).

τοῖς κατὰ πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς οὖσιν. 29. ὅτι οὓς προέγνω, καὶ [w] προώρισε [x] συμμόρφους τῆς εἰκόνος τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν πρωτότοκον ἐν πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς· 30. οὓς δὲ προώρισε, τούτους καὶ ἐκάλεσε· καὶ οὓς ἐκάλεσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδικαίωσεν· οὓς δὲ ἐδικαίωσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε. 31. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν πρὸς ταῦτα; εἰ ὁ Θεὸς ὑπὲρ lieving in the glorious future: God is ever with us, and will not abandon us at last. πάντα συνεργεῖ (ὁ θεός): συνεργεῖ is naturally neuter, and if ὁ θεός is the true reading, it is probably best to render "God co-operates for good in all things (πάντα accus. of ref. as in 1 Cor. ix. 25, x. 33) with those," etc. τοῖς ἀγαπ. τὸν θεὸν describes the persons in question from the human side; τοῖς κατὰ πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς οὖσιν describes them from the Divine side. It is in pursuance of a purpose of God (for πρόθεσις with reference to the eternal purpose of redemption, see ix. 11, Eph. i. 11, iii. 11, 2 Tim. i. 9) that they are called. "Calling" in Paul never means "invitation"; it is always "effectual calling".

Ver. 29 f. These verses give the proof that God in all things co-operates for good with the called. They show how His gracious purpose, beginning with foreknowledge and foreordination perfects all that concerns them on to the final glory. οὓς προέγνω: those whom He foreknew—in what sense? as persons who would answer His love with love? This is at least irrelevant, and alien to Paul's general mode of thought. That salvation begins with God, and begins in eternity, are fundamental ideas with him, which he here applies to Christians, without raising any of the problems involved in the relation of the human will to the Divine. He comes upon these in chap. ix., but not here. Yet we may be sure that προέγνω has the pregnant sense that γιγνώσκω (יָדַע) often has in Scripture: e.g., in Ps. i. 6, Amos iii. 2: hence we may render, "those of whom God took knowledge from eternity" (Eph. i. 4). καὶ προώρισεν κ.τ.λ., "he also foreordained to be conformed to the image of His Son". This conformity is the last stage in salvation, as προέγνω is the first. The image is in import not merely spiritual but eschatological. The Son of God is the Lord who appeared to Paul by Damascus: to be conformed to His image is to share His glory as well as His holiness. The Pauline Gospel is hopelessly distorted when this is forgotten. εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν πρωτότοκον ἐν πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς: the end in all this is the exaltation of Christ. It is implied in πρωτότοκον that He also is regarded as only having attained the fulness of His Sonship through the resurrection (cf. i. 4, and Col. i. 18 πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν). The idea of Christ's dignity as firstborn among many brethren who all owe their salvation to Him is sublimely interpreted in Heb. ii. 10-13. The Apostle now resumes the series of the Divine acts in our salvation. οὓς δὲ προώρισεν, τούτους καὶ ἐκάλεσεν. The eternal foreordination appears in time as "calling," of course as effectual calling: where salvation is contemplated as the work of God alone (as here) there can be no breakdown in its processes. The next stages are summarily indicated. ἐδικαίωσεν: God in Jesus Christ forgave our sins, and accepted us as righteous in His sight; ungodly as we had been, He put us right with Himself. In that, everything else is included. The whole argument of chaps. vi.-viii. has been that justification and the new life of holiness in the Spirit are inseparable experiences. Hence Paul can take one step to the end, and write οὓς δὲ ἐδικαίωσεν, τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασεν. Yet the tense in the last word is amazing. It is the most daring anticipation of faith that even the N.T. contains: the life is not to be taken out of it by the philosophical consideration that with God there is neither before nor after.

Ver. 31. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν πρὸς ταῦτα; the idea underlying all that precedes is that of the suffering to be endured by those who would share Christ's glory (ver. 17). The Apostle has disparaged the suffering in comparison with the glory (ver. 18); he has interpreted it (vers. 19-27) as in a manner prophetic of the glory; he has in these last verses asserted the presence through all the Christian's life of an eternal victorious purpose of love: all this is included in ταῦτα. For ὑπὲρ and κατὰ, cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 8.

Ver. 32. The Christian's faith in providence is an inference from redemption. The same God who did not spare His own Son will freely give us all things.

ἡμῶν, τίς καθ' ἡμῶν; 32. ὅς γε τοῦ ἰδίου υἱοῦ οὐκ ἐφείσατο, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν πάντων παρέδωκεν αὐτόν, πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ σὺν αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα ἡμῖν [y] χαρίσεται; 33. τίς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ; Θεὸς ὁ δικαιῶν· 34. τίς ὁ κατακρίνων; Χριστὸς[1] ὁ ἀποθανών, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἐγερθείς, ὃς καὶ ἔστιν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὃς καὶ y 1 Cor. ii. 12; Gal. iii. 18.

[1] Χριστος alone BDEK, most cursives, and Treg. Χριστος Ιησους ℵACFL 17, vulg., etc. Weiss puts Χ. Ι. in text, thinking the omission in B, etc., accidental; W. and H., and Lachm. bracket Ιησους. The και before εγερθεις is wanting in ℵABC. The και before εστιν is wanting in ℵAC but is found in ℵ[3]BDFKL. It is omitted by W. and H., and Tischdf., bracketed by Lachm., but retained by Weiss. After εγερθεις ℵ[1]AC insert εκ νεκρων; W. and H. bracket this, but all other crit. edd. omit, with ℵ[2]BDFGKL, etc.

οὐκ ἐφείσατο, cf. Gen. xxii. 12, οὐκ ἐφείσω τοῦ υἱοῦ σου τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ δι' ἐμέ. It vivifies the impression of God's love through the sense of the sacrifice it made. ὑπὲρ πάντων ἡμῶν: none were worthy of such a sacrifice (Weiss). παρέδωκεν sc. to death: iv. 25. πῶς οὐχὶ καί: the argument of selfishness is that he who has done so much need do no more; that of love, that he who has done so much is certain to do more. σὺν αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα: τὰ πάντα has a collective force. It is usually taken to mean the whole of what furthers the Christian's life, the whole of what contributes to the perfecting of his salvation; all this will be freely given to him by God. But why should it not mean "all things" without any such qualification? When God gives us His Son He gives us the world; there is nothing which does not work together for our good; all things are ours. Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 22 f.

Ver. 33 f. The punctuation here is a very difficult problem: see the text and margin of R.V. The reminiscence of Is. l. 8 f. in verse 33 makes it more difficult; for it suggests that the normal structure is that of an affirmation followed by a question, whereas Paul begins with a question to which the affirmation (with at least a trace of Isaiah's language in it) is an answer. It is even possible to read every clause interrogatively, though that is less effective. τίς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ ἐκλεκτῶν θεοῦ; who shall bring a charge against persons who are God's chosen? The absence of the article (cf. ὑπὲρ ἁγίων, ver. 27) brings out the character in which the persons in question figure, not their individual personality. For the word see Col. iii. 12; 2 Tim. ii. 10; Tit. i. 1; for the thing cf. 1 Thess. i. 4; Eph. i. 4; John xv. 16. It describes Christians as persons who owe their standing as such to the act of God's grace. All Christians are conscious that this is the truth about their position: they belong to God, because He has taken them for His own. To say that the word designates "not those who are destined for final salvation, but those who are 'summoned' or 'selected' for the privilege of serving God and carrying out His will" (S. and H.), is to leave the rails of the Apostle's thought altogether. There is nothing here (vers. 28-30) about the privilege of serving God and carrying out His will; the one thing Paul is concerned with is the security given by the eternal love of God that the work of salvation will be carried through, in spite of all impediments, from foreknowledge to final glory. The ἐκλεκτοὶ θεοῦ are those who ought to have such security: they should have a faith and an assurance proportioned to the love of God. Paul is one of them, and because he is, he is sure, not that he is called to serve God, but that nothing can ever separate him from God's love in Christ. The question τίς ἐγκαλέσει is best answered by taking both the following clauses together: "It is God that justifieth: who is he that shall condemn?" (cf. Is. l. 8 f.). But many make τίς ὁ κατακρινῶν a new question, and find the answer in verse 34: Χριστὸς ['Ιησοῦς] ὁ ἀποθανών = the only person who can condemn is the Judge, viz., Christ, but He is so far from condemning that He has done everything to deliver us from condemnation. What Christian, Paul seems to ask, can speak of κατάκριμα with his eye on Christ, who died for our sins? μᾶλλον δὲ ἐγερθεὶς [ἐκ νεκρῶν]: cf. Gal. iv. 9; and chap. iv. 25. The correction in μᾶλλον is formal (Weiss): Paul does not mean that the resurrection is more important than the cross; he improves upon an expression which has not conveyed all that was in his mind.

z Ver. 27; Heb. vii. 25.

[z]ἐντυγχάνει ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν· 35. τίς ἡμᾶς χωρίσει ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ[1]; θλίψις, ἢ στενοχωρία, ἢ διωγμός, ἢ λιμός, ἢ γυμνότης, ἢ κίνδυνος, ἢ μάχαιρα; 36. (καθὼς γέγραπται, "Ὅτι ἕνεκά σου θανατούμεθα ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν· ἐλογίσθημεν ὡς πρόβατα σφα-

[1] του Χριστου; so most MSS. But ℵB, with some cursives and fathers, have του θεου. This is usually regarded as a change made to agree with ver. 39, because B, after του θεου, adds της εν Χριστω Ιησου. But this may have been added, as Weiss remarks, for the very reason that B already read του θεου; and as ℵ has του θεου without this addition, and it was very natural to change it (with an eye to vv. 34 and 37) into του Χριστου, it seems probable that του θεου is the original reading. Weiss adopts it, and W. and H. put it in marg.

Our position depends upon Jesus Christ who died, nay rather, over whom death no more has dominion (vi. 9), who is at God's right hand (this phrase, which describes Christ's exaltation as a sharing in the universal sovereignty of God, is borrowed from Ps. cx. 1, and is oftener used in the N.T. than any other words of the Old), who also makes intercession on our behalf. ὃς καὶ ἐντυγχάνει: a solemn climax is marked by the repetition of ὅς, and by the καὶ which deliberately adds the intercession to all that has gone before. The Christian consciousness, even in an apostle, cannot transcend this. This is Paul's final security—the last ground of his triumphant assurance: Jesus Christ, at God's right hand, with the virtue of His atoning death in Him, pleads His people's cause. Cf. Heb. ix. 24, vii. 25, 1 John ii. 1 f.

Ver. 35 f. τίς ἡμᾶς χωρίσει ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ; If this verse is to be most closely connected with ver. 34, τοῦ Χριστοῦ will appear the more probable reading, for there Christ is the subject throughout; but at vers. 28, 31, 39 the love of God is the determining idea, and at this point it seems to be caught up again in view of the conclusion—facts which favour the reading τοῦ θεοῦ. In any case it is the Divine love for us which is meant. With the list of troubles cf. 2 Cor. vi. 4-10, xi. 26 f., xii. 10. They were those which had befallen Paul himself, and he knew that the love of God in Jesus Christ could reach and sustain the heart through them all. The quotation from Ps. xliv. 23 is peculiar. It exactly reproduces the LXX, even the ὅτι being simply transferred. The καθὼς implies that such experiences as those named in ver. 35 are in agreement with what Scripture holds out as the fortune of God's people. Possibly the mention of the sword recalled to the Apostle's memory the θανατούμεθα of the psalm, and suggested the quotation. The point of it, both in the psalm and in the epistle, lies in ἕνεκεν σοῦ. This is what the Psalmist could not understand. That men should suffer for sin, for infidelity to God, was intelligible enough; but he and his countrymen were suffering because of their faithfulness, and the psalm is his despairing expostulation with God. But the Apostle understood it. To suffer for Christ's sake was to enter into the fellowship of Christ's sufferings, and that is the very situation in which the love of Christ is most real, near, and sure to the soul. Cf. chap. v. 3, 2 Cor. i. 5, Col. i. 24. Instead of despairing, he glories in tribulations.

Ver. 37. ὑπερνικῶμεν: a word probably coined by Paul, who loves compounds with ὑπέρ. The Vulg. gives superamus, with which Lipsius agrees (obsiegen, like over-power): but Cyprian supervincimus. Later Greek writers distinguish νικᾶν and ὑπερνικᾶν (see Grimm, s.v.), and justify the happy rendering "we are more than conquerors". Perhaps it is a mistake to define in what the "more" consists; but if we do, the answer must be sought on the line indicated in the note on ἕνεκεν σοῦ: these trials not only do not cut us off from Christ's love, they actually give us more intimate and thrilling experiences of it. διὰ τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντος ἡμᾶς: the aorist points to Christ's death as the great demonstration of His love: cf. Gal. ii. 20, also Rev. xii. 11.

Ver. 38 f. The Apostle's personal conviction given in confirmation of all that has been said, especially of ver. 37. πέπεισμαι cf. 2 Tim. i. 12. οὔτε θάνατος οὔτε ζωὴ: death is mentioned first, either with ver. 36 in mind, or as the most tremendous enemy the Apostle could conceive. If Christ's love can hold us in and through death, what is left for us to fear? Much of the N.T. bears on this γῆς·") 37. ἀλλ' ἐν τούτοις πᾶσιν ὑπερνικῶμεν διὰ τοῦ ἀγαπήσαντος ἡμᾶς. 38. πέπεισμαι γὰρ ὅτι οὔτε θάνατος οὔτε ζωή, οὔτε ἄγγελοι οὔτε ἀρχαὶ οὔτε δυνάμεις, οὔτε ἐνεστῶτα οὔτε μέλλοντα, 39. οὔτε ὕψωμα οὔτε βάθος, οὔτε τις κτίσις ἑτέρα δυνήσεται ἡμᾶς χωρίσαι ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Θεοῦ, τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.

very point, cf. John viii. 51, x. 28, xi. 25 f., 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, 1 Cor. xv., 2 Cor. iv. 16-v. 5, Rom. xiv. 8, Heb. ii. 14 f. The blank horror of dying is annihilated by the love of Christ. Neither death nor life is to be explained: explanations "only limit the flight of the Apostle's thoughts just when they would soar above all limitation" (Gifford). οὔτε ἄγγελοι οὔτε ἀρχαί: this, according to the best authorities, forms a second pair of forces conceivably hostile to the Christian. As in every pair there is a kind of contrast, some have sought one here also: either making ἄγγελοι good and ἀρχαὶ evil powers, though both spiritual; or ἄγγελοι heavenly, and ἀρχαὶ (as in Lc. xii. 11, Tit. iii. 1) earthly powers, in which case either might be either good or bad. But this is arbitrary: and a comparison of 1 Cor. xv. 24, Eph. i. 21 favours a suggestion in S. and H. that possibly in a very early copy οὔτε δυνάμεις had been accidentally omitted after οὔτε ἀρχαί, and then added in the margin, but reinserted in a wrong place. The T.R. "neither angels nor principalities nor powers" brings together all the conceptions with which the Apostle peopled the invisible spiritual world, whatever their character, and declares their inability to come between us and the love of Christ. οὔτε ἐνεστῶτα οὔτε μέλλοντα: cf. 1 Cor. iii. 22. οὔτε ὕψωμα οὔτε βάθος: no dimensions of space. Whether these words pictured something to Paul's imagination we cannot tell; the patristic attempts to give them definiteness are not happy. οὔτε τις κτίσις ἑτέρα: nor any created thing of different kind. All the things Paul has mentioned come under the head of κτίσις; if there is anything of a different kind which comes under the same head, he includes it too. The suggestions of "another world," or of "aspects of reality out of relation to our faculties," and therefore as yet unknown to us, are toys, remote from the seriousness and passion of the Apostle's mind. Nothing that God has made, whatever be its nature, shall be able to separate us ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ θεοῦ τῆς ἐν Χ. Ἰ. τοῦ κ. ἡμῶν. The love of Christ is God's love. manifested to us in Him; and it is only in Him that a Divine love is manifested which can inspire the triumphant assurance of this verse.

Chapters IX.-XI. With the eighth chapter Paul concludes the positive exposition of his gospel. Starting with the theme of i. 16 f., he showed in i. 18-iii. 20 the universal sinfulness of men—Gentile and Jew; in iii. 21-v. 21 he explained, illustrated and glorified the gospel of justification by faith in Christ, set forth by God as a propitiation for sin; in vi. 1-viii. 39 he has vindicated this gospel from the charge of moral inefficiency, by showing that justification by faith is inseparably connected with a new life in the Spirit, a life over which sin has no dominion and in which the just demands of God's law are fulfilled. He has even carried this spiritual life on, in hope, to its consummation in glory: and no more remains to be said. With chap. ix. a new subject is introduced. There is no formal link of connection with what precedes. Structurally, the new division of the epistle stands quite apart from the earlier; it might have been written, and probably was written, after a break. But though no logical relation between the parts is expressed, a psychological connection between them is not hard to discover. The new section deals with a problem which presented great difficulty to the early Church, and especially to men of Jewish birth, a problem which haunted the Apostle's own mind and was no doubt thrust on his attention by his unbelieving countrymen, a problem all the more painful to him as he realised more completely the greatness and glory of the Christian salvation. This was the problem constituted by the fact that the Jews as a whole did not receive the Gospel. They were God's chosen people, but if the Christian Gospel brought salvation they had no share in it. The Messiah was to spring from them, but if Jesus was the Messiah this privilege meant not redemption but condemnation, for they rejected Him almost with one consent. In short, if the birth of the Christian Church and the gathering of a 1 Tim. ii. 7.

IX. 1. ʼΑΛΗΘΕΙΑΝ λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ, οὐ [a] ψεύδομαι, συμμαρτυρούσης μοι τῆς συνειδήσεώς μου ἐν Πνεύματι ʽΑγίῳ, 2. ὅτι λύπη μοι ἐστὶ

Gentiles into it represented the carrying out of God's purpose to bless and save men, God must have turned His back upon Himself; He must have broken His promise to Israel, and cast off His chosen people. But as this must seem impossible, the Jewish inference would be that the Gospel preached by Paul could not be of God, nor the Gentile Churches, as Paul asserted, God's true Israel. This is the situation to which the Apostle addresses himself in the ninth and the two following chapters. It is a historical problem, in the first instance, he has to deal with, not a dogmatic one; and it is necessary to keep the historical situation in view, if we are to avoid illegitimate inferences from the arguments or illustrations of the Apostle. After the introductory statement (ix. 1-5), which shows how deeply his heart is pledged to his brethren after the flesh, he works out a solution of the problem —or an interpretation of the position —along three lines. In each of these there are many incidental points of view, but they can be broadly discriminated. (1) In the first, chap. ix. 6-29, Paul asserts the absolute freedom and sovereignty of God as against any claim, made as of right, on the part of man. The Jewish objection to the Gospel, to which reference is made above, really means that the Jewish nation had a claim of right upon God, giving them a title to salvation, which God must acknowledge; Paul argues that all God's action, as exhibited in Scripture, and especially in the history of Israel itself—to say nothing of the essential relations of Creator and creature—refutes such a claim. (2) In the second, chap. ix. 30-x. 21, Paul turns from this more speculative aspect of the situation to its moral character, and points out that the explanation of the present rejection of the Jews is to be found in the fact that they have wilfully and stubbornly rejected the Gospel. Their minds have been set on a righteousness of their own, and they have refused to submit themselves to the righteousness of God. (3) In the third, chap. xi., he rises again to an absolute or speculative point of view. The present unbelief of the Jews and incoming of the Gentiles are no doubt, to a Jew, disconcerting events; yet in spite of them, or rather—which is more wonderful still —by means of them, God's promises to the fathers will be fulfilled, and all Israel saved. Gentile Christianity will provoke the unbelieving Jews to jealousy, and they too will enter the Messianic Kingdom. In the very events which seem to throw the pious Jewish mind out of its reckoning, there is a gracious providence, a depth of riches and wisdom and knowledge which no words can express. The present situation, which at the first glance is heart-breaking (ix. 2), is only one incident in the working out of a purpose which when completed reveals the whole glory of God's mercy, and evokes the loftiest and most heartfelt praise. "He shut up all unto disobedience that He might have mercy on all. . . . Of Him and through Him and to Him are all things. Unto Him be glory for ever." Since Baur's time several scholars have held that the mass of the Roman Church was Jewish-Christian, and that these three chapters, with their apologetic aim, are specially addressed to that community, as one which naturally felt the pressure of the difficulty with which they deal. But the Roman Church, as these very chapters show (cf. ix. 3, my kinsmen, not our; xi. 13, ὑμῖν δὲ λέγω τοῖς ἔθνεσιν), was certainly Gentile, whatever influence Jewish modes of thought and practice may have had in it; and it was quite natural for the Apostle, in writing what he evidently meant from the first should be both a systematic and a circular letter, to include in it a statement of his thoughts on one of the most difficult and importunate questions of the time. The extraordinary daring of chap. xi. ad fin. is not unrelated to the extraordinary passion of chap. ix. ad init. The whole discussion is a magnificent illustration of the aphorism, that great thoughts come from the heart.

CHAPTER IX.—Vv. 1-5. The intense pain with which Paul contemplates the unbelief of his countrymen.

Ver. 1. ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ, οὐ ψεύδομαι. The solemn asseveration is meant to clear him of the suspicion that in preaching to the Gentiles he is animated by hostility or even indifference to the Jews. Yet cf. 2 Cor. xi. 31, Gal. i. 20. ἐν Χριστῷ means that he speaks in fellowship with Christ, so that falsehood is impossible. For συμμαρτ. cf. ii. 15, viii. 16. The μοι is governed by συν: conscience attests what he says, and that ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ—the spirit of μεγάλη, καὶ ἀδιάλειπτος [b] ὀδύνη [c] τῇ καρδίᾳ μου, 3. ηὐχόμην γὰρ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι [1] ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου, τῶν συγγενῶν μου κατὰ σάρκα· 4. οἵτινές εἰσιν Ἰσραηλῖται, ὧν ἡ υἱοθεσία, καὶ ἡ δόξα, καὶ αἱ διαθῆκαι,[2] [d] καὶ ἡ νομοθεσία,[e] καὶ ἡ λατb 2 Tim. i. 3.

c 1 Tim. vi. 10.
d Gal. iv. 24; Eph. ii. 12.
e Cf. Heb. vii. 11, viii. 6.

[1] αυτος εγω αναθεμα ειναι, so CKL; but in ℵABDF αναθεμα ειναι αυτος εγω.

[2] αι διαθηκαι ℵCK and versions; η διαθηκη BDF; see note [2] (on πρῶτον), page 589. The plural is no doubt right here, and was mechanically changed as standing between two singulars. At the end of the verse DEFG also read η επαγγελια instead of αι επαγγελιαι.

God, in which all the functions of the Christian life are carried on: so that assurance is made doubly and trebly sure.

Ver. 2. The fact of Paul's sorrow is stated here; the cause of it is revealed in ver. 3. Weiss remarks on the triple climax: λύπη being intensified in ὀδύνη, μεγάλη in ἀδιάλειπτος, and μοι in τῇ καρδίᾳ μου. Paul cannot find words strong enough to convey his feeling.

Ver. 3. ηὐχόμην γὰρ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι κ.τ.λ. For I could wish that I myself were anathema, etc. For the omission of ἂν see Acts xxv. 22, Gal. iv. 20. Paul could wish this if it were a wish that could be realised for the good of Israel. The form of expression implies that the wish had actually been conceived, but in such sentences "the context alone implies what the present state of mind is" (Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 33). ἀνάθεμα is to be construed with ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ: the idea of separation from Christ, final and fatal separation, is conveyed. For the construction cf. Gal. v. 4 (κατηργήθητε ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ). ἀνάθεμα Gal. i. 8 f., 1 Cor. xii. 3, xvi. 22 is the equivalent of the Hebrew חֵרֶם, Deut. vii. 26, Josh. vii. 12—that which is put under the ban, and irrevocably devoted to destruction. It is beside the mark to speak of such an utterance as this as unethical. Rather might we call it with Dorner "a spark from the fire of Christ's substitutionary love". There is a passion in it more profound even than that of Moses' prayer in Ex. xxxii. 32. Moses identifies himself with his people, and if they cannot be saved would perish with them; Paul could find it in his heart, were it possible, to perish for them. τῶν συγγενῶν μου κατὰ σάρκα distinguishes these from his Christian brethren.

Ver. 4 f. The intensity of Paul's distress, and of his longing for the salvation of his countrymen, is partly explained in this verse. It is the greatness of his people, their unique place of privilege in God's providence, the splendour of the inheritance and of the hopes which they forfeit by unbelief, that make their unbelief at once so painful, and so perplexing. οἵτινές εἰσιν Ἰσραηλεῖται: being, as they are, Israelites. Israelites is not the national but the theocratic name; it expresses the spiritual prerogative of the nation, cf. 2 Cor. xi. 22, Gal. vi. 16. ὧν ἡ υἱοθεσία: this is not the Christian sonship, but that which is referred to in such passages as Ex. iv. 22, Hos. xi. 1. Yet it may be wrong to speak of it as if it were merely national; it seems to be distributed and applied to the individual members of the nation in Deut. xiv. 1, Hos. i. 10 (ii. 1 Heb.). ἡ δόξα: the glory must refer to something definite, like the pillar of cloud and fire, the כְּבוֹד יהוה of the O.T., the שְׁכִינָה of later Jewish theology; there is probably reference to it in Acts vii. 2, Heb. ix. 5. αἱ διαθῆκαι: in other places Paul speaks of the O.T. religion as one covenant, one (legal) administration of the relations between God and man (e.g. in 2 Cor. iii.): here, where αἱ διαθῆκαι is expressly distinguished from ἡ νομοθεσία (the great Sinaitic legislation: 2 Macc. vi. 23), the various covenants God made with the patriarchs must be meant. Cf. Wisd. xviii. 22, Sir. xliv. 11, 2 Macc. viii. 15. ἡ λατρεία is the cultus of the tabernacle and the temple, the only legitimate cultus in the world. αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι are the Messianic promises: in the Israelitish religion "the best was yet to be," as all the highest minds knew. Ver. 5. ὧν οἱ πατέρες: Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The greatness of its ancestry ennobled Israel, and made its position in Paul's time harder to understand and to endure. Who could think without the keenest pain of the sons of such fathers forfeiting everything for which the fathers had been called?

ρεία,[f] καὶ αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι,[g] 5. ὧν οἱ πατέρες,[h] καὶ ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστος τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς[i] εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. ἀμήν.

f Ch. xii. 1. g Ch. xv. 8; Gal. iii. 16, 21; Heb. vi. 12. h Ch. xi. 28. i Ch. i. 23; 2 Cor. xi. 31.

But the supreme distinction of Israel has yet to be mentioned. ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων θεὸς εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. Ἀμήν. The only point in the interpretation of this verse, in which it can be said that interpreters are wholly at one, is the statement that of Israel the Messiah came, according to the flesh. The words τὸ κατὰ σάρκα define the extent to which the Messiah can be explained by His descent from Israel; for anything going beyond σάρξ, or ordinary humanity, the explanation must be sought elsewhere. The limitation suggests an antithesis, and one in which the spiritual or Divine side of the Messiah's nature should find expression, this being the natural counterpart of σάρξ: and such an antithesis has been sought and found in the words which follow. He who, according to the flesh, is of Israel, is at the same time over all, God blessed for ever. This interpretation, which refers the whole of the words after ἐξ ὧν to ὁ Χριστὸς, is adopted by many of the best scholars: Gifford, Sanday, Westcott (see N.T., vol. ii., app., p. 110), Weiss, etc., and has much in its favour. (1) It does supply the complementary antithesis which τὸ κατὰ σάρκα suggests. (2) Grammatically it is simple, for ὁ ὢν naturally applies to what precedes: the person who is over all is naturally the person just mentioned, unless there is decisive reason to the contrary. (3) If we adopt another punctuation, and make the words ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων θεὸς εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας a doxology—"God Who is over all be blessed for ever"—there are grammatical objections. These are (a) the use of ὤν, which is at least abnormal. "God Who is over all" would naturally be expressed by ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων θεὸς without ὤν: the ὢν suggests the reference to Christ. (b) The position of εὐλογητὸς is unparalleled in a doxology; it ought, as in Eph. i. 3 and the LXX., to stand first in the sentence. But these reasons are not decisive. As for (1), though a complementary antithesis to τὸ κατὰ σάρκα is suggested, it is not imperatively demanded here, as in i. 3 f. The greatness reflected upon Israel by the origin of the person in question is sufficiently conveyed by ὁ Χριστός, without any expansion. As for (2), it is true to say that ὁ ὢν naturally refers to what precedes: the only question is, whether the natural reference may not in any given case be precluded. Many scholars think it is precluded here. Meyer, for instance, argues that "Paul has never used the express θεὸς of Christ, since he has not adopted, like John, the Alexandrian form of conceiving and setting forth the Divine essence of Christ, but has adhered to the popular concrete, strictly monotheistic terminology, not modified by philosophical speculation even for the designation of Christ; and he always accurately distinguishes God and Christ". To this he adds the more dubious reasons that in the genuine apostolic writings (he excludes 2 Tim. iv. 18, 2 Pet. iii. 18, Heb. xiii. 21, and Rev.) there is no doxology to Christ in the form usual in doxologies referring to God, and that by ἐπὶ πάντων the Son's subordination is denied. To these last arguments it may be answered that if the words in question do apply to Christ they are not a doxology at all (Gifford), but a declaration of deity, like 2 Cor. xi. 31, and that Christ's subordination is not affected by His being described as ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων any more than by His own claim to have all authority in heaven and on earth. But the first of Meyer's arguments has a weight which it is impossible not to feel, and it becomes the more decisive the more we realise Paul's whole habit of thought and speech. To say with Dr. Gifford, "When we review the history of the interpretation it cannot but be regarded as a remarkable fact that every objection urged against the ancient interpretation rests ultimately on dogmatic presuppositions," hardly covers such a position as Meyer represents. For the "dogmatic presuppositions" are not arbitrary, but merely sum up the whole impression made on the mind by the study of Paul's writings, an impression by which we cannot but be influenced, especially in deciding delicate and dubious questions like this. If we ask ourselves point blank, whether Paul, as we know his mind from his epistles, would express his sense of Christ's greatness by calling Him God blessed for ever, it seems to me almost impossible to answer in the affirmative. Such an assertion is not on the same plane with the conception of Christ which meets us everywhere in the Apostle's writings; and though there is some irregularity in the grammar, and perhaps some k Here only; Jas. i. 11; 1 Pet. i. 24.

6. Οὐχ οἷον δὲ ὅτι ἐκπέπτωκεν[k] ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ. οὐ γὰρ πάντες οἱ ἐξ Ἰσραήλ, οὗτοι Ἰσραήλ· 7. οὐδ᾽ ὅτι εἰσὶ σπέρμα[l] Ἀβραάμ, πάντες τέκνα, ἀλλ᾽ "ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθήσεταί σοι σπέρμα". 8. τοῦτ᾽ ἔστιν, οὐ τὰ τέκνα τῆς σαρκός, ταῦτα τέκνα τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἀλλὰ τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας[m] λογίζεται εἰς σπέρμα. 9. ἐπαγγελίας γὰρ ὁ λόγος οὗτος, "Κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον[n] ἐλεύσομαι, καὶ ἔσται τῇ

l Ch. xi. 1; 2 Cor. xi. 22; John viii. 33, 37.
m Gal. iv. 28.
n Gen. xviii. 10.

difficulty in seeing the point of a doxology, I agree with those who would put a colon or a period at σάρκα, and make the words that follow refer not to Christ but to the Father. This is the punctuation given in the margin by W. and H., and "alone seems adequate to account for the whole of the language employed, more especially when considered in relation to the context" (Hort, N.T., vol. ii., app., p. 110). The doxology is, indeed, somewhat hard to comprehend; it seems at the first glance without a motive, and no psychological explanation of it yet offered is very satisfying. It is as if Paul, having carried the privileges of Israel to a climax by mentioning the origin of the Messiah as far as regards His humanity, suddenly felt himself face to face with the problem of the time, how to reconcile these extraordinary privileges with the rejection of the Jews; and before addressing himself to any study or solution of it expressed in this way his devout and adoring faith, even under the pressure of such a perplexity, in the sovereign providence of God. The use of ὢν, which is in itself unnecessary, emphasises ἐπὶ πάντων; and this emphasis is "fully justified if St. Paul's purpose is to suggest that the tragic apostasy of the Jews (vers. 2, 3) is itself part of the dispensations of Him Who is God over all, over Jew and Gentile alike, over past, present and future alike; so that the ascription of blessing to Him is a homage to His Divine purpose and power of bringing good out of evil in the course of the ages (xi. 13-16, 25-36)": W. and H., ii., app., p. 110. Full discussions of the passage are given in Meyer, S. and H., and Gifford; also by Dr. Ezra Abbot in the Journal of the Society of Biblical Exegesis, 1883. With this preface Paul proceeds to justify the ways of God to men: see the introductory remarks above. The first section of his argument (ix. 6-29) is in the narrower sense a theodicy—a vindication of God's right in dealing as He has dealt with Israel. In the first part of this (vers. 6-13) he shows that the rejection of the mass of Israel from the Messianic Kingdom involves no breach or failure of the Divine promise. The promise is not given to all the natural descendants of Abraham, but only to a chosen seed, the Israel of God.

Ver. 6. οὐχ οἷον δὲ ὅτι: this unique expression is explained by Buttmann (Grammar, p. 372, Thayer's Transl.) as a blending of two formulas—οὐχ οἷον followed by a finite verb, and οὐχ ὅτι, which is common in the N.T. The meaning is, But, in spite of my grief, I do not mean to say any such thing as that the Word of God has come to nothing. For not all they that are of Israel, i.e., born of the patriarch, are Israel, i.e., the people of God. This is merely an application of our Lord's words, That which is born of the flesh is flesh. It is not what we get from our fathers and mothers that ensures our place in the family of God. For the use of οὗτοι in this verse to resume and define the subject see Gal. iii. 7.

Ver. 7. Nor because they are Abraham's seed, are they all τέκνα, i.e., children in the sense which entitles them to the inheritance, iv. 11, viii. 17. God from the very first made a distinction here, and definitely announced that the seed of Abraham to which the promise belonged should come in the line of Isaac—not of Ishmael, though he also could call Abraham father. Ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθήσεταί σοι σπέρμα = Gen. xxi. 12, LXX. The words literally mean that in the line of Isaac Abraham should have the posterity which would properly bear his name, and inherit the promises made to him by God. Isaac's descendants are the true Abrahamidae.

Ver. 8 f. τοῦτ᾽ ἔστιν: the meaning of this action of God is now made clear. It signifies that not mere bodily descent from Abraham makes one a child of God—that was never the case, not even in Abraham's time; it is the children of the promise who are reckoned a seed to Abraham, for the word in virtue of which Isaac, the true son and heir, was born, was a word of promise. He was born, to use the language of the Gospel, from above; and something analogous to this is necessary, whenever a man (even a

Σάῤῥᾳ υἱός ".[o] 10. οὐ μόνον δέ, ἀλλὰ καὶ Ῥεβέκκα ἐξ ἑνὸς κοίτην[p] ἔχουσα, Ἰσαὰκ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν· 11. μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων, μηδὲ πραξάντων τι ἀγαθὸν ἢ κακόν,[1] ἵνα ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν[q] τοῦ Θεοῦ πρόθεσις μένῃ, οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ καλοῦντος,[r] 12. ἐῤῥήθη αὐτῇ, "Ὅτι o Gen. xviii. 10.

p Ch. xiii. 13; Heb. xiii. 4; Luke xi. 7.
q Ch. xi. 5, 7, 28; Acts ix. 15; 1 Th. i. 4.
r Gal. v. 8.

[1] κακον DFKL; φαυλον ℵAB. του θεου προθεσις; all the best MSS., ℵABDFKL and edd. read προθεσις του θεου.

descendant of Abraham) claims to be a child of God and an heir of His kingdom. From Gal. iv. 28 (Now we, brethren, like Isaac, are children of promise) we see that the relation to God in question here is one open to Gentiles as well as Jews: if we are Christ's, then we too are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise. The argumentative suggestion in vers. 6-9 is that just as God discriminated at the first between the children of Abraham, so He is discriminating still; the fact that many do not receive the Gospel no more proves that the promise has failed than the fact that God chose Isaac only and set aside Ishmael.

Ver. 10 ff. But the argument can be made more decisive. A Jewish opponent might say, "Ishmael was an illegitimate child, who naturally had no rights as against Isaac; we are the legitimate descendants of the patriarch, and our right to the inheritance is indefeasible". To this the Apostle replies in vers. 10-13. Not only did God make the distinction already referred to, but in the case of Isaac's children, where there seemed no ground for making any distinction whatever, He distinguished again, and said, The elder shall serve the younger. Jacob and Esau had one father, one mother, and were twin sons; the only ground on which either could have been preferred was that of priority of birth, and this was disregarded by God; Esau, the elder, was rejected, and Jacob, the younger, was made heir of the promises. Further, this was done by God of His sovereign freedom: the decisive word was spoken to their mother while they were as yet unborn and had achieved neither good nor evil. Claims as of right, therefore, made against God, are futile, whether they are based on descent or on works. There is no way in which they can be established; and, as we have just seen, God acts in entire disregard of them. God's purpose to save men, and make them heirs of His kingdom—a purpose which is characterised as κατ' ἐκλογήν, or involving a choice—is not determined at all by consideration of such claims as the Jews put forward. In forming it, and carrying it out, God acts with perfect freedom. In the case in question His action in regard to Jacob and Esau agrees with His word in the prophet Malachi: Jacob I loved but Esau I hated; and further than this we cannot go. To avoid misapprehending this, however, it is necessary to keep the Apostle's purpose in view. He wishes to show that God's promise has not broken down, though many of the children of Abraham have no part in its fulfilment in Christ. He does so by showing that there has always been a distinction, among the descendants of the patriarchs, between those who have merely the natural connection to boast of, and those who are the Israel of God; and, as against Jewish pretensions, he shows at the same time that this distinction can be traced to nothing but God's sovereignty. It is not of works, but of Him Who effectually calls men. We may say, if we please, that sovereignty in this sense is "just a name for what is unrevealed of God" (T. Erskine, The Brazen Serpent, p. 259), but though it is unrevealed we must not conceive of it as arbitrary—i.e., as non-rational or non-moral. It is the sovereignty of God, and God is not exlex; He is a law to Himself—a law all love and holiness and truth—in all His purposes towards men. So Calvin: "ubi mentionem gloriæ Dei audis, illic justitiam cogita". Paul has mentioned in an earlier chapter, among the notes of true religion, the exclusion of boasting (iii. 27); and in substance that is the argument he is using here. No Jewish birth, no legal works, can give a man a claim which God is bound to honour; and no man urging such claims can say that God's word has become of no effect though his claims are disallowed, and he gets no part in the inheritance of God's people.

οὐ μόνον δέ: cf. v. 11, viii. 23 = Not only is this so, but a more striking and convincing illustration can be given. ἀλλὰ καὶ Ῥεβέκκα: the sentence thus begun is never finished, but the sense is ὁ μείζων δουλεύσει τῷ ἐλάσσονι·" 13. καθὼς[1] γέγραπται, "Τὸν Ἰακὼβ ἠγάπησα, τὸν δὲ Ἠσαῦ ἐμίσησα".

14. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἀδικία παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ;ᵃ μὴ γένοιτο. 15. τῷ γὰρ Μωσῇ λέγει, "Ἐλεήσω ὃν ἂν ἐλεῶ, καὶ οἰκτειρήσω ὃν ἂν a Ch. ii. 11.

[1] καθαπερ B, Orig. 1 (instead of καθως) is read by Weiss and W. and H., though the latter put καθως in marg. Cf. iii. 4, xi. 8, and 1 Cor. x. 10.

continued in ver. 12. Ἰσαὰκ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν: Paul speaks here out of his own consciousness as a Jew, addressing himself to a problem which greatly exercised other Jews; and calls Isaac "father" as the person from whom the inheritance was to come. Ver. 11. μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων μηδὲ πραξάντων: "the conditional negatives (μήπω, μηδὲ) represent the circumstances not as mere facts of history, but as conditions entering into God's counsel and plan. The time of the prediction was thus chosen, in order to make it clear that He Who calls men to be heirs of His salvation makes free choice of whom He will, unfettered by any claims of birth or merit" (Gifford). πρόθεσις in this theological sense is a specially Pauline word. The purpose it describes is universal in its bearings, for it is the purpose of One who works all things according to the counsel of His will, Eph. i. 11; it is eternal, a πρόθεσις τῶν αἰώνων, Eph. iii. 11; it is God's ἰδία πρόθεσις, 2 Tim. i. 9, a purpose, the meaning, contents, and end of which find their explanation in God alone; it is a purpose κατ' ἐκλογήν, i.e., the carrying of it out involves choice and discrimination between man and man, and between race and race; and in spite of the side of mystery which belongs to such a conception, it is a perfectly intelligible purpose, for it is described as πρόθεσις ἣν ἐποίησεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, and what God means by Christ Jesus no one can doubt. God's eternal purpose, the purpose carried out κατ' ἐκλογὴν, yet embracing the universe, is clearly revealed in His Son. The permanent determining element, wherever this purpose is concerned, is not the works of men, but the will and call of God; and to make this plain was the intention of God in speaking as He did, and when He did, to Rebecca about her children. If we look to Gen. xxv. 23, it is indisputably the nations of Israel and Edom that are referred to: "Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of peoples shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other people, and the elder shall serve the younger". The same is true also of Mal. i. 2: "I loved Jacob, but Esau I hated, and made his mountains a desolation," etc. Yet it would not be right to say that Paul is here considering merely the parts assigned by God to nations in the drama of providence; He is obviously thinking of Jacob and Esau as individuals, whose own relation to God's promise and inheritance (involving no doubt that of their posterity) was determined by God before they were born or had done either good or ill. On the other hand, it would not be right to say that Paul here refers the eternal salvation or perdition of individuals to an absolute decree of God which has no relation to what they are or do, but rests simply on His inscrutable will. He is engaged in precluding the idea that man can have claims of right against God, and with it the idea that the exclusion of the mass of Israel from the Messiah's kingdom convicts God of breach of faith toward the children of Abraham; and this He can do quite effectually, on the lines indicated, without consciously facing this tremendous hypothesis.

Vv. 14-21. In the second part of his theodicy Paul meets the objection that this sovereign freedom of God is essentially unjust.

Ver. 14. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; cf. vi. 1, vii. 7, viii. 31. It is Paul who speaks, anticipating, as he cannot help doing, the objection which is sure to rise, not only in Jewish minds, though it is with them he is directly concerned, but in the mind of every human being who reads his words. Yet he states the objection as one in itself incredible. μὴ ἀδικία παρὰ τῷ θεῷ; surely we cannot say that there is unrighteousness with God? This is the force of the μὴ, and Paul can answer at once μὴ γένοιτο: away with the thought! God says Himself that He shows mercy with that sovereign freedom which Paul has ascribed to Him; and the principle of action which God announces as His own cannot be unjust.

Ver. 15. τῷ Μωυσεῖ γὰρ λέγει. τῷ Μωυσεῖ is emphatic by position: the person to whom this declaration was t Gal. v. 7. οἰκτείρω [t]. 16. ἄρα οὖν οὐ τοῦ θέλοντος, οὐδὲ τοῦ τρέχοντος,[t] ἀλλὰ τοῦ ἐλεοῦντος [1] Θεοῦ. 17. λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ τῷ Φαραὼ, "Ὅτι εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε, ὅπως ἐνδείξωμαι [u] ἐν σοὶ τὴν δύναμίν μου, καὶ ὅπως διαγγελῇ [v] τὸ ὄνομά μου ἐν πάσῃ τῇ γῇ". 18. ἄρα οὖν ὃν θέλει, ἐλεεῖ· ὃν δὲ θέλει, σκληρύνει. 19. Ἐρεῖς οὖν μοι,[2] Τί ἔτι u 1 Tim. i. 16.

v Luke ix. 60; Acts xxi. 26.

[1] For ελεουντος read ελεωντος with ℵAB[1]DF.

[2] For ουν μοι ℵABP 47 read μοι ουν. τι ετι μεμφεται ℵAKLP, but τι ουν ετι μεμφεται BDFG, Orig.-inter. This ουν is inserted by Lachm. and Weiss, bracketed in marg. by Treg., simply omitted (on the principle of judging referred to in note [2], page 589) by W. and H.

made, as well as the voice which made it, render it peculiarly significant to a Jew. The words (exactly as LXX, Exod. xxxiii. 19) occur in the answer to a prayer of Moses, and may have been regarded by Paul as having special reference to him; as if the point of the quotation were, Even one who had deserved so well as Moses experienced God's mercy solely because God willed that He should. But that is not necessary, and is not what the original means. The emphasis is on ὃν ἄν, and the point is that in showing mercy God is determined by nothing outside of His mercy itself. οἰκτείρειν is stronger than ἐλεεῖν; it suggests more strongly the emotion attendant on pity, and even its expression in voice or gesture.

Ver. 16. Conclusion from this word of God. It (namely, the experience of God's mercy) does not depend on man's resolve or effort (for τρέχειν cf. 1 Cor. ix. 24 ff.), but on God's merciful act. This, of course, merely repeats vers. 12, 13, buttressing the principle of God's sovereign freedom in the exercise of mercy by reference to His own word in Exod. xxxiii. 19.

Ver. 17 f. But Paul goes further, and explains the contrary phenomenon—that of a man who does not and cannot receive mercy—in the same way. λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφή: it is on Scripture the burden of proof is laid here and at ver. 15. A Jew might answer the arguments Paul uses here if they were the Apostle's own; to Scripture he can make no reply; it must silence, even where it does not convince. τῷ Φαραώ: All men, and not those only who are the objects of His mercy, come within the scope of God's sovereignty. Pharaoh as well as Moses can be quoted to illustrate it. He was the open adversary of God, an avowed, implacable adversary; yet a Divine purpose was fulfilled in his life, and that purpose and nothing else is the explanation of his very being. εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε. The LXX in Exod. ix. 16 read: καὶ ἕνεκεν τούτου διετηρήθης, the last word, answering to the Hebrew הֶעֱמַדְתִּיךָ, being used in the sense of "thou wast kept alive"—the sense adopted by Dillmann for the Hebrew; probably Paul changed it intentionally to give the meaning, "for this reason I brought thee on the stage of history": cf. Hab. i. 6, Zec. xi. 16, Jer. xxvii. 41 (S. and H.). The purpose Pharaoh was designed to serve, and actually did serve, on this stage, was certainly not his own; as certainly it was God's. God's power was shown in the penal miracles by which Pharaoh and Egypt were visited, and his name is proclaimed to this day wherever the story of the Exodus is told.

Ver. 18. From the two instances just quoted Paul draws the comprehensive conclusion: So then on whom He will He has mercy, and whom He will He hardens. The whole emphasis is on θέλει. The two modes in which God acts upon man are showing mercy and hardening, and it depends upon God's will in which of these two modes He actually does act. The word σκληρύνει is borrowed from the history of Pharaoh, Ex. vii. 3, 22; viii. 19; ix. 12; xiv. 17. What precisely the hardening means, and in what relation God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart stood to Pharaoh's own hardening of it against God, are not unimportant questions, but they are questions which Paul does not here raise. He has one aim always in view here—to show that man has no claim as of right against God; and he finds a decisive proof of this (at least for a Jew) in the opposite examples of Moses and Pharaoh, interpreted as these are by unmistakable words of God Himself.

μέμφεται [w]; τῷ γὰρ βουλήματι [x] αὐτοῦ τίς ἀνθέστηκε; 20. μενοῦνγε, ὦ ἄνθρωπε,[1] [y] σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ ἀνταποκρινόμενος [z] τῷ Θεῷ; μὴ ἐρεῖ τὸ πλάσμα τῷ πλάσαντι, Τί με ἐποίησας οὕτως; 21. ἢ οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν ὁ κεραμεὺς [a] τοῦ πηλοῦ, ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ φυράματος ποιῆσαι ὃ μὲν εἰς

w Heb. viii. 8.
x Acts xxvii. 43; 1 Pet. iv. 3.
y Ch. ii. 1-3.
z Luke xiv. 6.
a Jer. c. 18; Isaiah xlv. 9; Sir. xxxvi. (xxxiii.) 13; Sap. xv. 7.

[1] ω ανθρωπε stands before μενουνγε in ℵ[1]AB (B omits γε), and so in all crit. edd.

It was through God, in the last resort, that Moses and Pharaoh were what they were, signal instances of the Divine mercy and the Divine wrath.

Ver. 19 ff. But human nature is not so easily silenced. This interpretation of all human life, with all its diversities of character and experience, through the will of God alone, as if that will by itself explained everything, is not adequate to the facts. If Moses and Pharaoh alike are to be explained by reference to that will—that is, are to be explained in precisely the same way—then the difference between Moses and Pharaoh disappears. The moral interpretation of the world is annulled by the religious one. If God is equally behind the most opposite moral phenomena, then it is open to any one to say, what Paul here anticipates will be said, τί ἔτι μέμφεται; why does he still find fault? For who withstands his resolve? To this objection there is really no answer, and it ought to be frankly admitted that the Apostle does not answer it. The attempt to understand the relation between the human will and the Divine seems to lead of necessity to an antinomy which thought has not as yet succeeded in transcending. To assert the absoluteness of God in the unexplained unqualified sense of verse 18 makes the moral life unintelligible; but to explain the moral life by ascribing to man a freedom which makes him stand in independence over against God reduces the universe to anarchy. Up to this point Paul has been insisting on the former point of view, and he insists on it still as against the human presumption which would plead its rights against God; but in the very act of doing so he passes over (in ver. 22) to an intermediate standpoint, showing that God has not in point of fact acted arbitrarily, in a freedom uncontrolled by moral law; and from that again he advances in the following chapter to do full justice to the other side of the antinomy—the liberty and responsibility of man. The act of Israel, as well as the will of God, lies behind the painful situation he is trying to understand.

Ver. 20. ὦ ἄνθρωπε is not used contemptuously, but it is set intentionally over against τῷ θεῷ: the objector is reminded emphatically of what he is, and of the person to whom he is speaking. It is not for a man to adopt this tone toward God. For μενοῦνγε cf. x. 18, Phil. iii. 8: the idea is, So far from your having the right to raise such objections, it is rather for me to ask, Who art thou? etc. Paul, as has been observed above, does not refute, but repels the objection. It is inconsistent, he urges, with the relation of the creature to the Creator. μὴ ἐρεῖ κ.τ.λ. Surely the thing formed shall not say, etc. The first words of the quotation are from Isa. xxix. 16: μὴ ἐρεῖ τὸ πλάσμα τῷ πλάσαντι αὐτό Οὐ σύ με ἔπλασας; ἢ τὸ ποίημα τῷ ποιήσαντι Οὐ συνετῶς με ἐποίησας; The fact that the words originally refer to Israel as a nation, and to God's shaping of its destiny, does not prove in the least that Paul is dealing with nations, and not with individuals, here. He never pays any attention to the original application of the O.T. words he uses; and neither Moses nor Pharaoh nor the person addressed as ὦ ἄνθρωπε is a nation. The person addressed is one who feels that the principle enunciated in ver. 18 must be qualified somehow, and so he makes the protest against it which Paul attempts in this summary fashion to repress. A man is not a thing, and if the whole explanation of his destiny is to be sought in the bare will of God, he will say, Why didst Thou make me thus? and not even the authority of Paul will silence him.

Ver. 21. ἢ οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν ὁ κεραμεὺς τοῦ πηλοῦ κ.τ.λ. The ἢ puts this as the alternative. Either you must recognise this absoluteness of God in silence, or you must make the preposterous assertion that the potter has not power over the clay, etc. The power of the potter over the clay is of course undoubted: he takes the same lump, and makes one vessel for noble and another for ignoble uses; it is not the quality of the clay, but the will of the potter, that decides to what use each part of the lump is to be put. True, the objector might say, but irrelevant. For man is

b 2 Tim. ii. 20 f. τιμὴν σκεῦος, ὃ δὲ εἰς ἀτιμίαν; [b] 22. εἰ δὲ θέλων ὁ Θεὸς ἐνδείξασθαι [c] c Verse 17. τὴν ὀργήν, καὶ γνωρίσαι τὸ δυνατὸν [d] αὐτοῦ, ἤνεγκεν [e] ἐν πολλῇ μακροd Here only; cf. ch. viii. 3. θυμίᾳ σκεύη ὀργῆς κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν· [f] 23. καὶ [1] ἵνα γνωρίσῃ
e Heb. xii. 20. τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ σκεύη ἐλέους, ἃ προητοίμασεν [g] εἰς f Matt. vii. 13; John xvii. 12; Phil. iii. 19. g Eph. ii. 10.

[1] και ινα γνωριση; the και is omitted by W. and H. following B 37, 39, 47, vulg., Copt., etc. Treg. brackets it in marg. Weiss thinks it was omitted because the transcriber could not see the point of it, and felt it easy to connect ινα with the principal verb.

not clay, and the relation of God to man is not that of the potter to dead matter. To say that it is, is just to concede the objector's point—the moral significance is taken out of life, and God has no room any longer to pronounce moral judgments, or to speak of man in terms of praise or blame.

Vv. 22-29. Paul's argument, to speak plainly, has got into an impasse. He is not able to carry it through, and to maintain the sovereign freedom of God as the whole and sole explanation of human destiny, whether in men or nations. He does, indeed, assert that freedom to the last, against the presumptuousness of man; but in this third section of his theodicy, he begins to withdraw from the ground of speculation to that of fact, and to exhibit God's action, not as a bare unintelligible exercise of will, which inevitably provokes rebellion, but as an exercise of will of such a character that man can have nothing to urge against it. εἰ δὲ: the δὲ marks the transition to the new point of view. It is as if Paul said: You may find this abstract presentation of God's relations to man a hard doctrine, but if His actual treatment of men, even of those who are σκεύη ὀργῆς κατ. εἰς ἀπώλειαν, is distinguished by longsuffering and patience, what can you say against that? θέλων has been rendered (1) because it is His will; (2) although it is His will. In the former case, God bears long with the vessels of wrath in order that the display of His wrath and power may be more tremendous at last. But (a) such an idea is inconsistent with the contrast implied in δέ: it is an aggravation of the very difficulty from which the Apostle is making his escape; (b) it is inconsistent with the words ἐν πολλῇ μακροθυμίᾳ; it is not longsuffering if the end in view is a more awful display of wrath; there is no real longsuffering unless the end in view is to give the sinner place for repentance. Hence the other view (2) is substantially right. Although it is God's will to display His wrath and to show what He can do, still He does not proceed precipitately, but gives ample opportunity to the sinner to repent and escape. We are entitled to say "the sinner," though Paul does not say so explicitly, for ἡ ὀργή, the wrath of God, is relative to sin, and to nothing else: except as against sin, there is no such thing as wrath in God. In σκεύη ὀργῆς the word σκεύη is perhaps prompted by the previous verse, but the whole associations of the potter and the clay are not to be carried over: they are expressly precluded by ἤνεγκεν ἐν πολλῇ μακροθυμίᾳ. Paul does not say how the σκεύη ὀργῆς came to be what they are, the objects upon which the wrath and power of God are to be revealed; he only says that such as they are, God has shown great patience with them. It seems a mistake in W. and H. to print σκεύη ὀργῆς as a quotation from Jer. l. (LXX xxvii.) 25; for there the words mean "the instruments by which God executes His wrath," les armes de sa colère (Reuss). κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν: ἀπώλεια (Phil. i. 28, iii. 19) means perdition, final ruin; by what agency the persons referred to have been fitted for it Paul does not say; what he does say is, that fitted for such a doom as they are, God has nevertheless endured them in much longsuffering, so that they at least cannot say, Why dost thou find fault? For κατηρτισμένος = perfected, made quite fit or ripe, see Luke vi. 40, 1 Cor. i. 10: cf. also 2 Tim. iii. 17.

Ver. 23 f. The sentence beginning with εἰ δὲ θέλων is not grammatically completed, but ver. 23 is an irregular parallel to ver. 22. God's purpose is regarded as twofold. It is on the one hand to show His wrath and make known His power; it is on the other hand to make known the riches of His glory (cf. Eph. iii. 16). The first part of it is carried out on those who are σκεύη ὀργῆς, the latter on those who are σκεύη ἐλέους; but, in carrying out both parts δόξαν· 24. οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς οὐ μόνον ἐξ Ἰουδαίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξ ἐθνῶν· 25. (ὡς καὶ ἐν τῷ Ὡσηὲ λέγει, "Καλέσω τὸν οὐ λαόν μου, λαόν μου· καὶ τὴν οὐκ ἠγαπημένην, ἠγαπημένην". 26. "Καὶ ἔσται, ἐν τῷ τόπῳ οὗ ἐρρήθη αὐτοῖς,[1] Οὐ λαός μου ὑμεῖς, ἐκεῖ κληθήσονται υἱοὶ Θεοῦ ζῶντος." 27. Ἡσαΐας [h] δὲ κράζει ὑπὲρ[1] τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, "Ἐὰν ᾖ ὁ ἀριθμὸς τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸ [i]

h Is. x. 22 f.
i 2 Cor. i. 6 (end).

[1] αυτοις is wanting in BFG and the best MSS. of the vulg. As no reason can be suggested for its omission, if it were original, Weiss supposes it was added in conformity with the LXX. He therefore omits it altogether; W. and H. bracket.

alike, God acts in a way which is so far from giving man room to complain that it commands his wonder and adoration; for the σκεύη ὀργῆς there is much long-suffering, for the σκεύη ἐλέους a preparation and a calling in which God's free unmerited mercy is conspicuous. καὶ ἵνα γνωρίσῃ: This is mentioned as a principal purpose of God. ἐπὶ σκεύη ἐλέους: the glory is conceived as something shed upon the persons concerned; they are irradiated with the Divine brightness. Cf. 2 Thess. i. 10. δόξα in such connections has usually a supersensible eschatological meaning; its content was fixed for Paul by his vision of Christ as Lord of Glory. The end of God's ways with the vessels of mercy is to conform them to the image of His exalted Son. ἃ προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν: Paul does not shrink from introducing God as subject here. The vessels of mercy, in whom the Divine glory is to be revealed, are such as God prepared before for that destiny. That Paul is not speaking here abstractly, as in his discussion of the relations of creature and Creator in ver. 21 f., but on the basis of experience, is shown by the words which immediately follow: οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς = whom he also called in us. The σκεύη ἐλέους, in other words, are not a mere theological conception = "God's elect": they are the actual members of the Christian Church, Jew and Gentile; and it is not a deduction from the necessities of the Divine nature, but an account of real experiences of God's goodness, which is given both in προητοίμασεν and in ἐκάλεσεν. How much is covered by προητοίμασεν is not clear, but the text presents no ground whatever for importing into it the idea of an unconditional eternal decree. Those who are called know that the antecedents of their calling, the processes which lead up to and prepare for it, are of God. They know that in all these processes, even in the remote initial stages of them, to the significance of which they were blind at the time, glory was in view. The fact that both Jews and Gentiles are called shows that this preparation is not limited to any one nation; the fact that the called are from among both Jews and Gentiles shows that no one can claim God's mercy as a right in virtue of his birth in some particular race.

Ver. 25 f. This result of God's ways with man—His calling not only from the Jews but from the Gentiles—agrees with His own declarations in Scripture. Ver. 25 answers roughly to Hos. ii. 23, LXX: I will love her who was not beloved, and will say to that which was not My people, Thou art My people. Not My people (= Lo-ammi) and Not beloved (= Lo-ruhamah) were the names of a son and a daughter of Hosea, who symbolised the kingdom of Israel, rejected of God but destined to share again in His favour. Paul here applies to the calling of the Gentiles words which spoke originally of the restoration of Israel—an instance which shows how misleading it may be to press the context of the other passages quoted in this chapter. Ver. 26 is also a quotation from Hos. i. 10 (LXX): the ἐκεῖ is supplied by Paul. The application of it is similar to that of ver. 25. In Hosea the promise is that the Israelites who had lost their standing as God's people should have it given back to them, in all its dignity. This also Paul reads of the calling of the Gentiles. They were once no people of God's, but now have their part in the adoption. But what is the meaning of "in the place where . . . there shall they be called"? It is not certain that in Hosea there is any reference to a place at all (see margin of R.V.), and it is not easy to see what Paul can mean by the emphatic ἐκεῖ. The ordinary explanation—the Gentile lands—is as good as any, but seems hardly equal to the stress laid on ἐκεῖ.

k Here only (and so also of ὑπόλειμμα). Mark xiii. 4; Luke iv. 2, 13.
m Here only in N. T.

κατάλειμμα [1] [k] σωθήσεται· 28. λόγον γὰρ συντελῶν [1] καὶ συντέμνων [m] ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ· ὅτι λόγον συντετμημένον [2] ποιήσει Κύριος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς". 29. Καὶ καθὼς προείρηκεν Ἡσαΐας, "Εἰ μὴ Κύριος Σαβαὼθ ἐγκατέλιπεν ἡμῖν σπέρμα, ὡς Σόδομα ἂν ἐγενήθημεν, καὶ ὡς Γόμοῤῥα ἂν

[1] For καταλειμμα (which is the reading of the LXX) DFKLP, read with ℵ[1]AB υπολειμμα.

[2] εν δικαιοσυνη οτι λογον συντετμημενον om. ℵ[1]AB 47. "Western and Syrian" authorities have the words, in agreement with the LXX. But the γαρ after the first λογον makes the whole sentence, in this case, untranslatable; and though Weiss and Alford defend the received text, and Treg. brackets the words in question in marg., most edd. omit them.

Ver. 27 f. From the calling of the Gentiles, as foretold in prophecy, Paul passes now to the partial, but only partial, calling of Israel, as announced by the same authority. The Jews cannot quarrel with the situation in which they find themselves when it answers so exactly to the Word of God. ὑπὲρ is here indistinguishable from περί: it is not a loud intercession on Israel's behalf, but a solemn declaration concerning Israel, that the prophet makes; see Grimm, s.v., i., 5. The quotation in ver. 27 is from Isa. x. 22 f., but the opening words are modified by recollection of Hos. i. 10 just quoted. The LXX reads καὶ ἐὰν γένηται ὁ λαὸς Ἰσραὴλ ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸ κατάλειμμα αὐτῶν σωθήσεται. λόγον συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων [ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ, ὅτι λόγον συντετμημένον] κύριος ποιήσει ἐν τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ὅλῃ. The words bracketed are omitted by most editors, but the sense is not affected. τὸ ὑπόλειμμα has the emphasis: only the remnant shall be saved. This doctrine Paul apparently finds confirmed by the words λόγον γὰρ συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων ποιήσει κύριος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. It is doubtful whether any one could assign meaning to these words unless he had an idea beforehand of what they ought to or must mean. Cheyne renders the Hebrew to which they answer, "For a final work and a decisive doth the Lord execute within all the land"; and there is the same general idea in Sanday and Headlam's version of Paul: "For a word, accomplishing and abridging it, that is, a sentence conclusive and concise, will the Lord do upon the earth". Weiss, who retains the words bracketed, makes λόγον = God's promise: God fulfils it indeed (συντελῶν), but He at the same time limits or contracts it (συντέμνων), i.e., fulfils it to some of Israel, not to all. This, no doubt, is the sense required, but can any one say that the words convey it? We should rather say that Paul put his own thought into the words of the LXX, in which a difficult passage of Isaiah was translated almost at haphazard, and in doing so lent them a meaning which they could not be said to have of themselves.

Ver. 29. But his last quotation is in verbal agreement with the LXX Isa. i. 9, and transparently clear. The σπέρμα or seed which God leaves is the same as the ὑπόλειμμα. The figure is not to be pressed. The remnant is not the germ of a new people; Paul expects Israel as a whole to be restored.

With this the theodicy proper closes. The unbelief of the Jews was a great problem to the Apostolic age, and one which easily led to scepticism concerning the Gospel. The chosen people without a part in the kingdom of God —impossible. This chapter is Paul's attempt to explain this situation as one not involving any unrighteousness or breach of faith on the part of God. It is not necessary to resume the various stages of the argument as they have been elucidated in the notes. The point of greatest difficulty is no doubt that presented by vers. 22 and 23. Many good scholars, Meyer and Lipsius for example, hold that Paul in these verses is not withdrawing from, but carrying through, the argument from God's absoluteness stated so emphatically in ver. 21. They hold that the σκεύη ὀργῆς κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν would not be σκεύη ὀργῆς at all, if their repentance and amendment were conceivable; and although God bears long with them—that is, defers their destruction—it is only in order that He may have time and opportunity to manifest the riches of His glory on the vessels of mercy. But the answer to this is plain. It assumes that human life, in its relation to God, can be interὡμοιώθημεν".) 30. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; ὅτι ἔθνη τὰ μὴ [n] διώκοντα [o] δικαιοσύνην κατέλαβε [p] δικαιοσύνην, δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως· 31. Ἰσραὴλ δὲ διώκων νόμον δικαιοσύνης εἰς νόμον δικαιοσύνης [1] οὐκ ἔφθασε.[q] 32. διατί; ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἀλλ' ὡς [r] ἐξ ἔργων νόμου [2].

n Ch. ii. 14.
o Ch. xii. 13, xiv. 19; 1 Cor. xiv. 1; 1 Tim. vi. 11; 2 Tim. ii. 22.
p 1 Cor. ix. 24; Phil. iii. 12, 17.
q Phil. iii. 16.
r Philem. ver. 14.

[1] Om. second δικαιοσυνης ℵ[1]ABDG, all edd.

[2] νομου om. ℵ[1]ABF 47, vulg., and most edd. Alf. is doubtful.

preted by the analogy of clay in its relation to the potter; in other words, that moral and spiritual experiences can be construed and made intelligible through what are merely physical categories. But this is not the case. And if it be said that justice is not done, by the interpretation given in this commentary, to the expression σκεύη ὀργῆς, it may also be said that justice is not done, by the interpretation of Meyer and Lipsius, to the expression ἐν πολλῇ μακροθυμίᾳ. Each of these allegations may be said to neutralise the other—that is, neither is decisive for the interpretation of the passage; and the Apostle's meaning remains to be determined by the general movement of his thought. In spite of the great difficulties of the section as a whole, I cannot hesitate to read it as above.

Chapter IX.—Ver. 30-X. 21. We come now to the second main division of that part of the epistle in which Paul discusses the problem raised by the relation of the Jews to the Gospel. He has shown in chap. ix. 6-29 that they have no claim as of right to salvation: their whole history, as recorded and interpreted in the Scriptures, exhibited God acting on quite a different principle; he now proceeds to show more definitely that it was owing to their own guilt that they were rejected. They followed, and persisted in following, a path on which salvation was not to be found; and they were inexcusable in doing so, inasmuch as God had made His way of salvation plain and accessible to all.

Ver. 30 f. τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; usually, as in ver. 14, this question is followed by another, but here by an assertion. The conclusion of the foregoing discussion is—not that God has been faithless or unjust, but—this paradoxical position: Gentiles (ἔθνη, not τὰ ἔθνη) that did not follow after righteousness attained righteousness, the righteousness which comes of faith; while Israel, which followed after a law of righteousness, did not attain that law. διώκειν and καταλαμβάνειν are correlative terms: see Wetstein. The repetition of δικαιοσύνη is striking: it is the one fundamental conception on which Paul's gospel rests; the questions at issue between him and the Jews were questions as to what it was, and how it was to be attained. τὰ μὴ διώκοντα δικαιοσύνην is not an unfair description of the pagan races as contrasted with the Jews; how to be right with God was not their main interest. δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως for the form of the explanatory clause with δὲ cf. iii. 22, 1 Cor. ii. 6. It is not surprising that a righteousness of this sort should be found even by those who are not in quest of it; its nature is that it is brought and offered to men, and faith is simply the act of appropriating it. Ἰσραὴλ δὲ κ.τ.λ.: this is the astonishing thing which does need explanation. διώκων νόμον δικαιοσύνης. The idea is not that Israel was in quest of a law of righteousness, in the sense of a rule by the observance of which righteousness would be attained: every Israelite believed himself to be, and already was, in possession of such a law. It must rather be that Israel aimed incessantly at bringing its conduct up to the standard of a law in which righteousness was certainly held out, but was never able to achieve its purpose. The νόμος δικαιοσύνης, the unattained goal of Israel's efforts, is of course the Mosaic law; but it is referred to, not definitely, but in its characteristic qualities, as law, and as exhibiting and enjoining (not bestowing) righteousness. εἰς νόμον οὐκ ἔφθασεν: did not attain to, arrive at, that law—it remained out of their reach. Legal religion proved a failure.

Ver. 32. διὰ τί; Why? A result so confounding needs explanation. ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ ἔργων: it seems too precise to supply with Weiss ἐδίωξεν νόμον δικαιοσύνης. The reason of Israel's religious failure was that its whole religious effort and attitude was not of faith, but (so they conceived the case) of works. By inserting ὡς Paul dissociates himself from this conception, and leaves it to Israel; he does not believe (having προσέκοψαν γὰρ[1] τῷ λίθῳ τοῦ προσκόμματος, 33. καθὼς γέγραπται, "Ἰδού, τίθημι ἐν Σιὼν λίθον προσκόμματος, καὶ πέτραν σκανδάλου· καὶ πᾶς[2] ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ οὐ καταισχυνθήσεται".

[1] γαρ ℵ³D³KLP; om. ℵ¹ABD¹F. [2] πας om. ℵABDF 47 and all edd.

learned the contrary by bitter experience) that there is any outlet along this road. Everything in religion depends on the nature of the start. You may start ἐκ πίστεως, from an utter abandonment to God, and an entire dependence on Him, and in this case a righteousness is possible which you will recognise as δικαιοσύνη θεοῦ, God's own gift and work in you; or you may start ἐξ ἔργων, which really means in independence of God, and try to work out, without coming under obligation to God, a righteousness of your own, for which you may subsequently claim His approval, and in this case, like the Jews, all your efforts will be baffled. Your starting-point is unreal, impossible; it is not truly ἐξ ἔργων, but only ὡς ἐξ ἔργων; it is an idea of your own, not a truth on which life can be carried out, that you are in any sense independent of God. Such an idea, however, rooted in the mind, may effectually pervert and wreck the soul, by making the Divine way of attaining righteousness and life offensive to it; and this is what happened to the Jews. Because of that profoundly false relation to God προσέκοψαν τῷ λίθῳ τοῦ προσκόμματος. The stone on which they stumbled was Christ, and especially His Cross. The σκάνδαλον of the Cross, at which they stumbled, is not simply the fact that it is a cross, whereas they expected a Messianic throne; the Cross offended them because, as interpreted by Paul, it summoned them to begin their religious life, from the very beginning, at the foot of the Crucified, and with the sense upon their hearts of an infinite debt to Him, which no "works" could ever repay.

Ver. 33. Yet paradoxical as this may seem, it agrees with the words of Scripture. The quotation is a mixture of Isa. xxviii. 16 and viii. 14: and it is interesting to remark that the same passages are quoted in conjunction, though they are not mixed as here, in 1 Pet. ii. 6-8. The original reference of them is not exactly Messianic. The stone laid in Zion (Isa. xxviii. 16) is indeed interpreted by Delitzsch of the kingdom of promise as identified with its Sovereign Head, but the stone of stumbling (Isa. viii. 14) is unequivocally God Himself: all who do not give Him honour are broken against His government as on a stone, or caught in it as in a snare. Paul inserts ἐπ' αὐτῷ after ὁ πιστεύων (as Peter also does), and applies the figure of the stone in both cases to Christ, and to the contrary relations which men may assume to Him. Some stumble over Him (as the Jews, for the reasons just given); others build on Him and find Him a sure foundation, or (without a figure) put their trust in Him and are not put to shame. Cf. Ps. cxviii. 22, Mt. xxi. 42, 1 Cor. iii. 11, Acts. iv. 12, Eph. ii. 20.

CHAPTER X.—Ver. 1. The Apostle cannot enlarge on this melancholy situation without expressing once more the deep grief which it causes him. Since the Jews are referred to in the third person (ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν) it is clear that the persons addressed are a Gentile Church. ἀδελφοί: Paul's heart seems drawn to his spiritual kindred as he feels the deep gulf which separates him meanwhile from his kinsmen according to the flesh. ἡ μὲν εὐδοκία τῆς ἐμῆς καρδίας: the meaning of εὐδοκία must be gathered from such examples as Mt. xi. 26, Eph. i. 5, 9, Phil. i. 15, ii. 13, 2 Thess. i. 11. His heart's εὐδοκία is that in which his heart could rest with complacency; that which would be a perfect satisfaction to it. This is virtually the same as "desire," and an "Etymologicum ineditum" quoted in Schleusner explains it by βούλημα, γνώμη, προαίρεσις, ἐπιθυμία. His inmost desire and his supplication to God are in their interest, with a view to their salvation. The μὲν has no corresponding δέ; the sad reality which answers to it does not need again to be expressed.

Ver. 2. Their good qualities compel his affection. ζῆλον θεοῦ ἔχουσιν: they have a zeal for God, are intensely (though mistakenly) religious. Cf. Gal. i. 14. An unbelieving Jew could interpret his opposition to the lawless gospel of Paul as zeal for the divinely-given rule of life, and his opposition to the crucified Messiah as zeal for the divinely-given promises. It was God's honour for which he stood in refusing the Gos-

X. 1. ᾿ΑΔΕΛΦΟΙ, ἡ μὲν εὐδοκία τῆς ἐμῆς καρδίας, καὶ ἡ δέησις ἡ[1] πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ ἐστιν εἰς σωτηρίαν. 2. μαρτυρῶ γὰρ αὐτοῖς ὅτι ζῆλον Θεοῦ[a] ἔχουσιν, ἀλλ᾽ οὐ κατ᾽ ἐπίγνωσιν. 3. ἀγνοοῦντες[b] γὰρ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην, καὶ τὴν ἰδίαν[c] δικαιοσύνην[2][d] ζητοῦντες στῆσαι, τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐχ ὑπετάγησαν. 4. τέλος[e] a 2 Cor. xi. 2.

b Acts xvii. 23; 1 Tim. i. 13
c Gal. vi. 5.
d Phil. iii. 9.
e Mark iii. 26; Heb. vii. 3.

[1] η before προς τον θεον om. ℵABDF. For του Ισραηλ εστιν read αυτων with ℵABDFP 47, etc.

[2] την ιδιαν δικαιοσυνην ℵFGKL and most cursives, is adopted by Tischdf., but most edd. with ABDP 47, vulg. omit δικαιοσυνην.

pel. ἀλλ᾽ οὐ κατ᾽ ἐπίγνωσιν: this religious earnestness is not regulated by adequate knowledge. For ἐπίγνωσις see Eph. iv. 13, Phil. i. 9, Col. i. 9, 10, ii. 2, 1 Tim. ii. 4, 2 Tim. ii. 25; it is especially used of religious knowledge, and suggests attainment in it (ἄρτι γινώσκω ἐκ μέρους, τότε δὲ ἐπιγνώσομαι, 1 Cor. xiii. 12).

Ver. 3. This verse goes to the root of the matter, and explains the failure of the Gospel among the Jews. It was due to their ignorance of the righteousness of God. All men need and crave righteousness, and the Jews, in their ignorance of God's, sought to establish a righteousness of their own. Their own is the key to the situation. Their idea was that they could be good men without becoming God's debtors, or owing anything at all to Him. Such an idea, of course, shows complete ignorance of the essential relations of God and man, and when acted on fatally perverts life. It did so with the Jews. When the Gospel came, revealing the righteousness of God—that for which man must be absolutely indebted to God's grace, and which he can never boast of as "his own"—it cut right across all the habits and prejudices of the Jews, and they did not submit themselves to it. Paul interprets the position of his nation through the recollection of his own experience as a Pharisee — no doubt rightly on the whole. For ὑπετάγησαν in middle sense see viii. 7, xiii. 1, Heb. xii. 9, Jas. iv. 7, 1 Pet. ii. 13.

Ver 4. Further proof that the pursuit of a righteousness of one's own by legal observances is a mistake, the act of men "in ignorance". τέλος γὰρ νόμου χριστὸς εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι: For Christ is law's end, etc. The sense required—a sense which the words very naturally yield—is that with Christ in the field law as a means of attaining righteousness has ceased and determined. The moment a man sees Christ and understands what He is and what He has done, he feels that legal religion is a thing of the past: the way to righteousness is not the observance of statutes, no matter though they have been promulgated by God Himself; it is faith, the abandonment of the soul to the redeeming judgment and mercy of God in His Son. The meaning is virtually the same as that of our Lord's words in Luke xvi. 16. νόμου without the article is "law" in the widest sense; the Mosaic law is only one of the most important instances which come under this description; and it, with all statutory conceptions of religion, ends when Christ appears. It is quite true to say that Christ consummates or fulfils the law (hence Calvin would prefer complementum or perfectio to finis as a rendering of τέλος); quite true also that He is the goal of the O.T. dispensation, and that it is designed to lead to Him (cf. Mt. v. 17, Gal. iii. 24); but though both true and Pauline, these ideas are irrelevant here, where Paul is insisting, not on the connection, but on the incompatibility, of law and faith, of one's own righteousness and the righteousness of God. Besides, in limiting νόμος to the Mosaic O.T. law, this interpretation does less than justice to the language, and misses the point of παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι: there is no believer, Gentile or Jew, for whom law, Mosaic or other, retains validity or significance as a way to δικαιοσύνη, after the revelation of the righteousness of God in Christ.

In ver. 5 ff. Paul describes more fully, and in O.T. terms, the two ways of attaining δικαιοσύνη—law and faith. His aim is to show that they are mutually exclusive, but that the latter is open and accessible to all.

Ver. 5. Μωυσῆς γὰρ γράφει: Moses' authority is unimpeachable on this point. The righteousness that comes from law γὰρ νόμου Χριστὸς εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι. 5. Μωσῆς γὰρ γράφει τὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ νόμου,[1] "Ὅτι ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς". 6. ἡ δὲ ἐκ[f] πίστεως δικαιοσύνη οὕτω λέγει, "Μὴ εἴπῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου, Τίς ἀναβήσεται[g] εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν;" τοῦτ' ἔστι[h] Χριστὸν καταγαγεῖν· 7. "ἤ, Τίς καταβήσεται εἰς τὴν

f Ch. ix. 30; Gal. iii. 8.
g Cf. Eph. iv. 8 f.
h Ch. ix. 8.

[1] την εκ του νομου DFKLP; om. του ℵB (A). οτι stands after γραφει, not before ὁ ποιησας, in ℵ[1]AD[1] 17, vulg. It stands as in the received text in ℵ[3]BD[3]FGKL, etc. Most edd. put it after γραφει, but not Weiss, who argues that it was removed from its proper place after νομου in order to provide an object for ποιησας after αυτα had been dropped. He reads Μ. γαρ γραφει την δ. τ. εκ νομου οτι ο π. αυτα α. ζ. εν αυτη. According to W. and H. the original text was οτι την δικαιοσυνην την εκ νομου ο ποιησας ανθρωπος ζησεται εν αυτη. Possibly this best explains the variants, but it strikes one as too artificially grammatical for Paul. αυτα om. ℵ[1]AD-gr., vulg. For εν αυτοις (from LXX), which is found in DFKLP, ℵ[1]AB 17, 47, vulg. read εν αυτη; and so all edd.

must be an achievement: the man who has done it shall live in it, Lev. xviii. 5. Paul writes ἐν αὐτῇ with reference to δικαιοσύνην: the ἐν αὐτοῖς of the LXX refers to πάντα τὰ κρίματα which precedes. Moses, of course, in writing thus did not mock his people; the O.T. religion, though an imperfect, was a real religion, under which men could be right with God. To keep the law of God and live by doing so (Mt. xix. 17) was the natural aim and hope of a true Israelite; only, in this case, the law was not a collection of statutes, but a revelation of God's character and will, and he who sought to keep it did so not alone, but in conscious dependence on God whose grace was shown above all things else by His gift of such a revelation. Paul, however, is writing with Pharisees and legalists in his eye, and with the remembrance of his own experience as a Pharisee in his heart; and his idea no doubt is that this road leads nowhere. Cf. Gal. iii. 10-12. To keep the law thus is an impossibility.

Ver. 6 f. ἡ δὲ ἐκ πίστεως δικαιοσύνη οὕτως λέγει. It is remarkable that Paul does not make Moses his authority here, though he is about to express himself in words which certainly go back to Deut. xxx. 12-14. It is the righteousness of faith itself which speaks, describing its own character and accessibility in words with a fine flavour of inspiration about them. But it is not so much a quotation we find here, as a free reproduction and still freer application of a very familiar passage of the O.T. It is irrelevant to point out that what the writer in Deuteronomy means is that the law (ἡ ἐντολὴ αὕτη ἣν ἐγὼ ἐντέλλομαί σοι σήμερον) is not oppressive nor impracticable (as Paul in ver. 5 tacitly assumes it to be); the Apostle is not thinking in the least what the writer of Deuteronomy meant; as the representative of the righteousness of faith, he is putting his own thoughts—his inspired conviction and experience of the Gospel—into a free reproduction of these ancient inspired words. μὴ εἴπῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου: = do not think, especially thoughts you would be ashamed to utter. τίς ἀναβήσεται εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν; . . . ἢ τίς καταβήσεται εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον; There is no impossible preliminary to be accomplished before the true religion is got under way; we have neither to scale heaven nor descend into the abyss. ἄβυσσος (in N.T.) only in Lc. viii. 31 and seven times in Rev. But cf. Ps. cvi. 26, lxx. 20. The passage in Deuteronomy has εἰς τὸ πέραν τῆς θαλάσσης. These two indefinite proverbial expressions for the impossible are interpreted by Paul. With τοῦτ' ἔστιν (vers. 6, 7), he introduces a midrash upon each. The first means (in his mind) bringing Christ down; the second, bringing Christ up from the dead. Evidently the righteousness of faith is concerned with a Christ of whom both these things are true—a descent from heaven, and a rising from the dead, Incarnation and Resurrection. We could not bring about either by any effort, but we do not need to; Christ incarnate and risen is here already, God's gift to faith.

Ver. 8. ἐγγύς σου τὸ ῥῆμά ἐστιν . . . τοῦτ' ἔστιν τὸ ῥῆμα τῆς πίστεως ὃ κηρύσσομεν. What is in the lips of the preacher is near to all who hear. In Deut. the word is of course the Mosaic law; here it is the Gospel, the word which deals with that πίστις on which ἄβυσσον;" τοῦτ' ἔστι Χριστὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναγαγεῖν.[1] 8. ἀλλὰ τί λέγει; "Ἐγγύς σου τὸ ῥῆμά[k] ἐστιν, ἐν τῷ στόματί σου καὶ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου·" τοῦτ' ἔστι τὸ ῥῆμα[l] τῆς πίστεως ὃ κηρύσσομεν· 9. ὅτι ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς ἐν τῷ στόματί σου Κύριον Ἰησοῦν,[1] καὶ πιστεύσῃς ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ἤγειρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν, σωθήσῃ· 10. καρδίᾳ γὰρ πιστεύεται εἰς δικαιοσύνην, στόματι δὲ ὁμολογεῖται εἰς σωτηρίαν. 11. Λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφή, "Πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ οὐ

[i] Heb. xiii. 20.
[k] Acts x. 37 verse 17
Eph. v. 26, vi. 17.
[l] Acts x. 37; 1 Pet. i. 25.

[1] ομολογησης εν τω στοματι σου Κυριον Ιησουν: this is the reading of most MSS., and is retained by Weiss and on the marg. by W. and H. For Κυριον Ιησουν B and Clem. Alex. have οτι Κυριος Ιησους, which W. and H. put in their text, and Lachm. and Treg. on margin. But B. and Clem. Alex. also insert το ρημα before εν τω στοματι σου, and this also W. and H. put in text. Weiss regards it as a thoughtless repetition from ver. 8, to give an object to ομολογησης; whether the further change of Κυριον Ιησουν into οτι Κυριος Ιησους (to conform to the parallel clause) took place before or after this can hardly be decided.

the righteousness of God depends. τῆς πίστεως is objt. gen. The whole idea of the verses is that righteousness has not to be achieved, but only appropriated.

Ver. 9. Apparently this verse gives the content of what the Apostle describes as "the word of faith which we preach". ὅτι = viz. The reference both to heart and mouth in Deut. suits his purpose, and he utilises it; the closing words in the LXX (καὶ ἐν ταῖς χερσί σου ποιεῖν αὐτό) he disregards. ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς τὸ ῥῆμα . . . ὅτι Κύριος Ἰησοῦς: the putting of the confession before the faith which inspires it, and of which it is the confession, seems to be due simply to the fact that in the O.T. passage present to the Apostle's mind ἐν τῷ στόματί σου precedes ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου. τὸ ῥῆμα is virtually = the Gospel, as God's word concerning His Son and faith in Him. We confess it when we say, Jesus is Lord. Cf. 1 Cor. xii. 3, Phil. ii. 11. The exaltation of Jesus is the fundamental Christian confession, and presupposes the resurrection; and it is this exaltation which here (as in the other passages referred to) is meant by His Lordship. It is mechanical to say that the first part of ver. 9 (Jesus is Lord) refers to the doubting question in ver. 6, and therefore means a confession of the incarnation; and the second part of it (God raised Him from the dead) to the doubting question of ver. 7. Paul nowhere connects the Lordship of Christ with His incarnation, and there is certainly no reference to His Divine nature here. The confession of the first part of the verse answers to the faith in the second; he who believes in his heart that God raised Christ from the dead can confess with his mouth (on that ground and in that sense) that Jesus is Lord. On the basis of such mutually interpreting faith and confession he is saved. This does not deprive the death of Christ of the significance which Paul ascribes to it elsewhere. Christ could not be raised unless He had first died, and when He is raised it is with the virtue of His sin-atoning death in Him. His exaltation is that of one who has borne our sins, and the sense of this gives passion to the love with which believers confess Him Lord.

Ver. 10. καρδίᾳ γὰρ πιστεύεται εἰς δικαιοσύνην, στόματι δὲ ὁμολογεῖται εἰς σωτηρίαν. The parallelism is like that in the previous verse, though the order of the clauses is reversed. To be saved one must attain δικαιοσύνη, and this depends on heart-faith; such faith, again, leading to salvation, must confess itself. To separate the two clauses, and look for an independent meaning in each, is a mistake; a heart believing unto righteousness, and a mouth making confession unto salvation, are not really two things, but two sides of the same thing. The formalism which seems to contrast them is merely a mental (perhaps only a literary) idiosyncrasy of the writer. It is true to say that such a confession as is meant here was made at baptism; but to limit it to baptism, or to use this verse to prove baptism essential to salvation, is, as Weiss says, unerhörter Dogmatismus.

Ver. 11. This verse proves from Scripture the main idea in the preceding, viz., that faith saves. It is a quotation from Is. xxviii. 16 (see ix. 33) with the addition of πᾶς, to which nothing corre-

m Ch. iii. 22. 1 Cor. xiv. 7.

καταισχυνθήσεται". 12. οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολὴ [m] Ἰουδαίου τε καὶ Ἕλληνος· ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς Κύριος πάντων, πλουτῶν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους αὐτόν. 13. "Πᾶς γὰρ ὃς ἂν ἐπικαλέσηται τὸ ὄνομα Κυρίου, σωθήσεται." 14. Πῶς οὖν ἐπικαλέσονται [1] εἰς ὃν οὐκ ἐπίστευσαν; πῶς δὲ πιστεύσουσιν οὗ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; πῶς δὲ ἀκούσουσι sponds either in Hebr. or LXX. Yet oddly enough it is on this πᾶς that the rest of the Apostle's argument turns. The way of righteousness and salvation by faith, he goes on to show, is meant for all.

[1] επικαλεσονται KLP; επικαλεσωνται ℵABDF, all edd. So for πιστευσουσιν AKL, read πιστευσωσιν with ℵBDF. The received ακουσουσι of L has been corrected into the classical ακουσονται in ℵ[1]DFK; the true reading ακουσωσι is preserved only in B (with correctors of ℵ and A) and some cursives.

Ver. 12. οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολὴ Ἰουδαίου τε καὶ Ἕλληνος: this has been proved in one sense in chap. iii.—there is no distinction between them in point of sin; it is now asserted in another sense—there is no distinction between them in that the same Lord is waiting to save all on the same conditions. κύριος πάντων is best taken as predicate: the same Lord is Lord of all: cf. Acts x. 36, Phil. ii. 10 f. Christ is undoubtedly meant: in His presence, in view of His work and His present relation to men, all differences disappear; there can be only one religion. πλουτῶν εἰς πάντας: abounding in wealth toward all. Christ can impart to all men what all men need—the righteousness of God. Cf. v. 15-17, Eph. iii. 8, τὸ ἀνεξιχνίαστον πλοῦτος τοῦ Χριστοῦ. τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους αὐτόν: cf. 1 C. i. 2 where Christians are described as οἱ ἐπικαλούμενοι τὸ ὄνομα τ. Κ. ἡμῶν Ι. Χ. The formula, as the next verse shows, is borrowed from the Old Testament; and as Weiss remarks, verse 13 sets aside every idea of a distinction between the invocation of God and that of Christ. To a Christian, as Paul conceives him, Christ has at least the religious value of God; the Christian soul has that adoring attitude to Christ which (when shown in relation to Jehovah) was characteristic of O.T. religion, See Acts ix. 14, 21, Acts xxii. 16 (Paul's conversion), 2 Tim. ii. 22. It is a fair paraphrase of the words to say that salvation depends on this: whether a sinful man will make appeal for it to Christ in prayer, as to One in whom all God's saving judgment and mercy dwell bodily. It rests with Christ, so appealed to, to make a man partaker in the righteousness of God and eternal life.

Ver. 13. For every one who invokes the name of the Lord shall be saved. The words are from Joel iii. 5 (= ii. 32 LXX). "The Lord" in the original is Jehovah; here, manifestly, Christ—a proof how completely Christ stands in God's place in all that concerns salvation.

Ver. 14 f. It is difficult to trace very clearly the line of the Apostle's thought here. Many scholars (including W. and H. and Lipsius) connect vers. 14 and 15 closely with what precedes, and mark a break between ver. 15 and ver. 16. It is as if Paul were expanding the πᾶς of ver. 13 and justifying that universal preaching of the Gospel which was itself a stumbling-block to the Jews. Every one who invokes the name of the Lord shall be saved, and therefore the conditions of such invocation must be put within reach of every one. It is no argument against this interpretation that the ideas it introduces are not essential to the main purpose of the chapter, which is to prove the culpability of the Jews: the eager fulness of Paul's mind often carries him on thus. Others read vers. 14-21 continuously, and mark a break at vers. 13 (e.g., Weiss, Sanday and Headlam). They lay stress on the οὖν in ver. 14 (cf. ix. 14, ix. 30, xi. 1, 11) as indicating that a paragraph has ended, and that the writer is facing the consequences which flow from it, the objections which can be made to it, etc. In this case the connection would be something like this. Salvation depends upon invoking Christ; but to invoke Christ depends upon certain conditions which the Jews may say it has been beyond their power to fulfil; let us inquire into the conditions, and see whether such a plea holds good. The first of these connections seems to me much the simpler, and it has the advantage of covering the second. For if the invocation of Christ, which is the sole and universal condition of salvation, has been made possible for all men, it χωρὶς κηρύσσοντος; 15. πῶς δὲ κηρύξουσιν,[1] ἐὰν μὴ ἀποσταλῶσι; καθὼς γέγραπται, "Ὡς ὡραῖοι οἱ πόδες τῶν εὐαγγελιζομένων εἰρήνην,[2] τῶν εὐαγγελιζομένων τὰ ἀγαθά". 16. Ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες [n] ὑπήκουσαν [n Acts vi. 7. 2 Thess. i. 8.] τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ· Ἡσαΐας γὰρ λέγει, "Κύριε, τίς ἐπίστευσε τῇ [o] ἀκοῇ [o 1 Thess. ii. 13; Heb. iv. 2.] ἡμῶν;" 17. ἄρα ἡ πίστις ἐξ ἀκοῆς, ἡ δὲ ἀκοὴ διὰ ῥήματος Θεοῦ.[3]

[1] For κηρυξουσιν read κηρυξωσιν with ℵABDKLP. For καθως read καθαπερ with B. See note [1], page 598.

[2] ευαγγελιζομενων ειρηνην των om. ℵ[1]ABC 47; ins. ℵ[3]DFKLP. The omission may be due to homœoteleuton. Weiss thinks it is, and keeps these words in the text; Treg. thinks it possible, and brackets them in margin. On the other hand, they may have been inserted to make the quotation agree better (it does not even then agree closely) with the LXX. The MSS. authority by itself is decisive for the omission. τα αγαθα ℵ[1]D[2, 3]KL; om. τα ℵ[3]ABCD[1]F (and LXX). W. and H. read ως ωραιοι οι ποδες των ευαγγελιζομενων αγαθα.

[3] θεου AD[2, 3] (gr.) KL; Χριστου ℵ[1]BCD 47 and all edd.

has been made possible for the Jews. The special application to them, in which the argument of the chapter is clinched, is not made till ver. 19; here they are only involved with the rest of the world which has heard the Gospel. πῶς οὖν ἐπικαλέσωνται: sc. τοῦτον. πῶς δὲ πιστεύσωσιν οὗ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; It is simplest to render, How are they to believe on Him Whom they have not heard? identifying the voice of the preachers with that of Christ. Winer, p. 249. Cf. Eph. ii. 17. The rendering, Him of Whom they have not heard, would be legitimate in poetry. πῶς δὲ ἀκούσωσιν: this deliberative form is in all probability right: see critical note and Blass, Gramm. des Neut. Griech., 205. ἐὰν μὴ ἀποσταλῶσιν: viz., by the Lord Whom they preach, and Who is heard speaking when they speak. Cf. 1 Cor. i. 17, ἀπέστειλέν με Χριστὸς . . . εὐαγγελίζεσθαι. To find here the idea of an official ministry, as something belonging essentially to the constitution of the Church, is grotesque. "St. Paul argues back from effect to cause, through the series of Prayer, Faith, Hearing, Preaching, Sending; thus the last link in his argument must be the first in the realisation from which the rest follow; this one therefore he confirms by the prophetic announcement in Isa. lii. 7" (Gifford). ὡς ὡραῖοι: the true text of Romans greatly abbreviates the prophet's words, but the joy with which the deliverance from Babylon was foreseen is in keeping with that with which Paul contemplates the universal preaching of the Gospel.

Ver. 16. The fact remains, however, in spite of this universal preaching, that there has not been a universal surrender to the Gospel. οὐ πάντες: the Jews are present to the writer's mind here, though the words might apply more widely; hence the compassionate mode of statement. Cf. iii. 3: εἰ ἠπίστησάν τινες. Yet this quantum of unbelief does not discomfit the Apostle; for it also, as well as the proclamation of the Gospel, is included in the prophecy. τίς ἐπίστευσεν τῇ ἀκοῇ ἡμῶν is a lament over practically universal unbelief. ἡ ἀκοὴ ἡμῶν in Isaiah means "that which we heard," but who the "we" are is not clear. If a representative prophet speaks, ἀκοὴ will mean that which he and other prophets heard from God: = Who hath believed the revelation made to us? Cf. Isa. xxviii. 9, 19. If a representative of repenting Israel speaks, ἀκοὴ will mean that which he and his countrymen have heard from the prophets: = Who hath believed the message delivered to us? Assuming that Paul as a preacher instinctively used the words to express his own thought and experience in his vocation, they will mean here, Who has believed the message delivered by us Apostles?

Ver. 17. This verse is really parenthetic: Paul's logical mind cannot let slip the chance of showing how this quotation confirms the connection of ideas in ver. 14. ἄρα suits a rapid passing inference better than the more deliberate ἄρα οὖν which is much more frequent in Romans. Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 18, 2 Cor. v. 14, Gal. ii. 17. So then faith comes from a message (that which is received by the hearer of the Gospel), and the message διὰ ῥήματος Χριστοῦ through the Word concerning Christ.

18. ἀλλὰ λέγω, Μὴ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; μενοῦνγε "εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ἐξῆλθεν ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, καὶ εἰς τὰ πέρατα τῆς οἰκουμένης τὰ ῥήματα αὐτῶν". 19. Ἀλλὰ λέγω, Μὴ οὐκ ἔγνω Ἰσραήλ [1]; πρῶτος Μωσῆς λέγει, "Ἐγὼ [p] παραζηλώσω ὑμᾶς ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει, ἐπὶ ἔθνει

p Ch. xi. 14; 1 Cor. x. 22.

[1] Ισραηλ before ουκ εγνω ℵABCD[1, 2]F.

That which when heard is ἀκοή is when spoken ῥῆμα, and it is the condition of faith. The construction in ῥῆμα Χριστοῦ is the same as in τὸ ῥῆμα τῆς πίστεως in ver. 8. The words could not signify Christ's command.

Ver. 18. The process of convicting the Jews is now under way, and ἀλλὰ λέγω introduces a plea on their behalf. It is Paul who speaks: hence the form of the question μὴ οὐκ ἤκουσαν suggests his opinion as to the answer. To hear is necessary in order to believe; you do not mean to say they did not hear? Cf. 1 Cor. ix. 4, 5, xi. 22. μενοῦνγε is immo vero. The contrary is so clearly the case that there is a touch of derision in the word with which Paul introduces the proof of it. Cf. ix. 20. The Gospel has been preached in all the world: the words of Ps. xix. 4 (exactly as in LXX) are at once the expression and the proof of this. Of course they refer to the revelation of God in nature, but their use will seem legitimate enough if we remember that Paul knew the extent to which the Gospel had been proclaimed in his day. Cf. Col. i. 6, 23. It was as widely diffused as the Diaspora, and the poetic inspired expression for this had a charm of its own.

Ver. 19. ἀλλὰ λέγω: another attempt to introduce a plea on behalf of Israel. You cannot say, "they did not hear"; surely you do not mean to say, then, Israel did not understand? At first sight there seems an unnatural emphasis here on Israel, but this is not the case. The generality of the argument must be abandoned now, for the passages next to be quoted, which are already present to Paul's mind, contrast Israel with the Gentiles, and so bring it into prominence; and it is in the case of Israel, of all nations, that the plea of not understanding is most out of place. Above all nations Israel ought to have understood a message from God: Israel, and inability to understand God's Word, ought to be incompatible ideas. πρῶτος Μωυσῆς λέγει, Deut. xxxii. 21. πρῶτος suggests the beginning of a line of witnesses to this effect: virtually it means, even Moses, at the very beginning of their history. The point of the citation is not very clear. Like the passages quoted in ix. 25, 26, it might have been adduced by Paul as a proof that the Gentiles were to be called into God's kingdom, and called in order to rouse the Jews to jealousy; but to be in place here, there must be also the latent idea that if peoples beyond the covenant (who were not peoples at all), and unintelligent peoples (i.e., idol worshippers) could understand the Gospel, a privileged and religiously gifted people like the Jews was surely inexcusable if it failed to understand it. The same idea seems to be enforced again in ver. 20. Ἡσαΐας δὲ ἀποτολμᾷ: "breaks out boldly" (Gifford). It was an act of great daring to speak thus to a nation with the exclusive temper of Israel, and Paul who needed the same courage in carrying the Gospel to the Gentiles was the man to see this. οἱ ἐμὲ μὴ ἐπερωτῶντες means those who put no question to me, sc., about the way of salvation. In Isa. lxv. 1 the clauses occur in reverse order. What the prophet has in view is God's spontaneous unmerited goodness, which takes the initiative, unsolicited, in showing mercy to faithless Jews who made no appeal to Him and never sought Him; the Apostle applies this, like the similar passages in ix. 25 f., to the reception of the Gospel by the Gentiles.* If God was found and recognised in His character and purposes, where all the conditions seemed so much against it, surely Israel must be inexcusable if it has missed the meaning of the Gospel. The very calling of the Gentiles, predicted and interpreted as it is in the passages quoted, should itself

* The part of Isa. lxv. 1 which is not quoted here (I said, Behold Me, behold Me, unto a nation that was not called by My name) is meant, as usually pointed, to refer to the Gentiles, and this tradition of its application Paul may have learned from Gamaliel (Cheyne); but the pointing is wrong: see Cheyne.

ἀσυνέτῳ παροργιῶ ὑμᾶς". 20. Ἡσαΐας δὲ [q] ἀποτολμᾷ καὶ λέγει, "Εὑρέθην τοῖς[1] ἐμὲ μὴ ζητοῦσιν, ἐμφανὴς ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἐμὲ μὴ ἐπερωτῶσι". 21. πρὸς δὲ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ λέγει, "Ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν ἐξεπέτασα τὰς χεῖράς μου πρὸς λαὸν ἀπειθοῦντα καὶ [r] ἀντιλέγοντα".

q Here only.
r Luke ii. 34; Acts xiii. 45; xxviii. 22.

[1] ευρεθην τοις ℵACD[2], [3]LP; but εν τοις BD[1]FG. Sanday and Headlam call this "a Western reading which has found its way into B". W. and H. put εν in marg.

have been a message to the Jews, which they could not misunderstand; it should have opened their eyes as with a lightning flash to the position in which they stood—that of men who had forfeited their place among the people of God—and provoked them, out of jealousy, to vie with these outsiders in welcoming the righteousness of faith.

Ver. 21. πρὸς δὲ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ λέγει: That is what he says of the Gentiles, but as for Israel, he says, etc., Isa. lxv. 2. For πρὸς = with reference to, see Heb. i. 7 f., Luke xii. 41. The arms outstretched all the day long are the symbol of that incessant pleading love which Israel through all its history has consistently despised. It is not want of knowledge, then, nor want of intelligence, but wilful and stubborn disobedience, that explains the exclusion of Israel (meanwhile) from the Kingdom of Christ and all its blessings. This is not inconsistent with ver. 3, if we go to the root of the matter. For the ignorance there spoken of is one which has its root in the will, in the pride of a heart which is determined to have a righteousness of its own without coming under any obligation to God for it, and which therefore cannot assume the attitude to which the Gospel becomes credibly Divine; while the ignorance suggested as a plea for unbelief is that of men to whom the Gospel has never been presented at all. The latter ignorance might annul responsibility; the former gives its full significance to guilt.

CHAPTER XI. On the place of this chapter in the argument, see introduction to chap. ix. above. Briefly, the ninth chapter means, God is sovereign, and the tenth chapter means, Israel has sinned. Both of these are presented in relative independence as explanations of the perplexing fact which confronted the Apostle, namely, that the Jews did not receive the Gospel, while the Gentiles did; in this chapter, the two are brought into relation to each other, and we are shown (to some extent) how in the sovereign providence of God even the sin of Israel is made to contribute to the working out of a universal purpose of redemption—a redemption in which Israel also shares, in accordance with the inviolable promise of God. The chapter can be naturally divided into three sections: (1) vers. 1-10, in which the question immediately arising out of chap. x. is discussed, viz., whether the unbelief of which Israel as a whole has been convicted involves God's rejection of the chosen people; (2) vers. 11-24, in which the result to be attained by the partial and temporary exclusion of the Jews from the Messianic kingdom is enlarged upon, and the Gentiles warned against self-exaltation; and (3) vers. 25-36, in which Paul magnifies the unsearchable wisdom, love and faithfulness of God, as revealed in securing by a common method the salvation alike of Israel and the Gentiles.

(1) Vv. 1-10. λέγω οὖν: the οὖν intimates that it is with the conclusion reached in chap. x. before his mind that Paul puts the following question: the unbelief of Israel naturally suggested it. μὴ ἀπώσατο ὁ θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ; For the words, cf. Ps. xciv. 14 (xciii. LXX), 1 Sam. xii. 22. In both places the promise is given οὐκ ἀπώσεται ὁ Κ. τ. λ. αὐτοῦ, and the familiar words give the effect of asking, Has God broken His express and repeated promise? μὴ suggests the negative answer, which is expressed more passionately in μὴ γένοιτο. Cf. iii. 6, ix. 14. Israel may be faithless to Him, but He abides faithful. καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ Ἰσραηλίτης εἰμί: This is often read as if it were an argument in favour of the negative answer; as if Paul meant, God has not cast off His people, I myself am a living proof to the contrary. But this is hardly conciliatory, to say the least; and it is better to take the words as explaining why Paul puts the question with μή (suggesting the negative answer), and why he then gives the denial with such vehemence. "I, too, am an Israelite, to whom the very idea of God's rejection of His people is an impious and incredible idea, to be repelled with horror." ἐκ σπέρ. Ἀβραάμ:

XI. 1. ΛΕΓΩ οὖν, Μὴ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ; μὴ γένοιτο· καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ Ἰσραηλίτης εἰμί, ἐκ σπέρματος Ἀβραάμ, φυλῆς [a] Βενϊαμίν. 2. οὐκ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ, ὃν προέγνω. ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε ἐν Ἡλίᾳ τί λέγει ἡ γραφή; ὡς ἐντυγχάνει τῷ Θεῷ κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, λέγων,[1] 3. "Κύριε, τοὺς προφήτας σου ἀπέκτειναν, καὶ[2] τὰ θυσιαστήριά σου κατέσκαψαν· κἀγὼ ὑπελείφθην μόνος, καὶ ζητοῦσι τὴν ψυχήν μου". 4. ἀλλὰ τί λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ χρηματισμός; "Κατέλιπον ἐμαυτῷ ἑπτακισχιλίους ἄνδρας, οἵτινες οὐκ ἔκαμψαν γόνυ τῇ Βάαλ." 5. οὕτως οὖν καὶ ἐν τῷ νῦν [b] καιρῷ λεῖμμα κατ' [c] ἐκλογὴν χάριτος a Phil. iii. 5.

b Ch. iii. 26.
c Ch. ix. 11.

[1] λεγων ℵ[1]L; om. ℵ[3]ABCDF.
[2] και before τα θυσιαστηρια ℵ[3]DL; om. ℵ[1]ABCF 17.

no proselyte. φυλῆς Βενιαμείν: the one tribe which with Judah mainly represented the post-exilic theocratic people.

Ver. 2 f. οὐκ ἀπώσατο: formal denial of what the heart has indignantly protested against in ver. 1. ὃν προέγνω must contain a reason which makes the rejection incredible or impossible. This excludes the interpretation of Weiss, who thinks that Paul means to say that God knew what Israel was before He chose it, and therefore cannot cast it off as if its unbelief had disappointed Him; He knew from the first what it would be. To plead thus for God is too paltry. We must take προέγνω as in viii. 29: the meaning is, Israel stood before God's eyes from eternity as His people, and in the immutableness of the sovereign love with which He made it His lies the impossibility of its rejection. The idea is the same as in ver. 29 below. ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε: this is the alternative. He who says, God has cast off Israel, must be ignorant of what Scripture says ἐν Ἡλίᾳ in the passage which gives the history of Elijah. The sections of the Bible were designated, not as now by chapter and verse, but by some descriptive phrase: cf. ἐπὶ τῆς βάτου, Mark xii. 26: and in Philo ἐν ταῖς ἀραῖς = Gen. iii. 15. Many references are made in this form by Hebrew writers. For ἐντυγχάνειν κατὰ cf. 1 Macc. viii. 32: it means to plead (not intercede) with God against Israel. τὰ θυσιαστήρια is one of the indications that in Elijah's time there was no law requiring only one altar for Jehovah. The words are quoted from 1 Kings xix. ver. 10 or 14. In Elijah's mood, Paul might have said something similar of his own time, for their circumstances were not alike. The Apostle, like the prophet, was lonely and persecuted, and Israel as a whole seemed to have abandoned God or been abandoned by Him. But he understands God's way (and His faithfulness) better.

Ver. 4. ὁ χρηματισμός: the word is related to χρηματίζω (Mt. ii. 12, 22, Acts x. 22, Heb. viii. 5) as χρησμὸς to χράω: it means the oracle, or answer of God. Here only in N.T., but see 2 Macc. ii. 4, xi. 17. The quotation is from 1 Kings xix. 18 with ἐμαυτῷ added, by which Paul suggests God's interest in this remnant, and the fact that He has a purpose of His own identified with them. God has reserved the seven thousand; He has reserved them for Himself; it is on this the proof depends that He has not cast off His people. The seven thousand are Israel to Him. Yet His unchanging faithfulness in keeping a people is not represented as a merely unconditional decree, having no relation to anything but His own will, for the seven thousand are described by their character: οἵτινες οὐκ ἔκαμψαν γόνυ τῇ Βάαλ. οἵτινες is qualitative: such were those whom God reserved for Himself, men who never bowed knee to Baal. Βάαλ takes the fem. art. because it was often replaced in reading by בֹּשֶׁת (LXX αἰσχύνη).

Ver. 5. Application of the principle of ver. 4 to the present. ὁ νῦν καιρὸς is the present regarded not merely as a date, but as in some sense a crisis. λεῖμμα γέγονεν: a remnant has come to be—this is the fact which has emerged from the general unbelief of Israel. κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος: on these words the emphasis lies. The existence of the remnant is due to an election of grace, a choice on the part of God the motive of which is to be sought in His unmerited γέγονεν. 6. εἰ δὲ χάριτι, οὐκ ἔτι ἐξ ἔργων· ἐπεὶ ἡ χάρις οὐκ ἔτι γίνεται χάρις. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις· ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον.[1] 7. Τί οὖν; ὃ ἐπιζητεῖ Ἰσραὴλ, τούτου[2] οὐκ ἐπέτυχεν, ἡ δὲ ἐκλογὴ ἐπέτυχεν· οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ ἐπωρώθησαν 8. (καθὼς[3] γέγραπται, "Ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεος πνεῦμα κατανύξεως, ὀφθαλμοὺς τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν, καὶ ὦτα τοῦ μὴ ἀκούειν"), ἕως τῆς σήμερον[d] ἡμέρας. 9. καὶ Δαβὶδ λέγει, "Γενηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα αὐτῶν εἰς παγίδα καὶ εἰς d 2 Cor. iii. 14.

[1] ει δε εξ εργων ουκ ετι εστι χαρις επει το εργον ουκ ετι εστιν εργον. All this is omitted in ℵ[1]ACDEFG, vulg., Egypt. verss., Orig. lat. and Latin fathers; inserted with some variations (for the last εργον B has χαρις, by a slip, surely) in ℵ[3]BL and later MSS. According to Sanday and Headlam, there can be no doubt that the addition is a gloss; B is not sufficient to justify a Western addition of this kind against such preponderating authority. The words are omitted by most edd., but Alf. brackets them, and Weiss retains them in the text; the χαρις in B for εργον at end only makes the omission by homœot. easier.

[2] For τουτου read τουτο with ℵABCDFL.

[3] καθως; read with ℵB καθαπερ. See note [1], page 673.

love alone. The idea is the same as in chap. ix. 6-13: but cf. note on ver. 4.

Ver. 6. Expansion of χάριτος in ver. 5: grace and works are mutually exclusive. Nothing a man can do gives him a claim as of right against God to be included in the remnant. ἐπεὶ: otherwise. Cf. ver. 22, iii. 6. Gratia nisi gratis sit gratia non est. Aug. The fact that there is a remnant, and one owing its existence to God's grace, is the proof that (in spite of the wholesale defection of Israel) God has not cast off His people.

Ver. 7. τί οὖν; What then? How are we to describe the present situation, if not in the painful language of verse 1? Thus: ὃ ἐπιζητεῖ Ἰσραὴλ κ.τ.λ. What Israel is in quest of is δικαιοσύνη: the present conveys more sympathetically than the impft. of some MSS. the Apostle's sense of the ceaseless and noble (though misdirected) efforts of his countrymen. ἐπέτυχεν: Jas. iv. 2, Heb. vi. 15. ἡ δὲ ἐκλογή = οἱ ἐκλεκτοί = τὸ λεῖμμα. ἐπωρώθησαν: were hardened, 2 Cor. iii. 14, John xii. 40, Mc. vi. 52, viii. 17. Paul does not say how they were hardened or by whom: there is the same indefiniteness here as in κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν in ix. 22. It may be quite possible to give a true sense to the assertion that they were hardened by God (cf. the following verse), although the hardening in this case is always regarded as a punishment for sin, that is, as a confirming in an obduracy which originally was not of God, but their own; as if the idea were, first they would not, and then, in God's just reaction against their sin, they could not; but it is a mistake to import into the text a definiteness which does not belong to it. It is rather essential to Paul's argument that he should not be bound down to one-sided interpretations of what he has intentionally left vague.

Ver. 8 ff. This hardening (at the present day ver. 5) agrees with God's action toward Israel in the past, as exhibited in Scripture. The words from the O.T. can hardly be called a quotation; Deut. xxix. 4, Is. xxix. 10, Is. vi. 9, 10, all contributed something to them. The πνεῦμα κατανύξεως is from Is. xxix. 10, and answers to the Heb. רוּחַ תַּרְדֵּמָה, a spirit of deep sleep or torpor. Virtually it is defined by what follows—unseeing eyes, unhearing ears: a spirit which produces a condition of insensibility, to which every appeal is vain. κατάνυξις only occurs in LXX, Is. xxix. 10, Ps. lix. 4 (οἶνον κατανύξεως); but the verb κατανύσσομαι is used by Theod. in Dan. x. 15 to translate נִרְדַּם (cognate to תַּרְדֵּמָה), and in other places of any overpowering emotion: see Fritzsche ad loc. Winer, p. 117. It is God Who sends this spirit of stupor, but He does not send it arbitrarily nor at random: it is always a judgment. ἕως τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας: in Deut. xxix. 4 ἕως τῆς ἡ. ταύτης. The change emphasises the fact that what Israel had been from the beginning it was when Paul wrote, θήραν, καὶ εἰς σκάνδαλον καὶ εἰς ἀνταπόδομα αὐτοῖς· 10. σκοτισθήτωσαν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν, καὶ τὸν νῶτον αὐτῶν διὰ παντὸς [e] σύγκαμψον [e]. 11. Λέγω οὖν, Μὴ ἔπταισαν ἵνα πέσωσι; μὴ γένοιτο· ἀλλὰ τῷ αὐτῶν [f] παραπτώματι ἡ σωτηρία τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, εἰς τὸ [g] παραζηλῶσαι αὐτούς. 12. εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος κόσμου, καὶ τὸ ἥττημα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος ἐθνῶν, πόσῳ μᾶλλον τὸ πλήe Ps. lxviii. 22 f. (LXX).

f Ch. iv. 25.
g Ch. x. 19.

and that God had acted toward it from the beginning on the same principle on which He was acting then. Cf. Acts vii. 51 f. καὶ Δαυεὶδ λέγει: another proof of ἐπωρώθησαν, though strictly speaking a wish or an imprecation cannot prove anything, unless it be assumed that it has been fulfilled, and so can be taken as the description of a fact. Paul takes it for granted that the doom invoked in these words has come upon the Jews. γενηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα αὐτῶν κ.τ.λ. Their table in the psalm is that in which they delight, and it is this which is to prove their ruin. παγίς, θήρα, and σκάνδαλον are all variations of the same idea, that of snare or trap—i.e., sudden destruction. What the Jews delighted in was the law, and the law misunderstood proved their ruin. In seeking a righteousness of their own based upon it they missed and forfeited the righteousness of God which is given to faith in Christ. καὶ εἰς ἀνταπόδομα αὐτοῖς: this does not exactly reproduce either the Heb. or the LXX, but it involves the idea that the fate of the Jews is the recompense of their sin—not a result to be simply referred to a decree of God. Their perverse attitude to the law is avenged in their incapacity to understand and receive the Gospel. τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν: for this Gen. both in ver. 8 and ver. 10, see Buttmann, Gram. of N.T. Greek, p. 267 (E. tr.). τὸν νῶτον αὐτῶν διὰ παντὸς σύγκαμψον: keep them continually in spiritual bondage, stooping under a load too heavy to be borne: cf. Acts xv. 10.

This is the condition in which by God's act, requiting their own sins, and especially their self-righteous adherence to the law as a way of salvation, the Jews find themselves. It is a condition so grievous, and so remote from what one anticipates for a people chosen by God, that it confronts Paul again with the difficulty of ver. 1, and obliges him to state it once more—this time in a way which mitigates its severity, and hints that the fall of Israel is not the last thing concerning them to be taken into account. What if God's purpose includes and uses their fall? What if it is not final? It is with new ideas of this sort, introduced to take the edge from the stern utterances of vers. 8-10, that Paul deals in vers. 11-24.

Ver. 11. λέγω οὖν: I say then, taking up the problem again. μὴ ἔπταισαν ἵνα πέσωσιν; surely they did not stumble so as to fall? The subject is the mass of the Jewish nation, all but the elect remnant. The contrast here between stumbling and falling shows that the latter is meant of an irremediable fall, from which there is no rising. This is one of the cases in which ἵνα is loosely used; it cannot possibly be translated "in order that". For similar examples cf. 1 Thess. v. 4, 1 Cor. vii. 29, Gal. v. 17. ἀλλὰ: on the contrary, by their (moral) fall salvation has come to the Gentiles to provoke them (the unbelieving Israelites) to jealousy. The fact stated here is illustrated at every point in Paul's own ministry; he turned to the Gentiles because the Jews would not hear him. See Acts xiii. 46 ff., xviii. 6, xxviii. 25-28. The end in view in it (cf. x. 19) is his proof that the stumbling of the Jews is not to be interpreted in the sense of a final fall. A recovery is in prospect.

Ver. 12. Both ἥττημα and πλήρωμα are difficult words, but it is not necessary to suppose that they answer mathematically to one another, though Wetstein explains them by − and +. ἥττημα may mean (as in Is. xxxi. 8) defeat, or (as in 1 Cor. vi. 7) loss; it can hardly mean diminutio eorum, or paucitas Judæorum credentium; τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῶν must mean the making up of them to their full numbers. There is an exhaustive study of the word πλήρωμα by Prof. J. Armitage Robinson in The Expositor, April, 1898. His paraphrase of this verse is very good. "If the Gentiles have been enriched in a sense through the very miscarriage and disaster of Israel, what wealth is in store for them in the great Return, when all Israel shall be saved—'when God hath made the pile complete!'" The enrichment referred to is in both cases that which comes through participating in the blessings of the Gospel.

ρωμα αὐτῶν; 13. Ὑμῖν γὰρ[1] λέγω τοῖς ἔθνεσιν· ἐφ' ὅσον μέν εἰμι ἐγὼ ἐθνῶν ἀπόστολος, τὴν διακονίαν μου δοξάζω, 14. εἴ πως παραζηλώσω μου τὴν σάρκα, καὶ σώσω τινὰς ἐξ αὐτῶν. 15. εἰ γὰρ ἡ [h]ἀποβολὴ αὐτῶν καταλλαγὴ κόσμου, τίς ἡ πρόσληψις, εἰ μὴ ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν; 16. εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχὴ ἁγία, καὶ τὸ φύραμα· καὶ εἰ ἡ [i]ῥίζα

h Acts xxvii. 22.
i Ch. xiv. 3.

[1] υμιν γαρ DFL; υμιν ουν C; υμιν δε ℵABP 47, all edd. εφ οσον μεν L, vulg., D[3] lat. For μεν ℵABCP have μεν ουν, and so all edd.

Ver. 13 f. ὑμῖν δὲ λέγω τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. Paul does not here address a new class of readers. He has been speaking all along to a Gentile church, and speaking to it in that character (see above, pp. 561 ff.); and he feels it necessary to show the relevance, in such circumstances, of bestowing so much attention on the condition and prospects of the Jews. His mission to the Gentiles has an indirect bearing on his own countrymen; the more successful he can make it, the greater is the prospect that some of the Jews also may be provoked to jealousy and saved. Every Jew, again, who is saved, goes to make up the πλήρωμα of ver. 12, and so to bring on a time of unimaginable blessing for the Gentile world. ἐφ' ὅσον Mt. xxv. 40. μὲν οὖν is printed in all the critical editions, but Sanday and Headlam would read μενοῦν as one word, and discount the restrictive force of the μέν, which suggests that apostleship to Gentiles was but one part of Paul's mission. ἐγὼ: the pronoun expresses not merely a noble consciousness of vocation, but Paul's feeling that in his particular case at all events a mission to the Gentiles could not but include this ulterior reference to the Jews. His devotion, accordingly, to his Gentile ministry, never let them fall out of view. "As far then as apostleship to Gentiles is represented by me (as no doubt it is) I glorify my ministry (by faithful discharge of it), if by any means I may save some of the Jews." For the interpretation of δοξάζω see 2 Thess. iii. 1, John xvii. 4. For εἴ πως see Buttmann, p. 255 f. τινὰς ἐξ αὐτῶν: disenchanting experience taught him to speak thus. Cf. 1 Cor. ix. 22.

Ver. 15 f. From the personal explanation of ver. 13 f., which interrupts the argument, Paul reverts to the ideas of ver. 12. To save any Jew was a great object, even with an apostle of the Gentiles: εἰ γὰρ ἡ ἀποβολὴ αὐτῶν κ.τ.λ. Their ἀποβολὴ is their rejection by God on the ground of unbelief. καταλλαγὴ κόσμου: a world's reconciliation. In 2 Cor. v. 19 the world's reconciliation is the act of God in Christ; but it was an act which for the mass of mankind only took effect when Jewish unbelief diverted the Gospel to the Gentiles. ἡ πρόσλημψις: the assumption of the Jews into God's favour. ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν. Modern expositors almost all find in these words a reference to the resurrection; the restoration of the Jews at once brings on the end; the dead are raised, and the Messiah's kingdom is set up, glorious and incorruptible. It is quite true that in Jewish apocalyptic literature the resurrection introduces the new era, and that Paul shared in the apocalyptic ideas current in his time; but it does not follow that he was thinking of the resurrection here. ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν would certainly be a singular way to describe it, and it is not enough to say with Weiss that Paul used this expression instead of ἀνάστασις in order to carry the mind beyond the fact of resurrection to the state which it introduced. It seems better to leave it undefined (cf. ἄπειρα ἀγαθά Theophyl.), and to regard it as an ordinary English reader regards "life from the dead," as a description of unimaginable blessing. This is more impressive than to bind the original and daring speculation of a passage like this by reference to apocalyptic ideas, with which Paul was no doubt familiar, but which are not suggested here, and could least of all control his thoughts when they were working on a line so entirely his own. "Words fail him, and he employs the strongest he can find, thinking rather of their general force than of their precise signification" (Jowett). εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχὴ ἁγία, καὶ τὸ φύραμα. This explains Paul's assurance that Israel has a future. For ἀπ. and φύρ. see Num. xv. 19-21. By the offering of the first fruits the whole mass, and the whole produce of the land, were consecrated. Both this figure, and that of the root and the branches, signify the same thing. As the application in ver. 28 proves, what is presented in both is the relation of the ἁγία, καὶ οἱ κλάδοι. 17. εἰ δέ τινες τῶν κλάδων ἐξεκλάσθησαν, σὺ δὲ [k] ἀγριέλαιος ὢν [l] ἐνεκεντρίσθης ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ συγκοινωνὸς τῆς ῥίζης καὶ τῆς πιότητος [1] τῆς ἐλαίας ἐγένου, 18. μὴ [m] κατακαυχῶ τῶν κλάδων· εἰ δὲ κατακαυχᾶσαι, οὐ σὺ τὴν ῥίζαν βαστάζεις, ἀλλ' ἡ ῥίζα σέ. 19. Ἐρεῖς οὖν, Ἐξεκλάσθησαν οἱ [2] κλάδοι, ἵνα ἐγὼ ἐγκεντρισθῶ. 20. καλῶς· τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ ἐξεκλάσθησαν,[3] σὺ δὲ τῇ πίστει ἕστηκας. μὴ k Ver. 24 only in N.T. 1 Sep. xvi. 11.

l Jas. ii. 13, iii. 14.

[1] και της πιοτητος ℵ³ALD²˒³P; om. και ℵ¹BCD¹F. It is om. by W. and H., Weiss, Alf. and Tischdf.

[2] Om. οι before κλαδοι with ℵABCD³FLP.

[3] εξεκλασθησαν ℵACD³LP; εκλασθησαν BD¹F. Lachm. and Treg. prefer the latter, but all other edd. the former. Weiss (Textkritik, S. 34) gives many similar examples in which the preposition in compounds is dropped by oversight. For υψηλοφρονει ℵAB read υψηλα φρονει; and so most edd.

patriarchs to the people as a whole. As chosen by God, the fathers were ἅγιοι, i.e., God's people, and this standing (in spite of the arguments in chap. ix., and in spite of the hard facts of the situation when Paul wrote) belongs inalienably to their children. They are God's, and it will yet become apparent that they are.

Vers. 17-24. In these verses, which in a sense are a long parenthesis, Paul anticipates an objection which Gentile readers might take to his use of the last figure, the root and the branches; and he draws from it two special lessons—one, of humility, for the objectors; the other, of hope, for Israel.

Ver. 17. A Gentile Christian might feel that the very fact that Jews were rejected and Gentiles accepted qualified the assurance with which Paul had just spoken of the future of Israel. It is the disposition to think so, and to presume on one's own favoured position, which the Apostle rebukes in μὴ κατακαυχῶ τῶν κλάδων. εἰ δέ τινες τῶν κ. ἐξεκλάσθησαν: τινες puts the case mildly: cf. iii. 3. ἐξεκλάσθησαν, sc., as fruitless. σὺ δὲ ἀγριέλαιος ὤν: σὺ is the presumptuous individual before the Apostle's mind, not the Gentile Church collectively. The ἀγριέλαιος is the olive in its natural uncultivated state. ἐνεκεντρίσθης ἐν αὐτοῖς, sc., among the native branches of the cultivated olive. The process here supposed is one that in horticulture is never performed. The cultivated branch is always engrafted upon the wild stock, and not vice versâ. This Paul knew quite well (see παρὰ φύσιν, ver. 24), and the force of his reproof to the presuming Gentile turns on the fact that the process was an unnatural one. [Ordine commutato res magis causis quam causas rebus aptavit (Origen).] It gave the Gentile no room to boast over the rejected Jews. συνκοινωνὸς τῆς ῥίζης τῆς πιότ. τῆς ἐλαίας: there is an argument in συν. At the best, the Gentile only shares with Jews in the virtues of a root which is not Gentile, but Jewish: he has his part in the consecration of the patriarchs, the one historical root of the people of God, and in the blessings God attached to it. For πιότης cf. Jud. ix. 7. The accumulation of genitives is apparently an imitation of such Hebrew constructions as Isa. xxviii. 1, 16: the meaning is, a partaker in the root of the fat olive tree.

Ver. 18. μὴ κατακαυχῶ τῶν κλάδων: for the genitive see Buttm., 185. Between "if thou boastest," and "thou bearest not the root," there is no formal connection: for such breviloquence, which requires us to supply "consider" or "remember," see Winer, p. 773. The sense is, You owe all you are proud of to an (artificially formed) relation to the race you would despise.

Ver. 19. ἐρεῖς οὖν: the presumptuous Gentile persists. "It is not to the root I compare myself, but branches were broken off that I might be engrafted: that surely involves some superiority in me."

Ver. 20. καλῶς: "a form of partial and often ironical assent" (Gifford). Paul does not think it worth while to dispute the assertion of ver. 19, though as it stands it is by no means indisputable; he prefers to point out what it overlooks—the moral conditions of being broken off and of standing secure—and to urge them on the conscience. τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ: an account of unbelief, cf. Gal. vi. 12, Winer, p. 270. τῇ πίστει ὑψηλοφρόνει, ἀλλὰ φοβοῦ· 21. εἰ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τῶν κατὰ φύσιν κλάδων οὐκ ἐφείσατο· μή πως [1] οὐδὲ σοῦ φείσηται. 22. Ἴδε οὖν χρηστότητα καὶ [n] ἀποτομίαν Θεοῦ· ἐπὶ μὲν τοὺς πεσόντας ἀποτομίαν· ἐπὶ δὲ σὲ χρηστότητα,[2] ἐὰν ἐπιμείνῃς τῇ χρηστότητι· ἐπεὶ καὶ σὺ ἐκκοπήσῃ· 23. καὶ ἐκεῖνοι δὲ, ἐὰν μὴ ἐπιμείνωσι [3] τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, ἐγκεντρισθήσονται· δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς πάλιν ἐγκεντρίσαι αὐτούς. 24. εἰ γὰρ σὺ ἐκ τῆς κατὰ φύσιν ἐξεκόπης ἀγριελαίου, καὶ παρὰ [o] φύσιν ἐνεκεντρίσθης εἰς [p] καλλιέλαιον, πόσῳ μᾶλλον οὗτοι οἱ κατὰ φύσιν ἐγκενn Here only in N.T.

o Ch. i. 26.

p Here only.

[1] Om. μηπως ℵABCP 47. For φεισηται ℵBCDFL read φεισεται. All crit. edd. read φεισεται, but while most edd. omit μηπως it is retained by Weiss (with DEFGL, most majusc. and fathers) and bracketed by Alford. Weiss finds it impossible to regard it as an insertion, since it makes an easy text irregular and difficult; but its omission, he thinks, need not have been intentional; it may be a mere overlook of the transcriber's.

[2] χρηστοτητα the second time D³FL; but χρηστοτης θεου ABCD¹, and so all edd. For επιμεινης ℵBD¹ read επιμενης, and so most edd. but not Alf.

[3] For επιμεινωσιν ℵ¹BD¹ read επιμενωσιν; see also last verse.

ἕστηκας: the security of the Gentiles depended on faith, and it is the most elementary principle of a religion of faith (iii. 27) that it excludes boasting. μὴ ὑψηλὰ φρόνει: cf. xii. 16. 1 Tim. vi. 17 has μὴ ὑψηλοφρονεῖν. Neither is classical. φοβοῦ: consistent with πίστις. Timor opponitur non fiduciæ sed supercilio et securitati (Bengel).

Ver. 21. As far as comparisons can be made at all in such things, the Jews had been more securely invested in the kingdom than the Gentiles. They were, in the language of the figure, not artificially grafted, but native branches, on the tree of God's people; yet even that did not prevent Him from cutting off those who did not believe. And if He did not spare them, He will not spare Gentiles either, if in pride they fall from faith. On εἰ . . . οὐκ ἐφείσατο see Winer, 599 f. The true reading of the last word is φείσεται (not φείσηται), but Weiss would retain μήπως (see crit. note) even with this future, and supply the missing link of thought from φοβοῦ: one may fear that he will not, etc. The ironical reserve of this (though the future makes the thing to be feared as certain as possible) is quite Pauline, and the μήπως (DFGL) may be genuine.

Ver. 22. Behold then God's goodness and severity, sc., in the case of the Gentiles and Jews as now before us. ἀποτομία: here only in N.T. The moral idea is that of peremptoriness, inexorableness; in Greek writers it is contrasted with ἡμερότης, τὸ ἐπιεικές, πρᾳότης. Cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 10. ἐὰν ἐπιμένῃς τῇ χρηστότητι: if you remain on in the goodness, i.e., continue to be indebted to it, and to it alone, for your religious position. This excludes presumption, and in general all such temper as is betrayed in taking an attitude of superiority to the Jews. The Jews lost their standing because they had come to believe that it was indefectible, and independent of moral conditions; and if the Gentiles commit the same mistake they will incur the same doom. It is not to Israel only God may say, The kingdom is taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. ἐπεί, otherwise: see ver. 6.

Ver. 23. κἀκεῖνοι δέ: and they too, they on the other hand, viz., the unbelieving Jews. ἐὰν μὴ κ.τ.λ., unless they remain on in their unbelief. It is assumed that they need not do this. The hardening spoken of in vers. 7-10, though it is a judgment upon sin, and may seem from the nature of the case to be irremediable, is not to be so absolutely taken. Even in the most hardened rejector of the Gospel we are not to limit either the resources of God's power, or the possibilities of change in a self-conscious, self-determining creature. All things are possible to him that believeth, and we are not to say that in this man or that, Jew or Gentile, unbelief is final, and belief an impossibility. If the Jews give up their unbelief ἐγκεντρισθήσονται they will be incorporated again in the true people of God. δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν τρισθήσονται τῇ ἰδίᾳ ἐλαίᾳ; 25. Οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοί, τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο (ἵνα μὴ ἦτε παρ' ἑαυτοῖς[1] φρόνιμοι), ὅτι πώρωσις ἀπὸ [q] μέρους τῷ Ἰσραὴλ γέγονεν, ἄχρις οὗ τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν q Ch. xv. 15, 24; 2 Cor. i. 14; ii. 5.

[1] παρ' εαυτοις ℵCDL; εν εαυτοις AB. Weiss, W. and H., Treg. and Alf. put εν in text, apparently on the ground that παρ' has been conformed to xii. 16; but W. and H. give παρ' a place in marg.

ὁ θεός κ.τ.λ. The phrase implies not only the possibility but the difficulty of the operation. Cf. xiv. 4. With man it is impossible, but not with God. Nothing less than the thought of God could keep Paul from despairing of the future of Israel.

Ver. 24. God's power to engraft the Jews again into the stock of His people proved a fortiori by comparison with what He has done for the Gentiles. To restore His own is more natural, conceivable, and one may even say easy, than to call those who are not His own. The Gentile Christian (1) was cut ἐκ τῆς κατὰ φύσιν ἀγριελαίου, from what is in its own nature an uncultivated olive, with no suitableness for the uses which the olive is intended to subserve, and (2) παρὰ φύσιν in violation of nature was engrafted into a good olive; in comparison with this doubly unnatural process one may well argue πόσῳ μᾶλλον κ.τ.λ. how much more shall these, the Jews who κατὰ φύσιν (in their own nature) belong to the good tree, have their connection with it re-established? Weiss takes ἐγκεντρισθήσονται as a logical future, and it may be so; but Paul believes in his logic, and has probably in view in the word that actual restoration of the Jews of which he now proceeds to speak.

Vv. 25-32. In this concluding section Paul abandons the ground of argument for that of revelation. He has discussed the problems arising out of the rejection of Israel and the calling of the Gentiles, when taken in connection with the promises of God to His people; and he has tried to make it clear that in all His dealings with His people, God has acted righteously, that for all that has befallen them the Jews have full responsibility, and that a Divine purpose, with blessing in it to both Jew and Gentile, has indirectly been getting itself carried into effect through this perplexing history. The rejection of the Jews has led to the calling of the Gentiles, and the calling of the Gentiles, by provoking the Jews to jealousy, is eventually to lead to their conversion too. All this, it may be said, is matter of argument; it is more or less convincing as the argument appeals with less or greater force to our minds. It is Paul's construction and interpretation of the facts before him, and his anticipation of the result in which they are likely to issue; but it has no greater authority than the reasoning by which he supports it, or the motives which suggest one line of reasoning upon the facts rather than another. We can understand how patriotism, and religious faith in God's promise, and insight into the psychological influences which determine human conduct, all contribute some weight to his argument; but he is not content to rest upon argument alone the central truth he has been expounding—that the hardening of Israel is temporary as well as partial, and that when "the fulness of the Gentiles" has come in the hardening will cease, and all Israel be saved. He expressly puts this truth forward as a revelation (μυστήριον, ver. 25). What this means psychologically we cannot tell, but it is clear that for Paul it was an essential part of the true religion, so far as he could make out the manner of its working in the world. He might try to lead the mind up to it along various lines of argument, or to confirm it by considerations of various kinds; but for him it had a Divine authority, antecedent to argument and independent of it. He sought arguments to make it credible and intelligible, not for his own sake, but for the sake of others. How much a revelation of this kind will weigh with the modern reader depends on the extent to which on general grounds he can recognise in Paul an inspired interpreter of Christianity. History, it must be admitted, throws no light on his words. The Gentiles are not fully gathered in; the time to say whether Israel as a whole is to have any distinct or decisive place in the final fulfilment of God's gracious purpose is therefore not yet. One feels as if the nationalism of the passage fell short of Paul's great word, There is neither Greek nor Jew; but there the Jews are, a problem to unbelief as well as to faith; think what we will of it, it is ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθῃ· 26. καὶ οὕτω πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ σωθήσεται, καθὼς γέγραπται, "Ἥξει ἐκ Σιὼν ὁ ῥυόμενος, καὶ[1] ἀποστρέψει ἀσεβείας ἀπὸ of them salvation comes; and it is at least as credible as the reverse (without considering Paul's arguments at all) that Providence is not preserving them for nothing, and that in some such way as is here indicated there is a close connection between their salvation and the salvation of the world.

[1] και before αποστρεψει om. ℵABCD¹F.

Ver. 25. οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν: cf. i. 13, 1 Cor. x. 1, xii. 1, 2 Cor. i. 8, but especially 1 Thess. iv. 13, where as here it is used to introduce a revelation. An often-repeated phrase tends to be formal, but the thing of which Paul would not have his readers ignorant is usually important. As the phrase is invariably followed by ἀδελφοί, the latter also tends to be formal: it is at least a mistake to see anything of peculiar intimacy or affection in it in such connections. As ver. 28 and ver. 30 prove, in which they are contrasted with the Jews, the ἀδελφοί are Gentiles, and they are practically identical with the Roman Church. τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο: the word μυστήριον only occurs once in the Synoptical Gospels (Mark iv. 11 and parallels) and not at all in John; but Paul uses it often (twenty-one times, including two in 1 Tim.). It always refers to something which though once hidden, or in its nature a secret, is now revealed. In some passages it is applied to the Christian revelation as a whole (e.g., in Rom. xvi. 25, 1 Cor. ii. 1, Eph. i. 9, Col. ii. 2: in the last it is identified simpliciter with Christ). In others it is applied to the Christian revelation as a whole, but with some special aspect of it in view: thus in Eph. iii. 3 the special aspect of "revelation" or "mystery"—for it is all one—in the Gospel is the destined inclusion of the Gentiles among the people of God, while in Col. i. 26 f. it is the indwelling Christ, as the pledge of immortality. In others, again, any particular element in the great revelation is called a "mystery". Thus in 1 Cor. xv. 51 the truth communicated about those who live to see the second advent is described by this name, and it might have been used in the similar passage in 1 Thess. iv. 15, where Paul says instead that he speaks ἐν λόγῳ κυρίου. This is merely to claim for his words the authority of revelation in another way. The passage before us comes under this last head. It is a piece of revelation — something which has been communicated to Paul ἐν ἀποκαλύψει for the good of the Church —that hardening in part has come upon Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles has come in. The new ideas in this revelation are the limits in extent (ἀπὸ μέρους) and in time (ἄχρι οὗ). ἵνα μὴ ἦτε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς φρόνιμοι: it would tend to self-conceit if the Gentiles in ignorance of this Divine appointment concluded off-hand that the Jews could never be converted as a whole, and that they themselves therefore were in a place of permanent and exclusive privilege. For ἐν ἑαυτοῖς (AB) παρ' ἑαυτοῖς is found in ℵCDL, etc. Both occur in LXX but the former is much more likely to have been changed. τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν = the full number, totality, of the Gentiles. It does not mean a number pre-determined beforehand, which has to be made up, whether to answer to the blanks in Israel or to the demands of a Divine decree, but the Gentiles in their full strength. When the Gentiles in their full strength have come in, the power which is to provoke Israel to jealousy will be fully felt, with the result described in ver. 26.

Ver. 26. καὶ οὕτως = and thus; not merely temporal, but = under the influence of the jealousy so excited—under the impression produced on the Jews by the sight of the Gentiles in their fulness peopling the kingdom—all Israel shall be saved. This is an independent sentence. For πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ see 1 Kings xii. 1, 2 Chron. xii. 1. It means Israel as a whole. Paul is thinking of the historical people, as the contrast with Gentiles shows, but he is not thinking of them one by one. Israel a Christian nation, Israel as a nation a part of the Messianic kingdom, is the content of his thought. To make πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ refer to a "spiritual" Israel, or to the elect, is to miss the mark: it foretells a "conversion of the Jews so universal that the separation into an 'elect remnant' and 'the rest who were hardened' shall disappear" (Gifford). καθὼς γέγραπται Isa. lix. 20 f., but the last words ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι κ.τ.λ. from Isa. xxvii. 9. The prophet says ἕνεκεν

Ἰακώβ· 27. καὶ αὕτη αὐτοῖς ἡ παρ' ἐμοῦ διαθήκη, ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν". 28. Κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ʳ ἐχθροὶ δι' ὑμᾶς· κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἐκλογήν, ἀγαπητοὶ διὰ τοὺς ˢ πατέρας. 29. ἀμεταμέλητα γὰρ τὰ χαρίσματα καὶ ἡ κλῆσις τοῦ Θεοῦ. 30. ῞Ωσπερ γὰρ καὶ [1] ὑμεῖς ποτε ἠπειθήσατε τῷ Θεῷ, νῦν δὲ ἠλεήθητε τῇ τούτων

r Ch. v. 10.
s Ch. ix. 5.

[1] και before υμεις om. ℵ$^{corr.}$ABCD[1]F. For νυν, which is found in ACDEFGL, νυνι is read in B. W. and H. put νυν in text, νυνι in marg. Weiss puts νυνι in text, thinking that the double νυν in ver. 31 may have induced the dropping of the ι. For other cases, see Textkritik, S. 62.

Σίων: Paul's ἐκ Σιὼν is probably a lapse of memory, due to the impression of passages like Ps. xiv. 7, liii. 7, Isa. ii. 3, though Philippi thinks it intentional—the object being to emphasise the title of the Jews, as against the Gentiles, to a share in the kingdom. It is then as if he said: Salvation is of the Jews, and surely therefore for them. It is impossible to say that ἥξει refers to the first or to the second advent: the distinction is not present to Paul's mind as he writes; all he is concerned with is the fact that in prophetic scripture language is used which implies that Israel as a people is to inherit the Messianic salvation. ὁ ῥυόμενος, Hebrew גֹּאֵל is the Messiah. ἀποστρέψει ἀσεβείας. Cf. Bar. iii. 7, 1 Macc. iv. 58.

Ver. 27. καὶ αὕτη κ.τ.λ. This is My covenant with them = this is the constitution which I give them to live under. Weiss interprets this by what follows, making the αὕτη prospective, but this is somewhat forced. The διαθήκη is not equivalent to the removal of sins, though it is based upon it: it covers the whole condition introduced by that removal. Cf. Jer. xxxi. 31 ff. The deliverance referred to in vers. 26 and 27, though promised to Israel as a whole, is a religious and ethical one. It has no political significance, and nothing to do with any assumed restoration of the Jews to Canaan. This is obvious even apart from the argument of Weiss that the deliverance in question is to be immediately followed by the resurrection; an argument which depends on a doubtful interpretation of ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν ver. 15.

Ver. 28. κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον. In both clauses κατὰ defines the rule by which God's relation to Israel is determined. When He looks at the Gospel, which they have rejected, they are ἐχθροί, objects of His hostility, and that δι' ὑμᾶς, for the sake of the Gentiles, to whom the Gospel in this way comes; when He looks at the ἐκλογή, the choice which He made of Israel to be His people, they are ἀγαπητοί, objects of His love, and that διὰ τοὺς πατέρας, on account of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, with whom He made an everlasting covenant (cf. Gen. xvii. 19, Luke i. 54 f.). The passive meaning of ἐχθροὶ is fixed by the contrast with ἀγαπητοί, as well as by the logic of the passage: cf. v. 10.

Ver. 29. Proof that the Israelites, in virtue of their relation to the fathers, are objects of God's love. ἀμεταμέλητα cf. 2 Cor. vii. 10: it may mean either what is not or what cannot be repented of: here the latter. God's gifts of grace, and His calling, are things upon which there is no going back. The χαρίσματα are not the moral and intellectual qualifications with which Israel was endowed for its mission in the world (Godet), but the privileges of grace enumerated in chap. ix. 4 f. Neither is the κλῆσις of God a "calling" in the modern sense of a vocation or career assigned to any one by Him; it is His authoritative invitation to a part in the Messianic kingdom. From Israel these things can never be withdrawn.

Vv. 30-32. There is the less need, too, that they should be withdrawn, because God makes the very misuse of them contribute to the working out of His universal purpose of redemption. The past unbelief of the Gentiles and the mercy they presently enjoy, the present unbelief of the Jews and the mercy they are destined to enjoy in the future—these things not only correspond to each other, but they are interwoven with each other; they are parts of a system which God controls, and in which every element conditions and is conditioned by all the rest: there is a Divine necessity pervading and controlling all the freedom of men—a Divine purpose mastering all the random activity of human wills; a purpose which is read ἀπειθείᾳ· 31. οὕτω καὶ οὗτοι νῦν ἠπείθησαν, τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ[1] ἐλεηθῶσι· 32. συνέκλεισε γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς πάντας εἰς ἀπείθειαν, ἵνα τοὺς πάντας ἐλεήσῃ. 33. Ὦ βάθος πλούτου καὶ σοφίας καὶ γνώσεως Θεοῦ! ὡς ἀνεξερεύνητα τὰ κρίματα αὐτοῦ, καὶ out by the Apostle in verse 32: God shut them all up into disobedience that He might have mercy upon them all. Ver. 30. ποτὲ: once, in the past, chap. i. 18-32. τῇ τούτων ἀπειθείᾳ = owing to their disobedience. Cf. vers. 11, 15. Ver. 31. τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει is to be construed with ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ νῦν ἐλεηθῶσιν. For the order cf. Gal. ii. 10, 2 Cor. xii. 7. It seems pedantic to make the construction strictly parallel to τῇ τούτων ἀπειθίᾳ, and to translate: "that owing to the mercy shown to you—i.e., owing to the jealousy to which the Jews would be stirred at seeing the Gentiles the objects of Divine mercy—they also may obtain mercy"; the simpler construction is to take the dative as explanatory of the verb, and to translate: "that they may be made the objects of the very same mercy which has been shown to you". This is really the point which the Apostle wishes to be at; though the idea brought out in the former rendering is essential in the passage, it is not essential, nor obvious, in these particular words. The second νῦν (wanting in ADFGL) is probably genuine (ℵB), but cannot be forced to mean more than "now in their turn". The imminence of the result is not in view. Ver. 32. συνέκλεισεν γὰρ ὁ θεὸς τοὺς πάντας εἰς ἀπειθιαν: this is the nearest approach made in the N.T. to putting the sin of man into a direct and positive relation to the act and purpose of God. But it would be a mistake to draw inferences from the concrete historical problem before the Apostle—viz., God's dealings with Jew and Gentile, and the mutual relations and influence of Jew and Gentile in the evolution of God's purpose—and to apply them to the general abstract question of the relation of the human will to the Divine. Paul is not thinking of this question at all, and his authority could not be claimed for such inferences. Salvation, he sees, as he looks at the world before him, is to come to Jew and Gentile alike by the way of free grace; and it answers to this, that in the providence of God, Jew and Gentile alike have been made to feel the need of grace by being shut up under disobedience. It is within Paul's thought to say that the sin of Jews and Gentiles, to whom he preached the Gospel, did not lie outside the control, or outside the redeeming purpose, of God; but it does not seem to me to be within his thought to say that God ordains sin in general for the sake of, or with a view to, redemption. This is a fancy question which an apostle would hardly discuss. God subordinates sin to His purpose, but it is not a subordinate element in His purpose. The same order of considerations ought to guide us in the interpretation of τοὺς πάντας. "Them all" certainly refers in the first instance to Jews and Gentiles. It is not the same as τοὺς ἀμφοτέρους, "both parties"; but it differs from it in its present connection only by giving emphasis to the fact that both parties consist of numbers, to all of whom the truth here stated applies. To find here a doctrine of universal salvation—a dogmatic assertion that every man will at last receive mercy—is simply to desert the ground on which the Apostle is standing. It is to leave off thinking about the concrete problem before his mind, and to start thinking about something quite different. It is gratuitous to contrast, as, e.g., is done by Lipsius, this passage with others in which Paul speaks of ἀπολλύμενοι as well as σωζόμενοι, and to say that they represent irreconcilable view-points—the Apostle speaking in the present instance from the standpoint of Divine teleology; in the other, from that of actual experience. The truth is, as Weiss puts it, there is not a word here to show how far, when the history of man has reached its term, Paul conceived God's saving purpose to be realised. συνέκλεισεν answering to הִסְגִּיר is frequent in LXX: the συν does not refer to the fact that Jews and Gentiles are shut up together, but indicates that those who are shut up are shut up on all sides, so that they cannot escape: cf. con-cludo and examples in Gal. iii. 22, Ps. xxx. 9 LXX. ἐλεήσῃ:

[1] After αυτοι ℵBD[1] ins. νυν; and so Tischdf. and W. and H., not Weiss, who regards it as a mere mechanical repetition. Some cursives have ὕστερον.

t Eph. iii. 8. [t] ἀνεξιχνίαστοι αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ. 34. "τίς γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν Κυρίου; ἢ τίς σύμβουλος αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο;" 35. ἢ "τίς προέδωκεν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀνταποδοθήσεται αὐτῷ;" 36. ὅτι ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα· αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. ἀμήν.

"to have mercy upon" means "to make partakers of that 'common salvation' (Jude 3) which is emphatically a dispensation of mercy" (Gifford).

Ver. 33. ὢ βάθος πλούτου κ.τ.λ. In ver. 32 the content of the chapter is no doubt condensed, but it is more natural to regard the doxology as prompted by the view of God's Providence which pervades the whole discussion than by the one sentence in which it is summed up. βάθος: a universal figure for what is immeasurable or incalculable: cf. 1 Cor. ii. 10, Apoc. ii. 24, Eph. iii. 18. The genitives πλούτου, σοφίας and γνώσεως are most simply construed as co-ordinate. For πλοῦτος used thus absolutely see Eph. iii. 8, Phil. iv. 19. Perhaps the key to the meaning here is to be found in x. 12: what Paul adores is the unsearchable wealth of love that enables God to meet and far more than meet the appalling necessities of the world; love less deep would soon be bankrupt at the task. In σοφία and γνῶσις the intellectual resources are brought into view with which God has ordered, disposed and controlled all the forces of the world and of man's history so as to make them subservient to His love. The world, with its conflict of races, religions, passions and even vices, may seem to be a realm of chaos; but when we see it in the light of God as Paul did, we see the signs of wisdom and knowledge, of a conscious purpose transcending human thought, and calling forth adoring praise. For the distinction of σοφία and γνῶσις, which especially in relation to God is to be felt rather than defined, see Trench, N.T. Synonyms, § lxxv. τὰ κρίματα αὐτοῦ: except 1 Cor. vi. 7 which is different, this is the only example of κρίματα (plural) in the N.T. It is probably used not in the narrower sense (which would be illustrated by reference, e.g., to the "hardening" of Israel), but in the wider sense of the Hebrew מִשְׁפָּטִים, to which it often answers in the LXX. In Ps. xxxvi. 6 we have τὰ κρίματά σου ἄβυσσος πολλή: where Cheyne's note is, "Thy judgments—in their various effects of destruction and salvation". This is Paul's thought; hence τὰ κρίματα αὐτοῦ and αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ are practically the same. As Moses says (Deut. xxxii. 4), All His ways are judgment.

Ver. 34. Proof from Scripture of the unsearchableness of God's ways: He has had no confidant. Isa. xl. 13, 1 Cor. ii. 16. It is mere pedantry to refer half the verse to σοφία and the other half to γνῶσις.

Ver. 35. ἢ τίς προέδωκεν αὐτῷ, καὶ ἀνταποδοθήσεται αὐτῷ; see Job xli. 11 (A.V.). The translation of Job xli. 3, Hebrew, is perhaps Paul's own, as the LXX is entirely different and wrong. The point of the quotation has been variously explained. If it continues the proof of ver. 33, the underlying assumption is that God's ways would be finite and comprehensible if they were determined by what men had done, so as merely to requite that. It seems better, however, to read the words in the largest sense, and then they express the fundamental truth of religion as Paul understood it—viz., that the initiative in religion belongs to God; or as he puts it elsewhere, that we have nothing we did not receive, and that boasting is excluded. The relation of man to God in these conditions is one which naturally expresses itself in doxology.

Ver. 36. ὅτι ἐξ αὐτοῦ κ.τ.λ. Strictly speaking, the ὅτι confirms the last truth —man's absolute dependence on God— by making it part of a wider generalisation. ἐξ αὐτοῦ: from Him, as their source; δι' αὐτοῦ: through Him, as the power by whose continuous energy the world is sustained and ruled; εἰς αὐτὸν: unto Him, as their goal, for whose glory they exist. A reference of any kind to the Trinity is out of the question. It is a question, however, whether τὰ πάντα means "all things" in the sense of the universe (cf. 1 Cor. viii. 6, Col. i. 16, Heb. ii. 10) or whether it is not limited by the article to all the things which have just been in contemplation, the whole marvellous action of God's riches and wisdom and knowledge, as interpreted by the Apostle in regard to the work of redemption (for an example of τὰ πάντα in this sense see 2 Cor. v. 18). I incline to the last view. The universe of grace, with all that goes on in it for the common salvation of Jew and Gentile, is of God and through God and to a Ch. xv. 30; 2 Cor. x. 1.

XII. 1. ΠΑΡΑΚΑΛΩ οὖν ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, [a] διὰ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, παραστῆσαι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζῶσαν, ἁγίαν, εὐάρεστον

God. To Him be the glory which such a display of wisdom and love demands.

CHAPTER XII. The distinction of doctrinal and practical is not one that can be pressed anywhere in the N.T., and as little in Paul as in any other writer. It is under practical compulsion of some kind that he develops most of his characteristic doctrines, and he has no doctrines which do not imply a corresponding practice. Yet the distinction does exist, and the remainder of this epistle, especially chaps. xii. 1-xv. 13, may be properly described as the practical part of it. Not that it is independent of the other. On the contrary, it is nothing but the application of it. (οὖν ver. 1.) Christian ethics are relative to the Christian revelation. It is the relations in which we stand that determine our duties, and the new relations in which we are set both to God and to other men by faith in Jesus Christ have a new morality corresponding to them. There is such a thing as a Christian ethic with a range, a delicacy, a flavour, all its own. There is no formal exposition of it here, though perhaps the nearest approach to such a thing that we have in the N.T., but a comprehensive illustration of it in a variety of bearings. Paul starts (xii. 1 f.) with a general exhortation, covering the whole Christian life. From this he proceeds to the spirit and temper which ought to characterise Christians as members of the same society, dwelling especially on the graces of humility and love (xii. 3-21). In the following chapter he discusses the duties of the individual to his legal superiors (xiii. 1-7); his duties to his neighbour, as comprehended in the love which fulfils the law (xiii. 8-10); and the urgent duty of sanctification in view of the Parousia. With chap. xiv. he comes to a different subject, and one apparently of peculiar interest in Rome at the time. It is one of those questions in which the claim of Christian liberty has to accommodate itself to the social necessity created by the weakness of brethren, and the discussion of it extends from xiv. 1-xv. 13, and concludes the "practical" part of the epistle.

Ver. 1. παρακαλῶ οὖν: the reference is to all that has been said since i. 16, but especially to what more closely precedes. Cf. Eph. iv. 1, 1 Tim. ii. 1, 1 Cor. iv. 16. The οὖν connects the two parts of the epistle, not formally but really, and shows the dependence of the "practical" upon the "doctrinal". It is the new world of realities to which the soul is introduced by the Christian revelation on which Christian morality depends. It is relative to that world, and would become unreal along with it. διὰ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν: for the substantive see 2 Cor. i. 3 (= רַחֲמִים, which has no singular). διὰ in such expressions (cf. 1 Cor. i. 10, 2 Cor. x. 1) indicates that in which the motive is found: Winer, p. 477. The mercies are those which God has shown in the work of redemption through Christ. παραστῆσαι is not per se sacrificial: in chap. vi. 13, 16, 19 it is used of putting the body at the disposal of God or of sin: see also 2 Cor. iv. 14, xi. 2, Col. i. 22, 28, Eph. v. 27. τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν is not exactly the same as ὑμᾶς αὐτούς, yet no stress is to be laid on the words as though Paul were requiring the sanctification of the body as opposed to the spirit: the body is in view here as the instrument by which all human service is rendered to God, and the service which it does render, in the manner supposed, is not a bodily but a spiritual service. θυσίαν ζῶσαν: "living," as opposed to the slain animals offered by the Jews. This seems to be the only case in which the new life as a whole is spoken of by Paul as a sacrifice—a thank offering—to God. A more limited use of the idea of θυσίᾳ is seen in Phil. ii. 17, iv. 18; cf. also Heb. xiii. 15 f., 1 Pet. ii. 5. ἁγίαν: contrast i. 24. εὐάρεστον according to all analogy (see concordance) should go with τῷ Θεῷ, and this is secured by the order of the words in Aℵ vulg. τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν: in apposition not to τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν but to the presenting of the body as a living sacrifice. For other examples see Winer, 669. λατρεία (ix. 4, Heb. ix. 1, 6, John xvi. 2) is cultus, ritual service, worship; and such a presentation of the body, as the organ of all moral action, to God, is the only thing that can be characterised as λογικὴ λατρεία, spiritual worship. Any other worship, any retention of Jewish or pagan rites, anything coming under the description of opus operatum, is foreign to the Christian θυσίᾳ; it is λατρεία which is not λογική, not appropriate to a being whose essence is λόγος, i.e., reason or spirit.

b 1 Pet. ii. 1.
c Ch. ix. 4.
d Matt. xvii. 2; 2 Cor. iii. 18.

τῷ Θεῷ,[1] τὴν [b] λογικὴν [c] λατρείαν ὑμῶν· 2. καὶ μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, ἀλλὰ [d] μεταμορφοῦσθε [2] τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν, εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον. 3. Λέγω γάρ, διὰ τῆς χάριτος τῆς δοθείσης μοι, παντὶ τῷ ὄντι ἐν ὑμῖν, μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ᾽ ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν, ἀλλὰ φρονεῖν εἰς

[1] τω θεω before ευαρεστον ℵ[1]AP, vulg. So W. and H. text, but marg. as rec. Weiss. on the ground that τω θεω is to be construed with παραστησαι, keeps these words to the end.

[2] συνσχηματιζεσθε . . . μεταμορφουσθε; so BLP, W. and H. text; but συνσχηματιζεσθαι and μεταμορφουσθαι in AB[2]D[1] (gr.) F. The infin. is read by Lachm. and in marg. by Treg. and W. and H., but is obviously an alteration of the imperative to have it construed with παρακαλω (Weiss). υμων after νοος is om. by ABD[1] (gr.) F 47 and all edd.

Ver. 2. καὶ μὴ συνσχηματίζεσθε: the imperative is better supported (BLP) than the infinitive (ADFG). For the word cf. 1 Pet. i. 14. The distinctions that have been drawn between συνσχηματίζεσθε and μεταμορφοῦσθε—on the ground of other distinctions assumed between σχῆμα and μορφή—though supported by distinguished scholars, remind one of the shrewd remark of Jowett, that there is a more dangerous deficiency for the commentator than ignorance of Greek, namely, ignorance of language. In the face of such examples as are quoted by Weiss (Plut., Mor., p. 719 B: τὸ μεμορφωμένον καὶ ἐσχηματισμένον: Eur., Iph. T., 292, μορφῆς σχήματα) and Wetstein (Sext. Emp., ἣ μένει μὲν ἐν τῇ οἰκείᾳ ὑποστάσει, εἰς ἄλλο δὲ εἶδος ἀντ᾽ ἄλλου μεταλαμβάνον γεννᾶται, ὡς ὁ μετασχηματιζόμενος κηρός, καὶ ἄλλοτε ἄλλην μορφὴν ἀναδεχόμενος) it is impossible not to regard the distinctions in question as very arbitrary. For the best supported and most relevant, reflected in Sanday and Headlam's paraphrase ("do not adopt the external and fleeting fashion of this world, but be ye transformed in your inmost nature"), see Lightfoot on Phil. ii. 7, or Gifford on the same passage (The Incarnation, pp. 22 ff., 88 ff.). τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ: "This world" or "age" is opposed to that which is to come; it is an evil world (Gal. i. 4) of which Satan is the God (2 Cor. iv. 4). Even apparent or superficial conformity to a system controlled by such a spirit, much more an actual accommodation to its ways, would be fatal to the Christian life. By nature, the Christian is at home in this world (cf. Eph. ii. 2); such as it is, its life and his life are one; and his deliverance is accomplished as he is transformed τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοός, by the renewing of his mind. νοῦς in the Apostle's usage (see chap. vii.) is both intellectual and moral—the practical reason, or moral consciousness. This is corrupted and atrophied in the natural man, and renewed by the action of the Holy Spirit. The process would in modern language be described rather as sanctification than regeneration, but regeneration is assumed (Tit. iii. 5). εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν: this is the purpose of the transforming renewal of the mind. It is that Christians may prove, i.e., discern in their experience, what the will of God is. Cf. ii. 18. An unrenewed mind cannot do this; it is destitute of moral discernment—has no proper moral faculty. τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον: these words may either qualify τὸ θέλημα τοῦ θεοῦ as in A.V., or be in apposition to it, as in R.V. margin. The last agrees better with the rhythm of the sentence. The will of God is identified with what is ἀγαθόν, good in the moral sense; εὐάρεστον well pleasing, sc., to God (so in all the nine cases of the adjective and three of the verb εὐαρεστεῖν which are found in the N.T.); and τέλειον ethically adequate or complete: Dt. xviii. 13, Mt. v. 48. No one discovers the line of action which from possessing these characteristics can be identified as the will of God unless he is transformed from his native affinity to the world by the renewing of his mind by the Holy Spirit.

Vers. 3-8. The duties of members of the Church as such: avoidance of self-exaltation, and mutual service in the measure of the gift bestowed on each. λέγω γάρ: the γὰρ indicates that "humility is the immediate effect of self-surrender to God" (Gifford). διὰ τῆς χάριτος κ.τ.λ. Paul illustrates in his own person, in giving this advice, the τὸ ᵉσωφρονεῖν, ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Θεὸς ἐμέρισεᶠ μέτρον πί τεως. 4. Καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι μέλη πολλὰ[1] ἔχομεν, τὰ δὲ μέλη πάντα οὐ τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχει πρᾶξιν· 5. οὕτως οἱ πολλοὶ ἓν σῶμά ἐσμεν ἐν Χριστῷ, ὁ[2] δὲ καθ' εἷς ἀλλήλων μέλη, 6. ἔχοντες δὲ χαρίσματα κατὰ τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν ἡμῖν διάφορα· εἴτ προφητείαν, κατὰ τὴν

e 2 Cor. v. 13; Tit. ii. 6.
f Eph. iv. 7, 13, 16.

[1] For μελη πολλα ALP read πολλα μελη with ℵBDF latt. and most edd; but W. and H. give μελη πολλα a place in marg.

[2] For οι (altered to agree with εις ?) read το δε ℵABD¹F gr. P. 47.

rule he is laying down for the Church. He speaks "through the grace given him," and therefore without presumption;. but he does speak, and so puts his wisdom and love at the service of the Church. παντὶ τῷ ὄντι ἐν ὑμῖν: everybody in the Church needed this word. To himself, every man is in a sense the most important person in the world, and it always needs much grace to see what other people are, and to keep a sense of moral proportion. μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν: ὑπερφρονεῖν here only in N.T., but a common word. παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν: beyond the mind or habit of thought one ought to have. For this use of παρὰ see xiv. 5, Lc. xiii. 2, Heb. i. 9. φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν: to cherish a habit of thought tending to sobriety of mind. σωφροσύνη is described by Jos., Macc. 2 f., as giving man dominion not only over bodily ἐπιθυμίαι but also over those of the soul, such as φιλαρχία, κενοδοξία, ἀλαζονεία, μεγαλαυχία, βασκανία. These are precisely the qualities to which Paul opposes it here. φρονεῖν and its cognates are favourite words with Paul: what they all suggest is the importance to character, especially to Christian character, of the prevailing mood of the mind—the moral temper, as it might be called. It should always tend to sobriety; but he gives a special rule for it in ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ θεὸς ἐμέρισεν μέτρον πίστεως. ἑκάστῳ is governed by ἐμέρισεν: its place makes it emphatic. Cf. 1 Cor. iii. 5. Whatever the characteristic of any individual may be, it is due to the discriminating act of God in measuring out faith to him in greater or less degree. Taken in connection with what precedes, the idea seems to be: There are various degrees of self-estimation proper, for God gives one more and another less; but all are fundamentally regulated by humility, for no one has anything that he has not received. 1 Cor. iv. 7.

Ver. 4 f. καθάπερ γὰρ: For language and figure cf. 1 Cor. xii. 12. Also Eph. iv. 15 f., Col. i. 18. The comparison of the community to a body—the social organism—is very common in classical writers: see Wetstein and Jowett here. πρᾶξιν: viii. 13. It is that at which the member works—in modern language, its function. Every member has its gift, but it is limited by the fact that it is no more than a member: it is not the whole body. 1 Cor. xii. 17. οἱ πολλοὶ ἓν σῶμά ἐσμεν ἐν Χριστῷ: many as we are, we are one body in Christ; it is the common relation to Him which unites us. In the later passages in which Paul uses this figure (Eph., Col.), Christ is spoken of as the Head of the body; but both here and in 1 Cor. xii. it would agree better with our instinctive use of the figure to speak of Him as its soul. His own figure of the vine and the branches combines the advantages of both. τὸ δὲ καθ' εἷς ἀλλήλων μέλη: this qualifies the unity asserted in ἓν σῶμά ἐσμεν. It is not a unity in which individuality is lost; on the contrary, the individuals retain their value, only not as independent wholes, but as members one of another. Each and all exist only in each other. 1 Cor. xii. 27. For τὸ καθ' εἷς see Winer, 312.

Ver. 6 ff. At this point an application, apparently, is made of what has been said in vers. 4 and 5, but the grammar is very difficult. Both A.V. and R.V. supply what is needed in order to read the verses as an exhortation; thus in ver. 6, "let us prophesy"; in ver. 7, "let us wait"; and in ver. 8, answering to the change of construction in the Greek, "let him do it". This is the simplest way out of the difficulty, and is followed by many scholars (Meyer, Lipsius, Gifford). But it is not beyond doubt, and there is something to say for the more rigorous construction adopted by Weiss and others, who put only a comma after μέλη at the end of ver. 5, and construe ἔχοντες with ἐσμεν. In either case, there is an apog Here only. [g] ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως· 7. εἴτε διακονίαν, ἐν τῇ διακονίᾳ. εἴτε ὁ διδάσκων, ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ· 8. εἴτε ὁ παρακαλῶν, ἐν τῇ παρακλήσει· ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ἐν ἁπλότητι· ὁ προϊστάμενος, ἐν σπουδῇ· ὁ ἐλεῶν, ἐν ἱλαρότητι.

dosis to be supplied; but while in the former case it is hinted at in the second half of every clause (as is seen in our English Bibles), in the latter it is simply forgotten. It is as if Paul had said, "We are members one of another, and have gifts differing according to the grace given to us; our gift may be prophecy, prophecy in the proportion of our faith; it may be διακονία in the sphere appropriate for that; another instance would be that of the teacher in his department, or of the exhorter in his; or again you may have the distributor, whose gift is in the form of ἁπλότης; or the ruler, who is divinely qualified for his function by the gift of σπουδή, moral earnestness; or the man who to show mercy is endowed with a cheerful disposition". All this requires an apodosis, but partly because of its length, partly because of the changes in construction as the Apostle proceeds, the apodosis is overlooked. Its import, however, would not vary, as in the A.V., from clause to clause, but would be the same for all the clauses together. Even with the ordinary punctuation, which puts a period at the end of ver. 5, I prefer this reading of the passage. The varying apodoses supplied in the English Bible to the separate clauses are really irrelevant; what is wanted is a common apodosis to the whole conception. "Now having gifts differing according to the grace given to us—as one may see by glancing at the phenomena of church life—let us use them with humility (remembering that they are gifts) and with love (inasmuch as we are members one of another)." It is easier to suppose that the construction was suspended, and gradually changed, with some general conclusion like this before the mind from the beginning, than that it broke down, so to speak, as soon as it began; which we must suppose if we insert προφητεύωμεν in ver. 6. But it is not a question which can be infallibly decided. It ought to be observed that there is no hint of anything official in this passage; all ministry is a function of membership in the body, and every member has the function of ministry to some intent or other. χαρίσματα: i. 11, 1 Cor. i. 7, xii. 4, 9, 31, 1 P. iv. 10. With the exception of 1 P. iv. 10 (which is not without relation to this passage) Paul alone uses χάρισμα in the N.T. Every χάρισμα is a gift of the Holy Spirit given to the believer for the good of the Church. Some were supernatural (gifts of healings, etc.), others spiritual in the narrower sense: this passage is the best illustration of the word. τὴν δοθεῖσαν, sc., when we believed. προφητείαν κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως. προφητεία is the highest of χαρίσματα, 1 Cor. xiv. 1 ff. When one has it, he has it κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογ. τῆς πίστεως = in the proportion of his faith. The faith meant is that referred to in ver. 3, the measure of which is assigned by God: and since this is the case, it is obviously absurd for a man to give himself airs—ὑπερφρονεῖν—on the strength of being a προφήτης: this would amount to forgetting that in whatever degree he has the gift, he owes it absolutely to God. The expression προφητείαν κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως implies that the more faith one has—the more completely Christian he is—the greater the prophetic endowment will be. [In theology, "the analogy of the faith" is used in quite a different sense, though it was supposed to be justified by this passage. To interpret Scripture, e.g., according to the analogy of the faith meant to interpret the parts, especially difficult or obscure parts, in consistency with the whole. The scope of the whole, again, was supposed to be represented in the creed or rule of faith; and to interpret κατὰ τ. ἀ. τ. πίστεως meant simply not to run counter to the creed. In the passage before us this is an anachronism as well as an irrelevance. There was no rule of faith when the Apostle was thinking out the original interpretation of Christianity contained in this epistle; and there is no exhortation or warning, but only a description of fact, in the words.] διακονία as opposed to προφητεία and the other functions mentioned here probably refers to such services as were material rather than spiritual: they were spiritual however (though connected only with helping the poor, or with the place or forms of worship) because prompted by the Spirit and done in it. One who has this

9. Ἡ ἀγάπη [h] ἀνυπόκριτος. ἀποστυγοῦντες τὸ πονηρὸν, κολλώμενοι τῷ ἀγαθῷ· 10. τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ εἰς ἀλλήλους φιλόστοργοι. τῇ τιμῇ

h 2 Cor. vi. 6; 1 Tim. i. 5; Jas. iii. 17.

gift has it ἐν τῇ διακονίᾳ, i.e., in the qualities and in the sphere proper to it: it is in its own nature limited; it is what it is, and nothing else, and fits a man for this function and no other. This is not "otiose," and it provides a good meaning without importing anything. ὁ διδάσκων ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ: it is in his teaching that the διδάσκαλος possesses the gift peculiar to him: 1 Cor. xiv. 26. ὁ παρακαλῶν ἐν τῇ παρακλήσει: so again with the exhorter, the man who speaks words of encouragement: cf. xv. 4, 5; Acts iv. 36, ix. 31, xiii. 15. It is in his παράκλησις, and not in something else, that his χάρισμα lies. Thus far Paul has not defined the quality of the χαρίσματα, or shown in what they consist; the functionary is merely said to have his gift in his function—teaching, exhorting, or service. But in the cases which follow, he tells us what the gift, proper to the special functions in view, is; in other words, what is the spiritual quality which, when divinely bestowed, capacitates a man to do this or that for the Church. Thus there is ὁ μεταδιδούς (cf. Eph. iv. 28, Luc. iii. 11), the man who imparts of his means to those who need; he has his χάρισμα in ἁπλότης. Cf. 2 Cor. ix. 11, 13; James i. 5. It is not exactly "liberality," though in these passages it approaches that sense: it is the quality of a mind which has no arrière-pensée in what it does; when it gives, it does so because it sees and feels the need, and for no other reason; this is the sort of mind which is liberal, and God assigns a man the function of μεταδιδόναι when He bestows this mind on him by His Spirit. ὁ προϊστάμενος is the person who takes the lead in any way. He might or might not be an official (1 Thess. v. 12, 1 Tim. v. 17, 1 Tim. iii. 4, 5, 12: cf. also πρόστατις xvi. 2, and Hort, The Christian Ecclesia, p. 126 f.); but in any case he had the χάρισμα which fitted him for his special function in σπουδή, moral earnestness or vigour. A serious masculine type of character is the pre-supposition for this gift. Finally ὁ ἐλεῶν, he who does deeds of kindness, has his charisma in ἱλαρότης. A person of a grudging or despondent mood has not the endowment for showing mercy. He who is to visit the poor, the sick, the sorrowful, will be marked out by God for His special ministry by this endowment of brightness and good cheer. Cf. 2 Cor. ix. 7 = Prov. xxii. 8 and Sir. xxxii. (xxxv.) 11: ἐν πάσῃ δόσει ἱλάρωσον τὸ πρόσωπόν σου, καὶ ἐν εὐφροσύνῃ ἁγίασον δεκάτην.

Vv. 9-21. As far as any single idea pervades the rest of the chapter it is that of the first words in ver. 9: ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος. The passage as a whole has a strong affinity to 1 Cor. xiii., and along with what may be a reminiscence of our Lord's words, it has something intensely and characteristically Christian. Whatever the grammatical construction may be—and all through the chapter Paul displays an indifference in this respect which is singular even in him—the intention must be supposed to be hortatory, so that it is most natural to supply imperatives (ἔστω or ἐστέ) with the numerous participles.

Ver. 9. ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος: see 2 Cor. vi. 6, 1 Pet. i. 22. Probably the following clauses ἀποστυγοῦντες . . . κολλώμενοι κ.τ.λ. are meant to explain this. Love is undissembled, it is the unaffected Christian grace, when it shrinks, as with a physical horror, from that which is evil (even in those whom it loves), and cleaves to that which is good. στυγεῖν according to Eustath. in Il. α, p. 58 (quoted by Wetstein) adds the idea of φρίσσειν to that of μισεῖν: the ἀπο intensifies the idea of aversion or repulsion. Love is not a principle of mutual indulgence; in the Gospel it is a moral principle, and like Christ Who is the only perfect example of love, it has always something inexorable about it. He never condoned evil. τῷ ἀγαθῷ is neuter, like τὸ πονηρόν, though κολλᾶσθαι can be used of persons (1 Cor. vi. 16 f.) as well as things.

Ver. 10. τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ = in point of brotherly love, i.e., your love to each other as children in the one family of God. Cf. 1 Thess. iv. 9, Heb. xiii. 9, 1 Pet. i. 22, 2 Pet. i. 7, 1 Pet. iii. 8. ἀδελφὸς in the apostolic writings does not mean fellow-man, but fellow-Christian; and φιλαδελφία is the mutual affection of the members of the Christian community. In this they are to be φιλόστοργοι, "tenderly affectioned". The moral purity required in ver. 9 is not to be the only mark of Christian love; since they are members of one family, their love is to have the characters of strong natural

l Here only. k Matt. xxv. 26.

ἀλλήλους [l]προηγούμενοι· 11. τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ [k]ὀκνηροί, τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες, τῷ Κυρίῳ [1] δουλεύοντες· 12. τῇ ἐλπίδι χαίροντες, τῇ θλίψει ὑπομένοντες, τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτεροῦντες· 13. ταῖς χρείαις [2] τῶν

[1] For κυριω ℵABD[2,3]LP, etc., some Western authorities (D[1]F gr. G lat.) read καιρω, and this appears in the received text, though not in the A.V. The confusion may have arisen from a contraction of the one word being mistaken for that of the other; but was "probably supported by a sense of the difficulty of so comprehensive a clause as τῳ κυριῳ δουλευοντες in the midst of a series of clauses of limited sense" (W. and H., Appendix, p. 110).

[2] ταις χρειαις ℵABD[3]LP is no doubt the correct reading, but there is a curious variant ταις μνειαις in DFG, some MSS. known to Theod. Mops., and in the Lat. transl. of Origen, where, after usibus (= χρειαις) sanctorum communicantes, we read Memini in latinis exemplaribus magis haberi, memoriis sanctorum communicantes Evidently, as S. and H. remark, this must have arisen at a time when the αγιοι were no longer the members of the community and fellow-Christians whose bodily wants required to be relieved, but the "saints" of the past whose lives were to be commemorated.

affection (στοργή); it is to be warm, spontaneous, constant. τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλήλους προηγούμενοι: "in honour preferring one another". This, which is the rendering of both our English versions, is a good Pauline idea (Phil. ii. 3), but gives προηγούμενοι a meaning not found elsewhere. Hence others render: "in showing honour—i.e., to those whose χαρίσματα entitle them to respect in the Church—giving each other a lead": each, so to speak, being readier than the other to recognise and honour God's gifts in a brother. In this sense, however, προηγούμενοι would rather take the genitive (see Liddell and Scott, who seem, nevertheless, to adopt this rendering); and probably the former, which involves only a natural extension of the meaning of the word, is to be preferred.

Ver. 11. τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκνηροί: σπουδὴ occurs twelve times in the N.T., and is translated in our A.V. seven different ways. It denotes the moral earnestness with which one should give himself to his vocation. In this Christians are not to be backward: Acts ix. 38. τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες: the same figure is frequent in the classics, and we still speak of the blood "boiling". The spiritual temperature is to be high in the Christian community: cf. 1 Thess. v. 20, Acts xviii. 25. If we are to distinguish at all, the πνεῦμα meant is the Spirit of God, though it is that spirit as bestowed upon man. τῷ κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες: we can point to no special connection for this clause. Perhaps the thought is on the same lines as in 1 Cor. xii. 4 f.: there are spiritual gifts of all kinds, but one service in which they are all exhausted—the service of Christ—and in that we must be constantly engaged.

Ver. 12. τῇ ἐλπίδι χαίροντες: the hope in which they are to rejoice is that of Christians: cf. v. 2. The meaning is practically the same as in that passage, but the mental representation is not. τῇ ἐλπίδι is not = ἐπ' ἐλπίδι there, but in a line with the other datives here: in point of hope, rejoicing. τῇ θλίψει ὑπομένοντες: ὑπομ. might have been construed with the accusative (τὴν θλῖψιν), but the absolute use of it, as here, is common (see Mt. x. 22, Jas. v. 11, 1 Pet. ii. 20), and its employment in this instance enables the writer to conform the clause grammatically to the others. τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτεροῦντες: cf. Col. iv. 2, Acts i. 14, ii. 42. The strong word suggests not only the constancy with which they are to pray, but the effort that is needed to maintain a habit so much above nature.

Ver. 13. ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες: "the saints" as in viii. 27, 1 Tim. v. 10 are Christians generally. The curious variant ταῖς μνείαις—"taking part in the commemorations of the saints"—dates from an age at which "the saints" were no longer Christians in general, but a select few, as a rule martyrs or confessors in the technical sense. Weiss asserts that the active sense of κοινωνεῖν, to communicate or impart, is foreign to the N.T., but it is difficult to maintain this if we look to such examples as this and Gal. vi. 6, and also to the use of κοινωνία in 2 Cor. ix. 13 (where ἁπλότητι τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτοὺς means the liberality of your contribution to them), and Heb. xiii. 16, where κοινωνία is a synonym of εὐποιία, ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες, τὴν φιλοξενίαν διώκοντες. 14. εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς διώκοντας ὑμᾶς· εὐλογεῖτε, καὶ μὴ [1] καταρᾶσθε. 15. Χαίρειν μετὰ χαιρόντων, καὶ [1] κλαίειν μετὰ κλαιόντων. 16. τὸ αὐτὸ εἰς ἀλλήλους φρονοῦντες· μὴ τὰ ὑψηλὰ φρονοῦντες, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ταπεινοῖς συναπαγόμενοι. μὴ γίνεσθε φρόνιμοι παρ' ἑαυτοῖς· 17. μηδενὶ κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ ἀποδιδόντες. προνοούμενοι καλὰ ἐνώπιον πάντων ἀνθρώπων·

l Luke vi. 28.

[1] και before κλαιειν om. ℵBD[1]F; ins. AD[3]LP 47. W. and H. put in marg.; Weiss in text, regarding its omission as merely accidental.

and certainly active. τὴν φιλοξενίαν διώκοντες: to devote oneself to entertaining them when they were strangers was one chief way of distributing to the needs of the saints. Hospitality, in the sense of the N.T. (Heb. xiii. 2, 1 Pet. iv. 9), is not akin to "keeping company," or "open house"; it is a form of charity much needed by travelling, exiled, or persecuted Christians. The terms in which it is spoken of in Clem. Rom. (quoted in S. and H.: διὰ πίστιν καὶ φιλοξενίαν ἐδόθη αὐτῷ—i.e., Abraham—υἱὸς ἐν γήρᾳ: or, διὰ φιλοξενίαν καὶ εὐσέβειαν Λὼτ ἐσώθη) may seem extravagant; but the key to them, and to all the apostolic emphasis on the subject, is to be found in Matt. xxv. 34-36.

Ver. 14. εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς διώκοντας, εὐλ. κ. μὴ καταρᾶσθε: not a quotation of Mt. v. 44, but probably a reminiscence of the same saying of Jesus. The change in construction from participle to imperative, the participle being resumed in the next sentence, suggests that the form of the sentence was given to Paul—i.e., he was consciously using borrowed words without modifying them to suit the sentence he had begun on his own account. It may be that when Paul said διώκοντες in ver. 13, the other sense of the word passed through his mind and prompted ver. 14; but even if we could be sure of this (which we cannot) we should not understand either verse a whit better.

Ver. 15. χαίρειν μετὰ χαιρόντων κ.τ.λ. The infinites give the expression the character of a watchword (see Hofmann in Weiss). For the grammar see Winer, 397, n. 6. To weep with those that weep is easier than to rejoice with those who rejoice. Those who rejoice neither need, expect, nor feel grateful for sympathy in the same degree as those who weep.

Ver. 16. τὸ αὐτὸ εἰς ἀλλήλους φρονοῦντες: here the Apostle returns to his own grammar (or disregard of grammar), and holds to it till ver. 19, when he changes to the imperative (μὴ δότε) with which he concludes (ver. 21 μὴ νικῶ, νίκα). τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, xv. 5, is a favourite expression, best explained by reference to Phil. ii. 2, iv. 2, 2 Cor. xiii. 11. The idea is that of loving unanimity, and the εἰς ἀλλήλους points to the active manifestation of this temper in all the mutual relations of Christians. "Let each so enter into the feelings and desires of the other as to be of one mind with him" (Gifford). It is a more abstract expression of the Golden Rule, Mt. vii. 12. The negatives which follow introduce explanatory clauses: they forbid what would destroy the unanimity of love. μὴ τὰ ὑψηλὰ φρονοῦντες: see on ver. 3 above and xi. 21. Selfish ambition in the Church is fatal to perfect mutual consideration. τοῖς ταπεινοῖς συναπαγόμενοι. Elsewhere in the N.T. (seven times) ταπεινὸς is only found in the masculine, and so some would render it here: condescend to men of low estate; let yourself be carried along in the line of their interests, not counting such people beneath you. Cf. Gal. ii. 13, 2 Pet. iii. 17. The bad connotation of συναπάγεσθαι in both these places is due not to itself, but to the context. The contrast with τὰ ὑψηλὰ leads others to take τοῖς ταπεινοῖς as neuter: and so the R.V. has it, condescend to things that are lowly. Certainty on such points must always be personal rather than scientific; the first of the two alternatives impresses me as much more in harmony with the nature of the words used than the other. For the idea cf. Wordsworth's sonnet addressed to Milton . . . "and yet thy heart the lowliest duties on herself did lay". μὴ γίνεσθε φρόνιμοι κ.τ.λ. Prov. iii. 7. Be not men of mind in your own conceit. It is difficult to put our judgment into a common stock, and estimate another's as impartially as our own; but love requires it, and without it there is no such thing as τὸ αὐτὸ εἰς ἀλλήλους φρονεῖν.

m Matt. xxiv. 24; Gal. iv. 15. n 2 Tim. iii. 6.

18. εἰ [m] δυνατὸν, τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν, μετὰ πάντων ἀνθρώπων εἰρηνεύοντες. 19. Μὴ ἑαυτοὺς ἐκδικοῦντες, ἀγαπητοί, ἀλλὰ δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ· γέγραπται γὰρ, "Ἐμοὶ ἐκδίκησις, ἐγὼ ἀνταποδώσω, λέγει Κύριος". 20. ἐὰν οὖν [1] πεινᾷ ὁ ἐχθρός σου, ψώμιζε αὐτόν. ἐὰν διψᾷ, πότιζε αὐτόν· τοῦτο γὰρ ποιῶν, ἄνθρακας πυρὸς [n] σωρεύσεις ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ. 21. μὴ νικῶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ, ἀλλὰ νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν.

[1] εαν ουν D^3 gr. L, etc.; εαν alone D^1FD^3 lat.; αλλα εαν ℵABP vulg. and all edd. For την κεφαλην Weiss would read with B alone της κεφαλης.

Ver. 17. From this point the subject treated is chiefly the Christian's attitude to enemies. μηδενὶ κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ ἀποδ. μηδενὶ is emphatic: to no one, Christian or un-Christian. Nothing can ever justify revenge. Cf. 1 Pet. iii. 9, but especially Matt. v. 38-48. προνοούμενοι καλὰ ἐνώπιον κ.τ.λ. Prov. iii. 4, LXX. 2 Cor. viii. 21. What the words mean in Prov. iii. 4 is not clear; they are not a translation of the Hebrew. In 2 Cor. viii. 21 the idea is that of taking precautions to obviate possible slanders; here it is apparently that of living in such a way as not to provoke enmity, or give any occasion for breach of peace. ἐνώπιον: construed with καλά. πάντων has the same kind of emphasis as μηδενί: Requite evil to no one; let your conduct be such as all must approve.

Ver. 18. εἰ δυνατόν: cf. Matt. xxiv. 24. τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν: for what depends on you. Cf. i. 15. Over others' conduct we have no control; but the initiative in disturbing the peace is never to lie with the Christian.

Ver. 19. μὴ ἑαυτοὺς ἐκδικοῦντες, ἀγαπητοί. Even when the Christian has been wronged he is not to take the law into his own hand, and right or vindicate himself. For ἐκδικεῖν see Lc. xviii. 3, 5. ἀγαπητοί is striking, and must have some reason; either the extreme difficulty, of which Paul was sensible, of living up to this rule; or possibly some condition of affairs in the Church at Rome, which made the exhortation peculiarly pertinent to the readers, and therefore craved this affectionate address to deprecate, as it were, the "wild justice" with which the natural man is always ready to plead his cause. ἀλλὰ δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ: the wrath spoken of, as the following words show, is that of God; to give place to God's wrath means to leave room for it, not to take God's proper work out of His hands. For the expression cf. Lc. xiv. 9, Sir. xiii. 22, xix. 17, xxxviii. 12, Eph. iv. 27. For ἡ ὀργὴ used thus absolutely of God's wrath cf. v. 9, 1 Thess. ii. 16. The idea is not that instead of executing vengeance ourselves we are to abandon the offender to the more tremendous vengeance of God; but this—that God, not injured men or those who believe themselves such, is the maintainer of moral order in the world, and that the righting of wrong is to be committed to Him. Cf. especially 1 Pet. ii. 23. γέγραπται γάρ: Deut. xxxii. 35. Paul gives the sense of the Hebrew, not at all that of the LXX, though his language is reminiscent of the latter (ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐκδικήσεως ἀνταποδώσω). It is singular that Heb. x. 30 has the quotation in exactly the same form as Paul. So has the Targum of Onkelos; but whether there is any mutual dependence of these three, or whether, independent of all, the verse was current in this form, we cannot tell. The λέγει κύριος (cf. xiv. 11) is supplied by Paul.

Ver. 20. ἀλλὰ: On the contrary, as opposed to self-avenging, and even to the merely passive resignation of one's case to God. ἐὰν πεινᾷ κ.τ.λ. Prov. xxv. 21 f. exactly as in LXX. The meaning of "heaping burning coals on his head" is hardly open to doubt. It must refer to the burning pain of shame and remorse which the man feels whose hostility is repaid by love. This is the only kind of vengeance the Christian is at liberty to contemplate. Many, however, have referred to 4 Esdr. xvi. 54 (Non dicat peccator se non peccasse; quoniam carbones ignis comburet super caput ejus, qui dicit: non peccavi coram Domino Deo et gloria ipsius), and argued that the coals of fire are the Divine judgments which the sinner will bring on himself unless he repents under the constraint of such love. But (1) there is nothing said here about the essential condition, "unless he repents"; this is simply imported; and (2) the aim of the Christian's love to his enemy is thus made to be the bringing down of Divine judgment on him — which is not only absurd in itself, but in direct antagonism to the spirit of the passage.

XIII. 1. ΠΑΣΑ ψυχὴ ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχούσαις ὑποτασσέσθω. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἐξουσία εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ[1] Θεοῦ· αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ἐξουσίαι ὑπὸ τοῦ

[1] ει μη απο θεου D[1]F, Orig. For απο ℵABD[3]LP read υπο; and so all edd. εξουσιαι after ουσαι om. ℵABD[1]F and all edd. υπο του θεου; om. του ℵ[1]ADFP and all edd.

Ver. 21. μὴ νικῶ: the absence of any connecting particle gives the last verse the character of a summary: in a word, be not overcome by evil. ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ = by the evil your enemy inflicts. The Christian would be overcome by evil if it were able to compel him to avenge himself by repaying it in kind. Wrong is not defeated but doubly victorious when it is repelled with its own weapons; we can only overcome it ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ through the good we do to our adversary, turning him so from an enemy into a friend. Vincit malos, says Seneca, pertinax bonitas: Wetst. accumulates similar examples from classical writers. The ἐν in ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ is probably = בְּ: it might be explained as instrumental, or rendered "at the cost of".

Chapter XIII. There is not a word to indicate how the transition is made from the discussion of the duties of Christians as members of one body, especially the duties of humility and love in chap. xii., to the special subject which meets us in chap. xiii. — the duty of Christians in relation to the civil authorities. There is nothing exactly like vers. 1-7 elsewhere in Paul's epistles, and it is difficult not to believe that he had some particular reason for treating the question here. The Christians in Rome, though mainly Gentile, as this epistle proves, were closely connected with the Jews, and the Jews were notoriously bad subjects. Many of them held, on the ground of Deut. xvii. 15, that to acknowledge a Gentile ruler was itself sinful; and the spirit which prompted Pharisees to ask, Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or not? Shall we give or shall we not give? (Mark xii. 14) had no doubt its representatives in Rome also. As believers in the Messiah, "in another King, one Jesus" (Acts xvii. 7), even Christians of Gentile origin may have been open to the impulses of this same spirit; and unbalanced minds, then as in all ages, might be disposed to find in the loyalty which was due to Christ alone, an emancipation from all subjection to inferior powers. There is here an apparent point of contact between Christianity and anarchism, and it may have been the knowledge of some such movement of mind in the Church at Rome that made Paul write as he did. There is perhaps nothing in the passage which is not already given in our Lord's word, "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's"; yet nothing can be more worthy of admiration than the soberness with which a Christian idealist like Paul lays down the Divine right of the state. The use made of the passage to prove the duty of "passive obedience," or "the right divine of kings to govern wrong," is beside the mark; the Apostle was not thinking of such things at all. What is in his mind is that the organisation of human society, with its distinction of higher and lower ranks, is essential for the preservation of moral order, and therefore, one might add, for the existence of the Kingdom of God itself; so that no Christian is at liberty to revolt against that organisation. The state is of God, and the Christian has to recognise its Divine right in the persons and requirements in which it is presented to him: that is all. Whether in any given case—say in England in 1642—the true representative of the State was to be found in the king or in the Commons, Paul, of course, does not enable us to say. Neither does he say anything bearing on the Divine right of insurrection. When he wrote, no doubt, Nero had not yet begun to rage against the Christians, and the imperial authorities had usually protected the Apostle himself against popular violence, whether Jewish or pagan; but even of this we must not suppose him to be taking any special account. He had, indeed, had other experiences (Acts xvi. 37, 2 Cor. xi. 25 ff.). But the whole discussion presupposes normal conditions: law and its representatives are of God, and as such are entitled to all honour and obedience from Christians.

Ver. 1. πᾶσα ψυχὴ is a Hebraism;

Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι εἰσίν. 2. ὥστε ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, τῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ [a] διαταγῇ ἀνθέστηκεν· οἱ δὲ ἀνθεστηκότες, ἑαυτοῖς κρῖμα λήψονται. 3. οἱ γὰρ ἄρχοντες οὐκ εἰσὶ φόβος τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔργων, ἀλλὰ τῶν κακῶν.[1] θέλεις δὲ μὴ φοβεῖσθαι τὴν ἐξουσίαν; τὸ ἀγαθὸν ποίει, καὶ ἕξεις ἔπαινον ἐξ αὐτῆς· 4. Θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστι σοὶ εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν. ἐὰν δὲ τὸ κακὸν ποιῇς, φοβοῦ· οὐ γὰρ εἰκῇ τὴν μάχαιραν φορεῖ· Θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστιν, ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν τῷ τὸ a Acts vii. 53.

[1] των αγαθων εργων αλλα των κακων D^3 gr. L, etc.; τω αγαθω εργω α. τω κακω ℵABD¹F. The vulg. and lat. fathers have non sunt timori boni operis, from which W. and H. deduce another reading του αγαθου εργου. They suspect a primitive error, and Hort favours the correction τῳ αγαθοεργῳ, comparing 1 Tim. vi. 18.

cf. Acts ii. 43, iii. 23, and chap. ii. 9. For ἐξουσίαις cf. Luke xii. 11: it is exactly like "authorities" in English—abstract for concrete. ὑπερεχούσαις describes the authorities as being actually in a position of superiority. Cf. 1 P. ii. 13, and 2 Macc. iii. 11 (ἀνδρὸς ἐν ὑπεροχῇ κειμένου). οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν ἐξουσία εἰ μὴ ὑπὸ θεοῦ: ὑπὸ is the correct reading (ℵAB), not ἀπό. Weiss compares Bar. iv. 27. ἔσται γὰρ ὑμῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐπάγοντος μνεία. It is by God's act and will alone that there is such a thing as an authority, or magistrate; and those that actually exist have been appointed—set in their place—by Him. With αἱ δὲ οὖσαι the Apostle passes from the abstract to the concrete; the persons and institutions in which for the time authority had its seat, are before his mind—in other words, the Empire with all its grades of officials from the Emperor down. In itself, and quite apart from its relation to the Church, this system had a Divine right to be. It did not need to be legitimated by any special relation to the Church; quite as truly as the Church it existed Dei gratia.

Ver. 2. ὥστε cf. vii. 4, 12. The conclusion is that he who sets himself against the authorities withstands what has been instituted by God: διαταγῇ (Acts vii. 53) recalls τεταγμέναι, ver. 1. The κρίμα, i.e., the judgment or condemnation which those who offer such resistance shall receive, is of course a Divine one—that is the nerve of the whole passage; but most commentators seem to regard it as coming through the human authority resisted. This is by no means clear; even a successful defiance of authority, which involved no human κρίμα, would according to Paul ensure punishment from God. For λήψονται κρίμα cf. Mark xii. 40, Jas. iii. 1: where also God's judgment alone is in view. But to say that it is God's judgment only is not to say that it is eternal damnation. There are many ways in which God's condemnation of sin is expressed and executed.

Ver. 3. οἱ γὰρ ἄρχοντες κ.τ.λ. The γὰρ can only be connected in a forced and artificial way with the clause which immediately precedes: it really introduces the reason for a frank and unreserved acceptance of that view of "authorities" which the Apostle is laying down. It is as if he said: Recognise the Divine right of the State, for its representatives are not a terror—an object of dread—to the good work, but to the bad. φόβος as in Isa. viii. 13. It is implied that those to whom he speaks will always be identified with the good work, and so have the authorities on their side: it is taken for granted also that the State will not act in violation of its own idea, and identify itself with the bad. θέλεις δὲ μὴ φοβεῖσθαι κ.τ.λ. This is most expressive when read as an interrogation, though some prefer to take it as an assertion: that is, to regard Paul as assuming that the reader does not want to be afraid of the magistrate, rather than as inquiring whether he does or not. To escape fear, τὸ ἀγαθὸν ποίει: do what is (legally and morally) good.

Ver. 4. θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστιν σοὶ εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν. διάκονός is feminine agreeing with ἐξουσία, which is "almost personified" (Sanday and Headlam). The σοὶ is not immediately dependent on διάκονός, as if the State were conceived as directly serving the person; the State serves God, with good in view as the end to be secured by its ministry, viz., the maintenance of the moral order in society; and this situation is one the benefit of which redounds to the individual. ἐὰν δὲ τὸ κακὸν ποιῇς, φοβοῦ: only when the individual does that which κακὸν πράσσοντι. 5. διὸ ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν [b] συνείδησιν. 6. διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε· λειτουργοὶ γὰρ Θεοῦ εἰσιν, εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο προσκαρτεροῦντες. 7. ἀπόδοτε οὖν [1] πᾶσι τὰς ὀφειλάς· τῷ τὸν φόρον, τὸν φόρον. τῷ

b 1 Cor. x. 25, 27; 1 Pet. ii. 19.

[1] αποδοτε ουν ℵ³D³FLP; om. ουν ℵ¹ABD¹ and all edd.

is contrary to the end set before the State by God—commits τὸ κακὸν, which frustrates τὸ ἀγαθὸν—need he fear: but then he must fear. οὐ γὰρ εἰκῇ: for not for nothing, but for serious use, does the ruler wear the sword. For εἰκῇ cf. 1 Cor. xv. 2, Gal. iii. 4. φορεῖ is wear, rather than bear: the sword was carried habitually, if not by, then before the higher magistrates, and symbolised the power of life and death which they had in their hands. "The Apostle in this passage," says Gifford, "expressly vindicates the right of capital punishment as divinely entrusted to the magistrate". But "expressly" is perhaps too much, and Paul could not deliberately vindicate what no one had assailed. He did, indeed, on a memorable occasion (later than this) express his readiness to die if his life had been forfeited to the law (Acts xxv. 11); but to know that if an individual sets himself to subvert the moral order of the world, its representatives can proceed to extremities against him (on the ground, apparently, that it, as of God's institution, is of priceless value to mankind, whereas he in his opposition to it is of no moral worth at all) is not to vindicate capital punishment as it exists in the law or practice of any given society. When the words θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστιν are repeated, it is the punitive ministry of the magistrate which is alone in view. ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν: an avenger for wrath. ὀργὴ in the N.T. almost always (as here) means the wrath of God. It occurs eleven times in Romans: always so. The exceptions are Eph. iv. 31, Col. iii. 8, 1 Tim. ii. 8, Jas. i. 19 f. τῷ τὸ κακὸν πράσσοντι = to him who works at evil. The process is presented in πράσσειν rather than the result. Cf. i. 32.

Ver. 5 f. διὸ ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι: there is a twofold necessity for submission—an external one, in the wrath of God which comes on resistance; an internal one, in conscience. Even apart from the consequences of disobedience conscience recognises the Divine right and function of the ἐξουσία and freely submits to it. διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε. διὰ τοῦτο seems to refer to the moral necessity to which appeal has been already made in διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν. It is because conscience recognises the moral value of the State as an ordinance of God that we pay taxes. φόρος is often used of the tribute paid by a subject nation: Neh. v. 4, 1 Macc. viii. 4, Lc. xx. 22; but here is probably used indefinitely of any imposts made for the support of the Government. λειτουργοὶ γὰρ θεοῦ εἰσίν: the use of λειτουργοί here instead of διάκονοι emphasises the official character of the service which they render. In the LXX λειτουργεῖν is the regular rendering of שֵׁרֵת, and therefore refers frequently to the service of the priests and Levites, a usage the influence of which is seen in chap. xv. 16 and Phil. ii. 17; but this was by no means exclusively the case in the O.T. (2 Sam. xiii. 18, 2 Kings x. 5) nor is it so in the New (chap. xv. 27, Phil. ii. 25, 30). It is not a priestly character that the word assigns to the magistracy, but only an official character; they are in their place by God's appointment for the public good. εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο means "to this very end"—the end described in vers. 3 and 4. As προσκαρτεροῦντες is elsewhere construed with the dative (Acts i. 14, vi. 4, chap. xii. 12) it seems necessary here to take εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ with what precedes, and προσκ. by itself as, e.g., in Num. xiii. 21: spending all their time on the work.

Ver. 7. At this point Weiss begins a new paragraph, but W. and H. make ver. 7 the conclusion of the first part of this chapter. In view of the close connection between vers. 7 and 8 (cf. ὀφειλάς, ὀφείλετε) it is better not to make too decided a break at either place. All the words in ver. 7, φόρος, τέλος, φόβος, τιμή, do indeed imply duties to superiors, and seem therefore to continue and to sum up the content of vers. 1-6; but ver. 8, in which μηδενὶ μηδὲν ὀφείλετε seems expressly written as the negative counterpart to ἀπόδοτε πᾶσι τὰς ὀφειλάς in ver. 7, introduces at the same time a wider subject—that of the duties of all

c Matt. xvii. 25. τὸ ͨτέλος, τὸ τέλος· τῷ τὸν φόβον, τὸν φόβον· τῷ τὴν τιμήν, τὴν τιμήν. 8. Μηδενὶ μηδὲν ὀφείλετε,[1] εἰ μὴ τὸ ἀγαπᾷν ἀλλήλους· ὁ γὰρ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἕτερον, νόμον πεπλήρωκε. 9. τὸ γάρ, "Οὐ μοιχεύσεις, οὐ φονεύσεις, οὐ κλέψεις, οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις,[2] οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις," καὶ εἴ τις ἑτέρα ἐντολή, ἐν τούτῳ τῷ λόγῳ ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται, ἐν τῷ, "᾿Αγαπήσεις τὸν ᵈπλησίον σου ὡς ἑαυτόν". 10. ἡ ἀγάπη τῷ πλησίον κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται· ᵉπλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη.

d Ch. xv. 2; Gal. v. 14; Eph. iv. 25.
e Ch. xi. 12, 25.

[1] οφειλετε seems the only possible reading, yet is not given by any authority. οφειλητε ℵ[3]; οφειλοντες ℵ[1], Orig.; οφιλειτε B. For αγαπαν αλληλους ℵABDFP read αλληλους αγαπαν; so all edd.

[2] ου ψευδομαρτυρησεις om. ABDFL and all edd. The insertion is made by ℵP, etc., to complete the reference to the decalogue. εν τω before αγαπησεις is ins. by ℵADLP; om. by BF latt., Orig.-interp. It is bracketed by Lachm., Treg., Alf., and W. and H.; omitted entirely by Weiss. Instead of εαυτον FLP read σεαυτον with ℵABD.

individuals toward each other. τῷ τὸν φόρον τὸν φόρον: this is quite intelligible, but nothing can make it grammatical: see Winer, p. 737. For the distinction of φόρος and τέλος see Trench, Syn., p. 392. For φόβος and τιμή 1 Pet. ii. 17.

Ver. 8. εἰ μὴ τὸ ἀλλήλους ἀγαπᾷν = except mutual love. This is the debitum immortale of Bengel; hoc enim et quotidie solvere et semper debere expedit nobis (Origen). ὁ γὰρ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἕτερον: he who loves his neighbour, the other with whom he has to do. Cf. ii. 1, 21 (Weiss). νόμον πεπλήρωκεν = has done all that law requires. From what follows it is clear that Paul is thinking of the Mosaic law; it was virtually the only thing in the world to which he could apply the word νόμος, or which he could use to illustrate that word. The relation of chaps. xii. and xiii. to the Gospels makes it very credible that Paul had here in his mind the words of our Lord in Matt. xxii. 34 ff.

Ver. 9. τὸ γὰρ Οὐ μοιχεύσεις. Cf. viii. 26. The order of the commandments here is different from that in Exod. xx. or Deut. v. (Hebrew), but it is the same as in Luke xviii. 20, and (so far) in James ii. 11. This order is also found in Cod. B. of the LXX in Deut. v. καὶ εἴ τις ἑτέρα ἐντολή: this shows that the enumeration does not aim at completeness, and that the insertion in some MSS. of οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις, to complete the second table, is beside the mark. ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται: it is summed up—the scattered particulars are resumed and brought to one. The only other instance of this word in the N.T. (Eph. i. 10) illustrates the present one, though the meaning is not exactly the same. ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου κ.τ.λ. In Lev. xix. 18 this is given as a summary of various laws, mostly precepts enjoining humanity, in various relations; by our Lord (in Matt. xxii. 39) and by Paul (here and in Gal. v. 14) an ampler, indeed an unlimited range, is given to it. Its supreme position too seems to be what is indicated in James ii. 8 by calling it νόμος βασιλικός.

Ver. 10. ἡ ἀγάπη . . . κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται. This is all that is formally required by the law as quoted above (οὐ μοιχεύσεις, etc.): therefore love is πλήρωμα νόμου, law's fulfilment. Of course love is an inspiration rather than a restraint, and transcends law as embodied in merely negative commandments; but the form in which the law actually existed determines the form in which the Apostle expresses himself. It is apparent once more that νόμος is the Mosaic law, and not law in general; it is from it the prohibitions are derived on the ground of which the Apostle argues, and to it therefore we must apply his conclusion, πλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη.

Vv. 11-14. In the closing verses of the chapter Paul enforces this exhortation to mutual love as the fulfilling of the law by reference to the approaching Parousia. We must all appear (and who can tell how soon?) before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in the body: if the awe and the inspiration of that great truth descend upon our hearts, we shall feel how urgent the Apostle's exhortation is. καὶ τοῦτο: cf. 1 Cor. vi. 6, 8. In classical writers καὶ ταῦτα is commoner. It

11. ΚΑΙ τοῦτο, εἰδότες τὸν καιρὸν, ὅτι ὥρα ἡμᾶς[1] ἤδη ἐξ ὕπνου ἐγερθῆναι. νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία, ἢ ὅτε ἐπιστεύσαμεν. 12. ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν, ἡ δὲ ἡμέρα ἤγγικεν· ἀποθώμεθα οὖν τὰ ἔργα τοῦ [f]σκότους, καὶ ἐνδυσώμεθα[2] τὰ ὅπλα τοῦ [g]φωτός. 13. ὡς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ, εὐσχημόνως περιπατήσωμεν, μὴ κώμοις καὶ μέθαις, μὴ κοίταις καὶ ἀσελγείαις, μὴ ἔριδι καὶ ζήλῳ· 14. ἀλλ᾽ ἐνδύσασθε τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν,[3] καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς [h]πρόνοιαν μὴ ποιεῖσθε εἰς ἐπιθυμίας.

f 1 Cor. v. 5; Eph. v. 8, 11 vi. 12; 1 Thess. v. 4 f. g Eph. v. 8 f.; 13.
h Acts xxiv. 2.

[1] ημας DEFGL; but ℵ[1]ABCP give υμας. υμας is put in text by Weiss, W. and H., and Tischdf.; and by W. and H. and Treg. in margin. All put ηδη with ℵABC before the pronoun.

[2] For και ενδυσωμεθα read ενδυσωμεθα δε with ABC[1]D[1]P. W. and H. bracket δε; ℵ[1] and a MS. of Sah. have neither και nor δε. For οπλα AD read εργα. μη εριδι και ζηλω; B reads the plural ερισι κ. ζηλοις, which W. and H. put in margin, but it is probably a case of conforming instinctively to the other clauses; cf. the converse change of plural (αι διαθηκαι) into singular in note [2], page 657 (also in B).

[3] For κυριον Ι. Χ. B and Clem. give Χριστον Ιησουν without κυριον, which W. and H. print in margin, keeping κ. Ι. Χ. in text.

sums up all that precedes, but especially vers. 8-10. εἰδότες τὸν καιρόν: ὁ καιρὸς is not "the time" abstractly, but the time they lived in with its moral import, its critical place in the working out of God's designs. It is their time regarded as having a character of its own, full of significance for them. This is unfolded in ὅτι ὥρα ἤδη κ.τ.λ. ἤδη (without waiting longer) is to be construed with ἐγερθῆναι: "it is time for you at once to awake" (Gifford). No Christian should be asleep, yet the ordinary life of all is but drowsy compared with what it should be, and with what it would be, if the Christian hope were perpetually present to us. νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία: for now is salvation nearer us than when we believed. ἡ σωτηρία has here the transcendent eschatological sense: it is the final and complete deliverance from sin and death, and the reception into the heavenly kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. This salvation was always near, to the faith of the Apostles; and with the lapse of time it became, of course, nearer. Yet it has often been remarked that in his later epistles Paul seems to contemplate not merely the possibility, but the probability, that he himself would not live to see it. See 2 Cor. v. 1-10, Phil. i. 23. ὅτε ἐπιστεύσαμεν: when we became Christians, 1 Cor. iii. 5, xv. 2, Gal. ii. 16.

Ver. 12. ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν: the true day dawns only when Christ appears; at present it is night, though a night that has run much of its course. ἀποθώμεθα οὖν τὰ ἔργα τοῦ σκότους. Things that can only be done in the dark—that cannot bear the light of day—are therefore to be put away by the Christian. For ἀποθώμεθα (properly of dress) cf. Jas. i. 21, 1. Pet. ii. 1, Heb. xii. 1. τὰ ὅπλα τοῦ φωτός: for τὰ ὅπλα see on chap. vi. 13, Eph. vi. 11, 1 Thess. v. 8. The idea is that the Christian's life is not a sleep, but a battle. τὰ ὅπλα τοῦ φωτός does not mean "shining armour"; but (on the analogy of τὰ ἔργα τοῦ σκότους) such armour as one can wear when the great day dawns, and we would appear on the Lord's side in the fight. An allusion to the last great battle against the armies of anti-Christ is too remote, and at variance with Paul's use of the figure elsewhere.

Ver. 13. ὡς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ: as one walks in the day, so let us walk εὐσχημόνως. The same adverb is found with the same verb in 1 Thess. iv. 2: A.V. in both places "honestly". The meaning is rather "in seemly fashion," "becomingly"; in 1 Cor. xiv. 40 it is rendered "decently," where also regard for decorum (the æsthetic side of morality) is in view. κῶμοι and μέθαι are again found conjoined in Gal. v. 21; ἔρις and ζῆλος in Gal. v. 20 and 1 Cor. iii. 3. W. and H. following B. put ἔρισι καὶ ζήλοις in margin; the plurals in this case as in the others would indicate the various acts or manifestations of excess, whether in self-indulgence or self-will.

Ver. 14. ἀλλὰ ἐνδύσασθε τὸν Κ. Ἰ. Χριστόν. ἀλλὰ emphasises the contrast between the true Christian life and that [a] Acts xviii. 26; Ch. xv. 7; Philemon v. 12, 17. [b] Ch. i. 21.

XIV. 1. TON δὲ ἀσθενοῦντα τῇ πίστει [a] προσλαμβάνεσθε, μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις [b] διαλογισμῶν. 2. [a]Ὃς μὲν πιστεύει φαγεῖν πάντα, ὁ δὲ which has just been described. The Christian puts on the Lord Jesus Christ, according to Paul's teaching, in baptism (cf. Gal. iii. 27), as the solemn deliberate act in which he identifies himself, by faith, with Christ in His death and resurrection (chap. vi. 3). But the Christian life is not exhausted in this act, which is rather the starting-point for a putting on of Christ in the ethical sense, a "clothing of the soul in the moral disposition and habits of Christ" (Gifford); or as the Apostle himself puts it in vi. 11, a reckoning of ourselves to be dead to sin but alive to God in Christ Jesus. Every time we perform an ethical act of this kind we put on the Lord Jesus Christ more fully. But the principle of all such acts is the Spirit of Christ dwelling in us (chaps. vi.-viii.), and it is the essential antagonism of the spirit to the flesh which determines the form of the last words: καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς πρόνοιαν μὴ ποιεῖσθε εἰς ἐπιθυμίας. It is to inquire too curiously if we inquire whether σάρξ here is used in the physiological sense = the body, or in the moral sense = libidinosa caro (as Fritzsche argues): the significance of the word in Paul depends on the fact that in experience these two meanings are indubitably if not inseparably related. Taking the flesh as it is, forethought or provision for it—an interest in it which consults for it, and makes it an object—can only have one end, viz., its ἐπιθυμίαι. All such interest therefore is forbidden as inconsistent with putting on the Lord Jesus Christ in the power of the Holy Spirit.

CHAPTER XIV. 1-XV. 13. One subject is before the Apostle's mind throughout the whole of this section—the relations of "the strong" and "the weak" in the Church at Rome. It is connected in a variety of ways, which are felt rather than expressed, with what precedes. Thus it is pervaded by the same sense of the supreme importance of mutual love among Christians which characterises chaps. xii. and xiii. It makes use, in much the same way as chap. xiii. 11-14, of the impending judgment (xiv. 10), to quicken the sense of individual and personal responsibility. Possibly, too, there is a more formal connection with chap. xiii. Paul has been warning against the indulgence of the flesh (xiii. 14), and this prompts him, by contrast, to speak of those who by an inadequate appreciation of Christian liberty were practising an "over-scrupulous asceticism". There has been much discussion as to who "the weak" and "the strong" respectively were. The weakness is weakness in respect of faith; the weak man is one who does not fully appreciate what his Christianity means; in particular, he does not see that the soul which has committed itself to Christ for salvation is emancipated from all law but that which is involved in its responsibility to Him. Hence his conscience is fettered by scruples in regard to customs dating from pre-Christian days. The scruples in question here were connected with the use of flesh and wine, and with the religious observance of certain days (whether as fasts or feasts is open to question). Possibly the persons indulging such scruples were Jewish Christians, but they need not have been. They were certainly not legalists in principle, making the observance of the Jewish law or any part of it an essential condition of the Christian salvation; otherwise Paul, as the Epistle to the Galatians shows, would have addressed them in a different tone. Further, the Jewish law does not prescribe abstinence from wine or from animal food; and there is no suggestion here, as in 1 Cor. 8, that the difficulty was about food that had been offered in sacrifice to false gods. Hence the influence at work in the Roman Church in producing this scrupulosity of conscience was probably of Essene origin, and akin to that which Paul subsequently treats with greater severity at Colossae (Col. ii. 16). At Rome the scruples were only scruples, and though there was danger in them because they rested on a defective apprehension of Christianity, they could be tenderly dealt with; at Colossae they had grown into or adapted themselves to a philosophy of religion which was fatal to Christianity; hence the change of tone. But though "the weak" need not have been Jews, the scruples in which their weakness was expressed, had so far Jewish connections and Jewish affinities; and it is probable, from the way in which (chap. xv. 7-13) the discussion of the relations of the weak and the strong passes over into an exhortation to unity between Jew and Gentile in the Church, that the two classifications had a ἀσθενῶν λάχανα ἐσθίει. 3. ὁ ἐσθίων τὸν μὴ ἐσθίοντα μὴ [c] ἐξουθενείτω, καὶ ὁ μὴ [1] ἐσθίων τὸν ἐσθίοντα μὴ κρινέτω· ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν προσελάβετο. 4. σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ κρίνων ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην; τῷ ἰδίῳ κυρίῳ στήκει ἢ πίπτει· σταθήσεται δέ· δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν [2] ὁ Θεὸς στῆσαι αὐτόν. 5. Ὃς μὲν κρίνει [3] ἡμέραν παρ' ἡμέραν, ὃς δὲ κρίνει πᾶσαν

c 1 Cor. i. 28; vi. 4; xvi. 11.

[1] For και ο μη ℵ[3]D[3]LP, read with ℵ[1]ABCD[1] ο δε μη.

[2] For δυνατος γαρ εστιν ℵABCD[1]F and all edd. read δυνατει γαρ. ο θεος DFL; but ℵABCP (and all edd.) ο κυριος.

[3] ος μεν κρινει ℵ[3]BDFL; ος μεν γαρ κρινει ℵ[1]ACP latt. Weiss regards the γαρ as a mere interpolation (cf. the case in note [1], page 602); Tischdf. inserts; W. and H. bracket.

general correspondence; the weak would be Jews or persons under Jewish influence; the strong would be Gentiles, or persons at least who understood the Gospel as it was preached to the Gentiles by Paul.

Ver. 1. τὸν δὲ ἀσθενοῦντα: as Godet points out, the part. as opposed to ἀσθενῆ, denotes one who is for the time feeble, but who may become strong. τῇ πίστει: in respect of faith, i.e.—in Paul's sense of the word—in respect of his saving reliance on Christ and all that it involves: see above. One is weak in respect of faith who does not understand that salvation is of faith from first to last, and that faith is secured by its own entireness and intensity, not by a timorous scrupulosity of conscience. προσλαμβάνεσθαι is often used of God's gracious acceptance of men, but also of men welcoming other men to their society and friendship, 2 Macc. viii. 1, x. 15. μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν: not with a view to deciding (or passing sentence on) his doubts. The διαλογισμοί are the movements of thought in the weak man, whose anxious mind will not be at peace; no censure of any kind is implied by the word. The strong, who welcome him to the fellowship of the Church, are to do so unreservedly, not with the purpose of judging and ruling his mind by their own. For διάκρισεις see 1 Cor. xii. 10, Heb. v. 14.

Ver. 2. ὃς μέν: cf. ver. 5, ix. 21. πιστεύει φαγεῖν πάντα: has confidence to eat all things. See Winer, p. 405. Gifford quotes Demosthenes, p. 88: προέσθαι δὲ τὴν προῖκ' οὐκ ἐπίστευσεν: "he had not confidence, i.e., was too cautious, to give up the dowry". This use of πιστεύειν shows that πίστις to Paul was essentially an ethical principle; the man who was strong in it had moral independence, courage, and originality. ὁ δὲ ἀσθενῶν λάχανα ἐσθίει: it is impossible to suppose that Paul here is "writing quite generally"; he must have had a motive for saying what he does, and it can only be found in the fact that he knew there were Christians in Rome who abstained from the use of flesh.

Ver. 3. ὁ ἐσθίων . . . μὴ ἐξουθενείτω κ.τ.λ. Paul passes no sentence on either party, but warns both of the temptations to which they are exposed. He who eats will be inclined to contempt—to sneer at the scruples of the weak as mere prejudice or obscurantism; he who does not eat will be inclined to censoriousness—to pronounce the strong, who uses his liberty, no better than he should be. This censoriousness is forbidden, because God (ὁ θεὸς is emphatic by position) has received the strong into the Church, and therefore his place in it is not to be questioned.

Ver. 4. σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ κρίνων ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην; the sharpness of this rebuke (cf. ix. 20) shows that Paul, with all his love and consideration for the weak, was alive to the possibility of a tyranny of the weak, and repressed it in its beginnings. It is easy to lapse from scrupulousness about one's own conduct into Pharisaism about that of others. οἰκέτης is rare in the N.T. Paul has no other example, and may have used it here for the suggestion (which δοῦλος has not) that the person referred to belonged to the house. τῷ ἰδίῳ κυρίῳ στήκει ἢ πίπτει: for the verbs in the moral sense see 1 Cor. x. 12. The dative is dat. comm. It is his own Lord who is concerned—it is His interest which is involved and to Him (not to you) he must answer—as he stands or falls. σταθήσεται δέ: but he shall be made to stand, i.e., shall be preserved in the integrity of his Christian character. δυνατεῖ γὰρ ὁ Κύριος στῆσαι αὐτόν: for the Lord has power to keep

d Ch. viii. 5.

ἡμέραν. ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ νοῒ πληροφορείσθω. 6. ὁ [d] φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν Κυρίῳ φρονεῖ, καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν Κυρίῳ οὐ φρονεῖ.[1] ὁ ἐσθίων Κυρίῳ ἐσθίει, εὐχαριστεῖ γὰρ τῷ Θεῷ· καὶ ὁ μὴ ἐσθίων Κυρίῳ οὐκ ἐσθίει, καὶ εὐχαριστεῖ τῷ Θεῷ. 7. οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἡμῶν him upright. Paul does not contemplate the strong man falling and being set up again by Christ; but in spite of the perils which liberty brings in its train—and the Apostle is as conscious of them as the most timid and scrupulous Christian could be—he is confident that Christian liberty, through the grace and power of Christ, will prove a triumphant moral success.

[1] και ο μη φρονων την ημεραν Κυριω ου φρονει om. ℵABC[1]DF, vulg., Copt., etc. Almost all crit. edd. follow these authorities and omit; but Alf. only brackets the words, holding that the omission may be due to homœoteleuton. The clause is found in C[3]LP, Syr., Chrys., Thdrt. There are other instances of homœoteleuton in the attestation of this passage, as Alf. points out. Thus 66[1] omits from ημεραν to ημεραν, 71 from εσθιει to εσθιει, and L from τω θεω to τω θεω. Insert και before ο εσθιων with ℵABCDFL.

Ver. 5. The Apostle passes from the question of food to one of essentially the same kind—the religious observance of days. This is generally regarded as quite independent of the other; but Weiss argues from ver. 6, where the text which he adopts in common with most editors seems to contrast "him who observes the day" with "him who eats," that what we have here is really a subdivision of the same general subject. In other words, among those who abstained from flesh and wine, some did so always, others only on certain days. "To observe the day" might in itself mean to observe it by fasting—this would be the case if one's ordinary custom were to use flesh and wine; or it might mean to observe it by feasting—this would be the case if one ordinarily abstained. Practically, it makes no difference whether this reading of the passage is correct or not: Paul argues the question of the distinction of days as if it were an independent question, much as he does in Col. ii. It is not probable that there is any reference either to the Jewish Sabbath or to the Lord's Day, though the principle on which the Apostle argues defines the Christian attitude to both. Nothing whatever in the Christian religion is legal or statutory, not even the religious observance of the first day of the week; that observance originated in faith, and is not what it should be except as it is freely maintained by faith. For ὃς μὲν see ver. 2. κρίνει ἡμ. παρ' ἡμέραν means judges one day "in comparison with," or "to the passing by of" another: cf. i. 25, Winer, 503 f. Side by side with this, κρίνει πᾶσαν ἡμέραν can only mean, makes no distinction between days, counts all alike. In such questions the important thing is not that the decision should be this or that, but that each man should have an intelligent assurance as to his own conduct: it is, indeed, by having to take the responsibility of deciding for oneself, without the constraint of law, that an intelligent Christian conscience is developed. For πληροφορείσθω cf. iv. 21, and Lightfoot's note on Col. iv. 12. νοῦς (vii. 23) is the moral intelligence, or practical reason; by means of this, enlightened by the Spirit, the Christian becomes a law to himself.

Ver. 6. The indifference of the questions at issue, from the religious point of view, is shown by the fact that both parties, by the line of action they choose, have the same end in view—viz., the interest of the Lord. ὁ φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν cf. Col. iii. 2. The setting of the mind upon the day implies of course some distinction between it and others. The clause καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν . . . οὐ φρονεῖ is omitted by most editors, but its absence from most MSS. might still be due to homœoteleuton. εὐχαριστεῖ: thanksgiving to God consecrates every meal, whether it be the ascetic one of him who abstains from wine and flesh (ὁ μὴ ἐσθίων), or the more generous one of him who uses both (ὁ ἐσθίων): cf. Acts xxvii. 35, 1 Cor. x. 30, 1 Tim. iv. 3-5. The thanksgiving shows that in either case the Christian is acting εἰς δόξαν θεοῦ (1 Cor. x. 31), and therefore that the Lord's interest is safe.

Ver. 7 f. οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτῷ ζῇ κ.τ.λ. The truth which has been affirmed in regard to the Christian's use of food, and observance or non-observance of days, is here based on a larger ἑαυτῷ ζῇ, καὶ οὐδεὶς ἑαυτῷ ἀποθνήσκει. 8. ἐάν τε γὰρ ζῶμεν, τῷ Κυρίῳ ζῶμεν· ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀποθνήσκομεν. ἐάν τε οὖν ζῶμεν, ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τοῦ Κυρίου [e] ἐσμέν. 9. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ Χριστὸς καὶ[1] ἀπέθανε καὶ ἀνέστη καὶ ἀνέζησεν, ἵνα καὶ νεκρῶν καὶ ζώντων κυριεύσῃ. 10. Σὺ δὲ τί κρίνεις τὸν ἀδελφόν σου; ἢ καὶ σὺ τί ἐξουθενεῖς τὸν ἀδελφόν σου; πάντες γὰρ [f] παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ.[2] 11. γέγραπται γάρ, "Ζῶ ἐγώ, λέγει Κύριος, ὅτι ἐμοὶ κάμψει πᾶν γόνυ, καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσεται[3] τῷ

e Ch. viii. 9; 1 Cor iii. 23.

f Acts xxvii. 24.

[1] Om. και before απεθανε with ℵ[1]ABC[1]D[1]FP. For ανεστη και ανεζησεν read only εζησεν with ℵABCDLP and all edd.

[2] του Χριστου ℵ[3]C[2]LP: του θεου ℵ[1]ABC[1]DF and all edd.

[3] εξομολογησεται πασα γλωσσα BD[1-3]F (and A of LXX); but πασα γλωσσα εξομολογησεται ℵACD[2]LP. The latter order is followed by Weiss, W. and H., and Tischdf. Probably the verb was put first in BF, etc., to conform to the parallel clause.

truth of which it is a part. His whole life belongs not to himself, but to his Lord. "No one of us liveth to himself," does not mean, "every man's conduct affects others for better or worse, whether he will or not"; it means, "no Christian is his own end in life; what is always present to his mind, as the rule of his conduct, is the will and the interest of his Lord". The same holds of his dying. He does not choose either the time or the mode of it, like a Roman Stoic, to please himself. He dies when the Lord will, as the Lord will, and even by his death glorifies God. In ver. 14 ff. Paul comes to speak of the influence of conduct upon others; but here there is no such thing in view; the prominence given to τῷ κυρίῳ (τοῦ κυρίου) three times in ver. 8 shows that the one truth present to his mind is the all-determining significance, for Christian conduct, of the relation to Christ. This (ideally) determines everything, alike in life and death; and all that is determined by it is right.

Ver. 9. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ . . . ἵνα: cf. 2 Cor. ii. 9. ἔζησεν refers to the resurrection, as is shown by the order of the words, the connection elsewhere in Paul of Lordship with the resurrection (cf. Phil. ii. 9 ff.), and the aorist tense which describes an act, and not the continued existence of Christ on earth (Sanday and Headlam): cf. Rev. ii. 8 (ὃς ἐγένετο νεκρὸς κ. ἔζησεν), xx. 4 f. ἵνα denotes God's purpose in subjecting His Son to this experience. We must not suppose that ἀπέθανεν is specially connected with νεκρῶν and ἔζησεν with ζώντων; there is the same mannerism as in iv. 25. Rather is it through Christ's resurrection that His lordship over the realm of death is established, so that not even in that dark world do those who are His cease to stand in their old relation to Him. τοῦ κυρίου ἐσμὲν holds alike in the seen and the unseen.

Ver. 10. Σὺ δὲ: thou, in contrast with the one Lord and Judge of all. In face of our common responsibility to Him, how dare we judge each other? τὸν ἀδελφόν σου: another reason for not judging: it is inconsistent with a recognition of the brotherhood of believers. ἢ καὶ σὺ τί ἐξουθενεῖς κ.τ.λ. Or thou, again, why despisest thou? etc. This is addressed to the strong and free thinking, as the first question is to the weak and scrupulous Christian. Censoriousness and contempt are never anything but sins, not to be practised but shunned, and that all the more when we remember that we shall all stand at one bar. παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ θεοῦ God is the universal Judge. In 2 Cor. v. 10 we have τῷ βήματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ but here τοῦ θεοῦ is the correct reading We cannot suppose that by τοῦ θεοῦ here Paul means Christ in His Divine nature; the true way to mediate between the two expressions is seen in chap. ii. 16, Acts xvii. 31. When we all stand at that bar—and it should be part of our spiritual environment always—no one will look at his brother with either censoriousness or contempt.

Ver. 11. γέγραπται γάρ: the universal judgment proved from Scripture, Is. lv. 23. Paul follows the LXX, but very freely. For ζῶ ἐγὼ λέγει κύριος the LXX has κατ' ἐμαυτοῦ ὀμνύω. The same passage is quoted more freely still

Θεῷ ᵐ. 12. ἄρα οὖν[1] ἕκαστος ἡμῶν περὶ ἑαυτοῦ λόγον δώσει τῷ Θεῷ. 13. Μηκέτι οὖν ἀλλήλους κρίνωμεν· ἀλλὰ τοῦτο κρίνατε μᾶλλον, τὸ μὴ τιθέναι πρόσκομμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ ἢ ᵍ σκάνδαλον.[2] 14. οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, ὅτι οὐδὲν κοινὸν δι' ἑαυτοῦ·[3] εἰ μὴ τῷ λογιζομένῳ τι κοινὸν εἶναι, ἐκείνῳ κοινόν· 15. εἰ δὲ[4] διὰ βρῶμα ὁ ἀδελφός σου λυπεῖται, οὐκ ἔτι κατὰ ἀγάπην περιπατεῖς. μὴ τῷ

g Matt. xvi. 23; xviii. 7; Ch. xvi. 17; Rev. ii. 14.

[1] ουν ℵACEL, all cursives, is put in text by Tdf. and bracketed by Alf. and W. and H. It is omitted in BD¹FP¹, Syr. and by Weiss, who thinks it much more natural that the common Pauline formula αρα ουν should have been completed than mutilated. The authorities are divided in the same way between δωσει and αποδωσει: BDF supporting the latter, which is adopted by Weiss, and ℵAC the former which is adopted by W. and H. So also Weiss omits τω θεω with BF; but W. and H. bracket it, as it is found in ℵACDLP.

[2] το μη τιθεναι προσκομμα τω αδελφω η σκανδαλον. προσκομμα and η are both om. by B, Syr., Arm. Weiss thinks this gives the true reading, το μη τιθεναι τω αδελφω σκανδαλον, and W. and H. put it in margin.

[3] δι εαυτου ℵBC, followed by W. and H., Weiss, Alf.; δι αυτου ADEFGL, and of edd. Lachm. and Treg.

[4] For ει δε read ει γαρ with ℵABCDFP and all edd.

in Phil. ii. 10 f. to describe the exaltation of Christ. In Isaiah it refers to the coming of God's kingdom, when all nations shall worship Him. ἐξομολογήσεται τῷ θεῷ = shall give thanks or praise to God: xv. 9, Mt. xi. 25, and often in LXX = הוֹדָה. In the sense of "confess" it takes the accusative.

Ver. 12. ἄρα (οὖν): So then—conclusion of this aspect of the subject: cf. v. 18, vii. 25. Every word in this sentence is emphatic: ἕκαστος, περὶ ἑαυτοῦ, λόγον δώσει, τῷ θεῷ. For λόγον in this sense see 1 Pet. iv. 5, Heb. xiii. 17, Matt. xii. 36, Acts xix. 40.

Vv. 13-23. The Apostle now proceeds to argue the question of Christian conduct in things indifferent from another point of view—that of the influence which our conduct may have on others, and of the consideration which is due to them. μηκέτι οὖν ἀλλήλους κρίνωμεν: thus much follows from what has been said already, and κρίνωμεν therefore forbids both the censorious and the contemptuous estimate of others. ἀλλὰ τοῦτο κρίνατε μᾶλλον: be this your judgment rather. Cf. 1 Cor. ii. 2, vii. 37. τὸ μὴ τιθέναι πρόσκομμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ: this is of course addressed to the liberal party. For πρόσκομμα see 1 Cor. viii. 9. The word does not occur in the Gospels, but it is a remarkable fact that in most of our Lord's express teaching about sin, it is sin in the character of σκάνδαλον, a snare or stumbling-block to others, with which He deals. Paul develops his ideas quite freely from his conception of faith, but in all probability he was familiar with what Jesus taught (Matt. xviii.).

Ver. 14. In principle, the Apostle sides with the strong. He has no scruples about meats or drinks or days. ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ: it is as a Christian, not as a libertine, that Paul has this conviction; in Christ Jesus he is sure that there is nothing in the world essentially unclean; all things can be consecrated and Christianised by Christian use. κοινόν: cf. Acts x. 14, 28, Rev. xxi. 27. It is the opposite of ἅγιον, and signifies that which is not and cannot be brought into relation to God. εἰ μὴ τῷ λογιζομένῳ κ.τ.λ. Though there is nothing which in itself has this character, some things may have it subjectively, i.e., in the judgment of a particular person who cannot help (from some imperfection of conscience) regarding them so; to him (ἐκείνῳ emphatic) they are what his conscience makes them; and his conscience (unenlightened as it is) is entitled to respect. For εἰ μὴ cf. Matt. xii. 14, Gal. ii. 16.

Ver. 15. Many expositors here supply something; e.g., "You must have respect therefore for his scruples, although you may not share them, for if," etc. (Sanday and Headlam); but it seems simpler to connect the γὰρ with the leading idea in the writer's mind, Put no stumbling-block before a brother, for, etc. διὰ βρῶμα is contemptuous: "for the sake of food" βρώματί σου ἐκεῖνον ἀπόλλυε, ὑπὲρ οὗ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανε. 16. Μὴ [h] βλασφημείσθω οὖν ὑμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν. 17. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ [i] Θεοῦ βρῶσις καὶ πόσις, ἀλλὰ δικαιοσύνη καὶ εἰρήνη καὶ χαρὰ ἐν Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ· 18. ὁ γὰρ ἐν τούτοις [1] [k] δουλεύων τῷ Χριστῷ h Ch. iii. 8. i 1 Cor. iv. 20. k Matt. vi. 24; Ch. xvi. 18; Eph. vi. 7; Col. iii. 24.

[1] For εν τουτοις ℵ[3]D[3]L read εν τουτω with ℵ[1]ABCD[1]F and all edd.

thy brother is grieved. βρῶμα is the food which the strong eats in spite of his brother's scruples. λυπεῖται need not imply that the weak is induced, against his conscience, to eat also (though that is contemplated as following); it may quite well express the uneasiness and distress with which the weak sees the strong pursue a line of conduct which his conscience cannot approve. Even to cause such pain as this is a violation of the law of Christ. He who does it has ceased to walk κατὰ ἀγάπην, according to love, which is the supreme Christian rule. In the sense of this, and at the same time aware that the weak in these circumstances may easily be cajoled or overborne into doing what his conscience disapproves, the Apostle exclaims abruptly, μὴ τῷ βρώματί σου ἐκεῖνον ἀπόλλυε ὑπὲρ οὗ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν. To tamper with conscience, it is here implied, is ruin: and the selfish man who so uses his Christian liberty as to lead a weak brother to tamper with his conscience is art and part in that ruin. The wanton contempt such liberty shows for the spirit and example of Christ is emphasised both here and in 1 Cor. viii. 11 f. Ne pluris feceris tuum cibum quam Christus vitam suam.

Ver. 16. μὴ βλασφημείσθω οὖν ὑμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν. τὸ ἀγαθόν is somewhat in definite. It has been taken (1) as the good common to all Christians — the Messianic salvation—which will be blasphemed by the non-Christian, when they see the wantonness with which Christians rob each other of it by such conduct as Paul reprobates in ver. 15; and (2) as Christian liberty, the freedom of conscience which has been won by Christ, but which will inevitably get a bad name if it is exercised in an inconsiderate loveless fashion. The latter meaning alone seems relevant. For βλασφ. see 1 Cor. x. 30.

Ver. 17. Insistence and strife on such matters are inconsistent with Christianity: οὐ γάρ ἐστιν κ.τ.λ. Usually in Paul ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ is transcendent; the kingdom is that which comes with the second advent, and is the inheritance of believers; it is essentially (as it is called in 2 Tim. iv. 18) a βασ. ἐπουράνιον. See 1 Thess. ii. 12, 2 Thess. i. 5, 1 Cor. vi. 9 f., xv. 50, Gal. v. 21. This use of the expression, however, does not exclude another, which is more akin to what we find in the Gospels, and regards the Kingdom of God as in some sense also present: we have examples of this here, and in 1 Cor. iv. 20: perhaps also in Acts xx. 25. No doubt for Paul the transcendent associations would always cling to the name, so that we should lose a great deal of what it meant for him if we translated it by "the Christian religion" or any such form of words. It always included the reference to the glory to be revealed. βρῶσις κ. πόσις: eating and drinking—the acts, as opposed to βρῶμα, ver. 15, the thing eaten. ἀλλὰ δικαιοσύνη κ. εἰρήνη κ. χαρὰ ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ: are these words ethical or religious? Does δικ. denote "justification," the right relation of man to God? or "righteousness," in the sense of just dealing? Is εἰρήνη peace with God, the result of justification (as in v. 1), or peace among the members of the Church, the result of consideration for each other? The true answer must be that Paul did not thus distinguish ethical and religious: the words are religious primarily, but the ethical meaning is so far from being excluded by the religious that it is secured by it, and by it alone. That the religious import ought to be put in the forefront is shown by χαρὰ ἐν πν. ἁγ. which is a grace, not a virtue. In comparison with these great spiritual blessings, what Christian could trouble the Church about eating or drinking? For their sake, no self-denial is too great.

Ver. 18. ἐν τούτῳ: "on the principle implied by these virtues" (Sanday and Headlam). One may serve Christ either eating or abstaining, but no one can serve Him whose conduct exhibits indifference to righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. δόκιμος τοῖς ἀνθρώποις: so that there can be no occasion given to any one to blaspheme. Cf. xvi. 10, 2 Tim. ii. 15, Jas. i. 12. A sound Christian character wins even the world's approval.

εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ δόκιμος τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. 19. ἄρα οὖν τὰ τῆς εἰρήνης [1]διώκωμεν,[1] καὶ τὰ τῆς οἰκοδομῆς τῆς εἰς ἀλλήλους. 20. Μὴ ἕνεκεν βρώματος κατάλυε τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ. πάντα μὲν [m] καθαρὰ, ἀλλὰ κακὸν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ διὰ προσκόμματος ἐσθίοντι. 21. καλὸν τὸ μὴ φαγεῖν [n] κρέα, μηδὲ πιεῖν οἶνον, μηδὲ ἐν ᾧ ὁ ἀδελφὸς

l Ch. xii. 13; 1 Cor. xiv. 1; 1 Thess. v. 15.
m Tit. i. 15.
n 1 Cor. viii. 13.

[1] διωκωμεν CDE, latt.; διωκομεν ℵABFLP. According to S. and H. διωκωμεν is a "somewhat obvious correction," and less expressive than διωκομεν. This is also the view of Weiss and Tischdf. But W. and H. put διωκωμεν in text and διωκομεν in marg.

Ver. 19. ἄρα οὖν: see ver. 12. τὰ τῆς εἰρήνης is not materially different from τὴν εἰρήνην: all that belongs to, makes for, peace: we cannot argue from its use here that the word must have exactly the same shade of meaning in ver. 17. διώκωμεν: the indicative διώκομεν is very strongly supported, and would indicate the actual pursuit of all true Christians: "Our aim is peace," and τὰ τῆς οἰκοδομῆς τῆς εἰς ἀλλήλους = mutual upbuilding. Cf. 1 Thess. v. 11, 1 Cor. xiv. 26. The practical rule implied here is that, when anything is morally indifferent to me, before I act on that conviction, I must ask how such action will affect the peace of the Church, and the Christian growth of others.

Ver. 20. Paul repeats the rule of ver. 15. μὴ κατάλυε: the opposite of οἰκοδομεῖν. See Matt. xxvi. 61, Gal. ii. 18. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ θεοῦ (1 Cor. iii. 9) what God has wrought, i.e., the Christian Church (which is destroyed by such wanton conduct) or the Christian character and standing of an individual (which may be ruined in the same way). πάντα μὲν καθαρὰ: this is the principle of the strong, which Paul concedes (μὲν); the difficulty is to get the enlightened to understand that an abstract principle can never be the rule of Christian conduct. The Christian, of course, admits the principle, but he must act from love. To know that all things are clean does not (as is often assumed) settle what the Christian has to do in any given case. It does not define his duty, but only makes clear his responsibility. Acknowledging that principle, and looking with love at other Christians, and the effect of any given line of conduct on them, he has to define his duty for himself. All meat is clean, but not all eating. On the contrary (ἀλλὰ), κακὸν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ διὰ προσκόμματος ἐσθίοντι; sin is involved in the case of the man who eats with offence. Some take this as a warning to the weak; but the whole tone of the passage, which is rather a warning to the strong, and the verse immediately following, which surely continues the meaning and is also addressed to the strong, decide against this. The man who eats with offence is therefore the man by whose eating another is made to stumble. For διὰ προσκόμματος see ii. 27, Winer, p. 475.

Ver. 21. A maxim for the strong. For καλὸν cf. Mark xiv. 6. Abstinence in order that others may not be made to stumble is morally noble. ἐν ᾧ: usually προσκόπτειν takes the Dat., ix. 32, 1 Pet. ii. 8. That there were those in the Church at Rome who had scruples as to the use of flesh and wine, see on ver. 2. Paul would not have written the chapter at all unless there had been scruples of some kind; and he would not have taken these examples if the scruples had concerned something quite different.

Ver. 22. The true text is σὺ πίστιν ἣν ἔχεις: "the faith that thou hast, have thou to thyself in the sight of God". The verse is still addressed to the strong. The faith he has is the enlightened faith which enables him to see that all things are clean; such faith does not lose its value though it is not flaunted in reckless action. On κατὰ σεαυτὸν Wetstein quotes Heliod. vii. 16: κατὰ σαυτὸν ἔχε καὶ μηδενὶ φράζε. Cf. 1 Cor. xiv. 28 (ἑαυτῷ δὲ λαλείτω καὶ τῷ θεῷ). ἐνώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ reminds the strong once more (ver. 10) that the fullest freedom must be balanced by the fullest sense of responsibility to God. In another sense than that of 1 Cor. ix. 21 the Christian made free by faith must feel himself μὴ ἄνομος θεοῦ ἀλλ' ἔννομος Χριστοῦ. μακάριος ὁ μὴ κρίνων ἑαυτὸν ἐν ᾧ δοκιμάζει: "a motive to charitable self-restraint addressed to the strong in faith" (Gifford). It is a rare felicity (this is always what μακάριος denotes) to have a conscience untroubled by scruples—in Paul's words, not to judge oneself in the matter which one approves (sc., by his own practice); σου προσκόπτει ἢ σκανδαλίζεται ἢ ἀσθενεῖ.[1] 22. σὺ πίστιν[2] ἔχεις; κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ· μακάριος ὁ μὴ κρίνων ἑαυτὸν ἐν ᾧ ° δοκιμάζει. 23. ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος, ἐὰν φάγῃ, κατακέκριται, ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως· πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἁμαρτία ἐστίν.[3]

o 1 Cor. xvi. 3.

[1] η σκανδαλιζεται η ασθενει om. ℵ[1]AC, Syr., Copt., Aeth.; ins. ℵ[3]BDFLP, vulg., Sah. S. and H. call this a very clear instance of a Western reading in B, and therefore justify the omission with W. and H. and Tischdf.; but Weiss, who thinks η ασθενει is too difficult to be explained as a gloss, retains the words.

[2] After πιστιν ins. ην ℵABC; so most edd., omitting the mark of interrogation after εχεις. For σαυτον read σεαυτον with ℵABCDKLP, etc.

[3] After αμαρτια εστιν the great doxology of chap. xvi. 25-27 is inserted by ALP and most other MSS., though some, including AP, have it in both places; om. here ℵBCD[1], vulg., Syr.

and he who has this felicity should ask no more. In particular, he should not run the risk of injuring a brother's conscience, merely for the sake of exercising in a special way the spiritual freedom which he has the happiness to possess —whether he exercises it in that way or not.

Ver. 23. ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος ἐὰν φάγῃ κατακέκριται: such, on the other hand, is the unhappy situation of the weak—a new motive for charity. For διακριν. cf. iv. 20, Jas. i. 6, Mark xi. 23. The weak Christian cannot be clear in his own mind that it is permissible to do as the strong does; it may be, he thinks one moment, and the next, it may not be; and if he follows the strong and eats in this state of mind, κατακέκριται he is condemned. The condemnation is absolute: it is not only that his own conscience pronounces clearly against him after the act, but that such action incurs the condemnation of God. It is inconsistent with that conscientiousness through which alone man can be trained in goodness; the moral life would become chaotic and irredeemable if conscience were always to be treated so. ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, sc., ἔφαγεν. The man is condemned because he did not eat ἐκ πίστεως: and this is generalised in the last clause πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως ἁμαρτία ἐστίν. All that is not of faith is sin; and therefore this eating, as not of faith, is sin. It is impossible to give πίστις here a narrower sense than Christianity: see ver. 1. Everything a Christian man does that cannot justify itself to him on the ground of his relation to Christ is sin. It is too indefinite to render omne quod non est ex fide as Thomas Aquinas does by omne quod est contra conscientiam: it would need to be contra Christianam conscientiam. All a man cannot do remembering that he is Christ's —all he cannot do with the judgment-seat (ver. 10) and the Cross (ver. 15) and all their restraints and inspirations present to his mind—is sin. Of course this is addressed to Christians, and there is no rule in it for judging the character or conduct of those who do not know Christ. To argue from it that works done before justification are sin, or that the virtues of the heathen are glittering vices, is to misapply it altogether.

CHAPTER XV.—Vv. 1-13. The fourteenth chapter has a certain completeness in itself, and we can understand that if the Epistle to the Romans was sent as a circular letter to different churches, some copies of it might have ended with xiv. 23: to which the doxology, xvi. 25-27, might be loosely appended, as it is in A. L. and many other MSS. But it is manifestly the same subject which is continued in xv. 1-13. The Apostle still treats of the relations of the weak and the strong, though with a less precise reference to the problems of the Roman Church at the time than in chap. xiv. His argument widens into a plea for patience and forbearance (enforced by the example of Christ) and for the union of all Christians, Jew and Gentile, in common praise. It seems natural to infer from this that the distinction between weak and strong had some relation to that between Jew and Gentile; the prejudices and scruples of the weak were probably of Jewish origin.

Ver. 1. ὀφείλομεν δὲ: what constitutes the obligation is seen in chap. xiv. It arises out of our relation to others in Christ. Looking at them in the light of what He has done for them as well as for us, and in the light of our responsibility a Acts xiv. 8.

XV. 1. Ὀφείλομεν δὲ ἡμεῖς οἱ δυνατοὶ τὰ ἀσθενήματα τῶν a ἀδυνάτων βαστάζειν, καὶ μὴ ἑαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν· 2. ἕκαστος γὰρ [1] ἡμῶν τῷ πλησίον ἀρεσκέτω εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἰκοδομήν. 3. καὶ γὰρ ὁ Χριστὸς οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἤρεσεν, ἀλλά, καθὼς γέγραπται, "Οἱ ὀνειδισμοὶ τῶν ὀνειδιζόντων σε ἐπέπεσον ἐπ' ἐμέ". 4. ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη,[2] εἰς τὴν ἡμετέραν διδασκαλίαν προεγράφη· ἵνα διὰ τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ

[1] Om. γαρ with ℵABCDFLP.

[2] οσα γαρ προεγραφη ℵACD³LP; so most edd. B, latt., Aeth. give εγραφη. D¹ and F have προσεγραφη, which confirms the reading of ℵAC. προεγραφη ινα ℵ³ALP; but εγραφη ℵ¹BCDF, vulg. and all edd. After και ins. δια ℵABCL. After εχωμεν B adds της παρακλησεως, which W. and H. put in marg.; but the addition is as inept as that of λογων in the same MS. at ver. 18, and to be explained in the same way (an anticipation of a later word).

to the Judge of all, we cannot question that this is our duty. ἡμεῖς οἱ δυνατοί: Paul classes himself with the strong, and makes the obligation his own. δυνατοὶ is of course used as in chap. xiv.: not as in 1 Cor. i. 26. τὰ ἀσθενήματα τῶν ἀδυνάτων: the things in which their infirmity comes out, its manifestations: here only in N.T. Paul says "bear" their infirmities: because the restrictions and limitations laid by this charity on the liberty of the strong are a burden to them. For the word βαστάζειν and the idea see Matt. viii. 17, Gal. vi. 2, 5, 17. μὴ ἑαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν: it is very easy for self-pleasing and mere wilfulness to shelter themselves under the disguise of Christian principle. But there is only one Christian principle which has no qualification—love.

Ver. 2. τῷ πλησίον ἀρεσκέτω: this rule is qualified by εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἰκοδομήν. Without such qualification it is "men-pleasing" (Gal. i. 10) and inconsistent with fidelity to Christ. Cf. 1 Cor. x. 33, where Paul presents himself as an example of the conduct he here commends. For εἰς and πρὸς in this verse cf. chap. iii. 25 f. According to Gifford εἰς marks the "aim"—the advantage or benefit of our neighbour—and πρὸς the standard of reference; the only "good" for a Christian is to be "built up" in his Christian character.

Ver. 3. καὶ γὰρ ὁ Χριστὸς κ.τ.λ. The duty of not pleasing ourselves is enforced by the example of Christ: He did not please Himself either. If this required proof, we might have expected Paul to prove it by adducing some incident in Christ's life; but this is not what he does. He appeals to a psalm, which is in many places in the N.T. treated as having some reference to Christ (e.g., John ii. 17 = Ps. lxix. 9, John xv. 25 = Ps. lxix. 4, Matt. xxvii. 27-30 = Ps. lxix. 12, Matt. xxvii. 34 = Ps. lxix. 21, Rom. xi. 9 = Ps. lxix. 22, Acts i. 20 = Ps. lxix. 25: see Perowne, The Psalms, i., p. 561 f.); and the words he quotes from it—words spoken as it were by Christ Himself—describe our Lord's experiences in a way which shows that He was no self-pleaser. If He had been, He would never have given Himself up willingly, as He did, to such a fate. It is hardly conceivable that σε in Paul's quotation indicates the man whom Christ is supposed to address: it can quite well be God, as in the psalm. Some have argued from this indirect proof of Christ's character that Paul had no acquaintance with the facts of His life; but the inference is unsound. It would condemn all the N.T. writers of the same ignorance, for they never appeal to incidents in Christ's life; and this summary of the whole character of Christ, possessing as it did for Paul and his readers the authority of inspiration, was more impressive than any isolated example of non-selfpleasing could have been.

Ver. 4. Here Paul justifies his use of the O.T. ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη = the whole O.T. εἰς τὴν ἡμετέραν διδασκαλίαν ἐγράφη: was written to teach us, and therefore has abiding value. 2 Tim. iii. 16. ἵνα introduces God's purpose, which is wider than the immediate purpose of the Apostle. Paul meant to speak only of bearing the infirmities of the weak, but with the quotation of Ps. lxix. 9 there came in the idea of the Christian's sufferings generally, and it is amid them that God's purpose is to be fulfilled. διὰ τῆς ὑπομ. κ. τῆς παρακλ. τῶν γραφῶν κ.τ.λ.: "that through the patience and the comfort wrought by the τῆς παρακλήσεως τῶν γραφῶν τὴν ἐλπίδα ἔχωμεν. 5. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς ὑπομονῆς καὶ τῆς [b]παρακλήσεως δῴη ὑμῖν τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν ἀλλήλοις κατὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν· 6. ἵνα ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι δοξάζητε τὸν Θεὸν καὶ πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 7. Διὸ [c]προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς προσελάβετο ἡμᾶς [1] εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ. 8. λέγω δὲ, Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν [2] [d]διάκονον γεγενῆσθαι περιτομῆς [e]ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας Θεοῦ, εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι τὰς

b 2 Cor. i. 3-7; Heb. vi. 18; xii. 5. c Ch. xiv. 1.
d Gal. ii. 17.
e Ch. i. 5; Phil. ii. 13.

[1] ημας, so BDP cursives; adopted by Weiss, W. and H. text. But υμας is put in marg. by W. and H., and by many edd. in text. It really seems to have arisen from ημας being changed to agree with the preceding context in which the readers are directly addressed. Yet it is strongly supported ℵACD[2,3]FL. Ins. του before θεου ℵABCDFP.

[2] For δε Ιησουν Χριστον read γαρ Χριστον with ℵABC and all edd. γεγενησθαι ℵAELP; γενεσθαι BCDF. The edd. are divided. Tischdf., W. and H., and Treg. marg. read γεγενησθαι; but W. and H. put γενεσθαι in marg., while Lachm. and Treg. have it in text. Weiss thinks the case can only be settled by analogy; and as ℵ, which is the strongest support of γεγενησθαι, quite arbitrarily changes γενεσθαι in Phil. i. 13 into γεγονεναι, he allows that to discredit it here, and reads γενεσθαι.

Scriptures we may have our hope". τὴν ἐλπίδα is the Christian hope, the hope of the glory of God; and the Christian has it as he is able, through the help of God's Word in the Scriptures, to maintain a brave and cheerful spirit amid all the sufferings and reproaches of life. Cf. v. 2-5. This is, if not a digression, at least an expansion of his original idea, and at

Ver. 5 Paul returns to his point in a prayer: the God of the patience and comfort just spoken of grant unto you, etc. τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν ἀλλήλοις κατὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν: cf. xii. 16, where, however, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν with εἰς ἀλλήλους is not quite the same. Paul wishes here that the minds of his readers — their moral judgment and temper—may all be determined by Jesus Christ (for κατὰ, expressing the rule according to which, see chap. viii. 27): in this case there will be the harmony which the disputes of chap. xiv. disturbed.

Ver. 6. ἵνα introduces the ultimate aim of this unanimity. ὁμοθυμαδόν here only in Paul, but eleven times in Acts. ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι: in Greek writers usually ἐξ ἑνὸς στόματος. τὸν θεὸν καὶ πατέρα τοῦ Κ. ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χ. The A.V. renders, "God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," making τοῦ Κυρίου depend on πατέρα only. This rendering does not make God the God of Christ, but defines the only true God as the Father of. Christ. It is defended by Weiss, who appeals to the passages in which "God and Father" is found with no genitive: 1 Cor. xv. 24, Eph. v. 20, Col. iii. 17, Jas. i. 27, iii. 9. The argument is not convincing, especially in view of Eph. i. 17 (ὁ θεὸς τοῦ Κ. ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χ., ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης) and John xx. 17: hence the R.V. is probably right ("the God and Father of our Lord"). When the Church glorifies such a God with one heart and one mouth it will have transcended all the troubles of chap. xiv. It is this accordant praise of all Christians which is the ruling idea in vers. 7-13.

Ver. 7. διὸ προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους: διὸ = that such praise may be possible. For προσλαμβ. see xiv. 1-3. καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς προσελάβετο ὑμᾶς. ὑμᾶς covers both parties in the Church, however they are to be distinguished; if Christ received both, they are bound to receive each other. The last words, εἰς δόξαν τοῦ θεοῦ, are probably to be construed with προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους; they resume the idea of ver. 6 (ἵνα . . . δοξάζητε); the διὸ with which ver. 7 begins starts from that idea of glorifying God, and looks on to it as the end to be attained when all Christians in love receive each other. But the clause has of course a meaning even if attached to what immediately precedes: ὁ Χριστὸς προσελ. ὑμᾶς. Cf. Phil. ii. 11, Eph. i. 12-14. Christ's reception of the Jews led to God's being glorified for His faithfulness; His reception of the Gentiles to God's being glorified for His mercy. So Weiss, who argues that in what follows we have the expansion and proof of the ἐπαγγελίας τῶν πατέρων· 9. τὰ δὲ ἔθνη ὑπὲρ ἐλέους δοξάσαι τὸν Θεόν, καθὼς γέγραπται, "Διὰ τοῦτο [f] ἐξομολογήσομαί σοι ἐν ἔθνεσι, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ψαλῶ". 10. καὶ πάλιν λέγει, "Εὐφράνθητε, ἔθνη, μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ". 11. καὶ πάλιν, "Αἰνεῖτε τὸν Κύριον, πάντα τὰ ἔθνη,[1] καὶ ἐπαινέσατε αὐτόν, πάντες οἱ λαοί". 12. καὶ πάλιν Ἡσαΐας λέγει, "Ἔσται ἡ ῥίζα τοῦ Ἰεσσαί, καὶ ὁ ἀνιστάμενος ἄρχειν ἐθνῶν, ἐπ' αὐτῷ ἔθνη ἐλπιοῦσιν". 13. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς ἐλπίδος πληρώσαι ὑμᾶς πάσης χαρᾶς καὶ εἰρήνης[2] ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν, εἰς τὸ περισσεύειν ὑμᾶς ἐν τῇ ἐλπίδι, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Ἁγίου.

f Ch. xiv. 11.

[1] For τον κυριον παντα τα εθνη (so LXX), read παντα τα εθνη τον Κυριον ℵABDP and all edd. For επαινεσατε (so LXX, B) FLP read επαινεσατωσαν (LXX, A) ℵABCD.

[2] Against all edd., who keep the received text, Weiss finds himself compelled, instead of πληρωσαι υμας πασης χαρας και ειρηνης, to read πληροφορησαι υμας εν παση χαρα κ. ειρηνη. This is the reading of B, and is found with only the omission of εν in FG; Weiss thinks it quite inexplicable except as the original; πληροφ. has a point of attachment in xiv. 5, and the double εν (εν παση χαρα . . . εν τω πιστευειν) in this clause answers exactly to that in the next (εν τη ελπιδι, εν δυναμει πν. αγιου). The other reading is supported by ℵACDLP.

idea that God's glory (the glory of His faithfulness and of His mercy) is the end contemplated by Christ's reception alike of Jew and Gentile.

Ver. 8. λέγω γὰρ Χριστὸν διάκονον γεγενῆσθαι περιτομῆς = what I mean is this—Christ has been made, etc. διάκονον περιτομῆς is usually understood as "a minister to the Jews, to circumcised people" (cf. iii. 30, iv. 9), and this seems to me the only intelligible explanation. In exercising this ministry (and He exercised directly no other: Matt. xv. 24) Christ was of course circumcised Himself and set from His birth (Gal. iv. 4 f.) in the same relation to the law as all who belonged to the old covenant; but though this is involved in the fact that Christ was sent to the Jews, it is not what is meant by calling Him διάκονον περιτομῆς. ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας θεοῦ: in the interest of God's truth (cf. i. 5: ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ). The truth of God, as the giver of the promises to the fathers, was vindicated by Christ's ministry; for in Him they were all fulfilled, 2 Cor. i. 20. τὰς ἐπαγγ. τῶν πατέρων: the promises belonged to the fathers, because they were originally made to them.

Ver. 9. τὰ δὲ ἔθνη ὑπὲρ ἐλέους δοξάσαι τὸν θεόν: Some expositors make this depend directly on λέγω, as if Paul had meant: "I say Christ has become a minister of circumcision, in the interest of the truth of God . . . and that the Gentiles have glorified God for His mercy," the only contrast being that between God's faithfulness, as shown to the descendants of Abraham, and His mercy as shown to those without the old covenant. But if τὰ δὲ ἔθνη κ.τ.λ. is made to depend on εἰς τὸ, as in the A.V., there is a double contrast brought out: that of faithfulness and mercy being no more emphatic than that of the fathers and the Gentiles. Indeed, from the passages quoted, it is clear that Paul is preoccupied rather with the latter of these two contrasts than with the former; for all the passages concern the place of the Gentiles in the Church. At the same time it is made clear—even to the Gentiles—that the salvation which they enjoy is "of the Jews". Hence the Gentiles must not be contemptuous of scruples or infirmities, especially such as rise out of any associations with the old covenant; nor should the Jews be censorious of a Gentile liberty which has its vindication in the free grace of God. καθὼς γέγραπται: the contemplated glorification of God answers to what we find in Ps. xviii. 50, LXX. Christ is assumed to be the speaker, and we may say that He gives thanks to God among the Gentiles when the Gentiles give thanks to God through Him (Heb. ii. 12).

Ver. 10. καὶ πάλιν λέγει: Deut. xxxii. 43, LXX. The Hebrew is different.

Ver. 11. καὶ πάλιν, αἰνεῖτε: Ps. cxvii. 1, LXX—only the order of the words varying.

Ver. 12. καὶ πάλιν Ἡσαΐας λέγει: Isa.

14. Πέπεισμαι δέ, ἀδελφοί μου, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ περὶ ὑμῶν, ὅτι [g] καὶ αὐτοὶ [g] μεστοί ἐστε ἀγαθωσύνης, πεπληρωμένοι πάσης [1] γνώσεως, δυνάμενοι καὶ ἀλλήλους νουθετεῖν. 15. τολμηρότερον [2] δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοί, ἀπὸ [h] μέρους, ὡς ἐπαναμιμνήσκων ὑμᾶς, διὰ τὴν χάριν g Ch. i. 29; Matt. xxiii. 28.

h Ver. 24; Ch. xi. 25; 2 Cor. i. 14; ii. 5.

[1] After πασης ins. της ℵBP, Clem.; om. ACDFL.

[2] τολμηροτερον ℵCDFLP; τολμηροτερως AB. The latter is read by Weiss, W. and H., and Treg. A similar change (from σπουδαιοτερως into σπουδαιοτερον) is made by DFG in Phil. ii. 28. αδελφοι om. ℵABC. υπο του θεου ACDLP; απο του θεου ℵBF and most edd.

xi. 10. Paul again follows the LXX, only omitting ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ after ἔσται. The words are meant to describe the Messianic kingdom and its Davidic head. It is a universal kingdom, and the nations set their hope in its King, and therefore in the God of salvation whose representative He is. Such a hope in God, the Apostle's argument implies, will result in the praise which glorifies Him for His mercy (ver. 9).

Ver. 13. Prompted by ἐλπιοῦσιν, the Apostle closes this section, and the body of the epistle, by calling on "the God of hope" to bless those to whom it is addressed. For the expression ὁ θεὸς τῆς ἐλπίδος cf. ver. 5: it means the God Who gives us the hope which we have in Christ. The joy and peace which He imparts rest on faith (ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν). Hence they are the joy and peace specially flowing from justification and acceptance with God, and the more we have of these, the more we abound in the Christian hope itself. Such an abounding in hope, in the power of the Holy Ghost (Acts i. 8, Luke iv. 14), is the end contemplated in Paul's prayer that the God of hope would fill the Romans with all joy and peace in believing. For the kind of supremacy thus given to hope compare the connection of ver. 5 with ver. 2 in chap. v.

The rest of this chapter is of the nature of an epilogue. It falls into two parts: (1) vers. 14-21, in which Paul, while apologising for the tone which he has occasionally employed, justifies himself for writing to the Romans by appealing to his vocation as an Apostle; and (2) vers. 22, 33, in which he explains to them the programme of his future work, including his long-deferred visit to them, and begs their prayers for a successful issue to his visit to Jerusalem.

Ver. 14. πέπεισμαι δέ: the tone in which he has written, especially in chap. xiv., might suggest that he thought them very defective either in intelligence, or love, or both; but he disclaims any such inference from his words. ἀδελφοί μου has a friendly emphasis: cf. vii. 4. καὶ αὐτὸς ἐγὼ cf. vii. 25: it means "even I myself, who have taken it upon me to address you so plainly". ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ μεστοί ἐστε ἀγαθωσύνης: that even of yourselves ye are full of goodness, i.e., without any help from me. ἀγαθωσύνη in all N.T. passages (Gal. v. 22, Eph. v. 9, 2 Thess. i. 11) seems to have an association with ἀγαθὸς in the sense of "kind": the goodness of which Paul speaks here is probably therefore not virtue in general, but the charity on which such stress is laid in chap. xiv. as the only rule of Christian conduct. πεπληρωμένοι πάσης γνώσεως: filled full of all knowledge—"our Christian knowledge in its entirety" (Sanday and Headlam). This, again, may refer to the comprehension of Christianity shown by the strong of chap. xiv.: or it may be intended to apologise for the unusually doctrinal character of the epistle. Both μεστοί and πεπληρωμένοι occur also in i. 29. δυνάμενοι κ. ἀλλήλους νουθετεῖν: in a sense therefore self-sufficient.

Ver. 15 f. τολμηροτέρως . . . ἀπὸ μέρους: the description does not apply to the letter as a whole, but only to parts of it: Gifford refers to vi. 12-21, xi. 17 ff., xii. 3, and especially chap. xiv. throughout. ὡς ἐπαναμιμνήσκων ὑμᾶς: here only in N.T. There is the same courteous tone as in i. 11 f. He does not presume to teach them what they do not know, but only to suggest to their memory what they must know already but may be overlooking. διὰ τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι: this is the real justification of his writing. As in i. 5, xii. 3, the χάριν is that of Apostleship. It is not wantonly, but in the exercise of a Divine vocation, and a divinely-bestowed competence for it, that he writes. εἰς τὸ εἶναί με λειτουργὸν Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ εἰς τὰ ἔθνη: there is a certain emphasis on τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 16. εἰς τὸ εἶναί με λειτουργὸν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, [i] ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα γένηται [1] ἡ προσφορὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν εὐπρόσδεκτος, ἡγιασμένη ἐν Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ. 17. ἔχω οὖν [2] καύχησιν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τὰ πρὸς Θεόν· 18. οὐ γὰρ [k] τολμήσω [3] λαλεῖν τι ὧν οὐ κατειργάσατο Χριστὸς δι' ἐμοῦ, εἰς ὑπακοὴν

i Here only. On the verse cf. Phil. ii. 17.
k Ch. v. 7; 2 Cor. x. 12; xi. 21.

[1] For γενηται Weiss, against all edd., reads γενηθη with B. The change of this into the commoner form γενηται is an emendation current in all the groups into which the MSS. can be classified.

[2] After ουν ins. την BCDF; om. ℵALP; W. and H. bracket. For προς θεον read προς τον θεον with ℵABCDFL and all edd.

[3] For τολμησω B has τολμω, which W. and H. put in margin. The fut. is retained by most edd. with ℵACDFGLP. For λαλειν τι read τι λαλειν with ℵABCDF.

εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, and the whole sentence would be inept, as a justification of Paul for writing to Rome, unless the Roman Church had been essentially Gentile. For λειτουργὸν see note on xiii. 6. The word here derives from the context the priestly associations which often attach to it in the LXX. But obviously it has no bearing on the question as to the "sacerdotal" character of the Christian ministry. The offering which Paul conceives himself as presenting to God is the Gentile Church, and the priestly function in the exercise of which this offering is made is the preaching of the Gospel. Paul describes himself as ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ θεοῦ sacerdotis modo evangelium administrantem. Fritzsche (on whose note all later expositors depend) explains the sacerdotis modo by accurate et religiose; just as a Levitical offering was not acceptable to God unless the prescribed ceremonial was precisely observed, so the offering of the Gentiles at God's altar would be unacceptable unless Paul showed a priestlike fidelity in his ministry of the Gospel. But this is to wring from a word what an intelligent appreciation of the sentence as a whole, and especially of its pictorial character, refuses to yield: the clause ἵνα γένηται . . . εὐπρόσδεκτος depends not on ἱερουργοῦντα, but on the whole conception of Paul's ministry, i.e., on εἰς τὸ εἶναί με λειτουργὸν κ.τ.λ. For ἡ προσφορὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν, genitive of object, cf. Heb. x. 10. This great offering is acceptable to God (1 Pet. ii. 5) because it is ἡγιασμένη consecrated to Him ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ. Those who believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, as the result of Paul's sacred ministry of the Gospel, received the Holy Spirit: this (as distinct from the ceremonial "without spot or blemish") was the ground of their acceptance (cf. xii. 1 f.).

Ver. 17. ἔχω οὖν καύχησιν: I have therefore ground of boasting. In spite of the apologetic tone of ver. 14 f. Paul is not without confidence in writing to the Romans. But there is no personal assumption in this; for he has it only in Christ Jesus, and only τὰ πρὸς τὸν θεόν in his relations to God. Cf. Heb. ii. 17, v. 1.

Ver. 18 f. All other boasting he declines. οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω τι λαλεῖν ὧν οὐ κατειργάσατο δι' ἐμοῦ ὁ Χ.: in effect this means, I will not presume to speak of anything except what Christ wrought through me. This is the explanation of ἔχω οὖν καύχησιν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. The things which Christ did work through Paul He wrought εἰς ὑπακοὴν ἐθνῶν with a view to obedience on the part of the Gentiles: cf. i. 5. This combination — Christ working in Paul, to make the Gentiles obedient to the Gospel—is the vindication of Paul's action in writing to Rome. It is not on his own impulse, but in Christ that he does it; and the Romans as Gentiles lie within the sphere in which Christ works through him. λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ: λόγος refers to the preaching, ἔργον to all he had been enabled to do or suffer in his calling. 2 Cor. x. 11, Acts vii. 22, Lc. xxiv. 19. ἐν δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων. σημεῖον and τέρας are the words generally employed in the N.T. to designate what we call miracle: often, too, δύναμεις is used as synonymous (Mark vi. 2). All three are again applied to Paul's miracles in 2 Cor. xii. 12, and to similar works in the Apostolic age of the Church in Heb. ii. 4: all three are also found in 2 Thess. ii. 9, where they are ascribed to the Man of Sin, whose Parousia in this as in other respects is ἐθνῶν, λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ, 19. ἐν δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Θεοῦ·[1] ὥστε με ἀπὸ Ἱερουσαλὴμ καὶ κύκλῳ μέχρι τοῦ Ἰλλυρικοῦ πεπληρωκέναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ. 20. οὕτω δὲ φιλοτιμούμενον[2] εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, οὐχ ὅπου ὠνομάσθη Χριστὸς, ἵνα μὴ ἐπ' ἀλλότριον θεμέλιον οἰκοδομῶ· 21. ἀλλὰ, καθὼς γέγραπται, "Οἷς οὐκ ἀνηγγέλη περὶ αὐτοῦ, ὄψονται·[3] καὶ οἳ οὐκ ἀκηκόασι, συνήσουσι".

1 1 Cor 17; ix. 16, 18; 2 Cor. x. 16.

[1] θεου ℵD²LP; αγιου ACD¹⁻³; om. B. B certainly seems right here, though W. and H. put [αγιου] in text. Both θεου and αγιου seem interpolations to complete the expression.

[2] φιλοτιμουμενον ℵACD²,³L, Orig.; φιλοτιμουμαι BD¹ (gr.) FP. Edd. seem to regard the latter as a change made to simplify the construction, and the case is one of those in which the value of B may be lessened by Western influence; hence they prefer, as a rule, the former reading. But Weiss reads φιλοτιμουμαι because it is exegetically necessary, and says he is not aware of any such arbitrary change of a participle into a finite verb.

[3] οψονται before οις B; and so W. and H. and Weiss. The order in received text conforms to the LXX and the next clause.

regarded as counterfeiting that of Christ. τέρας is always rendered "wonder" in the A.V., and, as though the word were unequal to the phenomenon, it is never used alone: in all the places in which it occurs σημεῖον is also found. The latter emphasises the significance of the miracle; it is not merely a sight to stare at, but is suggestive of an actor and a purpose. In this passage, "the power" of signs and wonders seems to mean the power with which they impressed the beholders: more or less it is an interpretation of ἔργῳ. So "the power" of the Holy Ghost means the influence with which the Holy Spirit accompanied the preaching of the Gospel: more or less it answers to λόγῳ: see 1 Thess. i. 5 and cf. the ἀπόδείξει πνεύματος κ. δυνάμεως, 1 Cor. ii. 4. ὥστε με κ.τ.λ. "The result of Christ's working through His Apostle is here stated as if the preceding sentence had been affirmative in form as well as sense" (Gifford). ἀπὸ Ἱερουσαλήμ: this agrees with Acts ix. 26-29, but this, of course, does not prove that it was borrowed from that passage. Even if Paul began his ministry at Damascus, he might quite well speak as he does here, for it is not its chronology, but its range, he is describing; and to his mind Jerusalem (to which, if let alone, he would have devoted himself, see Acts xxii. 18-22) was its point of departure. καὶ κύκλῳ: most modern commentators have rendered this as if it were τοῦ κύκλῳ—from Jerusalem and its vicinity, by which they mean Syria (though some would include Arabia, Gal. i. 17): for this use of κύκλῳ see Gen. xxxv. 5, Judith i. 2. But most Greek commentators render as in the A.V.—"and round about unto Illyricum". This is the interpretation taken by Hofmann and by S. and H., and is illustrated by Xen., Anab., vii., i., 14 (quoted by the latter): πότερα διὰ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ὄρους δέοι πορεύεσθαι, ἢ κύκλῳ διὰ μέσης τῆς Θράκης. μέχρι τοῦ Ἰλλυρικοῦ can (so far as μέχρι is concerned) either exclude or include Illyricum. Part of the country so called may have been traversed by Paul in the journey alluded to in Acts xx. 1 f. (διελθὼν δὲ τὰ μέρη ἐκεῖνα), but the language would be satisfied if he had come in sight of Illyricum as he would do in his westward journey through Macedonia. πεπληρωκέναι τὸ εὐαγγ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ: have fulfilled (fully preached) the Gospel of Christ. Cf. Col. i. 25. Paul had done this in the sense in which it was required of an Apostle, whose vocation (to judge from Paul's practice) was to lay the foundation of a church in the chief centres of population, and as soon as the new community was capable of self-propagation, to move on.

Ver. 20. οὕτω δὲ φιλοτιμούμενον (1 Thess. iv. 11, 2 Cor. v. 9): making it my ambition, however, thus to preach the Gospel, etc. This limits πεπληρωκέναι: he had never sought to preach where Christianity was already established. A point of honour, but not rivalry, is involved in φιλοτιμούμενον. ὠνομάσθη: cf. 2 Tim. ii. 19 and Isa. xxvi. 13, Amos vi. 10. To name the name of the Lord is to confess Him to be what He is to the faith of His people. ἵνα μὴ ἐπ' ἀλλότριον θεμέλιον κ.τ.λ. The duty of an

22. Διὸ καὶ ἐνεκοπτόμην τὰ πολλὰ[1] τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, 23. νυνὶ δὲ μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τούτοις, ἐπιποθίαν δὲ ἔχων τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς [m] ἀπὸ πολλῶν[2] ἐτῶν, 24. ὡς ἐὰν[3] πορεύωμαι εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν, ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς· ἐλπίζω γὰρ διαπορευόμενος θεάσασθαι ὑμᾶς, καὶ ὑφ' ὑμῶν προπεμφθῆναι ἐκεῖ, ἐὰν ὑμῶν πρῶτον ἀπὸ [n] μέρους [o] ἐμπλησθῶ. 25. Νυνὶ δὲ πορεύομαι εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, διακονῶν

m Luke viii. 43.
n Ver. 15.
o Luke i. 53; vi. 25.

[1] τα πολλα ℵACLP; πολλακις BDF.

[2] For πολλων ℵADFL read ικανων with BCP, Weiss, W. and H., Alford.

[3] For ως εαν read ως αν with ℵABC. Om. ελευσομαι προς υμας ℵABCDF and all edd.

Apostle was with the foundation, not the superstructure. 1 Cor. iii. 10. The same confidence in his vocation, and the same pride in limiting that confidence, and not boasting of what Christ had done through others, or intruding his operations into their sphere, pervades the tenth chapter of 2 Cor.

Ver. 21. ἀλλὰ καθὼς γέγραπται: Paul's actual procedure corresponded with, and indeed led to the fulfilment of, a famous O.T. prophecy. Isa. lii. 11 exactly as in LXX. It is absurd to argue with Fritzsche that Paul found a prediction of his own personal ministry (and of the principles on which he discharged it), in Isaiah, and equally beside the mark to argue that his use of the passage is "quite in accordance with the spirit of the original". The LXX is quite different from the Hebrew, and Paul quotes it because he liked to be able to express his own opinion or practice in Scripture language. It seemed to him to get a Divine confirmation in this way; but an examination of various passages shows that he cared very little for the original meaning or application.

Vv. 22-33. The Apostle's programme. He is at present on his way to Jerusalem with the gifts which his Gentile churches have made for the relief of the poor Christians there. The issue of this visit is dubious, and he begs their prayers for its success. After it is over, he means to proceed to Spain, and on the way he hopes to pay his long deferred visit to Rome.

Ver. 22. διὸ καὶ ἐνεκοπτόμην: the work which detained the Apostle in the East also hindered him from visiting Rome. For another ἐγκόπτειν see 1 Thess. ii. 18. τὰ πολλὰ is more than πολλάκις in i. 13: it is distinguished in Greek writers both from ἐνίοτε (sometimes) and ἀεὶ (always) and is rightly rendered in Vulg. plerumque. As a rule, it was his work which kept Paul from visiting Rome, but he may have had the desire to do so (e.g., when he was in Corinth) and have been prevented by some other cause. The rendering of R.V. "these many times" (apparently, all the definite times included in πολλάκις i. 13) is unsupported by examples.

Ver. 23. νυνὶ δὲ: but now — the sentence thus begun is interrupted by ἐλπίζω γὰρ and never finished, for the words ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς in T.R. are an interpolation. μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων: not that every soul was converted, but that the Apostolic function of laying foundations had been sufficiently discharged over the area in question. κλίμα is only found in the plural in N.T. 2 Cor. xi. 10, Gal. i. 21. ἐπιπόθειαν: here only in N.T. ἀπὸ ἱκανῶν ἐτῶν: the desire dated "from a good many years back". Cf. ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου, i. 20, Acts xv. 7.

Ver. 24. ὡς ἂν πορεύωμαι εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν: it is here the apodosis begins, which being broken in on by ἐλπίζω is never formally resumed, though the sense is taken up again in ver. 28 f. ὡς ἂν is temporal = simulatque: cf. 1 Cor. xi. 34, Phil. ii. 23: Buttmann, p. 232. The principle which Paul has just laid down as regulating his Apostolic work (ver. 20) forbids him to think of Rome as a proper sphere for it; great as is his interest in the capital of the world, he can only pay it a passing visit on the way to another field. ὑφ' ὑμῶν προπεμφθῆναι ἐκεῖ: it has been said that Paul expected or claimed "quasi pro jure suo" to be escorted all the way to Spain (by sea) by members of the Roman Church; but this is not included in προπεμφθῆναι. Practical illustrations are seen in Acts xx. 35, xxi. 5: similar anticipations in 1 Cor. xvi. 6, 11. For πρῶτον see Mt. vii. 5, viii. 21. ἀπὸ μέρους indicates that no such stay would be equal to the Apostle's longing τοῖς ἁγίοις. 26. εὐδόκησαν γὰρ Μακεδονία καὶ Ἀχαΐα [p] κοινωνίαν τινὰ ποιήσασθαι εἰς τοὺς πτωχοὺς τῶν ἁγίων τῶν ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ· 27. εὐδόκησαν γάρ, καὶ ὀφειλέται αὐτῶν εἰσιν. εἰ γὰρ τοῖς πνευματικοῖς αὐτῶν ἐκοινώνησαν τὰ ἔθνη, ὀφείλουσι καὶ ἐν τοῖς σαρκικοῖς [q] λειτουργῆσαι αὐτοῖς. 28. τοῦτο οὖν ἐπιτελέσας, καὶ σφραγισάμενος αὐτοῖς τὸν καρπὸν τοῦτον, ἀπελεύσομαι δι' ὑμῶν εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν.

p Heb. xiii. 16.
q 2 Cor. ix. 12.

for fellowship with the Romans, but it would be at least a partial satisfaction of it.

Ver. 25. νυνὶ δὲ is not a resumption of νυνὶ δὲ in ver. 23: there is an entire break in the construction, and Paul begins again, returning from the Spanish journey, which lies in a remote and uncertain future, to the present moment. "But at this moment I am on the way to Jerusalem, ministering to the saints." διακονῶν does not represent this journey as part of his apostolic ministry, which might legitimately defer his visit once more (Weiss); it refers to the service rendered to the poor by the money he brought (see 2 Cor. viii. 4). For whatever reason, Paul seems to have used "the saints" (a name applicable to all Christians) with a certain predilection to describe the Jerusalem Church. Cf. ver. 31, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2 Cor. viii. 4, ix. 1, ix. 12: all in this connection.

Ver. 26. εὐδόκησαν γὰρ Μακεδονία καὶ Ἀχαία: Macedonia and Achaia would include all the Pauline Churches in Europe, and we know from 1 Cor. xvi. 1 that a similar contribution was being made in Galatia. εὐδόκησαν expresses the formal resolution of the churches in question, but here as in many places with the idea that it was a spontaneous and cordial resolution (though it had been suggested by Paul): see chap. x. 1 (Fritzsche's note there), Luke xii. 32, Gal. i. 15, 1 Cor. i. 21, 1 Thess. ii. 8, iii. 1. κοινωνίαν τινὰ: τινὰ marks the indefiniteness of the collection. It was no assessment to raise a prescribed amount, but "some contribution," more or less according to will and circumstances. For κοινωνίαν in this sense see 2 Cor. viii. 4, ix. 13: where the whole subject is discussed. εἰς τοὺς πτωχοὺς τῶν ἁγίων: from the partitive genitive it is clear that not all the saints in Jerusalem were poor. But Gal. ii. 10, Acts vi. show that the community at least included many poor, towards whom it assumed a responsibility so burdensome that it was unable to discharge it unaided.

Ver. 27. εὐδόκησαν γάρ: they have resolved, I say. Paul felt bound to let this resolution affect his own conduct even to the extent of delaying his journey westward. Indeed he explains in 2 Cor., chaps. viii. and ix., that he expected great spiritual results, in the way of a better understanding between Jewish and Gentile Christianity, from this notable act of Gentile charity; hence his desire to see it accomplished, and the necessity laid on him to go once more to Jerusalem. ὀφειλέται: cf. i. 14, viii. 12. The resolve of the Gentile Churches to help the poor Jewish Christians, though generous, was not unmotived; in a sense it was the payment of a debt. τοῖς πνευματικοῖς αὐτῶν: the spiritual things belonging to the Jews in which the Gentiles shared are the Gospel and all its blessings—"salvation is of the Jews". All the gifts of Christianity are gifts of the Holy Spirit. ἐν τοῖς σαρκικοῖς: the carnal things of the Gentiles, in which they minister to the Jews, are those which belong to the natural life of man, as a creature of flesh—the universal symbol of these is money. There is the same idea in a similar connection (the support of the Gospel ministry) in 1 Cor. ix. 11. In neither place has σαρκικὰ any ethical connotation. λειτουργῆσαι is simply "to minister to": no official, much less sacerdotal association. Cf. Phil. ii. 30.

Ver. 28. τοῦτο οὖν ἐπιτελέσας: having brought this business to a close. It is a mistake to find in Paul's use of ἐπιτελεῖν any reference to the performance of a religious rite: see 2 Cor. viii. 6, 11, Gal. iii. 3, Phil. i. 6. σφραγισάμενος αὐτοῖς τὸν καρπὸν τοῦτον. "This fruit" is, of course, the collection; it is one of the gracious results of the reception of the Gospel by the Gentiles, and Paul loves to conceive and to speak of it spiritually rather than materially. Thus in 2 Cor. viii. and ix. he calls it a χάρις, a διακονία, a κοινωνία, a ἁδρότης, a εὐλογία: never money. The point of the figure in σφραγισάμενος cannot be said to be clear. It may possibly suggest that Paul, in handing over the money to the saints, authenticates it to them as the fruit of their πνευματικά, which have been sown among the Gentiles (so S.

r Gal. iii. 14; Eph. i. 3; Heb. vi. 7; 1 Pet. iii. 9. s John iii. 36; Acts xiv. 2; xvii. 5.

29. οἶδα δὲ ὅτι, ἐρχόμενος πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐν πληρώματι ʳ εὐλογίας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ [1] Χριστοῦ ἐλεύσομαι. 30. Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Πνεύματος, συναγωνίσασθαί μοι ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν· 31. ἵνα ῥυσθῶ ἀπὸ τῶν ˢ ἀπειθούντων ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ, καὶ ἵνα [2] ἡ διακονία μου ἡ εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ εὐπρόσδεκτος γένηται τοῖς ἁγίοις· 32. ἵνα ἐν χαρᾷ ἔλθω [3] πρὸς ὑμᾶς διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, καὶ συναναπαύσωμαι ὑμῖν. 33. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.[4]

[1] Om. του ευαγγελιου του ℵABCDF and all edd.

[2] After και om. ινα with ℵ¹ABCD¹. διακονια ℵACD²,³L; δωροφορια BD¹F. W. and H. regard δωροφορια as a Western reading which belongs to the inferior element in B, and therefore adopt διακονια; so Tischdf. But Weiss thinks διακονια obviously suggested here by its use in 2 Cor. viii. 4, ix. 1, 12 f., and puts δωροφορια, which occurs nowhere else in the N.T., in his text. The change of it to διακονια induced, he believes, the further change of εν before Ιερουσαλημ (which is also the reading of BD¹F) into εις (which is found like διακονια in ℵACD³L). This argument seems to have real weight, even though BDF is not always a strong combination of authorities.

[3] εν χαρᾳ ελθω. This is the reading of BDEFGLP, and is retained by Weiss. It has the critical advantage of making it possible to understand how B could have come to omit the clause και συναναπαυσωμαι υμιν, and the exegetical advantage of properly defining the end aimed at in the prayer, which was that Paul might come with joy to Rome, not that he might refresh himself after that. W. and H. put the received text in margin, but read in text ινα . . . ελθων . . . θεου συναναπαυσωμαι υμιν. ελθων is the reading of ℵ¹AC, and these MSS. also omit και. For θεου B has κυριου Ιησου; D¹F Χριστου Ιησου; alii aliter. Possibly the original reading was θεληματος alone (cf. 1 Cor. xvi. 12), which has been variously supplemented.

[4] αμην om. AF; ins. ℵBCDLP and all edd.

and H.); or it may only mean "when I have secured this fruit to them as their property" (so Meyer). The ideas of "property," "security," "formality," "solemnity," "finality," are all associated with σφραγίς and σφραγίζω in different passages of the N.T., and it is impossible to say which preponderated in Paul's mind as he wrote these words. Cf. John iii. 33, vi. 27. ἀπελεύσομαι is simply abibo: the idea of departing from Jerusalem is included in it, which is not brought out in the R.V., "I will go on". δι' ὑμῶν: cf. 2 Cor. i. 16. εἰς Σπανίαν: there is no evidence that this intention was ever carried out except the well-known passage in Clem. Rom. I. 5 which speaks of Paul as having come ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως: an expression which, especially if the writer was a Jew, may as well mean Rome as Spain. But all the more if it was not carried out is this passage in Romans assuredly genuine; a second-century writer would not gratuitously ascribe to an apostle intentions which he must have known were never accomplished.

Ver. 29. For ἐρχόμενος . . . ἐλεύσομαι cf. 1 Cor. ii. 1. ἐν πληρώματι εὐλογίας Χριστοῦ. Paul's desire was to impart to the Romans χάρισμά τι πνευματικόν (i. 11), and he is sure it will be satisfied to the full. When he comes he will bring blessing from Christ to which nothing will be lacking. On πλήρωμα see xi. 12.

Ver. 30. παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς. In spite of the confident tone of ver. 29, Paul is very conscious of the uncertainties and perils which lie ahead of him, and with the δὲ he turns to this aspect of his situation. ἀδελφοί (which W. H. bracket) is an appeal to their Christian sympathy. διὰ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰ. Χ. For διὰ in this sense see xii. 1. The Romans and Paul were alike servants of this Lord, and His name was a motive to the Romans to sympathise with Paul in all that he had to encounter in Christ's service. διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ πνεύματος,

XVI. 1. ΣΥΝΙΣΤΗΜΙ δὲ ὑμῖν Φοίβην τὴν ἀδελφὴν ἡμῶν, οὖσαν[1] [a] διάκονον τῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἐν Κεγχρεαῖς· 2. ἵνα αὐτὴν [b] προσδέξησθε[2] ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀξίως τῶν ἁγίων, καὶ παραστῆτε αὐτῇ ἐν ᾧ ἂν ὑμῶν χρῄζῃ πράγματι· καὶ γὰρ αὕτη [c] προστάτις πολλῶν ἐγενήθη, καὶ αὐτοῦ a 1 Tim. iii. 8, 12.

b Phil. ii 29.
c Here only in N.T.

[1] After ουσαν ins. και ℵ³BC¹; so Weiss. W. and H. bracket.

[2] αυτην προσδεξησθε ℵALP; αυτην after προσδ. BCDF. For αυτου εμου read εμου αυτου with ABCL.

the love wrought in Christian hearts by the Spirit of God (Gal. v. 22) is another motive of the same kind. συναγωνίσασθαί μοι, ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς. συναγωνίζομαι is found here only in the N.T., but ἀγὼν and ἀγωνίζομαι in a spiritual sense are found in each of the groups into which the Pauline epistles are usually divided. What Paul asks is that they should join him in striving with all their might—in wrestling as it were—against the hostile forces which would frustrate his apostolic work. Cf. Just. Mart., Apol., ii., 13: καὶ εὐχόμενος καὶ παμμάχως ἀγωνιζόμενος. ἀγωνία in Lc. xxii. 44 seems to denote awful fear rather than intense striving. πρὸς τὸν θεόν is not otiose: Paul felt how much it was worth to have God appealed to on his behalf.

Ver. 31 f. ἵνα ῥυσθῶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπειθούντων: from the disobedient, i.e., from the Jews who had not received the Gospel, 2 Thess. i. 8, chap. xi. 30. καὶ ἡ διακονία μου κ.τ.λ. It was not the unbelieving Jews only who hated Paul. To them he was an apostate, who had disappointed all their hopes; but even Christian Jews in many cases regarded him as false to the nation's prerogative, and especially to the law. There was a real danger that the contribution he brought from the Gentile Churches might not be graciously accepted, even accepted at all; it might be regarded as a bribe, in return for which Paul's opposition to the law was to be condoned, and the equal standing of his upstart churches in the Kingdom of God acknowledged. It was by no means certain that it would be taken as what it was—a pledge of brotherly love; and God alone could dispose "the saints" to take it as simply as it was offered. Paul's state of mind as seen here is exactly that which is revealed in Acts xx. 17-38, xxi. 13, etc. ἵνα ἐν χαρᾷ ἐλθὼν . . . συναναπαύσωμαι ὑμῖν. συναναπ. here only in N.T. but cf. συνπαρακληθῆναι, i. 12, and συναγωνίσασθαι ver. 30. "Rest after the personal danger and after the ecclesiastical crisis of which the personal danger formed a part" (Hort). The ἵνα here seems to be subordinate to, not co-ordinate with the preceding one. Paul looks forward to a time of joy and rest beyond these anxieties and dangers, as the ultimate end to be secured by their prayers. διὰ θελήματος θεοῦ: it depends on this whether Paul is to return or how. He did reach Rome, by the will of God (i. 10), but hardly in the conditions anticipated here.

Ver. 33. ὁ δὲ θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης: there is an appropriateness in this designation after ver. 31, but "peace" is one of the ruling ideas in Paul's mind always, and needs no special explanation in a benediction: 2 Cor. xiii. 11, Phil. iv. 9, 1 Thess. v. 23.

CHAPTER XVI. On this chapter see introduction. It consists of five distinct parts: (1) The recommendation of Phœbe to the Church, vers. 1 and 2; (2) a series of greetings from Paul himself, vers. 3-16; (3) a warning against false teachers, vers. 17-20; (4) a series of greetings from companions of Paul, vers. 21-23; (5) a doxology.

Ver. 1 f. Συνίστημι δὲ ὑμῖν Φοίβην. συνίστημι is the technical word for this kind of recommendation, which was equivalent to a certificate of church membership. Paul uses it with especial frequency in 2 Cor., both in this technical sense (iii. 1, v. 12), and in a kindred but wider one (iv. 2, vi. 4, vii. 11, x. 12, 18). τὴν ἀδελφὴν ἡμῶν: our (Christian) sister, 1 Cor. vii. 15, ix. 5. The spiritual kinship thus asserted was a recommendation of itself, but in Phœbe's case Paul can add another. οὖσαν καὶ διάκονον τῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἐν Κεγχρεαῖς: who is also a servant of the Church in Cenchreæ. It is not easy to translate διάκονος, for "servant" is too vague, and "deaconess" is more technical than the original. Διακονία was really a function of membership in the Church, and Phœbe might naturally be described as she is here if like the house of Stephanas at Corinth (1 Cor. xvi. 15) she had given herself εἰς διακονίαν τοῖς ἁγίοις. That ἐμοῦ. 3. Ἀσπάσασθε Πρίσκιλλαν [1] καὶ Ἀκύλαν τοὺς συνεργούς μου ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, 4. (οἵτινες ὑπὲρ τῆς ψυχῆς μου τὸν ἑαυτῶν τράχηλον ὑπέθηκαν· οἷς οὐκ ἐγὼ μόνος εὐχαριστῶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσαι αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τῶν ἐθνῶν·) καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν. 5. ἀσπάσασθε Ἐπαίνετον τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου, ὅς ἐστιν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας [2] εἰς Χρι-

[1] For Πρισκιλλαν (corrected by Acts xviii. 2) read Πρισκαν ℵABCDFL.

[2] For της Αχαιας LP, read της Ασιας with ℵABCD¹F. The wrong reading is due to 1 Cor. xvi. 15.

is, a life of habitual charity and hospitality, quite apart from any official position, would justify the name διάκονος. On the other hand it must be remembered that the growth of the Church, under the conditions of ancient society, soon produced "deaconesses" in the official sense, and Phœbe may have had some recognised function of διακονία assigned to her. Cenchreæ was on the Saronic gulf, nine miles E. of Corinth: as the port for Asia and the East, many Christians would pass through it, and a Christian woman who gave herself to hospitality (xii. 13) might have her hands full. ἐν Κυρίῳ: no mere reception of Phœbe into their houses satisfies this —their Christian life was to be open for her to share in it; she was no alien to be debarred from spiritual intimacy. ἀξίως τῶν ἁγίων: with such kindness as it becomes Christians to show. καὶ παραστῆτε αὐτῇ (Jer. xv. 11): after the Christian welcome is assured, Paul bespeaks their help for Phœbe in whatever affair she may require it. He speaks indefinitely, but his language suggests that she was going to Rome on business in which they could assist her. καὶ γὰρ αὐτὴ: in complying with this request they will only be doing for Phœbe what she has done for others, and especially for Paul himself. προστάτις (feminine of προστάτης) is suggested by παραστῆτε. Paul might have said παραστάτις, but uses the more honourable word. προστάτης (patronus) was the title of a citizen in Athens who took charge of the interests of μέτοικοι and persons without civic rights; the corresponding feminine here may suggest that Phœbe was a woman of good position who could render valuable services to such a community as a primitive Christian Church usually was. When she helped Paul we cannot tell. Dr. Gifford suggests the occasion of Acts xviii. 18. Paul's vow "seems to point to a deliverance from danger or sickness," in which she may have ministered to him. It is generally assumed that Phœbe was the bearer of this epistle, and many even of those who regard vers. 3-16 as addressed to Ephesus still hold that vers. 1 and 2 were meant for Rome.

Ver. 3 f. Greeting to Prisca and Aquila. ἀσπάσασθε: only here does Paul commission the whole Church to greet individual members of it (Weiss). For the persons here named see Acts xviii. 2. Paul met them first in Corinth, and according to Meyer converted them there. Here as in Acts xviii. 18, 26 and 1 Tim. iv. 19 the wife is put first, probably as the more distinguished in Christian character and service; in 1 Cor. xvi. 19, where they send greetings, the husband naturally gets his precedence. τοὺς συνεργούς μου ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ: on first acquaintance they had been fellow-workers, not in Christ Jesus, but in tent-making: they were ὁμότεχνοι, Acts xviii. 3. οἵτινες: quippe qui. τὸν ἑαυτῶν τράχηλον: the singular (as Gifford points out) shows that the expression is figurative. To save Paul's life Prisca and Aquila incurred some great danger themselves; what, we cannot tell. They were in his company both in Corinth and Ephesus, at times when he was in extreme peril (Acts xviii. 12, xix. 30 f.), and the recipients of the letter would understand the allusion. The technical sense of ὑποθεῖναι, to give as a pledge, cannot be pressed here, as though Prisca and Aquila had given their personal security (though it involved the hazard of their lives) for Paul's good behaviour. οἷς οὐκ ἐγὼ μόνος εὐχαριστῶ κ.τ.λ. The language implies that the incident referred to had occurred long enough ago for all the Gentile Churches to be aware of it, but yet so recently that both they and the Apostle himself retained a lively feeling of gratitude to his brave friends. καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν: these words do not mean "their Christian household," nor do they imply that the στόν. 6. ἀσπάσασθε Μαριάμ,[1] ἥτις πολλὰ [d] ἐκοπίασεν εἰς ἡμᾶς. 7. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀνδρόνικον καὶ Ἰουνίαν τοὺς συγγενεῖς μου καὶ [e] συναιχμαλώτους μου, οἵτινές εἰσιν [f] ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, οἳ καὶ πρὸ ἐμοῦ γεγόνασιν[2] ἐν Χριστῷ. 8. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀμπλίαν[3] τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου ἐν Κυρίῳ. 9. ἀσπάσασθε Οὐρβανὸν τὸν συνεργὸν

d Ver. 12.
e Col. iv. 10 Philemon 23.
f Matt. xxvii. 16.

[1] Μαριαμ ℵDFL; Μαριαν ABCP, and so most edd. For ημας read υμας ℵABC[1]P.
[2] For γεγονασιν read γεγοναν with ℵAB.
[3] For Αμπλιαν read Αμπλιατον with ℵAB[1]F.

whole Christian community (in Rome or in Ephesus) met in the house of Prisca and Aquila. They signify the body of believers meeting for worship there, a body which would only be part of the local Christian community. Cf. 1 Cor. xvi. 19, Col. iv. 15, Philemon 2, Acts xii. 12. "There is no clear example of a separate building set apart for Christian worship within the limits of the Roman Empire before the third century, though apartments in private houses might be specially devoted to this purpose" (Lightfoot on Col. iv. 15). ἀσπάσασθε Ἐπαίνετον τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου: after Priscilla and Aquila, not a single person is known of all those to whom Paul sends greetings in vv. 3-16. ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀσίας: Epænetus was the first convert in Asia (the Roman province of that name). Cf. 1 Cor. xvi. 15. There is no difficulty in supposing that the first Christian of Asia was at this time—temporarily or permanently—in Rome: but the discovery of an Ephesian Epænetus on a Roman inscription (quoted by Sanday and Headlam) is very interesting.

Ver. 6. It is not certain whether Μαριάμ (which is Jewish) or Μαρίαν (Roman) is the true reading. ἥτις πολλὰ ἐκοπίασεν: the much labour she had bestowed is made the ground (ἥτις) of a special greeting. εἰς ὑμᾶς is much better supported than εἰς ἡμᾶς: there is something finer in Paul's appreciation of services rendered to others than if they had been rendered to himself. Cf. Gal. iv. 11.

Ver. 7. Andronicus is a Greek name, which, like most names in this chapter, can be illustrated from inscriptions. Ἰουνίαν may be masculine (from Ἰουνίας, or Ἰουνιᾶς contraction of Junianus), or feminine (from Ἰουνία): probably the former. τοὺς συγγενεῖς μου: i.e., Jews. Cf. ix. 3. It is hardly possible that so many people in the Church addressed (see vv. 11, 21) should be more closely connected with Paul than by the bond of nationality. But it was natural for him, in writing to a mainly Gentile Church, to distinguish those with whom he had this point of contact. Cf. Col. iv. 11. συναιχμαλώτους μου: this naturally means that on some occasion they had shared Paul's imprisonment: it is doubtful whether it would be satisfied by the idea that they, like him, had also been imprisoned for Christ's sake. The αἰχμάλωτος is a prisoner of war: Paul and his friends were all Salvation Army men. The phrase ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, men of mark among the Apostles, has the same ambiguity in Greek as in English. It might mean, well-known to the apostolic circle, or distinguished as Apostles. The latter sense is that in which it is taken by "all patristic commentators" (Sanday and Headlam), whose instinct for what words meant in a case of this kind must have been surer than that of a modern reader. It implies, of course, a wide sense of the word Apostle: for justification of which reference may be made to Lightfoot's essay on the name and office of an Apostle (Galatians, 92 ff.) and Harnack, Lehre der zwölf Apostel, S. 111-118. On the other hand, Paul's use of the word Apostle is not such as to make it easy to believe that he thought of a large class of persons who might be so designated, a class so large that two otherwise unknown persons like Andronicus and Junias might be conspicuous in it. Hence scholars like Weiss and Gifford hold that what is meant here is that Andronicus and Junias were honourably known to the Twelve. οἱ καὶ πρὸ ἐμοῦ γέγοναν ἐν Χριστῷ: they had evidently been converted very early, and, like Mnason the Cypriot, were ἀρχαῖοι μαθηταί, Acts xxi. 16. On γέγοναν see Burton, Moods and Tenses, § 82. The English idiom does not allow of a perfect translation, but "were" is more idiomatic than "have been".

Ver. 8. Ἀμπλιᾶτον: "a common Roman slave name". Sanday and Head-ἡμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ, καὶ Στάχυν τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου. 10. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀπελλῆν τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ. ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου. 11. ἀσπάσασθε Ἡρωδίωνα τὸν συγγενῆ μου. ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ναρκίσσου, τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ. 12. ἀσπάσασθε Τρύφαιναν καὶ Τρυφῶσαν τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρίῳ. ἀσπάσασθε Περσίδα τὴν ἀγαπητήν, ἥτις πολλὰ ἐκοπίασεν ἐν Κυρίῳ. 13. ἀσπάσασθε Ῥοῦφον τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐμοῦ.

lam give inscriptions from the cemetery of Domitilla, which make it probable that a person of this name was conspicuous in the earliest Roman Church, and may have been the means of introducing Christianity to a great Roman house. τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου ἐν Κυρίῳ: Paul has none but Christian relations to this man.

Ver. 9. Οὐρβανὸν: also a common slave name, "found, as here, in juxtaposition with Ampliatus, in a list of imperial freedmen, on an inscription A.D. 115" (Gifford). τὸν συνεργὸν ἡμῶν: the ἡμῶν (as opposed to μου, ver. 3) seems to suggest that all Christian workers had a common helper in Urbanus. Of Stachys nothing is known but that he was dear to Paul. The name is Greek; but, like the others, has been found in inscriptions connected with the Imperial household.

Ver. 10. Ἀπελλῆν τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ: Apelles, that approved Christian. In some conspicuous way the Christian character of Apelles had been tried and found proof: see Jas. i. 12, 2 Tim. ii. 15. The name is a familiar one, and sometimes Jewish: Credat Judæus Apella, Hor., Sat., I., v., 100. By τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου are meant Christians belonging to the household of Aristobulus. Lightfoot, in his essay on Cæsar's Household (Philippians, 171 ff.), makes Aristobulus the grandson of Herod the Great. He was educated in Rome, and probably died there. "Now it seems not improbable, considering the intimate relations between Claudius and Aristobulus, that at the death of the latter his servants, wholly or in part, should be transferred to the palace. In this case they would be designated Aristobuliani, for which I suppose St. Paul's οἱ ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου to be an equivalent. It is at least not an obvious phrase, and demands explanation" (Philippians, 175).

Ver. 11. Ἡρωδίωνα τὸν συγγενῆ μου. This agrees very well with the interpretation just given to τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου. In the household of Herod's grandson there might naturally be a Jew with a name of this type, whom Paul, for some cause or other, could single out for a special greeting. τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ναρκίσσου τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ: the last words may suggest that, though only the Christians in this household have a greeting sent to them, there were other members of it with whom the Church had relations. The Narcissus meant is probably the notorious freedman of Claudius, who was put to death shortly after the accession of Nero (Tac., Ann., xiii., 1), and therefore two or three years before this epistle was written. His slaves would probably pass into the emperor's hands, and increase "Cæsar's househould" as Narcissiani (Lightfoot, loc. cit.).

Ver. 12. Τρύφαιναν καὶ Τρυφῶσαν: "It was usual to designate members of the same family by derivatives of the same root" (Lightfoot): hence these two women were probably sisters. The names, which might be rendered "Dainty" and "Disdain" (see Jas. v. 5, Is. lxvi. 11) are characteristically pagan, and unlike the description τὰς κοπιώσας, "who toil in the Lord". They are still at work, but the "much toil" of Persis, the beloved, belongs to some occasion in the past. τὴν ἀγαπητήν: Paul does not here add μου as with the men's names in vv. 8 and 9. Persis was dear to the whole Church.

Ver. 13. Ῥοῦφον τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ: for the name see Mark xv. 21. If Mark wrote his gospel at Rome, as there is ground to believe, this may be the person to whom he refers. In the gospel he is assumed to be well known, and here he is described as "that choice Christian". ἐκλεκτὸν cannot refer simply to the fact of his election to be a Christian, since in whatever sense this is true, it is true of all Christians alike; whereas here it evidently expresses some distinction of Rufus. He was a noble specimen of a Christian. καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ κ. ἐμοῦ: where she had "mothered" Paul we do not know. For the idea cf. Mark x. 30.

14. ἀσπάσασθε Ἀσύγκριτον, Φλέγοντα, Ἑρμᾶν, Πατρόβαν, Ἑρμῆν,[1] καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς ἀδελφούς. 15. ἀσπάσασθε Φιλόλογον καὶ Ἰουλίαν, Νηρέα καὶ τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτοῦ, καὶ Ὀλυμπᾶν, καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντας ἁγίους. 16. ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ. ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς αἱ ἐκκλησίαι[2] τοῦ Χριστοῦ· 17. Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, σκοπεῖν τοὺς τὰς [g] διχοστασίας καὶ τὰ σκάνδαλα, παρὰ τὴν διδαχὴν ἣν ὑμεῖς ἐμάθετε, ποιοῦντας· καὶ ἐκκλίνατε[3] ἀπ' αὐτῶν.

g 1 Cor. iii. 3; Gal. v 20.

[1] Here ℵABCD[1]FP and all edd. transpose Ερμαν and Ερμην.
[2] After εκκλησιαι ins. πασαι ℵABCLP and all edd.
[3] For εκκλινατε read εκκλινετε with ℵ[1]BC, Weiss, W. and H., Tischdf.

Ver. 14. Of Asyncritus, Phlegon and Hermes nothing is known. Patrobas (or Patrobius) may have been a dependant of a famous freedman of the same name in Nero's time, who was put to death by Galba (Tac., Hist., i., 49, ii., 95). Hermas has often been identified with the author of The Shepherd, but though the identification goes back to Origen, it is a mistake. "Pastorem vero nuperrime temporibus nostris in urbe Roma Herma conscripsit sedente cathedra urbis Romæ ecclesiæ Pio eps. fratre ejus": these words of the Canon of Muratori forbid the identification. τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς ἀδελφούς indicates that the persons named, and some others designated in this phrase, formed a little community by themselves—perhaps an ἐκκλησία κατ' οἶκόν τινος.

Ver. 15. Philologus and Julia, as connected here, were probably husband and wife; or, as in the next pair, brother and sister. Both, especially the latter, are among the commonest slave names. There are Acts of Nereus and Achilleus in the Acta Sanctorum connected with the early Roman Church. "The sister's name is not given, but one Nereis was a member of the [imperial] household about this time, as appears from an inscription already quoted" (Lightfoot, loc. cit., p. 177). Olympas is a contraction of Olympiodorus. τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντας ἁγίους: see on last verse. The πάντας may suggest that a larger number of persons is to be included here.

Ver. 16. ἀλλήλους. When the epistle is read in the Church the Christians are to greet each other, and seal their mutual salutations ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ. In 1 Thess. v. 26 the προιστάμενοι apparently are to salute the members of the Church so. In 1 Cor. xvi. 20, 2 Cor. xiii. 12, exactly the same form is used as here. The custom of combining greeting and kiss was oriental, and especially Jewish, and in this way became Christian. In 1 Pet. v. 14 the kiss is called φίλημα ἀγάπης; in Apost. Const., ii., 57, 12, τὸ ἐν Κυρίῳ φίλημα; in Tert. de Orat., xiv., osculum pacis. By ἅγιον the kiss is distinguished from an ordinary greeting of natural affection or friendship; it belongs to God and the new society of His children; it is specifically Christian. αἱ ἐκκλησίαι πᾶσαι τοῦ Χριστοῦ: "this phrase is unique in the N.T." (Sanday and Headlam). The ordinary form is "the Church" or "the Churches of God": but in Matt. xvi. 18 Christ says "my Church": cf. also Acts xx. 28, where τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Κυρίου is found in many good authorities. For "all the Churches" cf. ver. 4, 1 Cor. vii. 17, xiv. 33, 2 Cor. viii. 18, xi. 28. Probably Paul was commissioned by some, and he took it on him to speak for the rest. If the faith of the Romans were published in all the world (chap. i. 8), the Churches everywhere would have sufficient interest in them to ratify this courtesy. "Quoniam cognovit omnium erga Romanos studium, omnium nomine salutat."

Vv. 17-20. Warning against false teachers. This comes in very abruptly in the middle of the greetings, and as it stands has the character of an afterthought. The false teachers referred to are quite definitely described, but it is clear that they had not yet appeared in Rome, nor begun to work there. Paul is only warning the Roman Church against a danger which he has seen in other places. There is a very similar passage in Phil. iii. 18 f., which Lightfoot connects with this, arguing that the persons denounced are not Judaising teachers, but antinomian reactionists. It is easier to see grounds for this opinion in Philippians than here: but chap. vi. 1-23 may be quoted in support of it.

h Ch. xiv. 18.
i Here only in N.T.
k Rev. ii. 27.

18. οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ[1] Χριστῷ οὐ [h] δουλεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ· καὶ διὰ τῆς [i] χρηστολογίας καὶ εὐλογίας ἐξαπατῶσι τὰς καρδίας τῶν ἀκάκων. 19. ἡ γὰρ ὑμῶν ὑπακοὴ εἰς πάντας ἀφίκετο· χαίρω οὖν τὸ ἐφ' ὑμῖν·[2] θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς σοφοὺς μὲν εἶναι εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν, ἀκεραίους δὲ εἰς τὸ κακόν. 20. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης [k] συντρίψει τὸν Σατανᾶν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας ὑμῶν ἐν τάχει. ἡ

[1] Ιησου om. ℵABCDFP and all edd.

[2] χαιρω ουν το εφ υμιν ℵ[3]DF; but ℵ[1]ABCLP and all edd. εφ' υμιν ουν χαιρω. μεν after σοφους ℵACP; om. BDFL. Most edd. omit, but W. and H. bracket.

Ver. 17. σκοπεῖν: to keep your eye upon, either as an example to be followed (Phil. iii. 17), or (as in this case) as a peril to be avoided. τοὺς τὰς διχοστασίας καὶ τὰ σκάνδαλα ποιοῦντας: both the persons and their conduct are supposed to be known; "the divisions" and "the scandals," which had been occasioned in other Churches, are assumed to be familiar to the Romans. τὰ σκάνδαλα refers more naturally to conduct which would create a moral prejudice against the Gospel, and so prevent men from accepting it, than to any ordinary result of Jewish legal teaching. But if the latter caused dissension and generated bad tempers in the Church, it also might give outsiders cause to blaspheme, and to stumble at the Gospel (xiv. 13, 16). παρὰ τὴν διδαχὴν ἣν ὑμεῖς ἐμάθετε: ὑμεῖς is emphatic, and implies that they at least are as yet untouched by the false teaching. By "the teaching which you received" is meant not "Paulinism," but Christianity, though the words of course imply that the Roman Church was not anti-Pauline. ἐκκλίνετε with ἀπὸ in 1 Pet. iii. 11, Prov. iv. 15.

Ver. 18. οἱ γὰρ τοιοῦτοι κ.τ.λ. Christians must not associate with those who do not serve the one Lord. τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Χριστῷ: this combination occurs here only in N.T. τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ: cf. Phil. iii. 19, ὧν ὁ θεὸς ἡ κοιλία. The words need not mean that the teachers in question were mere sensualists, or that they taught Epicurean or antinomian doctrines: the sense must partly be defined by the contrast—it is not our Lord Christ whom they serve; on the contrary, it is base interests of their own. It is a bitter contemptuous way of describing a self-seeking spirit, rather than an allusion to any particular cast of doctrine. διὰ τῆς χρηστολογίας καὶ εὐλογίας: according to Grimm, χρηστολογία refers to the insinuating tone, εὐλογία to the fine style, of the false teachers. Examples from profane Greek bear out this distinction (εὔαρχός ἐστιν ὁ λόγος καὶ πολλὴν τὴν εὐλογίαν ἐπιδεικνύμενος καὶ εὐλεξις), but as εὐλογία in Biblical Greek, and in Philo and Josephus invariably has a religious sense, Cremer prefers to take it so here also: "pious talk". ἐξαπατῶσι: vii. 11, 1 Cor. iii. 18, 2 Th. ii. 2. ἀκάκων: all the English versions, except Gen. and A.V., render "of the innocent" (Gifford). See Heb. vii. 26. In this place "guileless" is rather the idea: suspecting no evil, and therefore liable to be deceived.

Ver. 19. ἡ γὰρ ὑμῶν ὑπακοὴ: What is the connection? "I give this exhortation, separating you altogether from the false teachers, and from those who are liable to be misled by them; for your obedience (ὑμῶν emphasised by position) has come abroad to all men. (Cf. i. 8.) Over you therefore I rejoice, but," etc. He expresses his confidence in them, but at the same time conveys the feeling of his anxiety. For χαίρειν ἐπὶ see 1 Cor. xiii. 6, xvi. 17. σοφοὺς μὲν εἶναι εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν, ἀκεραίους δὲ εἰς τὸ κακόν. For ἀκέραιος see Matt. x. 16, Phil. ii. 15, and Trench, Syn., § lvi., where there is a full discussion and comparison with ἄκακος. The fundamental idea of the word is that of freedom from alien or disturbing elements. What Paul here wishes for the Romans—moral intelligence, not impaired in the least by any dealings with evil—does suggest that antinomianism was the peril to be guarded against. Integrity of the moral nature is the best security: the seductive teaching is instinctively repelled.

Ver. 20. ὁ δὲ θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης: used here with special reference to αἱ διχοστασίαι. Cf. 1 Cor. xiv. 33. συντρίψει τὸν Σατανᾶν: divisions in the Church are Satan's work, and the suppression of them by the God of peace is a victory over Satan. Cf. 2 Cor. xi. 14 f. There is an allusion to Gen iii. 15, though it is χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ[1] μεθ' ὑμῶν. ἀμήν. 21. Ἀσπάζονται[2] ὑμᾶς Τιμόθεος ὁ συνεργός μου, καὶ Λούκιος καὶ Ἰάσων καὶ Σωσίπατρος οἱ συγγενεῖς μου. 22. ἀσπάζομαι ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ Τέρτιος ὁ γράψας τὴν ἐπιστολὴν ἐν Κυρίῳ. 23. ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Γάϊος ὁ ξένος μου καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ὅλης. ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Ἔραστος ὁ οἰκονόμος τῆς πόλεως, καὶ Κούαρτ ὁ ἀδελφός.

[1] Χριστου om. ℵB, edd.

[2] For ασπαζονται read ασπαζεται ℵABCD[1]F. Om. first μου B 67; W. and H. bracket.

doubtful whether Paul found anything there answering to συντρίψει. The LXX has τηρήσει. ἐν τάχει: cf. Ez. xxix. 5; Deut. xxviii. 20. The false teachers may come and cause dissension, but it will not be long till peace is restored. ἡ χάρις κ.τ.λ. This benediction can hardly be supposed to belong only to vv. 17-20. It rather suggests that some copies of the epistle ended here; possibly that vv. 1-20 (for there is another benediction at xiv. 33) were originally an independent epistle.

Vv. 21-23. Greetings of Paul's companions.

Ver. 21. Τιμόθεος. In many of the epistles Timothy's name is associated with Paul's in the opening salutation (1 and 2 Thess., 2 Cor., Phil., Col., Philemon). Perhaps when Paul began this letter he was absent, but had come back in time to send his greeting at the close. He was with Paul (Acts xx. 4 f.) when he started on the journey to Jerusalem mentioned in xv. 25. Lucius, Jason and Sosipater are all Jews, but none of them can be identified. For the names (which may or may not be those of the same persons) see Acts xiii. 1, xvii. 5, xx. 4.

Ver. 22. ἐγὼ Τέρτιος ὁ γράψας τὴν ἐπιστολήν: the use of the first person is a striking indication of Paul's courtesy. To have sent the greeting of his amanuensis in the third person would have been to treat him as a mere machine (Godet). ἐν Κυρίῳ goes with ἀσπάζομαι: it is as a Christian, not in virtue of any other relation he has to the Romans, that Tertius salutes them.

Ver. 23. Γάϊος ὁ ξένος μου κ. ὅλης τῆς ἐκκλησίας: As the Epistle to the Romans was written from Corinth this hospitable Christian is probably the same who is mentioned in 1 Cor. i. 14. Three other persons (apparently) of the same name are mentioned in Acts xix. 29, xx. 4, and 3 John. By ὁ ξένος μου is meant that Gaius was Paul's host in Corinth; ὁ ξένος ὅλης τῆς ἐκκλησίας might either mean that the whole Christian community met in his house (cf. vv. 5, 14, 15), or that he made all Christians who came to Corinth welcome. Ἔραστος ὁ οἰκονόμος τῆς πόλεως. We cannot be sure that this is the Erastus of Acts xix. 22, 2 Tim. iv. 20: the latter seems to have been at Paul's disposal in connection with his work. But they may be the same, and Paul may here be designating Erastus by an office which he had once held, but held no longer. The city treasurer (arcarius civitatis) would be an important person in a poor community (1 Cor. i. 26 ff.), and he and Gaius (whose boundless hospitality implies means) are probably mentioned here as representing the Corinthian Church. Κούαρτος ὁ ἀδελφός: Quartus, known to Paul only as a Christian, had perhaps some connection with Rome which entitled him to have his salutation inserted.

Ver. 24. The attestation of this verse is quite insufficient, and it is omitted by all critical editors.

Vv. 25-27. The doxology. St. Paul's letters, as a rule, terminate with a benediction, and even apart from the questions of textual criticism, connected with it, this doxology has given rise to much discussion. The closest analogies to it are found in the doxology at the end of Ephes., chap. iii., and in Jude (vv. 24 and 25); there is something similar in the last chapter of Hebrews (xiii. 20 f.), though not quite at the end; Pauline doxologies as a rule are briefer (i. 25, ix. 5, xi. 36, Phil. iv. 20), and more closely related to what immediately precedes. This one, in which all the leading ideas of the Epistle to the Romans may be discovered, though in a style which reminds one uncomfortably of the Pastoral Epistles rather than of that to which it is appended, would seem more in place if it stood where AL and an immense num-

24. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.[1] 25. Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ ὑμᾶς στηρίξαι κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κατὰ [l] ἀποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου χρόνοις αἰωνίοις [m] σεσιγημένου, 26. φανερωθέντος δὲ νῦν, διά τε γραφῶν προφητικῶν, κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ αἰωνίου Θεοῦ, εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως εἰς

l Gal. i. 12; Eph. iii. 3.
m Here only in N.T.

[1] This verse is wanting in ℵABC; ins. in DFL. See Introduction, p. 578.

ber of MSS. place it—after xiv. 23. It may represent the first emergence and conscious apprehension of thoughts which were afterwards to become familiar; but it cannot be denied that the many distinct points of contact with later writings give it, in spite of all it has of imposing, a somewhat artificial character, and it may not belong to the Epistle to the Romans any more than the doxology in Matt. vi. belongs to the Lord's Prayer.

Ver. 25 f. τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ: cf. Eph. iii. 20, Jude v. 24. στηρίξαι: this word takes us back to the beginning of the epistle (i. 11.) Paul wished to impart to them some spiritual gift, to the end that they might be established; but only God is able (cf. xiv. 4) to effect this result. The stablishing is to take place κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου: in agreement with the gospel Paul preached. When it is achieved, the Romans will be settled and confirmed in Christianity as it was understood by the Apostle. For τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου cf. ii. 16, 2 Tim. ii. 8: also 1 Tim. i. 11, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον . . . ὃ ἐπιστεύθην ἐγώ. The expression implies not only that Paul's gospel was his own, in the sense that he was not taught it by any man (Gal. i. 11 f.), but also that it had something characteristic of himself about it. The characteristic feature, to judge by this epistle, was his sense of the absolute freeness of salvation (justification by faith, apart from works of law), and of its absolute universality (for every one that believeth, Jew first, then Greek). τὸ κήρυγμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ is practically the same as τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου. It was in a preaching (1 Cor. ii. 4, xv. 14, Tit. i. 3) of which Jesus Christ was the object that Paul declared the characteristic truths of his gospel: and this preaching, as well as the gospel, may be said to be the rule according to which the Romans are to be established as Christians. κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου . . . γνωρισθέντος. This passage "goes not with στηρίξαι, but with κήρυγμα" (Sanday and Headlam). This is the simplest construction: the gospel Paul preaches, the gospel in accordance with which he would have them established, is itself in accordance with—we may even say identical with—the revelation of a mystery, etc. The μυστήριον here referred to is God's world-embracing purpose of redemption, as it has been set out conspicuously in this epistle. One aspect of this—one element of the mystery—is referred to where μυστήριον is used in xi. 25; but the conception of the Gospel as a μυστήριον revealed in the fulness of the time dominates later epistles, especially Ephesians (cf. Eph. i. 9, iii., 3, 4, 9, vi. 19). The Gospel as Paul understood it was a μυστήριον, because it could never have been known except through Divine revelation: μυστήριον and ἀποκάλυψις are correlative terms. χρόνοις αἰωνίοις: the dative expresses duration. Winer, p. 273; cf. 2 Tim. i. 9, Tit. i. 2. For φανερωθέντος δὲ νῦν cf. iii. 21. The aorist refers to Christ's appearing, though the significance of this had to be made clear by revelation (Weiss). διά τε γραφῶν προφητικῶν . . . γνωρισθέντος: for τε cf. ii. 16. The connection is meant to be as close as possible: the γνωρίζειν follows the φανεροῦν as a matter of course. The γραφαὶ προφητικαί are the O.T. Scriptures of which Paul made constant use in preaching his gospel (cf. κατὰ τὰς γραφὰς in 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4). For him the O.T. was essentially a Christian book. His gospel was witnessed to by the law and the prophets (i. 2, iii. 21, iv., passim), and in that sense the mystery was made known through them. But their significance only came out for one who had the Christian key to them—the knowledge of Christ which revelation had given to Paul. κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ αἰωνίου Θεοῦ: cf. 1 Tim. i. 1, Tit. i. 3. The idea is that only an express command of the Eternal God could justify the promulgation of the secret He had kept so long. For the "Eternal God" cf. Gen. xxi. 33, 1 Tim. i. 17 (τῷ βασιλεῖ τῶν αἰώνων). εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως: cf. i. 5. εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη: in i. 5 it is ἐν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη γνωρισθέντος, 27. μόνῳ σοφῷ [n] Θεῷ, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, n Jude v. 25

ᾧ [1] ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Ῥωμαίους ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Κορίνθου διὰ Φοίβης τῆς διακόνου τῆς ἐν Κεγχρεαῖς ἐκκλησίας.[2]

[1] ω is wanting in B, in F-lat., Orig.-interp., Syr., and is bracketed by W. and H. But whether this is to be explained as an intentional correction to simplify the construction, or a mere oversight (of which Weiss gives examples, Textkritik, S. 93), it can hardly be right. Neither can αυτω, which is found in P, be original; it is too natural a correction. Hence edd. are practically unanimous in keeping ω. After τους αιωνας ℵADP add των αιωνων, but W. and H., with BCL and cursives, omit it. Weiss prints the addition in his text, yet argues for its omission (Textkritik, 89).

[2] προς ρωμαιους only, in ℵABCD.

πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν: for εἰς in this sense see iii. 22. It is very difficult to believe that such mosaic work is the original composition of Paul.

Ver. 27. μόνῳ σοφῷ θεῷ: this description of God suits all that has just been said about His great purpose in human history, and the hiding and revealing of it in due time. The true text in 1 Tim. i. 17 has no σοφῷ. The absence of the article here indicates that it is in virtue of having this character that God is able to stablish the Romans according to Paul's Gospel. ᾧ ἡ δόξα: it is impossible to be sure of the reading here. If ᾧ be omitted, there is no grammatical difficulty whatever: glory is ascribed to God through Jesus Christ, through Whom the eternal purpose of the world's redemption has in God's wisdom been wrought out. But its omission is almost certainly a correction made for simplification's sake. If it be retained, to whom does it refer? (1) Some say, to Jesus Christ; and this is grammatically the obvious way to take it. But it seems inconsistent with the fact that in τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ and μόνῳ σοφῷ θεῷ Paul wishes unequivocally to ascribe the glory to God. And though it saves the grammar of the last clause, it sacrifices that of the whole sentence. Hence (2) it seems necessary to refer it to God, and we may suppose, with Sanday and Headlam, that the structure of the sentence being lost amid the heavily-loaded clauses of the doxology, the writer concludes with a well-known formula of praise, ᾧ ἡ δόξα κ.τ.λ. (Gal. i. 15, 2 Tim. iv. 18, Heb. xiii. 21). This might be indicated by putting a dash after Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. The thread is lost, and the writer appends his solemn conclusion as best he can.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL

TO THE CORINTHIANS

INTRODUCTION.

CHAPTER I.

THE CHURCH OF GOD IN CORINTH.

The establishment of the Church of Corinth was the crowning work of Paul's second missionary journey, and one of the greatest achievements of his life. By repeated interventions crossing his plans of travel, the hand of God had compelled him to enter Europe, through the gate of Macedonia; thence Jewish persecution drove him onwards to Achaia, and prevented his returning to the work left unfinished in the northern province (1 Thess. ii. 14 ff., cf. Acts xvii. 5-15). At Athens, where he first touched Greek soil, the Apostle met with scant success; he arrived at Corinth dispirited and out of health (1 Cor. ii. 3, cf. 1 Thess. iii. 7), with little expectation of the harvest awaiting him. Loneliness aggravated the other causes of the "weakness and fear and trembling" that shook Christ's bold ambassador. His appearance and bearing conveyed an impression of feebleness which acted long afterwards to his prejudice (1 Cor. iv. 10, 2 Cor. x. 1-11, xii. 5, etc.). The new friendship of Aquila and Priscilla proved, however, a cordial to him (Acts xviii. 2 f., cf. Rom. xvi. 3 f.); and the return of Silas and Timothy with good news from Macedonia revived the confidence and vigour of their leader (Acts xviii. 5, cf. 1 Thess. iii. 6-9). Free from the anxiety which had distracted him, and rising above his late defeat, "Paul was constrained by the word [cf. for this verb 2 Cor. v. 14, and see Blass' Acta Apostol., ad loc.], testifying to the Jews that Jesus is the Christ". The decision with which he now spoke brought about a speedy rupture. The Jews were affronted by the doctrine of a crucified Messiah, which Paul pressed with unsparing rigour (Acts xviii. 5 f., 1 Cor. i. 17, 23, ii. 2). In this crisis the Apostle showed neither weakness nor fear; shaking off the dust of the synagogue, he established a rival ecclesia hard by at the house of the proselyte

Titius Justus, marked by his name as a Roman citizen of the colonia, who could offer a secure and honourable refuge. The seceders included the Synagogue-chief Crispus and his family, with some other persons of importance. A vision in the following night assured Paul of success and personal safety at Corinth; accordingly "he sat down,"[1] resolved to make full proof of his ministry (Acts xviii. 9-11, cf. 2 Cor. i. 18 f.) and staying at least eighteen months in the city—a period much longer than he had spent in any place since first setting out from Antioch. The assault of the Jews miscarried through the firmness and impartiality of the proconsul Gallio. The Apostle found in the Roman Government "the restrainer" of the lawless violence which would have crushed his infant Churches (2 Thess. ii. 6 f.). At Corinth popular feeling ran against the Jews, and their futile attack favourably advertised Paul's work. The murderous plot formed against him some years later (Acts xx. 3) shows how fiercely he was hated by his compatriots in Corinth. He tells us that his success in Macedonia had excited public attention in many quarters, and prepared for his message an interested hearing (1 Thess. i. 8 f.). Outside of Corinth the Gospel was preached with effect throughout Achaia (2 Cor. i. 1); in Cenchreæ, e.g., a regularly constituted Church was formed (Rom. xvi. 1). At his departure (Acts xviii. 18) the Apostle left behind him in this province a Christian community comparatively strong in numbers and conspicuous in the talent and activity of its members (1 Cor. i. 4-8, xiv. 26 ff.), consisting mainly of Gentiles, but with a considerable Jewish infusion (i. 12, vii. 18, xii. 13).

This city, the capital of Roman Greece and the fourth perhaps in size in the empire, was a focus of pagan civilisation, a mirror of the life and society of the age. The centre of a vast commerce, Corinth attracted a crowd of foreigners from East and West, who mingled with the native Greeks and adopted their language and manners. Though not a University town like Athens, Corinth nevertheless prided herself on her culture, and offered a mart to the vendors of all kinds of wisdom. "Not many wise, not many mighty, not many high-born" joined the disciples of the Crucified; but some of Paul's converts came under this description. There were marked social differences and contrasts of wealth and poverty in the Church (1 Cor. vii. 20-24, xi. 21 f., 2 Cor. viii. 12 ff., ix. 6 ff.). Along with slaves, a crowd of artisans and nondescript people, engaged in the petty handicrafts of a great emporium, entered the new society;

[1] ἐκάθισεν (Acts xviii. 11): the expression indicates that Paul had been up to this point unsettled, and made up his mind to remain; cf. Luke xxiv. 49.

"the foolish things of the world," its "weak" and "baseborn," formed the majority of its constituency (1 Cor. i. 27 ff.)—amongst them many who had been steeped in pagan vice (vi. 9 ff.).

The moral transformation effected in this corrupt material was accompanied by a notable mental quickening. The Hellenic intellect awoke at the touch of spiritual faith. This first Christian society planted upon Greek soil exhibited the characteristic qualities of the race—qualities however of Greece in her decadence rather than her prime. Amongst so many freshly awakened and eager but undisciplined minds, the Greek intellectualism took on a crude and shallow form; it betrayed a childish conceit and fondness for rhetoric and philosophical jargon (i. 17, ii. 1-5, etc.), and allied itself with the factiousness that was the inveterate curse of Greece. The Corinthian talent in matters of "word and knowledge" ran into emulation and frivolous disputes. "The habit of seeming to know all about most things, and of being able to talk glibly about most things, would naturally tend to an excess of individuality, and a diminished sense of corporate responsibilities. This fact supplies, under many different forms, the main drift of 1 Corinthians" (Hort, Ecclesia, p. 129). Even the gifts of the Holy Spirit were abused for purposes of display, edification being often the last thing thought of in their exercise (xii., xiv.). The excesses which profaned the Lord's Table (xi. 20 ff.), and the unseemly conduct of women in the Church meetings (xi. 3 ff., xiv. 34 ff.), were symptoms of the lawless self-assertion that marred the excellencies of this Church, and turned the abilities of many of its members into an injury rather than a furtherance to its welfare.

Still graver mischief arose from the influence of heathen society. For men breathing the moral atmosphere of Corinth, and whose earlier habits and notions had been formed in this environment, to conceive and maintain a Christian moral ideal was difficult in the extreme. Deplorable relapses occurred when the fervour of conversion had abated, and the Church proved shamefully tolerant towards sins of impurity (1 Cor. v., 2 Cor. xii. 20 f.). The acuteness of the Greek mind showed itself in antinomian sophistry; the "liberty" from Jewish ceremonial restrictions claimed by Paul for Gentile Christians was by some construed into a general licence, and carried to a length which shocked not merely the scruples of fellow-believers but the common moral instincts (vi. 12 ff., viii. 9-13, x. 23 ff., xi. 13 b). The social festivities of Corinth, bound up as they were with idolatry and its impurities, exposed the Church to severe temptation. To draw a hard and fast line in such questions and to forbid all participation in idolothyta, after the precedent of Acts xv., would have been the simplest course to take; but Paul feels it necessary to ground the matter on fundamental principles. He will not acknowledge any dominion of the idol over "the earth and its fulness" (x. 26); nor, on the other hand, is it right to prevent neighbourly intercourse between Christians and unbelievers (x. 27 ff.). But where the feast is held under the auspices of a heathen god and as the sequel to his sacrifice the case is altered; participation under these circumstances becomes an act of apostasy, and the feaster identifies himself with the idol as distinctly as in the Lord's Supper he identifies himself with Christ (x. 16 ff.).

The working of the old leaven is patent in the denial of the resurrection of the dead made by some Corinthian Christians (xv.). Here the radical scepticism of the age opposed itself to the fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, upon which the whole weight of Christian faith and hope, and the entire Christian conception of the world and of destiny, rest as upon their fulcrum and rock of certainty. The disbelief in bodily resurrection and the indifference to bodily sin manifested at Corinth had a common root. They may be traced to the false spiritualism, the contempt for physical nature, characteristic of the theosophy of the times, which gave rise a few years later to the Colossian heresy and was a chief factor in the development of Gnosticism. The teaching of chap. vi., that "your bodies are limbs of Christ," and the command to "glorify God in your bodies," are aimed against the same philosophical assumptions that are combated in chap. xv.; the demand for bodily purity finds in the doctrine of the resurrection its indispensable support and counterpart.

No reference is made in the Epistle to Church officers of any kind. Submission to "the house of Stephanas," and to others rendering like service, is enjoined in xvi. 15 f., but by way of voluntary deference. So early as the first missionary journey in South Galatia Paul had assisted in the "appointing of elders in every Church" (Acts xiv. 23; cf. Acts xx. 17, 1 Thess. v. 12, Rom. xii. 8, Phil. i. 1). He had refrained from this step at Corinth for some specific reason—a reason lying, it may be supposed, in the democratic spirit of the Church, which might have ill brooked official control. In xii. 28 the Apostle alludes, however, to "governments" as amongst the things which "God set [as part of a plan, Hort] in the Church"; and his promise to "set in order other things" (beside the Lord's Supper) when he comes (xi. 34) may cover the intention to remedy this defect, the consequences of which are painfully apparent (xiv. 26-33, etc.).

This Epistle discloses the interior life of an apostolic Church; hence its surpassing historical interest. We must not, indeed, apply its data without qualification to contemporary Christian societies, even those of Gentile origin. The Corinthian Church presented material of uncommon richness, but intractable to the founder's hand. Its turbulence and party heat are unparalleled in the N.T. records. But while the Church life here portrayed was exceptional in some features, and Paul's Church policy at Corinth may have differed from that pursued elsewhere, this Epistle is peculiarly full in its teaching on the nature and rights of the Church, and in the light it throws upon the conditions under which the first Gentile-Christian communities were moulded. Chaps. xii. and xiii. are the true centre of the Epistle. The very formlessness of this Church, its rudimentary and protoplasmic state, reveals the essence of the Christian society, its substratum and vital tissue, as these can hardly be seen in a more developed and furnished condition. The Apostle Paul is contending for the bare life of the Church of God in Corinth.

Corinth now became the advanced post and gateway for Christianity in its westward march. The new Corinth, in which Paul laboured, dates from the year 46 B.C., when the city was refounded by Julius Cæsar under the name Colonia Julia Corinthus (or Laus Julii Corinthus). Just a century earlier the old Corinth had been razed to the ground by Lucius Mummius, upon the defeat of the Achæan league which, with Corinth for its fortress, made a last despairing effort to retrieve the liberties of Greece. Corinth and Carthage fell and rose again simultaneously, marking the epochs at which republican Rome completed the destruction of the old world and imperial Rome began the construction of the new. The fame of ancient Corinth, reaching back to heroic times (see the Iliad, ii., 570; Pindar, Olymp., 13)—where "the sweetly breathing Muse" and "death-dealing Ares" flourished side by side—and her later prowess as the bulwark of the Peloponnese and the maritime rival of Athens, were traditions with little interest or meaning for Paul and his disciples. The geographical position of Corinth gave to it enduring importance, and explains the fact that on its restoration the city sprang at once into the foremost rank. Corinth occupies one of the finest sites in Europe. With the Acrocorinthus (nearly 2,000 feet high) and the Oneion range shielding it on the south, it commands the narrow plain of the isthmus, and looks down, eastwards and westwards, upon the Saronic and Corinthian gulfs, which furnished the main artery of commerce between the Ægean and the Euxine seas on the one hand, and the Western Mediterranean upon the other. (See the descriptions in Stanley's Epp. to the Cor., p. 4, also article "Corinth" in Hastings' Bib. Dict.; and more at large, Leake's Morea, iii., 229-304, Curtius' Peloponnesus, ii., 514 f.; and for the antiquities, Pausanias, II., i., 2; Strabo, VIII., vi., 20-24; Dio Chrys., Orat., 37; Ælius Arist., Ad Poseid.) The western port, Lechæum, 1½ mile distant, was linked by double walls to the city; Cenchreæ lay 8½ miles eastwards; and a shipway, running north of Corinth, connected the two harbours.

The presiding deities of this maritime city were the sea-god Poseidon, under whose patronage the famous Isthmian games were held (see ix. 24 ff. and notes), and Aphrodité, whose temple crowned the Acrocorinthus. The cultus of Aphrodité (worshipped in her debasing form as Aphr. Pandemos) dates back, it is supposed, to prehistoric Phœnician times; its features were more Oriental than Greek—especially the institution of the ἱερόδουλοι, or priestess-courtesans, of whom more than a thousand were attached to the shrine of the goddess. Temples of Serapis and Isis were also conspicuous at Corinth, representing the powerful leaven of Egyptian superstition that helped to demoralise the empire. The luxury and refinement of the elder Corinth were associated with its vice; so notorious was its debauchery that κορινθιάζεσθαι was a euphemism for whoredom; in our own literature "a Corinthian" still means a polished rake. By all accounts, the new Corinth more than rivalled the old in wickedness. Here the Apostle drew, from life, the lurid portraiture of Gentile sin that darkens the first page of his Epistle to the Romans. Within this stronghold of paganism and focus of Greek corruption Paul planted the cross of his Redeemer, rising out of his weakness and fear to a boundless courage. He confronted the world's glory and infamy with the sight of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," confident that in the word of the cross which he preached there lay a spell to subdue the pride and cleanse the foulness of Corinthian life, a force which would prove to Gentile society in this place of its utter corruption the wisdom and power of God unto salvation. In "the Church of God in Corinth," with all its defects and follies, this redeeming power was lodged.

CHAPTER II.

PAUL'S COMMUNICATIONS WITH CORINTH.

ASSUMING 49 A.D. as the date of the conference in Jerusalem (Acts xv.), 57 as that of Paul's last voyage to the Holy City,[1] we calculate that he arrived at Corinth first in the latter part of the year 50, closing his mission in 52. He was engaged in the interval, until the spring of 56, mainly in the evangelisation of the province of Asia (Acts xix. 10, 22, xx. 1 ff.). When he writes this letter the Apostle is still at Ephesus, intending to remain until Pentecost, and with Passover approaching (xvi. 8 f., v. 7 f. : see notes). Paul's departure from Ephesus was hastened by the riot (Acts xix. 23-xx. 1); and we may take it that this Epistle was despatched in the early spring of 56, very shortly before Paul left Ephesus for Troas in the course of his third missionary journey.

The Apostle had previously sent Timothy and Erastus forward to Corinth, by way of Macedonia, to prepare for his arrival, in pursuance of the plan now sketched in his mind for completing his work in these regions with a view to advancing upon Rome and the further west (Acts xix. 21 f., cf. Rom. xv. 16-25). Timothy is likely to arrive soon after this letter, and will be able to enforce its prescriptions (iv. 17; see also xvi. 10 f., and notes). Apollos, who had migrated to Corinth fresh from the instructions of Priscilla and Aquila in Ephesus and had "watered" there what Paul had "planted" (iii. 6, Acts xviii. 27 f.), is back again at Ephesus in the Apostle's company (xvi. 12); he is clear of complicity in the party quarrels with which his name was associated in Corinth (i. 12, iii. 4-8, iv. 6). Quite recently "the people of Chloë" have brought an alarming report of these "strifes" (i. 11); and the Apostle learns from general rumour of the case of incest polluting the Church

[1] See article "Chronology of the N.T." in Hastings' Bib. Dict.; and for the latter date, article "Paul," i., 5. It is now generally recognised that the dates assigned to Pauline events by Wieseler and Lightfoot are, from 49 onwards, at least a couple of years too late.

(v. 1). More agreeable tidings have come with Stephanas and his companions (xvi. 17 f.), who bear a dutiful letter of inquiry addressed to Paul, which he answers in chap. vii. ff. Through their lips, as well as from the Church letter, he receives the assurances of the general loyalty and goodwill of the Corinthian believers. From all these sources occasion is drawn and material furnished for the writing before us.

This Epistle is not the first which Paul had addressed to Corinth. In chap. v. 9 the writer refers to an earlier letter forbidding intercourse with immoral persons. The terms of this admonition had raised debate. Some read it as though all dealings with vicious men were inhibited—a restriction that was as good as to tell Corinthian Christians to "go out of the world"! They could not imagine Paul to mean this; but his words allowed of this construction, and thus opened the door for discussion and for temporising. The tenor of the lost Epistle probably resembled that of 2 Cor. vi. 14-vii. 1 (see this Comm., ad loc.). This letter had arrived some months previously to our Epistle; for the Church had had time to consider and reply to it, and the condition of things to which it relates has undergone some changes. It may be referred as far back as the previous autumn (55 A.D.). Inasmuch as the Church-letter touched on "the collection for the saints" (xvi. 1: see note), it seems likely that the Apostle had made some appeal in the lost Epistle on this subject, eliciting a favourable reply (cf. 2 Cor. viii. 10, ix. 2), but with a request for directions as to the mode of gathering the money.

There is reason to believe that Paul had himself visited Corinth not very long before writing the aforesaid letter. The allusions of 2 Cor. ii. 1, xii. 14, 20—xiii. 2 (see notes), imply that he had been twice in Corinth before the Second Epistle. If with Clemen (Chronol. d. Paulin. Briefe), Schmiedel (Handcomm., 1 and 2 Kor., Einleitung), and Krenkel (Beiträge z. Aufhellung d. Paul. Briefe, vi.) we could spread the composition of 1 and 2 Cor. over two years, space would be found for interposing such a visit between them, but at the cost of creating fresh and insuperable chronological difficulties. In 2 Cor. i. 15 ff. the Apostle defends himself for having failed to come recently to Corinth; he had sent Titus, and with him a letter (2 Cor. ii. 4, vii. 8)—distinct, as the present writer holds, from 1 Cor. (a second lost letter of Paul to Corinth: see Hastings' Bib. Dict., article "Paul," i. d.), and occasioned by an emergency that arose subsequently to its despatch —which gave a new turn to the Apostle's relations with the Church. Meanwhile he has himself left Ephesus (as contemplated in 1 Cor. xvi.), has pushed forward to Macedonia (2 Cor. ii. 12 f.), where at last Titus meets him with the cheering news reflected in 2 Cor. i.-vii. As already shown, a space of but a few weeks elapsed between Paul's writing 1 Cor. and leaving Ephesus for Troas.

We have traced Paul's steps through the months separating the two Epistles, and neither time nor occasion is found for an interjected trip to Corinth. We are thrown back upon the period before the first Epistle. Yet 1 Cor. makes no express reference to any recent visit; and its silence, primâ facie, negatives the supposition of any such occurrence. There are circumstances however which relieve this adverse presumption. For one thing, the lost letter had intervened; this other Epistle, not our 1 Cor., was the sequel of the visit in question. The main thing that occupied Paul's mind on that occasion, and which caused the "grief" referred to in 2 Cor. ii. 1, had been the impurity of life manifest within the Church. Against this he had given solemn warning, while forbearing discipline (2 Cor. xiii. 2). It was with a moral situation of this kind that the missing letter dealt (1 Cor. v. 9-12); the alarm it expressed is still felt in 1 Cor. vi., x., xv. 33 f. Meantime, the horrible case of incest has eclipsed previous transgressions; and while Paul reaffirms the general directions already sent and prompted (ex hypothesi) by personal observation, he fastens his attention upon the new criminality just brought to his ears. That previous meeting had been so unhappy for both parties that Paul might well avoid allusion to it; it was an experience he was resolved never to repeat (2 Cor. ii. 1, xii. 20). If he comes again under like conditions, it will be "rod" in hand (1 Cor. iv. 21, 2 Cor. xiii. 2). His forbearance had been misconstrued; some of the offenders were emboldened to defy him, and his Judaistic supplanters subsequently contrasted the severity of his letters with his timidity in face of the mutineers (2 Cor. x. 6, xiii. 1-7)—a taunt which drags from him the allusions of the second Epistle. After all, 1 Cor. is not without traces of the second visit. Nothing so well accounts for the doubts of Paul's disciplinary power hinted in 1 Cor. iv. 18-21 as the encounter supposed. When after his threat, and while the plague grows in virulence (1 Cor. v.) and his opponents challenge him to come (iv. 18)—still more, when he has announced, while fulminating anathemas on paper (v. 4 f., xvi. 22), that his return is postponed, without any imperative reason given for delay (xvi. 5 ff.)—after all this, it is no wonder that even his friends felt themselves aggrieved, and that the most damaging constructions were put upon the Apostle's changes of plan (2 Cor. i. 15 ff., x. 9 ff., xiii. 3 ff.). At last he explains, in 2 Cor., that the postponement is due to his continued desire to "spare" instead of striking. If, notwithstanding these apprehensions, Paul speaks in 2 Cor. i. 15 of the double visit that had been for a while intended (a third and fourth from the beginning) as "a second joy" (or "grace"), he is probably quoting words of the Church letter. Further, one detects in 1 Cor. iv .1-10 a sharp note of personal feeling that indicates some recent contact between writer and readers, and ocular observation on the Apostle's part of the altered bearing of his spoilt children at Corinth. This Epistle manifests a mastery of the situation and a vivid realisation of its detailed circumstances such as we can best account for on the supposition that Paul had taken a personal survey of the development of the Church since his first departure, and that behind all he has heard latterly from others and seen through their eyes, he is also judging upon the strength of what he has himself witnessed and knows at first hand.

CHAPTER III.

THE TEACHING OF THE EPISTLE.

WHILE the doctrine of the companion Epistles to the Galatians and Romans lies upon the surface, the theology of this Epistle has to be disentangled from a coil of knotty practical questions. The Apostle writes under constraint, unable to count on the full sympathy of his readers or to say all that is in his mind (ii. 6, iii. 1). Instead of giving free play to his own reflexions, he is compelled through the greater part of the letter to wait upon the caprices of this flighty young Greek Church. At first sight one fails to observe any continuous teaching in the Epistle; a doctrinal analysis of its contents seems out of place. But closer attention discovers a real coherence behind this disconnectedness of form. While Paul comments on the sad news from Corinth and answers seriatim the questions addressed to him, his genius grasps the situation, and the leaven of the Gospel all the while assimilates the discordant mass. The Pauline standpoint is firmly maintained. The Christian principle shows itself master of the Gentile no less than the Jewish field, and gives earnest of its power to meet the changeful and multiplying demands that will be created by its expansion through the world. There is a unity of thought in this letter as real as that stamped upon the Epistle to the Romans, a unity the more impressive because of the baffling conditions under which it is realised.

Paul's Gospel stands here on its defence against the pretensions of worldly wisdom and the corruptions of the fleshly mind; from the height of the Cross it sends its piercing rays into the abyss of pagan sin disclosed at Corinth in its turpitude and demonic force. Amongst the four Evangelical Epistles, this is the epistle of the cross in its social application. It bears throughout a realistic stamp. "The Church of God that exists in Corinth," the men and women that compose it, are constantly present to the writer's mind—their diverse states and relationships, their debasing antecedents and surroundings, their crude ideas and conflicting tempers and keen ambitions, their high religious enthusiasm and their low moral sensibilities, their demonstrative but fickle affections and unsteady resolutions. Two things he strives to bring into full contact—Christ crucified and these half-Christianised Corinthian natures. What Romans does for the Gospel in the field of theological exposition, and Galatians in that of doctrinal polemic, and 2 Corinthians in that of personal experience and ministerial vocation, this 1 Corinthians has done in respect of its bearing upon human intercourse and the life of the community.

The foundation upon which Paul had built at Corinth is "Jesus Christ"—i.e., "Jesus Christ crucified" (iii. 11, i. 17 f., ii. 2, xv. 1-3). He does not, any more than in 1 Thessalonians, enter into an exposition of his λόγος τοῦ σταύρου. Not yet, in Corinth at least, had the legalists openly contested Paul's doctrine of salvation through the death of Christ; the first sketch of its argumentative defence appears in 2 Cor. v. 14 ff. The chief peril comes from the opposite quarter, from the dissolving influences of Hellenic scepticism and demoralisation. The form, rather than the contents, of Paul's message is just now in question; he is reproached with the μωρία τοῦ κηρύγματος (i. 18-25). But the form of presentation is determined by the substance of the truth presented; the cross of Christ cannot appear draped in the robes of Greek philosophy. The mere fact that it is "the word of the cross" convicts the Gospel of folly in the eyes of the Greek lover of wisdom, as of weakness before the Jewish believer in "signs". A "wise" world that knows not God (i. 21, ii. 6, 14, cf. Rom. i. 19-23) will not understand His message, until it learns its ignorance.

1. To the source of the Gospel must therefore be traced that scorn of the Corinthian world which so much troubles the Church. It was "the testimony of God" that Paul had first announced (ii. 1); the Corinthian believers are "of Him in Christ Jesus," and have learnt to worship God as "Father of us and of our Lord Jesus Christ" (i. 3, 26-31: observe the emphasis thrown in vv. 18-31 upon ὁ Θεὸς in contrast with ὁ κόσμος). Impotent and even absurd "the preaching of the cross" may appear to the Corinthian public; "to the saved" it is "the wisdom" and "the power of God".

(1) The λόγος τοῦ σταύρου is God's power at work in its most characteristic and sovereign energy, destined to shatter all adverse potencies (i. 27 ff., xv. 24 ff.). Veiled under a guise of weakness, it thus ensnares the world and exposes its folly (i. 19-21, ii. 6-8, iii. 19); it chooses for its instruments feeble and ignoble things to overthrow the mightiest. The power of God acting in this λόγος is administered by "our Lord Jesus Christ"—His mediator in the universe, and specifically in the Church (viii. 6)—whom the world crucified (ii. 8);

so that it is in effect the power of Christ, and "in Christ Jesus" men "come to be of God". God has made Him unto us "righteousness and sanctification and redemption" (i. 30, cf. vi. 11); with the "price" of His blood He "bought" us, the body not excepted, for God's property (i. 2, iii. 16, vi. 19 f.); from "the strength of sin" and the reign of death Christians are consciously delivered through the death, crowned by the resurrection, of the Lord Jesus and through faith in His name (xv. 1-4, 11, 17 f., 56 f.).

The Holy Spirit constitutes this mysterious power of God in operation. His "demonstration and power" attended Paul's mission to Corinth, giving it an efficacy otherwise unaccountable (ii. 1-6); all Christian revelations come by this channel (ii. 11-16). Only "in the Holy Spirit" does any man truly say, "Jesus is Lord" (xii. 3); "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God," the foulest sinners of Corinth had been "washed" and "sanctified" (vi. 11). The gifts possessed by this favoured Church are of the Spirit's "distribution," while of God's omnipresent "working" and held under Christ's dominion (xii. 4-11). The manifestations of the Spirit in the Gospel and in the Church differ from all forms of power the world has known; they reveal a kingdom rich in blessings such as "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor man's heart conceived" (ii. 9 f.).

(2) The word of the cross discloses, to those who can understand, God's wisdom hitherto shrouded "in mystery," whose manifestation was determined for this epoch from the world's beginning (ii. 6-9). By it the pretentious "wisdom of the age" will be overthrown. The world scorns to be saved by a crucified Messiah, and "the natural man cannot receive the things of the Spirit of God"; but wisdom is justified of her children. Bringing such a message, the Apostle discards adornments and plausibilities of speech; his word must speak by its inherent truth and force (ii. 1 ff.). As Christian men advance, the revelation of God increasingly approves itself to them; it discloses its σοφία τοῖς τελείοις. No longer does the opinion of the world sway them nor its temper cleave to them, they become "men of the Spirit," who "judge all things" and are "judged of none" (ii. 6-iii. 3). One day they shall "judge the world" (vi. 2).

From the standpoint thus gained, in view of the operation of God in whatever belongs to the Gospel, the Apostle defines in chaps. iii. and iv. the position of Christ's ministers: "We are God's fellow-workers"; Paul the planter, Apollos the waterer—they are nothing; God "gives the increase". "Assistants of Christ, stewards of God's mysteries," their qualifications are fidelity and the possession of the Master's mind (ii. 10, 16, vii. 25, 40). To their Lord, not to their fellow-servants, they are answerable. By His "call" and "compulsion" they serve the Gospel (i. 1, ix. 16 f., xii. 28). How presumptuous for the Corinthians to be "puffed up for one against the other" of God's servants! All alike are theirs, while they are Christ's and Christ is God's (iii. 4 f., 21-iv. 6). Let men look above the stewards to the Master, above the instruments to God who "worketh all things in all" (xii. 4 ff.). The Christian teachers are God's temple-builders; heavy their loss, if they build amiss; terrible their ruin, if instead of strengthening they destroy the fabric (iii. 10-17). Their maintenance is not bestowed by the Church as wages by an employer, but enjoined on the Church by the Lord's ordinance, upon the same principle of justice which allows the threshing ox to feed from the corn (ix. 7-12).

The readers must learn what it means to belong to "the Church of God". Despite their presumed knowledge (viii.), "ignorance of God" is at the root of their errors (xv. 34). Newly emancipated from heathenism, they are slow to realise the character and claims of the God revealed to them in Christ. The first four chapters seek at every point to correct this ignorance; indeed, this underlying vein runs through the Epistle (cf. in this respect 1 Thess. passim). Πάντα εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ is the maxim that Paul dictates to his readers (x. 31), and that governs his mind throughout the letter.

2. The nature of the Christian community is the subject of chaps. xii. and xiv., but it pervades the Epistle no less than that of the sovereign claims of God: "to the Church of God in Corinth" the Apostle writes.

The Græco-Roman cities at this time were honey-combed, in all grades of life, with private associations—trade-guilds, burial clubs and friendly societies, religious confraternities; their existence supplied a great social need, and formed a partial substitute for the political activity suppressed by the levelling Roman empire. These organisations prepared heathen society for Church life; and Christianity upon Gentile soil largely adopted the forms of combination in popular use, borrowing from the Greek club almost as much as from the Jewish synagogue. But it transformed what it borrowed. In the Churches of God established in Thessalonica and Corinth the first stones were laid of the Christian structure of society. New conceptions of duty and kinship are unfolded in this Epistle, which have yet to receive full development. Paul's sociology naturally met with resistance from men reared in Paganism; human nature is still against it. The Corinthians brought into the Church their Greek contentiousness, their lack of loyalty and public spirit. The mental stimulus and large freedom of the new faith, where reverence and self-control were wanting, resulted for the time in greater turbulence rather than in a nobler and happier order.

(1) As we have seen, the Apostle insists above all that the Christian community is the building of God. Injury to this "temple of God" is the worst sacrilege (iii. 16 f.). The Church consists of those whom God has "called into the communion of His Son Jesus Christ" (i. 9); who "were, in one Spirit, all baptised into one body . . . and all were made to drink of one Spirit"—"the Spirit that is from God" (ii. 12, xii. 13). This creative, informing Presence determines the nature, constitution and destiny of the Church.

(2) In relation to each other, Christian men form a brotherhood. Paul addresses his readers as "brethren" not by way of courtesy or personal friendliness, but to enforce upon them mutual devotion. Each Christian looks upon his fellow as "the brother for whom Christ died"; to "sin against the brethren" is "to sin against Christ" (viii. 11 ff.). By communion of faith and worship in Christ a union of hearts is created more intimate and tender than the world had ever seen. Christians are to each other as eye to ear and hand to foot (xii. 14 ff.). Each has his honourable place in the body, fixed by God; each is necessary to all, all to each (xii. 21-31). The rapturous outburst of chap. xiii. is a song to the praise of Love as the law of Christian brotherhood. Knowledge, faith, miracles are useless or unreal unless yoked to love, which points out the "way" to the right employment of every faculty (xii. 31). "The collection for the saints" of Jerusalem (xvi. 1) was dictated by the affection that binds the scattered parts of the Church of God.

(3) The relations of Christians to God the Father, and to their believing brethren, alike centre in their relationship to Christ: the Church is His body—"a κοινωνία of the Son of God" (i. 9). The whole consciousness of the new life—personal or corporate—is grounded there; ἐν Χριστῷ, ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἐν Κυρίῳ, is the Apostle's standing definition of Christian states and relations. To use Paul's strong expression (vi. 17), "he who is cemented to the Lord, is one spirit". By the fact that they severally inhere in Him, men are constituted "a body of Christ, and members individually" (xii. 27). No man in Christ is self-complete; the eye finds its mate in the hand, the head in the foot. This reciprocal subordination dictates the law of the life in Christ Jesus and controls all its movements. The Apostle claims to be himself ἔννομος Χριστοῦ, because he "seeks not his own profit but that of the many" (x. 21 ff.). The question of i. 13, μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός; reveals the radical mischief at work in Corinth. The Church was in the eyes of some of its members a kind of debating club or philosophical school, in which αἱρέσεις and σχίσματα were matters of course; to others it was a benefit society, to be used so far as suited inclination and convenience. Against all such debased notions of social life, and selfish abuse of Church privilege, this Epistle is a sustained protest.

This fellowship of Christ is symbolised and sealed by the bread and cup of the Lord's Supper (x. 16 ff.)—the "one loaf" and "one cup" in which all participate, since it is a "communion of the body of Christ" and "of the blood of Christ". The "word of the cross" is made by this ordinance a binding "covenant in Christ's blood". The Christian Society is thus known as the fraternity of the Crucified; evermore it "proclaims the Lord's death, till He come" (xi. 26). Such fellowship in Christ, appropriating the whole man, the body with the spirit (vi. 15, 19), excludes ipso facto all intercourse with "the demons" and feasting at their "table" (x. 20 ff.); their communion is abhorrent and morally impossible to those who have truly partaken with Christ (cf. 2 Cor. vi. 14 ff.).

The introductory thanksgiving signally connects the κοινωνία τοῦ Χριστοῦ with His παρουσία. Hope is a uniting principle, along with faith and love (xiii. 13, cf. Eph. iv. 4). The Church of God is no mere temporal fabric. The "gold, silver, precious stones" of its construction will brave the judgment fires (iii. 12-15). "Those who are Christ's, at His coming," form the nucleus of the eternal kingdom of God (xv. 23-28). "The day" which reveals the completed work of Christ "will declare every man's work, of what sort it is"; each of Christ's helpers will then receive his meed of "praise from God," and the approved "saints," as Christ's assessors, will "judge the world" and "angels" (iii. 13, iv. 5, vi. 2 f.).

(4) The regulation of the charismata, the wealth and the embarrassment of this Church, is deduced from the above principles. These powers, however manifold, are manifestations of "the same Spirit," who inhabits the entire body of Christ and whose "will" determines the various endowments of its several members (xii. 7-11). They are distributed, as the bodily functions are assigned to their proper organs, for the service of the whole frame. The possessor of one cannot dispense with, and must not despise, his differently gifted brother (xii. 14 ff.). Yet there is a gradation in the charisms; it is right to covet "the greater" among them. Love supplies the criterion; the most edifying gifts are the most desirable (xii. 31-xiv. 19). Self-restraint must be exercised by gifted persons, and order enforced by the community, so that individual talents may be combined for the common good (xiv. 26-33). To the direction of these matters a manly practical sense must be applied; "the understanding" aids the service of "the spirit" (xiv. 14-20).

This charismatic ministry, diffused through the body of Christ, is the basis of all Christian agency. As yet there are only "functions, not formal offices" (Hort); the function is anterior to the office, and may exist without it. Each man in the Church of Corinth spontaneously speaks, sings, serves in whatever fashion (xiv. 26), in virtue of his χάρισμα,—the particular form which the common χάρις assumes in him for the benefit of others. The realisation of the life of Christ in the Christian Society is the aim imposed on each Christian by the Spirit whose indwelling makes him such.

3. The teaching of the Epistle takes a wide outlook in its consideration of the relations of the Christian to the world. This relationship is exhibited mainly on its negative side. The believer in Christ, "elect" and "sanctified" (i. 2, 27), built on the foundation of Jesus Christ into God's temple, is separated from the world. The Spirit he has from God makes him a πνευματικός; he has new faculties, and lives in a changed order of things. There are two worlds—a new world of the Spirit formed within the old κόσμος but utterly distinct from it, unintelligible to it, and destined soon to overthrow and displace it (i. 25-29, ii. 6-14, iii. 18 f., vii. 31).

(1) With the world's sin the Church of God holds truceless war. Living in the world, Christians cannot avoid contact with its "fornicators, extortioners," and the rest; but it can and must keep them out of its ranks (v. 9-13); the old leaven is to be "cleansed out" of the "new kneading," since Christ is our paschal lamb (v. 6-8). The sin of the world culminates in its idolatry; from this the Corinthians, unconditionally, must "flee" (x. 1-14).

(2) The Apostle recognises the natural order of life as one who sees through and beyond it. He cherishes, up to this date, the hope of his Lord's speedy return (xv. 51 f.). Hence the provisional character of his advices respecting marriage in chap. vii. He writes at a juncture of suspense, when men should keep themselves free from needless ties. He admits the necessity of marriage in the case of many Corinthians, and applies the law of Christ carefully to the mixed unions so troublesome at Corinth. He fears for his disciples the burdens imposed by domestic cares in times so uncertain, and in a society at war with the world. Christians may not "go out of the world," nor cease to "use" it; but they must hold it lightly and refrain from "using it to the full."

In discussing the question of the idolothyta Paul gives a glance to the more positive side of the Christian's relations with external nature. He recalls the attitude of the Old Testament towards earthly blessings by quoting, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof" (x. 28). The idols have no power to usurp God's creatures, nor to limit His children's use of them. An enlightened conscience will not scruple at the enjoyment of food sacrificed to an idol, though circumstances will often make this inexpedient (viii., x. 23 ff.). The Jewish distinctions of meat are obsolete (vi. 12 f.); it was in this sense that Paul had enunciated the much-abused maxim, "All things are lawful to me". The σαρκικὰ of life he enlists in the service of its πνευματικά; they serve to multiply and strengthen the bonds of mutual necessity arising from our kinship in Christ (ix. 7-12, cf. Rom. xv. 27, Gal. vi.).

In the relationship of man and woman the Apostle sees the natural and spiritual order blended; he passes from the one to the other with perfect congruity, and appeals to the teaching of "nature," expressed in secular customs of dress, as an exponent of the Divine will (xi. 1-15). While censuring the greed and arrogance displayed by the rich (xi. 17 ff.), he leaves distinctions of wealth and rank uncondemned; from the analogy applied in chap. xii. 13 ff. we infer that he viewed these as a part of "the fashion of this world," necessary but transient.

(3) Death, like sin which gives to it its "sting," belongs to the system of the present evil world. Since the resurrection of Christ, death is in principle "abolished" for those who are His (xv. 26, 55 ff.). The resurrection is no mere immortality of the spirit, such as philosophers conceived; it is the reversal of death, the recovery of the entire man from its power. Christ's people, to be sure, will not be reclad in mortal habiliments, nor resume the corpse that was laid in the grave. The new frame will differ from the old as the plant from its perished seed. Heavenly bodies must surpass earthly in unimaginable ways. Adam and Christ are types of two modes of being: in our present "natural body" we "wear the image" of the former; our future body will be "spiritual" after the image of God's Son (xv. 35-57).

This glorious and inconceivable change will supervene—for Christians living or departed alike (xv. 51 f.)—at "the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ," which the Corinthian Christians are awaiting (i. 7). This is "the end" of the course of revelation and of God's dealings with mankind—when Christ's redemption is complete, when His enemies throughout creation are overcome, and He is able to lay at the Father's feet an empire wholly subdued and everywhere accordant with the Creator's will. Then "the Son Himself" will give the crowning example of submission, "that God may be all in all" (xv. 28). In this sublime issue the teaching of the Epistle culminates. The relation of the Church of Corinth to God, though marred upon its part yet real and sanctifying, which gave the Apostle his starting-point, has been unfolded in ever-widening circles, until it is seen to embrace the universe; there is formed within it the beginning of a Divine realm that stretches on into unknown worlds, and will bring all finite powers and beings under its sway.

Through this entire development of thought and life Christ is all things. His presence and lordship, the redeeming power of His cross, extend over every field within our view. They cover alike the relations of the individual man to God, of man to man within society, and of man, individually and collectively, to the world around him in the present and before him in the future. Christ is all in all, that through Him finally God may be all in all.

CHAPTER IV.

THE LANGUAGE, TEXT, HISTORY, AND CRITICISM OF THE EPISTLE.

1. LANGUAGE. "The dialect of these Epistles (1 and 2 Cor.) is not Hebraistic, but moves upon the lines of Hellenistic Greek. It finds its analogue, in a multitude of characteristics, in the language of Polybius, the classic of Hellenism, in Epictetus, in Plutarch, in Dionysius of Halicarnassus and others, in such a way as to imply for it and them a common life-sphere" (Heinrici). Paul has become in this Epistle, more than elsewhere, τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ὡς Ἕλλην. Its atmosphere and colouring and movement are distinctively Greek of the period,—when compared, e.g., with the style of Romans or 2 Thessalonians. While Old Testament references are numerous in 1 Cor., they are employed by way of illustration rather than of proof, and in a Hellenistic not a Rabbinical manner.

The Epistle has a rich vocabulary. Out of the 5,594 Greek words of the New Testament it employs 963—103 peculiar to itself. In the hapax legomena one expects the idiosyncrasy of the Epistle to manifest itself. Sixty-eight of these—about two-thirds—are classical, occurring in Attic writers earlier than Aristotle; twenty-two belong to post-classical authors of the κοινή, or to the Greek of the contemporary inscriptions and papyri. In the residue there is one specifically Septuagint term, εἰδωλεῖον (viii. 10, see note); and the Aramæan sentence, μαρὰν ἀθά. Eleven words are left, so far unknown from other documents, or used only by Christian writers after Paul—διερμηνεία, -ευτής, εὐπάρεδρος, ὀλοθρευτής, πιθός (ii. 4), περίψημα, συνζητητής, τυπικῶς, ὑπέρακμος, χοϊκός, χρηστεύομαι; but every one of these has close kindred or analogues in common Greek; it is likely enough that all were current in the speech of Corinth: εὐπάρεδρος however, with its transparent sense, has the look of a Pauline coinage. The forty-two additional words of 1 Corinthians (24 if the Pastorals be excluded) limited in their N.T. range to the Pauline Epistles—Pauline, but not First-Corinthian, h. lgg.—yield a similar analysis.

Out of the 150 words enumerated by Kennedy in his useful Sources of N.T. Greek (pp. 88-91) as "strictly peculiar to the LXX or N.T.," with the forty or fifty added to this list by including Philo Judæus, twenty-five occur in this Epistle; but apart from Hebrew loan-words (such as πάσχα), and excluding near relations and correlates of recognised classical or post-classical words, there remains, after the researches of Deissmann (in his Bibelstudien and Neue Bibelstudien) and other students of the Greek inscriptions and papyri, only a handful, perhaps half a dozen of the twenty-five, that can be called properly and exclusively "Biblical"—a scanty residue which further discovery may diminish. So far as 1 Corinthians is concerned, we may dismiss, with Deissmann, "the legend of a Biblical Greek". What is said of the Greek character of the vocabulary holds good in general of the grammar of this Epistle. The idioms of Paul's epistolary style form a distinct subject, on which it is not necessary to enter here.

2. Text. The Greek Text of this Epistle stands on the same footing as that of the rest—all usually contained in the collected volume entitled Ο ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΣ. Eighteen of the twenty-three known Pauline uncial Codices belong to 1 Cor.: ℵ$B_1AD_2E_3L_2$ are complete; $CF_2G_3K_2P_2$, approximately complete; S_2 contains half, and ב$H_3I_2M_2Q_2F^a$ fragments of the Epistle. ℵBAC were Codices of the whole New Testament; בKLPS included the Acts and Catholic Epp., P the Apocalypse also. In point of date, Bℵ belong to the fourth century; בACIQ to the fifth century; DH to the sixth century; F^a to the seventh century; the rest to the ninth century. Amongst the numerous correctors of ℵ, ℵ^c, of the seventh century, is important here as elsewhere. ב (a palimpsest in the Vatican Library) and S_2 (Athous Lauræ) are not yet critically edited or collated: see on these MSS., and for full details respecting the textual material, C. R. Gregory's Prolegomena to Tischendorf's N.T. Græce, ed. major. Out of the 480 catalogued minuscule (or cursive) MSS. of Paul few deserve attention. "The ancient elements" found in them "appear with extreme irregularity in different places of the Epistles," and Western readings in a remarkably small proportion (Westcott and Hort, Introd. to the N.T. in Greek, § 212). The most notable, and those oftenest cited below, are 17 (same as 33 of Gospels and 18 of Acts), 37 (Gospels 69, Acts 31, Rev. 14), 47 (Gospels 49)—all extending to viii. 10; and 67  (Acts 66, Rev. 34)—the marginal corrections of an ordinary cursive, which "include a relatively large number of very ancient readings," akin to those of M_2(W.H.); 71; 109 (Acts 96). The 265 numbered Lectionaries containing Acts and Epistles are but partially explored; none as yet appear of sufficient value to be regularly cited.

The ancient Versions are of fairly uniform character through the N.T. The most valuable are all available here, except the Curetonian Syriac confined to the Gospels.

From the fourth century onwards Patristic references to 1 Corinthians become numerous and full, and afford the critic greater help than in some other Epistles. But the definite and certain aid forthcoming from this quarter is less than might have been expected.

Considering the length of the Epistle, it contains few conspicuous textual difficulties, none of grave exegetical importance. Its text has been from the first carefully preserved. In the following conspectus of various readings all Greek words are spaced in which the Textus Receptus is emended by the note. Where the reading is doubtful, a query follows the alternative reading supplied in the notes—a query after the spacing indicating a reading more likely than not, a query without the spacing indicating a possible but less probable reading. Orthographical corrections occurring passim, which belong to the N.T. written dialect as this is represented by the five great uncials and exhibited in the standard N.T. Grammars, must be taken for granted throughout.

Excluding the numberless corrections of the kind just noticed and those concerning only points of grammar or the ordo verborum, there are more than 200 emendations which affect the sense of the Epistle. Chapters vii. 29, 33 f., xv. 51 are instances of special complication. The restoration of the true text in iii. 1, 4, iv. 2, vii. 3, xi. 29, xv. 47 brings out the finer edge of Paul's style. The Received Text of vi. 20 and vii. 5 contains ecclesiastical glosses; in iv. 6 and ix. 15 it has helped out Paul's anacolutha; its habit of extending the shorter names of Christ blunts his meaning—notably in ix. 1 and xvi. 22. The group of (liturgical?) additions to the genuine text in xi. 24 ff. deserves particular attention. Συνηθεία (viii. 7) and ἱερόθυτον (x. 28) are interesting words restored by criticism. A few readings are noted in the digest which have little or no intrinsic worth, but are of interest in their bearing on the history of the text, especially where they illustrate the peculiarities of the "Western" tradition. One conjectural emendation is adopted, viz., that of Westcott and Hort in ch. xii. 2.

3. History of the Epistle. This is the first N.T. writing to be cited by name in Christian literature. "Take up," says Clement of Rome to the Corinthians (1 Ep., xlvii.), "the letter of the blessed Paul the Apostle. What was the first thing he wrote to you in the beginning of the Gospel? Of a truth he wrote to you in the Spirit touching himself and Cephas and Apollos, because even then you had formed factions." Like other post-apostolic writers, Clement shows an imperfect grasp of Pauline teaching, but his Salutation, with §§ xxiv., xxxiv. 8, xxxvii., xlix., and lxv. 2, bears unmistakable impressions of this Epistle. The Epistle of Barnabas (iv. 9-11, v. 6, vi. 5, xvi. 7-10; Hermas, Mand. iv. 4 (cf. 1 Cor. vii. 39); Ignatius, Ad Eph., xvi., xviii., Ad Rom., iv. 3, v. 1, ix. 2; Polycarp, Ad Phil., x. 2, Ad Diognetum, xii. 5; the Didachê, i. 5, iii. 3, iv. 3, x. 6, etc., attest the use of this writing in primitive Christian times. From Irenæus onwards it is quoted as Holy Scripture. The Gnostics used it with predilection. The testimony of early Christianity to its Pauline authorship and Apostolic authority is unequivocal and full.

But our Epistle did not at first take a leading place among N.T. writings. Its influence has been "broken and fitful". It had little to say directly upon the questions (except that of the Resurrection) which chiefly interested the ante-Nicene Church. Tertullian, however, expounded it in his Adv. Marcionem; and Origen wrote annotations, partly preserved in Cramer's Catena. In the fourth century, when "controversies on Church discipline and morals began to sway the minds of thoughtful men, this Epistle came to the front" (Edwards). Many of the Church leaders of that time wrote upon 1 Corinthians. Only fragments of the Greek commentators earlier than John Chrysostom († 407 A.D.) are extant; later expositors—the most notable, Theodoret (420 A.D.), Oecumenius (c. 950), Theophylact (1078)—built upon him; his versatile powers shine in the exposition of this Epistle. The Latin commentaries of Pelagius (for long ascribed to Jerome) and of Ambrosiaster (Hilary of Rome?) testify to the wide use of this Scripture in the West in the fourth and fifth centuries. To Thomas Aquinas we owe the only interpretation of value bequeathed by the Middle Ages. Though subordinated, like all mediæval exegesis, to scholastic theology, his exposition contains fresh and vigorous thought.

Colet's Oxford Lectures on this Epistle (A.D. 1496), and the N.T. Paraphrase of Erasmus (1519), breathe the new spirit of the Reformation, which brought 1 Corinthians to the front again, along with Romans and Galatians. The adjustment of liberty and order, the application of evangelical faith to secular life, the reconstitution of the Church with its sacraments and ministry started a multitude of problems calling for its aid. Calvin excelled himself in his interpretation of this Epistle, offending many of his followers by his breadth and candour. Estius, his Romanist contemporary, is no mean rival. Amongst the German Reformers, Melanchthon, W. Musculus, Bullinger handled this Epistle with effect. Beza's Annotationes, and especially his Latin translation, are always worth consulting. The illustrious Grotius—Arminian, humanistic, practical—found here a congenial subject. In the seventeenth century 1 Corinthians suffered another eclipse; no Commentary upon it of any mark appeared between the time of Grotius and Bengel. All later interpreters are Bengel's disciples.

This Epistle at present suffers no lack of attention. Beside the larger critical N.T. Commentaries of Germany—those of De Wette, Meyer (re-written, in 1 and 2 Cor., by Heinrici), v. Hofmann, the Handcommentar (Schmiedel), and the Kurtzgefasster (Schnedermann)—and Alford's great work in this country, the following are of special value: Billroth's Vorlesungen z. d. Briefen an d. Kor. (1833), Rückert's Der 1 Br. Pauli an d. Kor. (1836), Neander's Auslegung d. beiden Br. an d. Kor. (1859),—above all, Heinrici's Das erste Sendschreiben d. Ap. Paulus an d. Kor. (1880), a work rich in illustration of Greek thought and manners, and throwing new light on the social development of primitive Christianity. Godet's Commentaire sur la prem. ép. aux Corinthiens (1887: transl. in Clarks' F. T. Libr.), though not his most successful exposition, is marked by his fine spiritual and literary qualities, and is full of instructive matter.

English scholars have addressed themselves zealously to 1 Corinthians, which interests them by its relations to the ethical and social questions of the time. A. P. Stanley (The Epistles of Paul to the Corinthians, 1855) has illuminated the historical and picturesque aspects of the Epistle, C. Hodge (American, 1857) its theological side. Beet tracks the thought of the Apostle with exceeding closeness, and presents it with concise force (Epistles to the Corinthians, 1882). Freshness and vivacity, with strokes of keen grammatical insight, distinguish the work of T. S. Evans in the Speaker's Commentary. Ellicott's interpretation (1887) is a model of exact and delicate verbal elucidation; no better book can be placed in the hands of a working Greek Testament student. The posthumous "Notes" of Lightfoot on chaps. i.-vii. (1895) are written with his ripe knowledge, balanced judgment, and sure touch. Edwards' Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians (1885) ranks with Heinrici's and Ellicott's as a classical piece of exegesis; it is strong both on the linguistic and philosophical side, and shows a rare power of luminous statement. M. Dods supplies, in The Expositor's Bible, a genial and masterly homiletic application. Hort's Christian Ecclesia and Knowling's Witness of the Epistles to Christ exhibit, in the use they make of this document, its decisive bearing on questions of early Church History and Apologetics.

4. Criticism. Until quite recently the authenticity and integrity of 1 Corinthians were never doubted. The criticism of F. C. Baur and the Tübingen School left it standing as one of the "four undisputed Epistles"; Bruno Bauer's attack (Kritik d. Paul. Briefe, 1851) was quite isolated. In Holland, however, a more radical criticism has arisen—whose exponents are Loman (Theologisch Tijdschrift, 1882-86), Pierson and Naber (Verisimilia, 1886), van Manen (Paulus, i., ii., 1890-91; and Prot. Kirchenzeitung, 1882-86), Meyboom (Theol. Tijdschr., 1889-91); aided by Steck (Gal.-Brief, 1888) in Germany, and "Edwin Johnson" (Antiqua Mater, 1887) in England—which sweeps away these four with the rest, leaving nothing but morsels surviving of the genuine Paul. These scholars premise a slow development, along a single line, in early Christian thought. They claim to be the uniformitarians, as against the catastrophists, of Biblical science. The universalism with which Paul is credited, they set down as the final issue, reached in the second century, of the continued interaction of Judaic and Hellenic thought. In support of this view they point out numerous alleged contradictions within the four Epistles and the traces of various tendencies and times affording evidence of compilation, so reducing them to a many-coloured patchwork, the product of a century of conflict and hardly won progress. They attempt to prove the literary dependence of the four on post-Pauline writings, both within and without the New Testament. This theory presents no consistent shape in the hands of its advocates, and has been subjected to a destructive examination by Holtzmann and Jülicher in their N.T. Einleitungen (recent editions), by Lipsius (Romans) and Schmiedel (1 and 2 Corinthians) in the Handcommentar; also by Knowling in chap. iii. of his "Witness of the Epistles". A sound exegesis is the best refutation of extravagances which are, in effect, the reductio ad absurdum of the Baurian method.

Another group of critics, maintaining the genuineness of the Corinthian Epistles in substance, desire to redistribute their contents. Hagge (Jahrbuch für prot. Theologie, 1876) finds four older documents behind the two; Völter (Theol. Tijdschrift, 1889) discovers three, making considerable excisions besides; Clemen, who discusses all the schemes of rearrangement in his Einheitlichkeit d. paul. Briefe (II., Die Corintherbr.: cf. Schmiedel in the Handcom., an d. Kor., Einleitung, ii.), dissects the canonical Epistles into five originals. These re-combinations are highly ingenious; Clemen's scheme, which is really plausible, substitutes a carefully marshalled topical order for the spontaneity and discursiveness of the true epistle. The hypotheses of reconstruction have no historical basis, no external evidence in their favour; their sole appeal is to internal probability. The actual 1 Corinthians vindicates its unity to the sympathetic reader who transports himself into the situation.

Other critics, again, who regard the reconstruction of the Epistle as needless or impracticable, see reason to eliminate certain passages as interpolations. Holsten (Das Evang. d. Paulus, I., i., 1880), Baljon (De Tekst d. Brieven aan de Rom., Cor., en Gal., 1884), Bois (Adversaria critica de I. ad Cor.: Toulouse, 1887), are fertile in suggestions of this kind. Heinrici will not exclude the supposition of "improvements in detail, attempts [made by the first editors] to smooth over or supplement rough or defective passages of the Apostle, which criticism may be able to detect". Such insertions he finds in the Ἐγὼ δὲ Χριστοῦ of i. 12, and in xv. 56: so Schmiedel and Clemen in the latter place. We do not deny the abstract possibility of the Epistle having been "touched up" in this way; glosses such as those the Codices reveal in ii. 4, iv. 6, vii. 3, etc., for aught we know may have crept in before, as well as after the divergence of our extant witnesses. None, however, of the alleged "primitive corruptions" are made out convincingly,—except perhaps the transcriptional error which W.H. have detected in xii. 2. Some of these conjectures there will be occasion to notice in the course of the exposition.

Analysis. After the Introduction (i. 1-9), the body of the Epistle falls into six principal divisions, as follows: Div. I., The Corinthian Parties and the Gospel Ministry, i. 10-iv. 21; Div. II., Questions of Social Morals, v.-vii.; Div. III., Contact with Idolatry, viii.-xi. 1; Div. IV., Disorders in Worship and Church Life, xi. 2-xiv.; Div. V., The Resurrection of the Body, xv.; Div. VI., Business, News, and Greetings, xvi. Within these main Divisions, the matter is broken up for clearer elucidation into sixty short Sections, each furnished with a heading and prefatory outline.

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN THE EXPOSITION.

acc. = accusative case.
act. = active voice.
adj. = adjective.
ad loc. = ad locum, on this passage.
adv., advl. = adverb, adverbial.
Al. = Alford's Greek Testament.

aor. = aorist tense.
art. = grammatical article.
Aug. = Augustine.
Bg. = Bengel's Gnomon Novi Testamenti.
Bm. = A. Buttmann's Grammar of the N.T. Greek (Eng. Trans., 1873).
Bn. = E. Burton's Syntax of the Moods and Tenses in the N.T. (1894).
Bt. = J. A. Beet's St. Paul's Epp. to the Corinthians (1882).
Bz. = Beza's Nov. Testamentum : Interpretatio et Annotationes (Cantab., 1642).
cl. = classical.
Cm. = John Chrysostom's Homiliæ († 407).
comm. = commentary, commentator.
constr. = construction.
Cor. = Corinth, Corinthian or Corinthians.
Cr. = Cremer's Biblico-Theological Lexicon of N.T. Greek (Eng. Trans.).
Cv. = Calvin's In Nov. Testamentum Commentarii.
dat. = dative case.
Did. = Διδαχὴ τῶν δωδέκα ἀποστόλων.
diff. = difference, different, differently.
D.W. = De Wette's Handbuch z. N. T.
eccl. = ecclesiastical.
Ed. = T. C. Edwards' Commentary on the First Ep. to the Corinthians.[2]
El. = C. J. Ellicott's St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians.
Er. = Erasmus' In N.T. Annotationes.
E.V. = English Version.
Ev. = T. S. Evans in Speaker's Commentary.
ex. = example.
exc. = except.
Ff. = Fathers.
fut. = future tense.
Gd. = F. Godet's Commentaire sur la prem. Ép. aux Corinthiens (Eng. Trans.).
gen. = genitive case.
Gm. = Grimm-Thayer's Greek-English Lexicon of the N.T.
Gr. = Greek, or Grotius' Annotationes in N.T.
Heb. = Hebrew.
Hf. = J. C. K. von Hofmann's Die heilige Schrift N.T. untersucht, ii. 2 (2te Auflage, 1874).
h.l. = hapax legomenon, a solitary expression.
Hn. = C. F. G. Heinrici's Erklärung der Korintherbriefe (1880), or 1 Korinther in Meyer's krit.-exegetisches Kommentar (1896).
impf. = imperfect tense.
impv. = imperative mood.
ind. = indicative mood.
indir. = indirect.
inf. = infinitive mood.
interr. = interrogative.
Jer. = Jerome, Hieronymus.
Lidd. = Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon.

lit. = literal, literally.
Lt. = J. B. Lightfoot's (posthumous) Notes on Epp. of St. Paul (1895).
mid. = middle voice.
Mr. = Meyer's Critical and Exegetical Commentary (Eng. Trans.).
nom. = nominative case.
obj. = grammatical object.
Oec. = Oecumenius, the Greek Commentator.
opp. = opposite, opposition.
Or. = Origen.
P. = Paul.
parl. = parallel.
part. = grammatical particle.
pass. = passive voice.
pers. = grammatical person, or personal.
pl. = plural.
pr. = present tense.
pron. = pronoun. prp., prpl. = preposition, prepositional.
ptp., ptpl. = participle, participial.
R.C. = Roman Catholic.
ref. = reference.
rel. = relative pronoun.
sbj. = subjunctive mood.
sing. = singular number.
Sm. = P. Schmiedel, in Handcommentar zum N.T. (1893).
s.v. = sub voce, under this word.
syn. = synonym, synonymous.
Tert. = Tertullian.
Thd. = Theodoret, Greek Commentator.
Thp. = Theophylact, Greek Commentator.
vb., vbl. = verb, verbal.
Vg. = Latin Vulgate Translation.
W.H. = Westcott and Hort's The New Testament in Greek: Critical Text and Notes.
Wr. = Winer-Moulton's Grammar of N.T. Greek (8th ed., 1877).

The ordinary contractions are employed in the textual notes. Other abbreviations will explain themselves. The references in the marginal parallels and textual notes are made to the Greek Text of the O.T.; in the Commentary, to the English text, unless otherwise stated.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΚΟΡΙΝΘΙΟΥΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.[1]

I. 1. ΠΑΥΛΟΣ [a] κλητὸς [2] ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ [3] Χριστοῦ,[3] [b] διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, καὶ Σωσθένης [c] ὁ ἀδελφός, 2. τῇ [d] ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ [d] Θεοῦ τῇ οὔσῃ

a Rom. i. 1, 6 f. (same double use), Jude. 1; 24 below; Rom. viii. 28; 2 Kings xv. 11. b 2 Cor., Eph., Col., 2 Tim.; Rom. xv. 32. c 2 Cor., Col., Phm.; xvi. 12 below; Rom. xvi. 23. d x. 32, xi. 16, 22, xv. 9; 2 Cor.; Gal. i. 13; 1 Th. ii. 14; 2 Th. i. 4; 1 Tim. iii. 5, 15; Acts xx. 28; Neh. xiii. 1.

[1] The oldest form of Title, in ℵABCD, is ΠΡΟΣ ΚΟΡΙΝΘΙΟΥΣ Ā. This was gradually extended as the epp. came to be treated as separate books. FG read Προς Κ. αρχεται ά (G om. ά); so latt. with variations, and the oldest MSS. of vg. P: Παυλου επιστολη προς Κ. ά. L: τ. αγιου κ. πανευφημου αποστ. Π. επιστολη προς Κ. πρωτη. The minuscules furnish a great variety of titles. Stephens wrote Η προς τ. Κ. επιστολη πρωτη. The title of the T.R. and A.V. comes from Bz. and Elzevir, without MS. authority.

[2] AD, Cyr. om. κλητος.

[3] Χριστου Ιησου (?) in BDG, vg. (older copies), Chr., Ambrst., Aug.: the Western reading. Ιησ. Χρ., ℵALP, etc., cop. syrr., Cyr. Dam.: Alexandrian and Syrian. W.H. mark the group BDG as untrustworthy; but Pauline usage speaks for X. I.,—the certain reading in other Addresses where this combination occurs, exc. Rom. and Tit. The Edd. are doubtful; Tisch., Al., Tr., Nestle, prefer X. I.; W.H., I. X. in text, X. I. in margin.

The Introduction. § 1. The Title and Salutation, i. 1-3. Πρὸς Κορινθίους ά (see txtl. note) is a sub-title, marking the ep. as part of the collection bearing the general name Ὁ ἀπόστολος. With this agrees the oldest system of chapters (κεφάλαια), preserved by Cod. B, which divided the fourteen Letters into sections numbered consecutively throughout. In all ancient copies this ep. stands second in "The Apostle"; the Muratorian Canon sets it primum omnium.

Chapter I.—Vv. 1-3. The salutation is full and varied in the epp. of this group. As in Galatians and Romans, P. emphasises his apostleship (see ix. 1 f.), at present in dispute. The readers are (in 1 and 2 Cor.) "the Church" and "the saints"—a transition from "the ch." of 1 and 2 Thess. ("the churches," Gal.) to "the saints" of Rom. and later epp. Here stress is thrown with a purpose, (1) on the sanctity of the Cor. Church, (2) on its fellowship with the general body of Christians.

Ver. 1. Παῦλος κλητὸς ἀπόστολος (so in Rom.)—not ap. by merit or human choice, but called thereto διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ (so in later epp.), through an express intervention of the Divine will, cf. ix. 16 f., Gal. i. 1, 15 f., Eph. iii. 2 ff., also Acts ix. 15, etc. "A called apostle" as the Cor. are "called saints": he summoned to be herald and dispenser (17, 23, iv. 1), they receivers of God's Gospel (26-31). The κλητοὶ are in P. identified with the ἐκλεκτοί (26 f., Rom.

ἐν Κορίνθῳ,[1] [e] ἡγιασμένοις [e] ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, [e] κλητοῖς [f] ἁγίοις, [g] σὺν πᾶσι τοῖς [h] ἐπικαλουμένοις τὸ [h] ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ e vii. 14; Rom. xv. 16; Heb. x. 10, 29; Jo. xvii. 17.

f 2 Cor., Eph., Ph., Col., Acts ix. 13, etc.
g 2 Cor.; 2 Tim. ii. 22.
h Acts ii. 21, ix. 14, 21, xxii. 16; Rom. x. 13; Gen. iv. 26, etc.; Ps. cxvi. 4; Joel ii. 32; Zech. xiii. 9.

[1] BD*G, followed by Al., Tr., Tisch.[7], place τῃ . . . Κορινθῳ after ηγιασμ. . . . Ιησ.: probably a Western deviation.

viii. 29 f.), not distinguished as in Matt. xx. 16. The thought of the "call" of God as assigning to each Christian man his status is prominent in this ep.: see vv. 9, 24 ff., vii. 17-24.—Σωσθένης ὁ ἀδελφὸς is a party to the Letter, which notwithstanding runs in first pers. sing., as in Gal. after οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ πάντες ἀδελφοὶ of i. 2; otherwise in 2 Cor. and 1 and 2 Thess.: Sosthenes (only named here by P.) shares in this ep. not as joint-composer, but as witness and approver. He would scarcely be introduced at this point as amanuensis (cf. Rom. xvi. 22). S. is a person known to and honoured by the Cor., but now with the Ap. at Ephesus and in his confidence. He may, or may not, have been the Sosthenes of Acts xviii. 17—the name was fairly common. One ἀρχισυνάγωγος (Crispus) had been converted at Cor., why not another afterwards? P. would delight to make of a persecutor an ally. His former position would give an ex-Synagogue-leader weight, especially with Jewish Christians; and his subsequent conversion may account for Luke's exceptionally preserving Sosthenes' name as Paul's assailant (see M. Dods on the point, in Exp. Bib.). Eusebius (Hist. Eccles., i. 12) makes S. one of the Seventy of Luke x. 17—"a worthless tradition" (Lt.).

Ver. 2. τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ (in salutation of 1 and 2 Cor. only) gives supreme dignity to the assembly of Cor. addressed by the Ap. of Christ Jesus—the assembled citizens of God's kingdom and commonwealth (Eph. ii. 12, 19; cf. Tit. ii. 14, 1 Peter ii. 9 f.). τῇ οὔσῃ ἐν Κορ., "that exists in Corinth"—lætum et ingens paradoxon (Bg.): so far the Gospel has reached (2 Cor. x. 13 f.); in so foul a place it flourishes! (vi. 9 ff.). Not as earlier, "the assembly of Thessalonians," etc.: the conception of the ecclesia widens; the local Christian gathering is part of one extended "congregation of God," existing in this place or that (see last clause). To τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τ. Θεοῦ is apposed, by way of predicative definition (hence anarthrous), ἡγιασμένοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, "the Church of God (consisting of men) sanctified in Christ Jesus": Church status is grounded on personal relationship to God in Christ. Now this relationship began with God's call, which summoned each to a holy life within the Christian fellowship; hence the further apposition, κλητοῖς ἁγίοις (see note on 1, and Rom. i. 7; cf. Acts xviii. 10, λαός ἐστίν μοι πολύς κ.τ.λ.). The pf. pass. ptp. expresses a determinate state: once for all the Cor. readers have been devoted to God, by His call and their consent. This initial sanctification is synchronous with justification (vi. 11), and is the positive as that is the negative side of salvation: ἐλευθερωθέντες ἀπὸ τ. ἁμαρτίας, ἐδουλώθητε τ. δικαιοσύνῃ (Rom. vi. 16-19). "Sanctified in Christ Jesus" (="living to God in Christ Jesus," Rom. vi. 11) imports union with Christ (vi. 17, 19, xii. 11, Rom. viii. 9 f.) as well as salvation through Christ. His past work is the objective ground, His present heavenly being (implied by the name "Christ Jesus," as in this order) the active spring of this ζῆν τῷ Θεῷ: cf. ver. 30 and note. The repeated ref. to the holiness of the readers recalls them to their vocation; low practice calls for the reassertion of high ideals; admonet Corinthios majestatis ipsorum (Bg.). Cv. draws a diff. yet consistent inference: "Locus diligenter observandus, ne requiramus in hoc mundo Ecclesiam omni ruga et macula carentem". The adjunct σὺν πᾶσιν . . . τόπῳ may qualify ἡγιασμένοις κ.τ.λ. (so some moderns), or the main predicate (Gr. Ff.): i.e., the Church shares (a) in its Christian sanctity, or (b) in the Apostle's good wishes, "with all that call upon the name," etc. (b) gives a better balanced sentence, and a true Pauline sentiment: cf. Eph. vi. 24, also the Benediction of Clem. Rom. ad Cor., lxv. —ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, an expression indefinitely large (see parls.), approaching "in all the world" of Rom. i. 8, Col. i. 6;

[l] ἐν [l] παντὶ [l] τόπῳ, [k] αὐτῶν τε [1] καὶ [k] ἡμῶν· 3. [l] χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ [l] εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

4. [m] Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ [m] Θεῷ μου [2] πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἐπὶ τῇ [n] χάριτι τοῦ Θεοῦ τῇ [n] δοθείσῃ ὑμῖν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· 5. ὅτι ἐν παντὶ

i 2 Cor. ii. 14; 1 Th. i. 8; 1 Tim. ii. 8; Mal. i. 11.
k Cf. Rom. xvi. 13; Eph. vi. 9.
l Rom. i. 7, and other Pauline Salutations; cf., however, 1 and 2 Tim., 1 and 2 Pet.
m xiv. 18; Rom. i. 8; Ph. i. 3; Col. i. 3; 1 Th. i. 2; Phm. 4.
n Twelve times in P.; in Jas. iv. 6 besides.

[1] αυτων και ημων, without τε; so ℵ*A* (seemingly) BD*G, latt. vg. syr^sch. cop., Or., Dam. τε a Syrian editorial insertion for smoother reading.

[2] ℵ*B, æth. omit μου: harmonistic insertion from parls.

there is nothing here to indicate the limit given in 2 Cor. i. 1. The readers belong to a widespread as well as a holy community; Paul insists on this in the sequel, pointing in reproof to "other churches". To "call on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ"—to invoke Him in prayer as "Lord"—is the mark of the Christian, by which Saul, e.g., once recognised his victims (see parls.), the index of saving faith (xii. 3, Rom. x. 12 ff.). The afterthought αὐτῶν καὶ ἡμῶν, correcting the previous ἡμῶν (Cm., Cv., Gd., Sm.), heightens the sense of wide fellowship given by the previous clause; "one Lord" (viii. 6; Rom. x. 12, xiv. 9, Eph. iv. 5) unites all hearts in the obedience of faith. To attach these pronouns to τόπῳ (in omni loco ipsorum et nostro, Vg.) gives a sense strained in various ways: "their place and ours,"—belonging to us equally with them (Mr., El., Ed.); "illorum (prope Cor.), nostro (ubi P. et Sosth. versabantur," Bg.); in non-Pauline and Pauline Churches (Hn.); and so on.

Ver. 3. χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.: Paul's customary greeting; see note on Rom. i. 7. "The occurrence of the peculiar phrase 'grace and peace' in Paul, John, and Peter intimates that we have here the earliest Christian password or symbolum" (Ed.). κυρίου might grammatically be parl. to ἡμῶν, both depending upon πατρός, as in 2 Cor. i. 3, etc.; but 1 and 2 Thess. i. 1 (Θεῷ πατρὶ κ. Κυρίῳ Ἰ. Χ.) prove Father and Lord in this formula to be parl.: cf. viii. 6, 2 Cor. xiii. 13; nowhere does P. speak (as in John xx. 17) of God as Father of Christ and of men co-ordinately, and for ἡμῶν to come first in such connexion would be incongruous. "The union of" Θεοῦ and Κυρίου "under the vinculum of a common prp. is one of the numberless hints scattered through St. Paul's epp. of the consciously felt and recognised co-ordination" of the Father and Christ (El.).

§ 2. THE THANKSGIVING, i. 4-9. The Pauline thanksgiving holds the place of the captatio benevolentiæ in ancient speeches, with the diff. that it is in solemn sincerity addressed to God. The Ap. thanks God (1) for the past grace given the Cor. in Christ, ver. 4; (2) for the rich intellectual development of that grace, according with the sure evidence upon which they had received the Gospel, and attended by an eager anticipation of Christ's advent, vv. 5-7; (3) for the certainty that they will be perfected in grace and found unimpeached at Christ's return—a hope founded on God's fidelity to His own signal call, vv. 8 f. Paul reflects gratefully on the past, hopefully on the future of this Church; he is significantly silent respecting its present condition: contrast with this the Thess. and Phil. Thanksgivings. He extracts from a disquieting situation all the comfort possible.

Ver. 4. On εὐχαριστῶ κ.τ.λ., and the form of Paul's introductory thanksgivings, see Rom. i. 8. ἐπὶ τῇ χάριτι κ.τ.λ.—ἐπί (at), of the occasioning cause; cf. xiii. 6, xiv. 16, etc. τ. δοθείσῃ ὑμῖν (aor. ptp.)—"the grace that was given you," sc. at conversion (see 6); contrast the pr. ptp. of continuous bestowment in xv. 57, and the pf. of abiding result in 2 Cor. viii. 1. For ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, see note on ver. 2. P. refers not to the general objective gift of grace in Christ (as in Rom. viii. 32), nor to its eternal bestowment in the thought of God (as in 2 Tim. i. 9), but to its actual conferment at the time when the Cor. became God's κλητοὶ ἅγιοι (2).

Ver. 5. ὅτι κ.τ.λ. stands in explicative apposition to the foregoing τ. χάριτι τ. δοθείσῃ, bringing out the matter of thanksgiving eminent in the conversion of the Cor.—"(I mean), that in every-

[o] ἐπλουτίσθητε ἐν αὐτῷ, ἐν παντὶ [p] λόγῳ καὶ πάσῃ [q] γνώσει, 6. καθὼς τὸ [r] μαρτύριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ[1] [s] ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν ὑμῖν· 7. ὥστε ὑμᾶς μὴ [t] ὑστερεῖσθαι ἐν μηδενὶ [u] χαρίσματι, [v] ἀπεκδεχομένους τὴν [w] ἀποκάλυψιν τοῦ [w] κυρίου ἡμῶν [w] Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· 8. ὃς καὶ [s] βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς [x] ἕως [x] τέλους [y] ἀνεγκλήτους ἐν τῇ [z] ἡμέρᾳ[2] τοῦ [z] Κυρίου ἡμῶν

o 2 Cor. vi. 10, ix. 11 only; 12 times in LXX, Gen. xiv. 23, etc. p (In this sense) 17, ii. 1, 4, iv. 19 f., xii. 8, and nine times besides in P. q viii. 1 ff., xii. 3, xiii. 2, 8, xiv. 6; thrice (so) in 2 Cor.; twice in Rom.; Eph. iii. 19; Col. ii 3; 1 Tim. vi. 20; 2 Pet. i. 5 f.; Lk. xi. 52. r ii. 1; 2 Th. i. 10; 1 Tim. ii. 6; 2 Tim. i. 8; μαρτυρία in John, exc. Rev. xv. 5. s 2 Cor. i. 21; Rom. xv. 8; Ph. i. 7; Col. ii. 7; twice in Heb.; Mk. xvi. 20. t viii. 8, xii. 24, xvi. 17; thrice besides in P.; Heb. xi. 37; Lk. xv. 14. u vii. 7, xii. 4 ff.; 2 Cor. i. 11; four times in Rom.; 1 Tim. iv. 14; 1 Pet. iv. 10. v Rom. viii. 19 ff.; Gal. v. 5; Ph. iii. 20; Heb. ix. 28; 1 Pet. iii. 20 only. w 2 Th. i. 7; thrice in 1 Pet.; cf. Gal. i. 12, 16; Rom. viii. 19. x 2 Cor. i. 13 only. αχρι τ., Heb. vi. 11; Rev. ii. 26. μεχρι τ., Heb. iii. 6, 14. εις τελος, 1 Th. ii. 16. y Col. i. 22; 1 Tim. iii. 10; Tit. i. 6 f. only. z iii. 13, iv. 3, v. 5; 2 Cor. i. 14; 10 times besides in P.; Acts ii. 20; Joel iii. 31, etc.

[1] Θεου in B*G, a few minuscc., arm.

[2] The Western reading is παρουσιᾳ: DG, etc. Ambrst., Pelagius, with vg., read in die adventus (conflate).

thing you were enriched," etc. For this defining ὅτι after a vbl. noun, cf. ver. 26 and 2 Cor. i. 8. The affluence of endowment conferred on the Cor. stirred the Apostle's deep gratitude (cf. 7, 2 Cor. viii. 9): this wealth appears in another light in iv. 6-10, v. 2, viii. 1-3; see also Introd., p. 730 f. The Church doubtless dwelt upon this distinction in its recent letter, to which P. is replying. ἐν παντὶ is defined, and virtually limited, by ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ καὶ πάσῃ γνώσει (kindred gifts, linked by the single prp.): the exuberance of grace in the Cor. shone "in all (manner of) utterance and all (manner of) knowledge". λόγος in this connexion signifies not the thing said (as in 18), but the saying of it, loquendi facultas (Bz.). "Relatively to γνῶσις, λόγος is the ability and readiness to say what one understands; γν. the power and ability to understand" (Hn.). "Knowledge" would naturally precede; but the Cor. excelled and delighted in "speech" above all: see ii. 1-4, 13, iv. 19 f., xiii. 1.

Ver. 6. τοῦ Χριστοῦ is objective gen. to τὸ μαρτύριον—"the witness to Christ,"—coming from both God and man (xv. 3-11, 2 Thess. i. 10); otherwise in ii. 1; cf. Rom. i. 2, "the good news of God about His Son". μαρτύριον indicates the well-established truth of the message (see, e.g., xv. 15), εὐαγγέλιον its beneficial and welcome nature (see Rom. i. 16 f.).—ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν ὑμῖν, "(the witness about Christ) was made sure among you"; its reality was verified. By outward demonstration—miracles, etc.; or by the inner persuasion of a firm faith, "interna Spiritus virtus" (Cv.)? The latter certainly, in Pauline usage (see parls.: but not to the exclusion of the former); cf. ii. 4 f., and notes; xii. 10, ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων; also 1 Thess. i. 5 f., ii. 13, Gal. iii. 5; the two went together—πολλῶν θαυμάτων, ἀφάτου χάριτος (Cm.). At first discouraged, Paul had preached at Cor. with signal power, and his message awakened a decided and energetic faith; see ii. 1-5, xv. 1, 11; Acts xviii. 5-11.

Ver. 7 describes the result of the firm establishment of the Gospel: ὥστε ὑμᾶς μὴ ὑστερεῖσθαι κ.τ.λ. (ὥστε with inf. of contemplated result: see Bn. §§ 369 ff.), "causing you not to feel behindhand in any gift of grace"; the mid. ὑστερεῖσθαι implies subjective reflexion, the consciousness of inferiority (Ev.): similarly in Rom. iii. 23, "find themselves short of the glory of God" (Sanday and Headl.); and in Luke xv. 14, "he began to feel his destitution". The pr. inf. and ptp. of the vbs. bear no ref. to the time of writing; their time is given by the governing ἐβεβαιώθη: the strong assurance with which the Cor. embraced the Gospel was followed by a shower of spiritual energies, of which they had a lively sense. A χάρισμα (see parls.) is χάρις in some concrete result (see Cr. s. v.),—a specific endowment of (God's) grace, whether the fundamental charism, embracing all others, of salvation in Christ (Rom. v. 16), or, e.g., the special and individual charism of continence (vii. 7). No church excelled the Cor. in the variety of its endowments and the satisfaction felt in them. Chaps. xii.-xiv. enumerate and discuss the chief Cor. χαρίσματα, setting ἀγάπη in their midst; ethical qualities are included under this term, vv. 8 f.—ἀπεκδεχομένους τ. ἀποκάλυψιν κ.τ.λ., "while you a x. 13; 2 Cor. i. 18; 1 Th. v. 24; 2 Th. iii. 3; 2 Tim. ii. 13; Heb. x. 23, xi. 11; Deut. vii. 9; Isa. xlix. 7. b Ver. 26, vii. 15 ff.; 10 times besides in P.; 1 Pet. i. 15, ii. 9, v. 10; 2 Pet. i. 3. c x. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 14 f.; Ph. iii. 10; 1 Jo. i. 3; cf. Heb. ii. 14, iii. 14.

Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ[1]· 9. [a] πιστὸς ὁ [a] Θεὸς, δι' οὗ [b] ἐκλήθητε εἰς [c] κοινωνίαν τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

[1] B om. Χριστου, bracketed by W.H. as doubtful; cf. 2 Cor. i. 14.

eagerly awaited (or eagerly awaiting, as you did) the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ". The vb. is one of P.'s characteristic intensive compounds (see parls.). The anarthrous pr. ptp. implies a continuous state conditioning that of the foregoing clause: the unstinted plenty of Divine gifts continued while the recipients fixed their thought upon the day of Christ; xv. 12, 33 f. show that this expectation had been in many instances relaxed. Rom. viii. and Col. iii. (also 1 John ii. 28-iii. 3) illustrate the bearing of faith in the παρουσία on Christian character; cf. Matt. xxv., Luke xii. 32 ff., etc. It is an ἀποκάλυψις, an "unveiling" of Christ that the Cor. looked for; since although they are "in Christ," still he is hidden (Col. iii. 3 f.); His presence is a mystery (Col. i. 27, Eph. v. 32). "Παρουσία denotes the fact of Christ's (future) presence, ἐπιφάνεια its visibility" and splendour, "ἀποκάλυψις its inner meaning" (Ed.); φανέρωσις (it might be added: Col. iii. 4) its open display. The Cor. were richly blessed with present good, while expecting a good far exceeding it: "a tacit warning against fancied satisfaction in the present" (Gd.: cf. iv. 8).

Ver. 8. ὃς καὶ βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς echoes ἐβεβαιώθη (6); cf. the thanksgiving of Phil. i. 6. ἕως τέλους (see parls.) points to a consummation, not a mere termination of the present order; cf. Rom. vi. 21 f. ἀνεγκλήτους, "unimpeached," synonymous with ἀμέμπτους (unblamed), but judicial in significance,—in view of the ἡμέρα τοῦ Κυρίου: "free from charge when the day of the Lord shall come"; cf. Rom. viii. 33, τίς ἐγκαλέσει;—ὃς refers to the foregoing κύριος Ἰ. Χ., not to the distant Θεὸς of ver. 4; the Saviour "who will make sure" the innocence of the Cor. on that day is the Judge who will pronounce upon it (cf. Col. i. 22, Eph. v. 27, where Christ is to "present" the Church "unblemished and unimpeached" before Himself): He will then confirm them and vindicate their character, as they have confirmed the testimony about Him (cf. Luke ix. 26). P. does not say the Cor. are ἀνέγκλητοι now; he hopes that they will prove so then. "The day of our Lord Jesus Christ" (cf. note on iii. 13) is the O.T. "day of Jehovah" (LXX, τ. Κυρίου), translated into the "day of Christ," since God has revealed His purpose to "judge through Jesus Christ" (Rom. ii. 16, Acts xvii. 31).—ἐν τ. ἡμέρᾳ = ἐν τ. παρουσίᾳ τ. κυρ. Ἰ. Χ. (1 Thess. v. 23, etc.), with the added connotation of judgment, to which the ἀποκάλυψις of ver. 7 leads up: for this connexion of thought, see Rom. ii. 5, 2 Thess. i. 7 ff. P. does not say "His day," though ὃς recalls ὁ κύρ. Ἰ. Χ.: Christ's name is repeated ten times in the first ten vv.—six times, as here, in full style—with sustained solemnity of emphasis (cf. the repetition of "God" in 20-29); "P. thus prepares for his exhortations these Cor., who were disposed to treat Christianity as a matter of human choice and personal liking, under the sense that in a Christian Church Christ is the one thing and everything" (Hf.).

Ver. 9. The ground of Paul's hope for the ultimate welfare of the Cor. is God's fidelity. His gifts are bestowed on a wise and settled plan (21, Rom. viii. 28 ff., xi. 29); His word, with it His character, is pledged to the salvation of those who believe in His Son: πιστὸς ὁ Θεὸς δι' οὗ ἐκλήθητε = πιστὸς ὁ καλῶν of 1 Thess. v. 23 f.; the formula πιστὸς ὁ λόγος of the Past. Epp. is not very different. δι' οὗ is "through (older Eng., by) whom you were called"; cf. διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ (1, see note), and δι' οὗ . . . τὰ πάντα (of God, Rom. xi. 36); similarly in Gal. iv. 7: God had manifestly interposed to bring the Cor. into the communion of Christ (see, further, 26-28); His voice sounded in the ears of the Cor. when the Gospel summons reached them (cf. 1 Thess. ii. 13). Christ (8) and God are both therefore security for the perfecting of their Christian life.—God's accepted call has brought the readers εἰς κοινωνίαν τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν—i.e., not "into a communion (or partnership) with His Son Jesus Christ our Lord" (nowhere else has this noun an objective d iv. 16, xvi. 15; frequent in this sense in P.; also Heb. xiii. 19, 22; 1 Pet.; Jude 3. e Acts iv. 30, x. 43. f xii. 25; 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Rom. xii. 16, xv. 5; Ph. ii. 2, iv. 2. g xi. 18, xii. 25; Jo. vii. 43, ix. 16, x. 19.

10. [d] Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, [e] διὰ τοῦ [e] ὀνόματος τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἵνα [f] τὸ [f] αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες καὶ μὴ ᾖ ἐν ὑμῖν [g] σχίσ-

gen. of the person: see parls.), but "into a communion belonging to (and named after) God's Son," of which He is founder, centre and sum. In this fellowship the Cor. partake "with all those that call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2); κοινωνία denotes collective participation. The κοινωνία τ. υἱοῦ is the same, both in content and constituency, as the κοινωνία τ. πνεύματος (see xii. 13, 2 Cor. xiii. 13, Phil. ii. 1, Eph. iv. 4-6). Its content—that which the Cor. share in—is sonship to God, since it is "a communion of His Son," with Christ for "first-born among many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29 f.; cf. Heb. ii. 10-16), and consequent heirship to God (Rom. viii. 17, Gal. iii. 26-iv. 7). The title "our Lord," added to "His Son Jesus Christ," invests the Christian communion with present grandeur and certifies its hope of glory; Christ's glory lies in His full manifestation as Lord (xv. 25, Phil. ii. 11), and its glorification is wrapped up in His (2 Thess. i. 12, ii. 14; also 1 Thess. ii. 12). Ver. 9 sustains and crowns the hope expressed in ver. 8. For κοινωνία, see further the notes on x. 16 f.

Division I. The Corinthian Parties and the Gospel Ministry, i. 10-iv. 21. Paul could not honestly give thanks for the actual condition of the Cor. Church. The reason for this omission at once appears. The Church is rent with factions, which ranged themselves under the names of the leading Christian teachers. On the causes of these divisions see Introduction, Chap. i. Out of their crude and childish experience (iii. 1-4) the Cor. are constructing prematurely a γνῶσις of their own (viii. 1, see note), a σοφία resembling that "wisdom of the world" which is "foolishness with God" (18 ff., 30, iii. 18 f., iv. 9 f.); they think themselves already above the mere λόγος τοῦ σταύρου brought by the Ap., wherein, simple as it appeared, there lay the wisdom and the power of God. This conceit had been stimulated, unwittingly on his part, by the preaching of Apollos. Ch. iii. 3-7 shows that it is the Apollonian faction which most exercises Paul's thoughts at present; the irony of i. 18-31 and iv. 6-13 is aimed at the partisans of Ap., who exalted his ὑπεροχὴ λόγου κ. σοφίας in disparagement of Paul's unadorned κήρυγμα τοῦ σταύρου. Mistaking the nature of the Gospel, the Cor. mistook the office of its ministers: on the former subject they are corrected in i. 18-ii. 5 showing in what sense and why the Gospel is not, and in ii. 6-iii. 2 showing in what sense and to whom the Gospel is a σοφία; the latter misconception is rectified in iii. 3-iv. 21, where, with express reference to Ap. and P., Christian teachers are shown to be no competing leaders of human schools but "fellow-workmen of God" and "servants of Christ," co-operative and complementary instruments of His sovereign work in the building of the Church. The four chapters constitute an apologia for the Apostle's teaching and office, parl. to those of 2 Cor. x.-xiii. and Gal. i.-iii.; but the line of defence adopted here is quite distinct. Here Paul pleads against Hellenising lovers of wisdom, there against Judaising lovers of tradition. Both parties stumbled at the cross; both judged of the Ap. κατὰ σάρκα, and fastened upon his defects in visible prestige and presence. The existence of the legalist party at Cor. is intimated by the cry, "I am of Cephas," and by Paul's words of self-vindication in ix. 1 f.; but this faction had as yet reached no considerable head; it developed rapidly in the interval between 1 and 2 Cor.

§ 3. The Report about the Parties, and Paul's Expostulation, i. 10-17a. Without further preface, the Apostle warns the Cor. solemnly against their schisms (10), stating the testimony on which his admonition is based (11). The four parties are defined out of the mouths of the Cor. (12); and the Ap. protests esp. against the use of Christ's name and of his own in this connexion (13). In founding the Church he had avoided all self-exaltation, bent only on fulfilling his mission of preaching the good news (14-17a).

Ver. 10. "But I exhort (appeal to) you, brothers:" the reproof to be given stands in painful contrast (δέ) with the Thanksgiving. It is administered "through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," which the Ap. has invoked so often (see note on 8); all the authority and grace of the Name reinforce his appeal, "that you say the same thing, ματα, ἦτε δὲ [h] κατηρτισμένοι ἐν [f] τῷ [f] αὐτῷ [i] νοῒ καὶ ἐν [f] τῇ [f] αὐτῇ [k] γνώμῃ· 11. [l] ἐδηλώθη γάρ μοι περὶ ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί μου, ὑπὸ [m] τῶν Χλόης ὅτι [n] ἔριδες ἐν ὑμῖν εἰσί· 12. [o] λέγω δὲ τοῦτο, ὅτι ἕκαστος ὑμῶν λέγει, "Ἐγὼ μέν εἰμι [p] Παύλου," "Ἐγὼ δὲ [p] Ἀπολλώ," "Ἐγὼ δὲ h In ethical sense, 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Gal. vi. 1; Heb. xiii. 21; 1 Pet. v. 10; Lk. vi. 40; Ps. xvi. 5.

i ii. 16, xiv. 14 ff.; 14 times besides in P.; thrice besides in N.T. k vii. 25, 40; 2 Cor. viii. 10; Phm. 14; Acts xx. 3; Rev. xvii. 13, 17 only; Wisd. vii. 16; 2 Macc. iv. 39, etc. l iii. 13; Col. i. 8; Heb. ix. 8, xii. 27; 1 Pet. i. 11; 2 Pet. i. 14; Ex. vi. 3, etc. m Art. thus used, Rom. xvi. 10 f. n Pl., 2 Cor. xii. 20; Tit. iii. 9. Sing., iii. 3; Rom. i. 29, xiii. 13; Gal. v. 20; Ph. i. 15. o In this sense, x. 29; Gal. iii. 17. p Same gen., iii. 23, xv. 23; Rom. xiv. 8; Acts ix. 2, etc.

all (of you)," instead of "saying, each of you, I am of Paul," etc. (12).—Τὸ αὐτὸ λέγειν, "a strictly classical expression used of political communities which are free from factions, or of diff. states which entertain friendly relations with each other" (Lt.). Τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, in 2 Cor. xiii. 11, etc., is matter of temper and disposition; τὸ αὐτὸ λέγειν, of attitude and declaration: the former is opposed to self-interest, the latter to party zeal. On the weakened use of ἵνα after παρακαλῶ (purpose passing into purport) see Wr., pp. 420 ff.: more frequently in P., as in cl. usage, this vb. is construed with the inf.; so always in Acts; with ἵνα regularly in Synoptics. For the meanings of παρακαλῶ see iv. 13.

"And (that) there be not amongst you σχίσματα (clefts, splits)," defines negatively the ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες. The schism (see parls.) is a party division within the Church, not yet, as in eccl. usage, a culpable separation from it; ἔριδες (11) signifies the personal contentions, due to whatever cause, which lead to σχίσματα; αἱρέσεις (xi. 18 f.: see note) are divisions of opinion, or sects founded thereupon (Acts v. 17, etc.), implying a disagreement of principle. The schism is a rent in the Church, an injury to the fabric (cf. iii. 17, xii. 25); hence the further appeal, reverting to the positive form of expression,—"but that you be well and surely (pf. ptp.) adjusted" (coagmentati, Bg.)—"the exact word for the healing or repairing of the breaches caused by the σχίσματα" (Al.). καταρτίζω has a like political sense in cl. Gr. (Herod., iv. 161; v. 28, in opp. to στάσις); "the marked classical colouring of such passages as this leaves a much stronger impression of St. Paul's acquaintance with cl. writers than the rare occasional quotations which occur in his writings" (Lt.). "In the same discernment (νοΐ), and in the same judgment (γνώμῃ)": "νοῦς geht auf die Einsicht, γνώμη auf das Urtheil" (Hn.); gnomé is the application of nous in practical judgment (see parls.). P. desiderates that ὁμονοεῖν and ὁμογνωμεῖν (see Thucyd., ii. 97, viii. 75; Aristot., Polit., v. 6, 10; Demosth., 281. 21) in Christian matters, which will enable the Church to act as one body and to pursue Christ's work with undivided strength.

Ver. 11. The appeal above made implies a serious charge; now the authority for it: "For it has been signified to me about you, my brothers, by the (people) of Chloē".—ἐδηλώθη (see parls.) implies definite information, the disclosure of facts.—οἱ Χλόης, "persons of Chloē's household"—children, companions, or possibly slaves (cf. Rom. xvi. 10): there is nothing further to identify them. "Chloē is usually considered a Cor. Christian, whose people had come to Eph.; but it is more in harmony with St. Paul's discretion to suppose that she was an Ephesian known to the Cor., whose people had been at Cor. and returned to Eph." (Ev., Hf.). "Chloë's people" are distinct from the Cor. deputies of xvi. 17, or Paul would have named the latter here; besides, Stephanas was himself the head of a household.—Χλόη (Verdure) was an epithet of the goddess Demeter, as Φοίβη of Artemis (Rom. xvi. 1): such names were often given to slaves, and C. may have been a freedwoman of property (Lt.). "That strifes exist among you" (cf. iii. 3, 2 Cor. xii. 20) was the information given; these ἔριδες, the next ver. explains, were generating the σχίσματα (see note on 10).

Ver. 12. "But I mean this (τοῦτο δὲ λέγω), that each one of you is saying (instead of your all saying the same thing, 10), 'I am of Paul (am Paul's man),'—'But I of Apollos,'—'But I of Cephas,'—'But I of Christ'!"—ἕκαστος, distributive, as in xiv. 26: each is saying one or other of these things; the party cries are quoted as from successive speakers challenging each other.

The question of the FOUR COR. PARTIES is one of the standing pro-

[p] Κηφᾶ," "Ἐγὼ δὲ [p] Χριστοῦ". 13. [q] μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός;[1] μὴ Παῦλος ἐσταυρώθη ὑπὲρ[2] ὑμῶν, ἢ [r] εἰς τὸ ὄνομα Παύλου [r] ἐβαπτίσ-

q In this sense, vii. 34; Mt. xii. 25 f.; 3 Kings xvi. 21.

r x. 2; Gal. iii. 27; Mt. xxviii. 19; Acts viii. 16, xix. 3 f.

[1] Thd. 168, ad loc.: τουτο τινες αποφαντικως ανεγνωσαν, εγω δε αυτο κατ' ερωτησιν κεισθαι νομιζω. Ambrst. interprets affirmatively; so Lachm. and W.H. text, R.V. marg. See note below.

[2] περι in BD* (hence W.H. marg.); all other Codd. υπερ.

blems of N.T. criticism. It is fully examined, and the judgments of different critics are digested, by Gd. ad loc.; see also Mr.-Hn., Einleitung, § 3; Weiss' Manual of Introd. to the N.T., § 19. After all, this was only a brief phase of Church life at Cor.; P. had just heard of it when he wrote, by the time of 2 Cor. a new situation has arisen. The three first parties are easy to account for: (1) The body of the Ch., converted under P.'s ministry, adhered to its own apostle; P. valued this loyalty and appeals to it, while he condemns its combative expression,—the disposition of men "more Pauline than Paul himself" (Dods) to exalt him to the disparagement of other leaders, and even to the detriment of Christ's glory. (2) Apollos (cf. Acts xviii. 24 ff.) had preached at Cor., in the interval since Paul's first departure, with brilliant effect. He possessed Alexandrian culture and a graceful style, whereas P. was deemed at Cor. ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ (2 Cor. xi. 6). Some personal converts Ap. had made; others were taken with his genial method, and welcomed his teaching as more advanced than P.'s plain gospel-message. Beside the more cultured Greeks, there would be a sprinkling of liberally-minded Jews, men of speculative bias imbued with Greek letters, who might prefer to say Ἐγὼ Ἀπολλῶ. Judging from this Ep., the Pauline and Apollonian sections included at present the bulk of the Church, divided between its "planter" and "waterer". Ἀπολλῶς, of Attic 2nd decl., is probably short for Ἀπολλώνιος. (3) In a Judæo-Gentile Church the cry "I am of Paul," or "I am of Apollos," was certain to be met with the retort, "But I of Kephas!" Conservative Jewish believers, when conflict was afoot, rallied to the name of the preacher of Pentecost and the hero of the Church's earliest victories. The use of Κηφᾶς, the Aramaic original of Πέτρος, indicates that this party affected Palestinian traditions. Some of them may, possibly, have been Peter's converts in Judæa. Had Peter visited Cor., as Dionysius of Cor. supposed (Euseb., Hist. Eccles., ii. 125: Weiss and Harnack favour the tradition), the event would surely have left some trace in these Epp. Judging from the tenor of the two Letters, this faction was of small account in Cor. until the arrival of the Judæan emissaries denounced in 2 Cor., who found a ground of vantage ready in those that shouted "I am of Kephas". In both Epp. P. avoids every appearance of conflict with Peter (cf. ix. 5, xv. 5). (4) The Christ party forms the crux of the passage:—(a) After F. C. Baur, οἱ Χριστοῦ has been commonly interpreted by 2 Cor. x. 7: "If any one is confident on his own part that he is Christ's (Χριστοῦ εἶναι), let him take this into account with himself, that just as he is Christ's, so also are we". Now P.'s opponents of 2 Cor. were ultra-Judaists; so, it is inferred, these οἱ Χριστοῦ must have been. But the Judaisers of 2 Cor. presumed to be "of Christ" as His ministers, apostles (xi. 13, 23), deriving their commission (as they maintained P. did not) from the fountain-head; whereas the Christ-party of this place plumed themselves, at most, on being His disciples (rather than P.'s, etc.): the coincidence is verbal rather than real. Upon Baur's theory, there were two parties at Cor., as everywhere else in the Church, diametrically opposed—a Gentile-Christian party, divided here into Pauline and Apollonian sections, and a Jewish-Christian party naming itself from Kephas or Christ as occasion served. Later scholars following Baur's line of interpretation, distinguish variously the Petrine and Christine Judaists: (α) Weizsäcker associates the latter with James; (β) Reuss and Beyschlag see in them strict followers of the example and maxims of Jesus as the διάκονος περιτομῆς, from which Peter in certain respects deviated; (γ) Hilgenfeld, Holsten, Hausrath, Sm., think they had been in personal relations with Jesus (it is quite possible that amongst the "five hundred" of xv. 5 some had wandered to Cor.); (δ) Gd. strangely conjectures that θητε; 14. [s] εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ[1] ὅτι οὐδένα ὑμῶν ἐβάπτισα, εἰ μὴ Κρίσπον καὶ Γάϊον, 15. ἵνα μή τις εἴπῃ ὅτι [r] εἰς τὸ ἐμὸν ὄνομα [r] ἐβάπτισα[2]· 16. ἐβάπτισα[3] δὲ καὶ τὸν Στεφανᾶ οἶκον· [t] λοιπὸν

s See i. 4.
t iv. 2, vii. 29; six times besides in P.; Heb. x. 13.

[1] ℵ*B, 67, with Chr. and Dam. (in comment.), om. τῳ Θεῳ. A strong group of witnesses; parls. suggested to copyists the inserted words.

[2] ℵABC*, 67, and several good minuscc., read εβαπτισθητε; instead of εβαπτισα, as in CcDGLP, etc.,—Western and Syrian reading, conformed to context.

[3] βεβαπτικα replaces first εβαπτισα in D*G, and second also in D*.

"they were Gnostics before Gnosticism, who formulated their title οἱ Χριστοῦ, after the fashion of Cerinthus, in opp. not merely to the names of the apostles, but even to that of Jesus!" He identifies them with the men who cried "Jesus is anathema" (xii. 2: see note). This notion is an anachronism, and has no real basis in the Epp.

(b) 1 Cor. iii. 22 f. (see notes, ad loc.) supplies a nearer and safer clue to the interpretation; this is the Apostle's decisive correction of the rivalries of i. 12. The human leaders pitted against each other all belong to the Church (not this teacher or that to this section or that), while it belongs without distinction to Christ, and Christ, with all that is His, to God. The catholic Ὑμεῖς Χριστοῦ swallows up the self-assertive and sectarian Ἐγὼ δὲ Χριστοῦ. Those who used this cry arrogated the common watchword as their peculium; they erred by despising, as others by glorying in men. "Ἐγὼ Χριστοῦ ad eos pertinet qui in contrariam partem peccabant; i.e., qui sese unius Christi ita dicebant, ut interim iis per quos quos Deus loquitur nihil tribuerent" (Bz.); similarly Aug., Bg., Mr., Hf., El., Bt.

(c) The Gr. Ff., followed by Cv., Bleek, Pfleiderer, Rābiger, and others, saw in the Ἐγὼ δὲ Χριστοῦ the true formula which P. approves, or even which he utters propriâ personâ. But the context subjects all four classes to the same reproach. It is a sufficient condemnation for the fourth party that they said "I am of Christ," in rejoinder to the partisans of Paul and the rest, lowering His name to this competition.

(d) Hn., finding the riddle of the "Christus-partei" insoluble, eliminates it from the text; "we are driven," he says, "to explain the Ἐγὼ δὲ Χριστοῦ as a gloss, which some reader of the original codex inscribed in the margin, borrowing it from iii. 23 as a counter-confession to the Ἐγὼ μὲν Παύλου κ.τ.λ.".

Ver. 13. In his expostulation P. uses, with telling contrast, the first and last only of the party names: "Is the Christ divided? Was Paul crucified on your behalf? or into the name of Paul were you baptised?" Lachmann, W.H., Mr., Bt., read μεμέρισται ὁ Χ. as an exclamation: "The Christ (then) has been divided!"—torn in pieces by your strife. But μερίζω (here in pf. of resultful fact) denotes distribution, not dismemberment (see parls.): the Christian who asserts "I am Christ's" in distinction from others, claims an exclusive part in Him, whereas the one and whole Christ belongs to every limb of His manifold body (see xii. 12; also xi. 3, Rom. x. 12, xiv. 7-9, Eph. iv. 3 ff., Col. ii. 19). A divided Church means a Christ parcelled out, appropriated κατὰ μέρος. ὁ Χριστὸς is the Christ, in the fulness of all that His title signifies (see xii. 12, etc.).—While μεμέρισται ὁ Χ.; is Paul's abrupt and indignant question to himself, μὴ Παῦλος ἐσταυρώθη; (aor. of historical event) interrogates the readers—"Is it Paul that was crucified for you?" From the cross the Ap. draws his first reproof, the point of which vi. 20 makes clear, "You were bought at a price": the Cor. therefore were not Paul's or Kephas', nor some of them Christ's and some of them Paul's men, but only Christ's and all Christ's alike.

The cross was the ground of κοινωνία Χριστοῦ (9, x. 16); baptism, signalising personal union with Him by faith, its attestation (Rom. vi. 3); to this P. appeals asking, ἢ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα Παύλου ἐβαπτίσθητε; His converts will remember how Christ's name was then sealed upon them, and Paul's ignored. What was true of his practice, he tacitly assumes for the other chiefs. The readers had been baptised as Christians, not Pauline, Apollonian, or Petrine Christians. Paul's horror at the thought of baptising in his name shows how truly Christ's was to him "the name above every name" (Phil. ii. 9; cf. 2 Cor. iv. 5).

οὐκ [u] οἶδα [u] εἴ τινα ἄλλον ἐβάπτισα [1]· 17*a*. οὐ γὰρ [v] ἀπέστειλέ με Χριστὸς [2] βαπτίζειν, ἀλλʼ [w] εὐαγγελίζεσθαι.[3]

17*b*. Οὐκ ἐν [x] σοφίᾳ [x] λόγου, ἵνα μὴ [y] κενωθῇ ὁ [z] σταῦρος τοῦ u vii. 16; Jo. ix. 25; Acts x. 18, xix. 2.

v ix. 1 f.; Rom. x. 15; Acts xxii. 21, xxvi. 17; Jo. xvii. 18, xx. 21; with inf., Lk. i. 19, iv. 18, etc.
w Without obj., ix. 16, xv 2; Rom. i. 15, xv. 20; 2 Cor. x. 16; Gal. iv. 13; Lk. iv. 18 (Isa. lxi. 1), ix. 6, xx. 1; Acts xiv. 7; Nahum i. 15, etc.
x ii. 1, 4, 13, xii. 8; Col. ii. 23, iii. 16.
y ix. 15; 2 Cor. ix. 3; Rom. iv. 14; Ph. ii. 7 only.
z Gal. v. 11, vi. 12, 14; Ph. iii. 18.

[1] βεβαπτικα replaces first εβαπτισα in D*G, and second also in D*.

[2] ο Χριστος (for Χριστος), in BG—an instance of the faulty readings that mark B, or BD, in company of G.

[3] B, ευαγγελισασθαι.

Vv. 14-16. In fact, P. had himself baptised very few of the Cor. He sees a providence in this; otherwise he might have seemed wishful to stamp his own name upon his converts, and some colour would have been lent to the action of the Paulinists—"lest any one should say that you were baptised into my name". For βαπτίζω εἰς τὸ ὄνομα, cf. Matt. xxviii. 19 and other parls.; also βαπτίζω εἰς, x. 2; it corresponds to πιστεύω εἰς, and has the like pregnant force. "The name" connotes the nature and authority of the bearer, and His relationship to those who speak of Him by it. Crispus and Gaius: both Roman names (see Introd., p. 733); the former a cognomen (Curly), the latter an exceedingly common prænomen. These two were amongst Paul's earliest converts (Acts xviii. 8, Rom. xvi. 23), the former a Synagogue-ruler. On second thoughts ("he was reminded by his amanuensis," Lt.; or by Steph. himself), P. remembers that he had "baptised the house of Stephanas" (see xvi. 15, and note), the first family here won to Christ. Στεφανᾶς (perhaps short for Στεφανηφόρος), like Κηφᾶς, takes the Doric gen. in -ᾶ usual with proper names in -ᾶς, whether of native or foreign origin (see Bm., p. 20).—λοιπὸν οὐκ οἶδα εἴ τινα κ.τ.λ.: P. cannot recall any other instance of baptism by his own hands at Cor.; this was a slight matter, which left no clear mark in his memory. λοιπόν (more regularly, τὸ λοιπόν), "for the rest"—in point of time (vii. 29), or number—a somewhat frequent idiom with Paul (cf. iv. 2). In οὐκ οἶδα εἰ (haud scio an), the conjunction is indir. interr., as in vii. 16.

Ver. 17a justifies Paul's thanking God that he had baptised so few: "For Christ did not send me to baptise, but to evangelise". The infs. (cf. ii. 1 f., ix. 16, xv. 11; Rom. xv. 17-21) are epexegetical (of purpose); and pres., of continued action (function). οὐκ . . . ἀλλά—no qualified, but an absolute denial that Baptism was the Apostle's proper work. For the terms of Paul's commission see Gal. i. 15 f., Eph. iii. 7-9, 1 Tim. ii. 7; also Acts ix. 15, and parls. Baptism was the necessary sequel of preaching, and P. did not suppose his commission narrower than that of the Twelve (Matt. xxviii. 19 f.); but baptising might be performed vicariously, not so preaching. "To evangelise is to cast the net—the true apostolic work; to baptise is to gather the fish already caught and to put them into vessels" (Gd.). It never occurred to P. that a Christian minister's essential function was to administer sacraments. The Ap. dwells on this matter so much as to suggest (Cv.) that he tacitly contrasts himself with some preachers who made a point of baptising their own converts, as though to vindicate a special interest in them; cf. the action of Peter (Acts x. 48), and of Jesus (John iv. 1 f.).

§ 4. THE TRUE POWER OF THE GOSPEL, i. 17b-25. To "preach the gospel" meant, above all, to proclaim the cross of Christ (17b). In Cor. "the wisdom of the world" scouted this message as sheer folly (18). To use "wisdom of word" in meeting such antagonism would have been for P. to fight the world with its own weapons and to betray his cause, the strength of which lay in the Divine power and wisdom embodied in Christ, a force destined, because it was God's, to bring to shame the world's vaunting wisdom (19-25).

Ver. 17b. οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου is grammatical adjunct to ἀλλὰ (ἀπέστ. με Χρ.) εὐαγγελίζεσθαι; but the phrase opens a new vein of thought, and supplies the theme of the subsequent argument up to ii. 6. In vv. 14, 17a Paul a In this sense, six times more in P.; Heb. v. 13; Jas. i. 18; Acts xiii. 26, xiv. 3, xx. 32. b 2 Cor. ii. 15, iv. 3; Acts ii. 47; Lk. xiii. 23. c Vv. 21, 23, ii. 14, iii. 19 only. d Ver. 24, ii. 5; 2 Cor. vi. 7, xiii. 4; Rom. i. 16; 2 Tim. i. 8; 1 Pet. i. 5; Mt. xxii. 29; Acts viii. 10. e Isa. xxix. 14. f Eph. iii. 4; Col. i. 9, ii. 2; 2 Tim. ii. 7; Mk. xii. 33; Lk. ii. 47 only.

Χριστοῦ. 18. ὁ [a] λόγος γὰρ ὁ τοῦ [a] σταύρου [b] τοῖς μὲν [b] ἀπολλυμένοις [a] μωρία ἐστί, [b] τοῖς δὲ [b] σωζομένοις, ἡμῖν, [d] δύναμις [d] Θεοῦ ἐστί· 19. γέγραπται γάρ, "[e] Ἀπολῶ τὴν σοφίαν τῶν σοφῶν καὶ τὴν [f] σύνεσιν

asserted that Christ sent him not to baptise, but to preach; further, what he has to preach is not a philosophy to be discussed, but a message of God to be believed: "L'évangile n'est pas une sagesse, c'est un salut" (Gd.). In this transition the Ap. silently directs his reproof from the Pauline to the Apollonian party.—In σοφίᾳ λόγου (see ii. 1-4, 13; cf. the opp. combination in xii. 8) the stress lies on wisdom (called in vv. 19 f. "the wisdom of the world")—sc. "wisdom" in the common acceptation, as the world understood it and as the Cor. expected it from public teachers: "in wisdom of word" = in philosophical style. "To tell good news in wisdom of word" is an implicit contradiction; "news" only needs and admits of plain, straightforward telling. To dress out the story of Calvary in specious rhetoric, or wrap it up in fine-spun theorems, would have been to "empty (κενώθῃ) the cross of Christ," to eviscerate the Gospel. The "power of God" lies in the facts and not in any man's presentment of them: "to substitute a system of notions, however true and ennobling, for the fact of Christ's death, is like confounding the theory of gravitation with gravitation itself" (Ed.).—For κενόω, factitive of κενός (cf. xv. 14), see parls.; the commoner syn., καταργέω (28, etc.), means to deprive of activity, make impotent (in effect), κενόω to deprive of content, make unreal (in fact).

Ver. 18. What P. asserted in ver. 17 as intrinsically true, he supports by experience (18) and by Scripture (19), combining their testimony in ver. 20.—ὁ λόγος γάρ, ὁ τοῦ σταύρου, "For the word, namely that of the cross". ὁ λόγος (distinguish from the anarthrous λόγος above) takes its sense from εὐαγγελίζεσθαι (17); it is "the tale" rather than "the doctrine of the cross," synonymous with μαρτύριον (6) and κήρυγμα (21).—τοῖς μὲν ἀπολλυμένοις . . . τοῖς δὲ σωζομένοις, the two classes into which P. sees his hearers divide themselves (see parls.). The ptps. are strictly pr.—not expressing certain expectation (Mr.), nor fixed predestination (Bz.); the rejectors and receivers of "the word" are in course of perishing and being saved respectively (cf. xv. 2; contrast the aor. of σώζω in Rom. viii. 24, and the pf. in Eph. ii. 5). "In the language of the N.T. salvation is a thing of the past, a thing of the present, and a thing of the future. . . . The divorce of morality and religion is fostered by failing to note this, and so laying the whole stress either on the past or on the future—on the first call or on the final change" (Lt.). Paul paints the situation before his eyes: one set of men deride the story of the cross—these are manifestly perishing; to another set the same story is "God's power unto salvation". The appended pers. pron. (τ. σωζομένοις) ἡμῖν, "to the saved, viz., ourselves," speaks from and to experience: "You and I know that the cross is God's saving power". Cf. with the whole expression Rom. i. 16, also John iii. 14-17.—The antithesis to μωρία is not, in the first instance, σοφία, but δύναμις Θεοῦ—a practical vindication against false theory; saved men are the Gospel's apology. Yet because it is δύναμις, the word of the cross is, after all, the truest σοφία (see 30, ii. 6 ff.). The double ἐστὶν emphasises the actuality of the contrasted results.

Ver. 19. As concerns "the perishing," the above sentence agrees with God's ways of judgment as revealed in Scripture: γέγραπται γάρ κ.τ.λ. The quotation Ἀπολῶ κ.τ.λ. (suggested by τ. ἀπολλυμένοις) belongs to the cycle of Isaiah's prophecies against the worldly-wise politicians of Jerus. in Assyrian times (xxviii.-xxxii.), who despised the word of Jehovah, relying on their shallow and dishonest statecraft; their policy of alliance with Egypt will lead to a shameful overthrow, out of which God will find the means of vindicating His wisdom and saving His people and city. The O.T. and N.T. situations are analogous: Gentile and Jewish wisdom, united in rejection of the Gospel, are coming to a like breakdown; and P. draws a powerful warning from the sacred history.—ἀθετήσω (a reminiscence, perhaps, of Ps. xxxiii. 10) displaces the less pointed κρύψω: otherwise the LXX text of Isa. is followed; in the Heb. the τῶν [g] συνετῶν ἀθετήσω". 20. [i] ποῦ σοφός; [i] ποῦ [k] γραμματεύς ποῦ [l] συζητητὴς[1] τοῦ [m] αἰῶνος [m] τούτου; οὐχὶ [n] ἐμώρανεν ὁ Θεὸς τὴν σοφίαν τοῦ κόσμου τούτου[2]; 21. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐν τῇ [o] σοφίᾳ τοῦ; [o] Θεοῦ οὐκ [p] ἔγνω ὁ κόσμος διὰ τῆς σοφίας τὸν [p] Θεόν, [q] εὐδόκησεν[3] ὁ [q] Θεὸς[4] διὰ τῆς [r] μωρίας τοῦ [s] κηρύγματος [t] σῶσαι τοὺς [t] πιστεύοντας·

Mt. xi. 25; Lk. x. 21; Acts xiii. 7only; Isa. v. 21; Jer. xviii. 18, xlix. 6. Gal. ii. 21, iii. 15; 1 Tim. v. 12; Heb. x. 28; Jude 8; Mk. vii. 9; Lk. vii. 30. i In this manner, xii. 17, 19, xv. 55; Rom. iii. 27; Gal. iv. 15; Isa. xxxiii. 18. k Epp., here only. Syn. Gospp., passim; Ezra vii. 6. l Here only; -τειν, Lk. xxii. 23, xxiv. 15; Acts vi. 9, ix. 29; six times in Mk.; -τησις, Acts xxviii. 29. m ii. 6 f., iii. 18; eight times besides in P.; Lk. xvi. 8, xx. 34; Mt. xii. 32. n Rom. i. 22; Mt. v. 13; Isa. xix. 11; Jer. x. 14. o Ver. 24; Rom. xi. 33; Eph. iii. 10; Lk. xi. 49. p xv. 34; Rom. i. 21; Gal. iv. 9; 2 Th. i. 8; Tit. i. 16; 1 Jo. iv. 6 ff.; Jo. xiv. 7; Heb. viii. 11 (from Jer.). q Gal. i. 15; Col. i. 19; Lk. xii. 32. r See ver. 18. s ii. 4, xv. 14; Rom. xvi. 25; 2 Tim. iv. 17; Tit. i. 3; Mt. xii. 41. xv. 2; Rom. x. 9; Eph. ii. 8; Jas. ii. 14, v. 15; Mt. ix. 22; Mk. x. 52, xvi. 16; 5 times in Lk.; Acts xiv. 9, xv. 11, xvi. 31.

[1] συνζητητης: all uncc. exc. LP. The unassimilated form of prp. in such compounds prevails in oldest MSS.

[2] τουτου wanting in ℵ*ABC*D*gr.P. Added in ℵcC3DcGL, syrr. cop. latt. vg.; the addition is late Western and Syrian. Cf. τ. αιωνος τουτου above, and iii. 19.

[3] ηυδοκησεν: C, Athan.; a characteristic Alexandrian emendation.

[4] For ο Θ., τῳ Θεῳ in G, latt. vg. (placuit Deo),—a Latinism.

vbs. are pass., "the wisdom . . . shall perish," etc. Isa. xxix. is rich in matter for N.T. use: vv. 13, 18 gave our Lord texts, in Matt. xv. 8 f., xi. 5 respectively; the Ap. quotes the chap. twice elsewhere, and ch. xxviii. thrice.

Ver. 20. ποῦ σοφός; ποῦ γραμματεύς; and (possibly) ἐμώρανεν . . . τὴν σοφίαν, are also Isaianic allusions—to Isa. xix. 11 f. (mocking the vain wisdom of Pharaoh's counsellors), and xxxiii. 18 (predicting the disappearance of Sennacherib's revenue clerks and army scouts, as a sign of his defeat). The LXX γραμματικὸς becomes γραμματεύς, in consistence with the sophēr of the latter passage; συνζητητής (cf. ζητοῦσιν, 22), in the third question, is Paul's addition. — γραμματεὺς unmistakably points, in the application, to the Jewish Scribe (cf. our Lord's denunciation in Matt. xxiii.); of the parl. terms, σοφὸς is supposed by most moderns to be general, comprehending Jewish and Gr. wise men together, συνζητητὴς to be specific to the Gr. philosopher—a distinction better reversed, as by Lt. after the Gr. Ff. συνζητέω, with its cognates, is employed in the N.T. of Jewish discussions (Acts vi. 9, xxviii. 29, etc.), and the adjunct τ. αἰῶνος τούτου gives to the term its widest scope, whereas σοφός, esp. at Cor., marks the Gr. intellectual pride; καλεῖ σοφὸν τὸν τῇ Ἑλληνικῇ στωμυλίᾳ κοσμούμενον (Thd.; cf. Rom. i. 23).—ποῦ σοφός (not ὁ σοφός); κ.τ.λ.: "Where is a wise man? where a scribe? where a disputer of this age?" These orders of men are swept from the field; all such pretensions disappear (cf. 29)—"Did not God make foolish the wisdom of the world?" The world and God are at issue; each counts the other's wisdom folly (cf. 18, 25, 30). But God actually turned to foolishness (infatuavit, Bz.: cf. Rom. i. 21 f., for μωραίνω; also Isa. xliv. 25) the world's imagined wisdom: how, vv. 21-25 proceed to show. On αἰὼν see parls., and Ed.'s note; also Trench's Synon., lix., and Gm., for the distinction between αἰὼν and κόσμος; "αἰών, like sæculum, refers to the prevailing ideas and feelings of the present life, κόσμος to its gross, material character" (Lt.).

Vv. 21-25. The ἐπειδὴ of ver. 21 and that of vv. 22-25 are parl., the second restating and expanding the first (cf. the double ὅταν in xv. 24, and in xv. 27 f.: see notes), rather than proving it; together they justify the assertion implied in ver. 20b, which virtually repeats ver. 18.

Ver. 21. ἐπειδὴ γάρ (quoniam enim, Cv.) introduces the when and how of God's stultifying the world's wisdom by the λόγος τοῦ σταύρου: "For since, in the wisdom of God, the world through its wisdom did not know God, God was pleased," etc.—οὐκ ἔγνω . . . διὰ τ. σοφίας τ. Θεὸν records Paul's experience, e.g., at Athens, in disclosing the ἄγνωστον Θεὸν to philosophers. Of the emphatic adjunct, ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ,

22. ἐπειδὴ καὶ Ἰουδαῖοι [u] σημεῖον [1] [u] αἰτοῦσι, καὶ [v] Ἕλληνες [v] σοφίαν [v] ζητοῦσιν· 23. ἡμεῖς δὲ [w] κηρύσσομεν [wx] Χριστὸν [x] ἐσταυρωμένον, u Mt. xii. 38 f., xvi. 1, xxiv. 3; Lk. xxiii. 8; 7 times in Jo.; Acts iv. 30. v Prov. ii. 4, xiv. 6; Eccl. vii. 26. w xv. 12; 2 Cor. i. 19, xi. 4; Ph. i. 15; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Acts viii. 5, ix. 20, xix. 13. x ii. 2; Gal. iii. 1; Mt. xxviii. 5.

[1] σημεια: all uncc. (with anc. verss.) exc. L. T.R. conforms to Gosp. parls.

there are two explanations, following the line of Rom. i. 19 f. or Rom. xi. 32 f.: on the former view, the clause qualifies ἔγνω—"the world did not come to know God in His wisdom," evidenced in creation and Providence—so most interpreters ("amid the wisdom of God," Bt.; in media luce, Cv.; in nature and Scripture, addressed to Gentile and Jew, Bg.; Mr.); on the other hand, Rückert, Reuss, Al., Lt., Ev. attach the clause to οὐκ ἔγνω,—in God's wise plan of the world's government, the world's wisdom failed to win the knowledge of Him. The latter is the sounder explanation, being (a) in accord with Paul's reff. elsewhere to σοφία Θεοῦ, (b) presenting a pointed antithesis to σοφία κόσμου, and (c) harmonising with Paul's theory of the education of mankind for Christ, expounded in Gal. iii. 10-iv. 5 and Rom. v. 20 f., vii. 7-25, xi. "Through its (Greek) wisdom the world knew not God," as through its (Jewish) righteousness it pleased not God; both results were brought about "in the wisdom of God"—according to that "plan of the ages," leading up to "the fulness of the seasons," which embraced the Gentile "times of ignorance" (Acts xvii. 26-31) no less than the Jewish dispensations of covenant and law. "It is part of God's wise providence that He will not be apprehended by intellectual speculation, by 'dry light'" (Ev.). The intellectual was as signal as the moral defeat; the followers of Plato were "shut up," along with those of Moses, εἰς τ. μέλλουσαν πίστιν (Gal. iii. 22 f.).

Now that God's wisdom has reduced the self-wise world to ignorance, εὐδόκησεν σῶσαι: man's extremity, God's opportunity. "It was God's good will" (placuit Deo: see parls. for the vb.); εὐδοκία P. associates with θέλημα, βουλὴ on the one hand, and with χάρις, ἀγαθωσύνη on the other: God's sovereign grace rescues man's bankrupt wisdom. διὰ τ. μωρίας τ. κηρύγματος states the means, τοὺς πιστεύοντας defines the qualified objects of this deliverance. "Through the folly (as the wise world calls it, 18) of the κήρυγμα"—which last term signifies not the act of proclamation (κήρυξις), but the message proclaimed by God's herald (κῆρυξ, see parls.: the heralding suggests thoughts of the kingdom; cf. Acts xx. 25, Luke viii. 1, etc.). P. designates Christians by the act which makes them such—"those that believe" (see parls.). God saves by faith. Faith here stands opposed to Greek knowledge, as in Rom. to Jewish law-works.

Vv. 22-25 open out the thought of ver. 21: "the world" is parted into "Jews" and "Greeks"; μωρία becomes σκάνδαλον and μωρία; the κήρυγμα is defined as that of Χριστὸς ἐσταυρωμένος; and the πιστεύοντες reappear as the κλητοί. Both Mr. and Al. make this a new sentence, detached from vv. 20 f., and complete in itself, with ἐπειδὴ καί κ.τ.λ. for protasis, and ἡμεῖς δέ κ.τ.λ. for apodosis,—as though the mistaken aims of the world supplied Paul's motive for preaching Christ; the point is rather (in accordance with 20) that his "foolish" message, in contrast with (δέ, 23) the desiderated "signs" and "wisdom," convicts the world of folly (20); thus the whole of vv. 22-24 falls under the regimen of the 2nd ἐπειδή, which with its καί, emphatically resumes the first ἐπειδή (21)—"since indeed". God turned the world's wise men into fools (20) by bestowing salvation through faith on a ground that they deem folly (21)—in other words, by revealing His power and wisdom in the person of a crucified Messiah, whom Jews and Greeks unite to despise (22-24).

Ver. 22. Ἰουδαῖοι . . . Ἕλληνες—anarthrous; "Jews" qua Jews, etc.: in this "asking" and "seeking" the characteristics of each race are "hit off to perfection" (Ed.: see his interesting note); αἰτεῖν expresses "the importunity of the Jews," ζητεῖν "the curious, speculative turn of the Greeks" (Lt.). For the Jewish requirement, cf. parls. in the case of Jesus; the app., doubtless, were challenged in the same way—P. perhaps publicly at Cor.: "non reperias Corinthi signum editum esse per Paulum, Acta xviii." (Bg.). Respecting this demand, see Lt., Biblical Essays, pp. 150 ff. Such dictation Christ never allowed;

Ἰουδαίοις μὲν [y] σκάνδαλον, Ἕλλησι [1] δὲ [r] μωρίαν, 24. αὐτοῖς δὲ τοῖς [z] κλητοῖς, Ἰουδαίοις τε καὶ Ἕλλησι, Χριστὸν [a] Θεοῦ [a] δύναμιν καὶ [a] Θεοῦ [a] σοφίαν. 25. ὅτι [b] τὸ [b] μωρὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ σοφώτερον τῶν [c] ἀνθρώπων ἐστί, καὶ [d] τὸ [d] ἀσθενὲς τοῦ Θεοῦ [e] ἰσχυρότερον τῶν [c] ἀνθρώπων ἐστί.[2]

y Rom. ix. 33; Gal. v. 11; 1 Pet. ii. 8.
z See ver. 1.
a See ver. 18.
b Ver. 27, iii. 18, iv. 10; 2 Tim. ii. 23; Tit. iii. 9. For neuter idiom, Rom. ii. 4, viii. 3; 2 Cor. iv. 17, viii. 8.
c For constr., Mt. v. 20; Jo. v. 36; 1 Jo. ii. 2. d Ver. 27, iv. 10, xii. 22; 2 Cor. x. 10; Gal. iv. 9; Heb. vii. 18; Wisd. ii. 11, xiii. 18. For constr., see b. e Ver. 27, iv. 10, x. 22; Mt. iii. 11; Lk. xi. 22; Mic. iv. 3.

[1] εθνεσιν: all uncc. exc. C[3]D[c], all verss. exc. arm. Ελλησιν (as in context): all minuscc. exc. (about) twelve.

[2] εστι wanting in ℵB 17, 67. ℵ[c]ACLP, etc. (Alex. and Syr.) insert at end; DG (Western), before τ. ανθρωπων.

His miracles were expressions of pity, not concessions to unbelief, a part of the Gospel and not external buttresses to it. Of the Hellenic σοφίαν ζητεῖν Philosophy is itself a monument; cf., amongst many cl. parls., Herod., iv., 77, Ἕλληνες πάντας ἀσχόλους εἶναι πρὸς πᾶσαν σοφίην; also Ælian, Var. Hist., xii., 25; Juvenal, Sat., I., ii., 58 f.

Ver. 23. Instead of working miracles to satisfy the Jews, or propounding a philosophy to entertain the Greeks, "we, on the other hand, proclaim a crucified Christ"—Χριστὸν ἐσταυρωμένον, i.e., Christ as crucified (predicative adjunct), not "Christ the crucified," nor, strictly, "Christ crucified"; cf., for the construction, 2 Cor. iv. 5, κηρύσσομεν Χ. Ἰ. κύριον, "We preach (not ourselves but) Christ Jesus as Lord". Not a warrior Messiah, flashing His signs from the sky, breaking the heathen yoke, but a Messiah dying in impotence and shame (see 2 Cor. iv. 10, xiii. 4: hattalûy, Deut. xxi. 23—the hangèd—He is styled in the Talmud) is what the app. preach for their good news! "To Jews indeed a σκάνδαλον": this word (cl. σκανδάληθρον) signified first the trap-stick, then any obstacle over which one stumbles to one's injury, an "offence" (syn. with προσκοπή, πρόσκομμα: see viii. 9, 13), a moral hindrance presented to the perverse or the weak (see parls.).—τοῖς δὲ ἔθνεσιν μωρίαν: for the "folly" of offering the infelix lignum to cultured Gentiles, see Cicero, pro Rabirio, v.: "Nomen ipsum crucis absit non modo a corpore civium Romanorum, sed etiam a cogitatione, oculis, auribus"; and Lucian, De morte Peregrini, 13, who mocks at those who worship τὸν ἀνεσκολοπισμένον τὸν σοφιστήν,—"that gibbeted sophist!" For reff. in the early Apologists see Justin M., Tryph., lxix., and Apol., i., 13; Tertull., adv. Jud., § 10; Aristo of Pella, in Routh's Rel. Sacr., i., 95; and the graffito of the gibbeted ass discovered on the wall of the Pædagogium in the Palatine. To Jews the λόγος τοῦ σταύρου announced the shameful reversal of their most cherished hopes; to Greeks and Romans it offered for Saviour and Lord a man branded throughout the Empire as amongst the basest of criminals; it was "outrageous," and "absurd".

Ver. 24. αὐτοῖς δὲ τοῖς κλητοῖς, ipsis autem vocatis (Vg.): for the emphatic prefixed αὐτοῖς, cf. 2 Cor. xi. 14, 1 Thess. 16, etc.; it "marks off those alluded to from the classes to which they nationally belonged" (El.)—"to the called however upon their part, both Jews and Greeks"—cf. the οὐ . . . διαστολή of Rom. iii. 9, 22 ff. "(We proclaim) a Christ (to these) God's power and God's wisdom." Of God reiterated four times, with triumphant emphasis, in the stately march of vv. 24 f. Θεοῦ δύν., Θεοῦ σοφ. are predicative, in antithesis to ἐσταυρωμένον (23): the app. "preach as power and wisdom" One who wears to the world the aspect of utter powerlessness and folly.—Δύναμις and Σοφία Θεοῦ were synonyms of the Λόγος in the Alexandrian-Jewish speculations, in which Apollos was probably versed; these surpassing titles Paul appropriates for the Crucified.—Θεοῦ δύναμιν reaffirms, after explanation, the δύναμις Θεοῦ of ver. 18; now Θεοῦ σοφίαν is added to it, for "power" proves "wisdom" here (see note on 30); the universal efficacy of the Gospel demonstrates its inner truth, and faith is finally justified by reason.—δύναμιν matches the σημεῖον of ver. 22 (see, e.g., 2 Thess. ii. 9); believing Jews found, after all, in the cross the mightiest miracle, while Greeks found the deepest wisdom. The "wisdom of God," secretly

26. [f] Βλέπετε γὰρ τὴν [g] κλῆσιν ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι [h] οὐ [h] πολλοὶ σοφοὶ [i] κατὰ [i] σάρκα, [h] οὐ [h] πολλοὶ [k] δυνατοί, [h] οὐ [h] πολλοὶ εὐγενεῖς·

f x. 18; Rev vi. 1. Impv. otherwise in iii. 10, etc. g vii. 20; Rom. xi. 29; Eph. iv. 1, 4; Ph. iii. 14; 2 Th. i. 11; 2 Tim. i. 9; Heb. iii. 1; 2 Pet. i. 10. h iv. 15; Acts i. 5, xxvii. 14. i x. 18; 17 times besides in P.; cf. Jo. viii. 15. k Acts xxv. 5. l Lk. xix. 12; Acts xvii. 11 (another sense) only; Job i. 3; 2 Macc. x. 13.

working in the times of preparation (20), is thus at length brought to human recognition in Christ. On κλητοῖς see note to ver. 2: this term is preferable to οἱ σωζόμενοι, or οἱ πιστεύοντες, where the stress rests upon God's initiative in the work of individual salvation; cf. vv. 9, 26, Rom. viii. 28 ff.

Ver. 25. What has been proved in point of fact, viz., the stultification by the cross of man's wisdom, the Ap. (as in Rom. iii. 30, xi. 29, Gal. ii. 6) grounds upon an axiomatic religious principle, that of the absolute superiority of the Divine to the human. That God should thus confound the world one might expect: "because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men". Granted that the λόγος τ. σταυροῦ is folly and weakness, it is God's folly, God's weakness: will men dare to match themselves with that? (cf. Rom. ix. 20).—τὸ μωρόν (not μωρία as before), τὸ ἀσθενές are concrete terms—the foolish, weak policy of God (cf. τὸ χρηστόν, Rom. ii. 4), the folly and weakness embodied in the cross.—ἰσχυρός (ἰσχύς) implies intrinsic strength; δύναμις is ability, as relative to the task in view.

§ 5. The Objects of the Gospel Call, i. 26-31. § 4 has shown that the Gospel does not come ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου (17b) by the method of its operation; this will further be evidenced by the status of its recipients. If it were, humanly speaking, a σοφία, it would have addressed itself to σοφοί, and won their adherence; but the case is far otherwise.

Ver. 26. Βλέπετε γὰρ τὴν κλῆσιν ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί,—"For look at your calling, brothers": God has called you into the fellowship of His Son (9); if His Gospel had been a grand philosophy, would He have addressed it to fools, weaklings, base-born, like most of you? P.'s experience in this respect resembled his Master's (Matt. xi. 25, John vii. 47-49, Acts iv. 13). This argument cuts two ways: it lowers the conceit of the readers (cf. vi. 9-11, and the scathing irony of iv. 7-13), while it discloses the true mission of the Gospel. On κλῆσιν see the note to κλητοῖς (2), also on vii. 20: it signifies not one's temporal vocation in the order of Providence, but one's summons to enter the kingdom of Grace; ὑμῶν is objective gen. For τ. κλῆσιν ὅτι, see note on ὅτι, ver. 5.—οὐ πολλοί (thrice repeated) suggests at least a few of each class amongst the readers: see Introd., p. 730.—οὐ πολλοὶ σοφοί: "hinc Athenis numero tam exiguo lucrifacti sunt homines" (Bg.).—σοφοὶ is qualified by κατὰ σάρκα (see parls., and cf. σοφία σαρκική, 2 Cor. i. 12), in view of the distinction worked out in § 4 between the world's and God's wisdom: the contrast implied resembles that between ἡ κατὰ Θεὸν λύπη and ἡ τοῦ κόσμου λύπη in 2 Cor. vii. 9 ff. The "wise after the flesh" include not only philosophers (20), "but educated men in general, the πεπαιδευμένοι as opposed to the ἰδιῶται. The δυνατοὶ were men of rank and political influence, opp. to δῆμος. The εὐγενεῖς meant, in the aristocratic ages of Greece, men of high descent;" but in later degenerate times "men whose ancestors were virtuous and wealthy, the honesti as opposed to the humiliores of the Empire. Few intellectual men, few politicians, few of the better class of free citizens embraced Christianity" (Ed.). In a Roman colony and capital, the εὐγενεῖς would chiefly be men of hereditary citizenship, like P. himself; the δυνατοί, persons associated with Government and in a position to influence affairs; the former word is applied in an ethical sense to the Berœan Jews in Acts xvii. 11. "That the majority of the first converts from heathenism were either slaves or freedmen, appears from their names" (Lt.); the inscriptions of the Catacombs confirm this. The low social status of the early Christians was the standing reproach of hostile critics, and the boast of Apologists: see the famous passage in Tacitus' Annals, xv., 44; Justin M., Apol., ii., 9; Origen, contra Celsum, ii., 79; Minuc. Felix, vii., 12 (indocti, impoliti, rudes, agrestes). As time went on and Christianity penetrated the higher ranks of society, these words became less strictly true: see Pliny's Ep. ad Trajanum, x., 97, and the cases of Flavius Clemens and Domitilla, cousins of the emperor Domitian (Ed.), m See ver. 25. n Eph. i. 4; Ja. ii. 5; Acts i. 2, 24, xiii. 17, xv. 7; Mk. xiii. 20; Lk. ix. 35; Jo. vi. 70, xiii. 18, xv. 16. Lk. xiii. 17; frequent in O.T.

27. ἀλλὰ τὰ [m] μωρὰ τοῦ κόσμου [n] ἐξελέξατο [1] ὁ Θεός,[1] ἵνα καταισχύνῃ [2] τοὺς σοφούς [2]· καὶ τὰ [d] ἀσθενῆ τοῦ κόσμου [n] ἐξελέξατο ὁ Θεός, ἵνα [o] καταισχύνῃ τὰ [e] ἰσχυρά· 28. καὶ τὰ [p] ἀγενῆ τοῦ κόσμου καὶ τὰ [q] ἐξουθενημένα [n] ἐξελέξατο [1] ὁ Θεός,[1] καὶ [3] τὰ [r] μὴ [r] ὄντα, ἵνα τὰ ὄντα o xi. 4 f., 22; 2 Cor. vii. 4, ix. 4; thrice in Rom.; 1 Pet. ii. 6, iii. 16; p N.T. h.l.; in cl. Gr. commonly αγεννης. q vi. 4, xvi. 11; 2 Cor. x. 10; Rom. xiv. 3, 10; Gal. iv. 14; 1 Th. v. 20; four times besides. r Rom. iv. 17.

[1] AG, with above 15 minuscc., following some common (? Western) exemplar, jump from εξελεξατο ο Θεος in ver. 27 to the same words in ver. 28, omitting all between. Similar omissions occur in other individual MSS. in this context, where there is much repetition.

[2] τους σοφους καταισχυνῃ: all uncc. The T.R. rests on minuscc. only.

[3] ℵAC*D*G, 17, om. και; ins. by B and Syrian Codd. W.H. bracket the conj.

The ellipsis of predicate to οὐ πολλοί κ.τ.λ. is commonly filled up by understanding ἐκλήθησαν, as implied in κλῆσιν: "not many wise, etc. (were called)". Mr., Bt., and others, supply εἰσίν, or preferably ἐστέ: "(there are) not many wise, etc. (among you)," or "not many (of you are) wise, etc."; the omission of ὑμεῖς courteously veils the disparagement.

Vv. 27-28. "Nay, but (ἀλλά, the but of exclusion) the foolish . . . the weak . . . the base-born things of the world God did choose out (when He chose you)."—ἐξελέξατο (selected, picked out for Himself) is equivalent to ἐκάλεσεν (2, 9, 26), εὐδόκησεν . . . σῶσαι (21), τὴν χάριν ἔδωκεν ἐν Χ. Ἰ. (4); this word indicates the relation in which the saved are put both to God and to the world, out of (ἐξ) which they were taken (see parls.); nothing here suggests, as in Eph. i. 4, the idea of eternal election.—ἐξελέξατο ὁ Θεός: the astonishing fact thrice repeated, with solemn emphasis of assurance. The objects of God's saving choice and the means of their salvation match each other; by His τὸ μωρὸν and τὸ ἀσθενές (25) He saves τὰ μωρὰ and τὰ ἀσθενῆ: "the world laughs at our beggarly selves, as it laughs at our beggarly Gospel!" The neut. adj. of vv. 27 f. mark the category to which the selected belong; their very foolishness, weakness, ignobility determine God's choice (cf. Matt. ix. 13, Luke x. 21, etc.).—τοῦ κόσμου is partitive gen.: out of all the world contained, God chose its (actually) foolish, weak, base things—making "fæx urbis lux orbis!" In this God acted deliberately, pursuing the course maintained through previous ages, ἐν τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ (see note, 21): He "selected the foolish things of the world, that He might shame its wise men (τοὺς σοφούς) . . . the weak things of the world, that He might shame its strong things (τὰ ἰσχυρά), and the base-born things of the world and the things made absolutely nothing of . . . the things non-existent, that He might bring the things existent to naught". In the first instance a class of persons, immediately present to Paul's mind (cf. 20), is to be "put to shame"; in the two latter P. thinks, more at large, of worldly forces and institutions (cf. vii. 31, 2 Cor. x. 4-6). The pride of the cultured and ruling classes of paganism was to be confounded by the powers which Christianity conferred upon its social outcasts; as, e.g., Hindoo Brahminism is shamed by the moral and intellectual superiority acquired by Christian Pariahs.—τὰ ἀγενῆ τοῦ κόσμου, third of the categories of disparagement, is reinforced by τὰ ἐξουθενημένα (from ἐξ and οὐδέν, pf. pass.: things set down as of no account whatever), then capped by the abruptly apposed τὰ μὴ ὄντα, to which is attached the crowning final clause, ἵνα τὰ ὄντα καταργήσῃ. For καταργέω (ut enervaret, Bz.), see note on κενόω (17), and parls.; the scornful world-powers are not merely to be robbed of their glory (as in the two former predictions), but of their power and being, as indeed befell in the end the existing social and political fabric. In τὰ μὴ ὄντα, "μὴ implies that the non-existence is not absolute but estimative" (Al.); the classes to which Christianity appealed were non-entities for philosophers and statesmen, cyphers in their reckoning: contrast οὐκ ὤν, of objective matter of fact, in John x. 12, Acts vii. 5; also Eurip., Troad., 600.—τὰ ὄντα connotes more than bare ex-

[s] καταργήσῃ· 29. ὅπως [u] μὴ [t] καυχήσηται [u] πᾶσα σὰρξ [v] ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ.[1] 30. [w] ἐξ αὐτοῦ δὲ ὑμεῖς ἐστε [x] ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ὃς ἐγενήθη ἡμῖν[2] σοφία[2] [y] ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, [z] δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ [a] ἁγιασμὸς καὶ [b] ἀπολύτρωσις· 31. ἵνα, [c] καθὼς [c] γέγραπται, "[t] Ὁ καυχώμενος, ἐν Κυρίῳ [t] καυχάσθω".

s ii. 6, vi. 15, xiii. 8, 10 f., xv. 24, 26; frequently in P. Only Heb. ii. 14; Lk. xiii. 7 besides; with Ezra iv. 21, 23, v. 5, vi. 8. t iii. 21, iv. 7, xiii. 3; 2 Cor., passim; nine times elsewhere in P.; only Jas. i. 9, iv. 16 besides. Rare and poetical in cl. Gr. u Hebraistic (or ου . . . πας), lo' . . . khol: Rom. iii. 20; Eph. iv. 29, v. 5; 2 Pet. i. 20; frequent in Epp. of Jo. and Rev.; Mt. xxiv. 22. v Frequent in P., Lk., and Rev.; never in Mt. or Mk. w viii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 18; Rom. xi. 36; Jo. viii. 23, 42, etc. x 2 Cor. v. 17, xii. 2; Rom. viii. 1, xvi. 7, 11; Gal. i. 22, iii. 28, etc. y Ver. 3, iv. 5, vi. 19, etc. z Rom. i. 17, iii. 21, 25; 2 Cor. v. 21. a Rom. vi. 19, 22; 1 Th. iv. 4, 7; 2 Th. ii. 13; 1 Tim. ii. 15. Only Heb. xii. 14; 1 Pet. i. 2 besides b Rom. iii. 24, viii. 23; Eph. i. 7, 14, iv. 30; Col. i. 14. Only Heb. ix. 15, xi. 35; Lk. xxi. 28 besides. c ii. 9; Rom. passim; 2 Cor. viii. 15, ix. 9; Acts vii. 1, 2, xv. 15; Mt. [illegible]vi. 24; Mk. i. 2, ix. 13, xiv. 21; Lk. ii. 23.

[1] ενωπιον του Θεου: all uncc. exc. C*, which is followed by minuscc., vg., both syrr., in reading αυτου (to avoid repetition).

[2] σοφια ημιν (in this order): pre-Syrian uncials.

istence; "ipsum verbum εἶναι eam vim habet ut significet in aliquo numero esse, rebus secundis florere" (Pflugk, on Eurip., Hecuba, 284, quoted by Mr.); it is τὰ ὄντα κατ' ἐξοχήν: cf. the adv. ὄντως in 1 Tim. vi. 19.

Ver. 29. God's purposes in choosing the refuse of society are gathered up into the general and salutary design, revealed in Scripture (see parls.), "that so no flesh may glory in God's presence" (a condens[illegible] quotation) = πάντα εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ (x. 31). For ὅπως, which carries to larger issue the intentions stated in the previous clauses, cf. 2 Cor. viii. 14, 2 Thess. i. 12. Two Hebraisms, characteristic of the LXX, here: μὴ . . . πᾶσα (khōl . . . lo'), for μηδεμία; and σάρξ (bāsār), for humanity in its mortality or sinfulness. Cf., for this rule of Divine action, 2 Cor. xii. 9 f.; also Plato, Ion, 534 E, ἵνα μὴ διστάζωμεν ὅτι οὐκ ἀνθρώπινά ἐστι τὰ καλὰ ταῦτα ποιήματα οὐδὲ ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ θεῖα καὶ θεῶν . . . ὁ θεὸς ἐξεπίτηδες διὰ τοῦ φαυλοτάτου ποιητοῦ τὸ κάλλιστον μέλος ᾖσεν.

Ver. 30. ἐξ αὐτοῦ δὲ ὑμεῖς ἐστε ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ: is ἐν Χ. Ἰησοῦ or ἐξ αὐτοῦ (sc. τοῦ Θεοῦ) the predicate to ἐστέ? Does P. mean, "It comes of Him (God) that you are in Christ Jesus"—i.e., "Your Christian status is due to God" (so Mr., Hn., Bt., Ed., Gd., El.)? or, "It is in Christ Jesus that you are of Him"—"Your new life derived from God is grounded in Christ" (Gr. Ff., Cv., Bz., Rückert, Hf., Lt.)? The latter interpretation suits the order of words and the trend of thought (see Lt.): "You, whom the world counts as nothing (26 ff.: note the contrastive δέ), are of Him before whom all human glory vanishes (29); in Christ this Divine standing is yours". Thus Paul exalts those whom he had abased. The conception of the Christian estate as "of God," if Johannine, is Pauline too (cf. viii. 6, x. 12, xii. 6, 2 Cor. iv. 6, v. 18, etc.), and lies in Paul's fundamental appropriation, after Jesus, of God as πατὴρ ἡμῶν (i. 4, and passim), and in the correlative doctrine of the υἱοθεσία; the whole passage (18-29) is dominated by the thought of the Divine initiative in salvation. This derivation from God is not further defined, as in Gal. iii. 26; enough to state the grand fact, and to ground it "in Christ Jesus" (see note, 4).

The relative clause, "who was made wisdom," etc., unfolds the content of the life communicated "to us from God" in Christ. Of the four defining complements to ἐγενήθη ἡμῖν, σοφία stands by itself, with the other three attached by way of definition—"wisdom from God, viz., both righteousness, etc."; Mr., Al., Gd., however, read the four as co-ordinate. On σοφία the whole debate, from ver. 17 onwards, hinges: we have seen how God turned the world's wisdom to folly (20-25); now He did this not for the pleasure of it, but for our salvation—to establish His own wisdom (24), and to bestow it upon us in Christ ("us" means Christians collectively—cf. 17—while "you" meant the despised Cor. Christians, 26). This wisdom (how diff. from the other! see 17, 19; Jas. iii. 15 ff.) comes as sent "from God" (ἀπὸ of ultimate source: ἐξ of direct derivation). It is a vitalising moral force—a 1 Tim. ii. 2 only. In LXX, 1 Ki. ii. 3; 2 Macc. iii. 11, etc. b ix. 14, xi. 26; Rom. i. 8; Ph. i. 17 f.; Col. i. 28; often in Acts. c See i. 6; with τ. Θεοῦ only here.

II. 1. Κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, ἦλθον οὐ καθ' [a] ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας, [b] καταγγέλλων ὑμῖν τὸ [c] μαρτύριον [1] τοῦ Θεοῦ. 2. οὐ

[1] μαρτυριον: ℵcBDGLP, vg. sah. syrp., Gr. Ff.; W.H. mg., R.V. mg., Tisch., Tr. μυστηριον: ℵ*AC, cop. syrsch., Lat. Ff.; W.H. txt., R.V. txt. The former is the Western and Syrian reading, the latter Alexandrian; the Neutral txt. is doubtful. μυστ. has rather the look of an Alex. harmonistic correction, due to ver. 7 (cf. iv. 1, Col. ii. 2, Rev. x. 7). μαρτ. suits better καταγγελλων: see note below.

δύναμις καὶ σοφία (24)—taking the shape of δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ ἁγιασμός, and signally contrasted in its spiritual reality and regenerating energy with the σοφία λόγου and σοφία τ. κόσμου, after which the Cor. hankered. Righteousness and Sanctification are allied "by their theological affinity" (El.): cf. note on vi. 11, and Rom. vi. passim—hence the double copula τε . . . καί; καὶ ἀπολύτρωσις follows at a little distance (so Lt., Hn., Ed.; who adduce numerous cl. parls. to this use of the Gr. conjunctions): "who was made wisdom to us from God—viz., both righteousness and sanctification, and redemption".—δικαιοσύνη carries with it, implicitly, the Pauline doctrine of Justification by faith in the dying, risen Christ (see vi. 11, and other parls.; esp., for Paul's teaching at Cor., 2 Cor. v. 21). With the righteousness of the believer justified in Christ sanctification (or consecration) is concomitant (see note on the kindred terms in 2); the connexion of chh. v. and vi. in Rom. expounds this τε . . . καί; all δικαιοσύνη ἐν Χριστῷ is εἰς ἁγιασμόν. (Vbl. nouns in -μός denote primarily a process, then the resulting state.)—Ἀπολύτρωσις (based on the λύτρον of Matt. xx. 28, 1 Tim. ii. 6, with ἀπὸ of separation, release), deliverance by ransom, is the widest term of the three—"primum Christi donum quod inchoatur in nobis, et ultimum quod perficitur" (Cv.); it looks backward to the cross (18), by whose blood we "were bought" for God (vi. 19), so furnishing the ground both of justification (Rom. iii. 24) and sanctification (Heb. x. 10), and forward to the resurrection and glorification of the saints, whereby Christ secures His full purchased rights in them (Rom. viii. 23; Eph. i. 14, iv. 30); thus Redemption covers the entire work of salvation, indicating the essential and just means of its accomplishment (see Cr. on λύτρον and derivatives).

Ver. 31. "In order that, as it stands written, he who glories, in the Lord let him glory;" by "the Lord" the readers could only understand Christ, already five times thus titled; so, manifestly, in 2 Cor. x. 17 f., where the citation reappears. Paul quotes the passage as a general Scriptural principle, which eminently applies to the relations of Christians to Christ; ἐν Κυρίῳ belongs to his adaptation of the original: God will have no flesh (see note, 29) exult in his wisdom, strength, high birth (cf. the objects of false glorying in Jer.) before Him; He will have men exult in "the Lord of glory" (ii. 8; cf. Phil. ii. 9 ff.), whom He sent as His own "wisdom" and "power unto salvation" (24, 30). What grieves the Ap. most and appears most fatal in the party strifes of Cor., is the extolling of human names by the side of Christ's and at his expense (see notes on 12-15; also iii. 5, 21-23, and 2 Cor. iv. 5, Gal. vi. 14). Christians are specifically οἱ καυχώμενοι ἐν Χ. Ἰ., Phil. iii. 3. The irregularity of mood after ἵνα—καυχάσθω for subj. καυχᾶται—s accounted for in two ways: either as in anacoluthon, the impv. of the origina. being transplanted in lively quotation (cf Rom. xv. 3, 21); or as an ellipsis, with γένηται or πληρωθῇ mentally supplied (cf. Rom. iv. 16, Gal. ii. 9, 2 Cor. viii. 13)—explanations not materially different. Clem. Rom. (§ 13) quotes the text with the same peculiarity.

§ 6. PAUL'S CORINTHIAN MISSION, ii. 1-5. Paul has justified his refusing to preach ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου on two grounds: (1) the nature of the Gospel, (2) the constituency of the Church of Cor.; it was no philosophy, and they were no philosophers. This refusal he continues to make, in pursuance of the course adopted from the outset. So he returns to his starting-point, viz., that "Christ sent" him "to bring good tidings," such as neither required nor admitted of "wisdom of word" (i. 17).

Ver. 1. Κἀγὼ ἐλθὼν . . . ἦλθον:

γὰρ [d] ἔκρινα τοῦ [1] εἰδέναι [1] τι [1] ἐν ὑμῖν, εἰ μὴ Ἰησοῦν [f] Χριστὸν [e] καὶ [e] τοῦτον [f] ἐσταυρωμένον [e]. 3. καὶ ἐγὼ [1] ἐν [g] ἀσθενείᾳ καὶ [1] ἐν [h] φόβῳ

d In this sense, vii. 37; 2 Cor. ii. 1, v. 14; Tit. iii. 12; Lk. vii. 43, xii. 57; Acts. iii. 13, etc.
e vi. 6, 8; Rom. xiii. 11; Eph. ii. 8; Ph. i. 28; 3 Jo. 5.
f See i. 23.
g xv. 43; five times in 2 Cor.; Rom. viii. 26; Gal. iv. 13; 1 Tim. v. 23; see also i. 25, viii. 11.
h 2 Cor. vii. 15; Eph. vi. 5; Ph. ii. 12; Gen. ix. 2; Exod. xv. 16; Ps. liv. 6, etc.

[1] τι ειδεναι (om. του), BD*CP 17, 37; ειδεναι τι, ℵAG; του ειδεναι τι, D[b]L and most others. The two other readings are successive grammatical emendations of the first; cf. Acts xxvii. 1, and the T.R. of vii. 37 below.

"And I at my coming . . . came": the repeated vb. draws attention to Paul's arrival,—to the circumstances and character of his original work at Cor. The emphasis of κἀγώ—"And I"—may lie in the correspondence between the message and the messenger—both "foolish" and "weak" (i. 25: so Ed.); but the form of the sentence rather suggests allusion to the nearer i. 26—"As it was with you, brothers, to whom I conveyed God's call, so with myself who conveyed it; you were not wise nor mighty according to flesh, and I came to you as one without wisdom or strength". Message, hearers, preacher matched each other for folly and feebleness! "I came not in the way of excellence—καθ' ὑπεροχήν, cum eminentia (Bz.)—of word or wisdom,"—not with the bearing of a man distinguished for these accomplishments, and relying upon them for his success: this clause is best attached to the emphatic ἦλθον, which requires a descriptive adjunct (so Or., Cv., Bz., Hf.: cf. 3); others make it a qualification of καταγγέλλων. Paul's humble mien and plain address presented a striking contrast to the pretensions usual in itinerant professors of wisdom, such as he was taken for at Athens.—ὑπεροχή, from ὑπερέχω (Phil. ii. 3, iii. 8, iv. 7), to overtop, outdo. For λόγου ἢ σοφίας, see note on σοφία λόγου (i. 17).

The manner of Paul's preaching was determined by its matter; with such a commission he could not adopt the arts of a rhetorican nor the airs of a philosopher: "I came not like a man eminent in speech or wisdom, in proclaiming to you the testimony of God".—τ. μαρτύριον τ. Θεοῦ (subjective gen.: cf. note on i. 6) = τ. εὐαγγέλιον τ. Θεοῦ (Rom. i. 2, 1 Thess. ii. 2, 13, etc.; cf. 1 John v. 9 f.), with the connotation of solemnly attested truth (cf. 2 Cor. i. 18 f.); P. spoke as one through whom God was witnessing. κηρύσσω (i. 23), denoting official declaration, gives place to καταγγέλλω, signifying full and clear proclamation (see parls.).—καταγγέλλων, pr. ptp., "in the course of preaching"; cf. 2 Cor. x. 14.

Ver. 2. οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινά τι (or ἔκρινα τὶ) εἰδέναι κ.τ.λ.: "For I did not determine (judge it fit) to know anything (or, know something) among you, except (or, only) Jesus Christ, and Him crucified". This explains Paul's unadorned and matter-of-fact delivery.—οὐ negatives ἔκρινα, not εἰδέναι (the rendering "I determined not to know" contravenes the order of words); nor is there any instance of οὐ coalescing with κρίνω as in οὔ φημι (nego) and the like—these interpretations miss the point: had P. chosen another subject, he might have aimed at a higher style; he avoided the latter, "for" he did not entertain the former notion. His failure at Athens may have emphasised, but did not originate the Apostle's resolution to know nothing but the cross: cf. Gal. iii. 1, 1 Thess. iv. 14, v. 9 f., Acts xiii. 38 f., relating to earlier preaching. For the use of ἔκρινα (statui, Bz.) as denoting a practical moral judgment or resolution, cf. vii. 37, 2 Cor. ii. 1. Ev. renders τὶ εἰδέναι (thus accented), "to be a know-something" (aliquid scire)—to play the philosopher—according to the well-known Attic idiom of Plato's Apol., § 6, and passim, where οἴεται τὶ εἰδέναι = δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι; cf. viii. 2, and the emphatic εἶναι τὶς (τὶ); also iii. 7, Gal. ii. 6, vi. 3, Acts v. 36. This rendering accounts well for εἰδέναι, and gives additional point to the ὑπεροχὴ of ver. 1: P. brought with him to Cor. none of the prestige of the professional teachers, who claimed to "know something"; Christ and the cross—this was all he knew. For εἰ μὴ in the corrective sense "only," demanded by this interpretation, see vii. 17.—εἰδέναι is to possess knowledge, to be a master; γινώσκειν (i. 21), to acquire knowledge, to be a learner. On ἐσταυρωμένον (pf. ptp., of pregnant fact), cf. notes to i. 17, 23.

Vv. 1, 2 say how P. did not come, vv. 3-5 how he actually did come, to Cor.

καὶ [i] ἐν [h] τρόμῳ πολλῷ [i] ἐγενόμην πρὸς ὑμᾶς· 4. καὶ ὁ λόγος μου καὶ τὸ [k] κήρυγμά μου οὐκ ἐν [l] πειθοῖς [1] ἀνθρωπίνης [2] σοφίας λόγοις,[1]

i xv. 10; 2 Cor. iii. 7; Rom. xvi. 7; Ph. ii. 7; 1 Th. ii. 5; 1 Tim. ii. 14; Lk. xxii. 44; Acts xii. 11; Rev. i. 10, iv. 2. k See i. 21. l H.l.; cl. Gr. πιθανος.

[1] πειθοι . . . λογων, or . . . λογου, in several minuscc., latt. am. (persuasione sapientiæ verbi), sah.: a translator's error due to the adj. being h.l. W.H. follow AD*P, and analogy, in spelling πιθοις (see Gm.).

[2] Om. ανθρωπινης ℵBDG 17, latt. am. syr^sch. Borrowed from ver 13.

Ver. 3. "In weakness": cf. i. 25, 27; also 2 Cor. x. 10, and xiii. 3 f. This condition was bodily—the Cor. had received an impression of Paul's physical feebleness; but the phrase expresses, more broadly, his conscious want of resources for the task before him (cf. 2 Cor. ii. 16, iii. 5). Hence he continues, "and in fear and in much trembling"—the inward emotion and its visible expression (see parls.). P. stood before the Cor. at first a timid, shaken man: on the causes see Introd., ch. i.

For γίνομαι ἐν (versari in), to be in a state of, cf. parls.—πρὸς ὑμᾶς qualifies the whole foregoing sentence: "I was weak, timid, trembling before you (when I addressed you)": ἐγενόμην . . . πρὸς ὑμᾶς might be construed together, ἐγενόμην becoming a vb. of motion—"I came to (and was amongst) you in weakness," etc. (Ed., as in xvi. 10); this would, however, needlessly repeat ver. 1.

Ver. 4. "And my word and my message:" λόγος recalls i. 18; κήρυγμα, i. 21, 23 (see notes). The former includes all that Paul says in proclaiming the Gospel, the latter the specific announcement of God's will and call therein.

οὐκ ἐκ πιθοῖς σοφίας λόγοις, "not in persuasive words of wisdom": the adj. πιθός (= πιθανός, see txtl. note), from πείθομαι, analogous to φιδός from φείδομαι. "Words of wisdom," substantially = "wisdom of word" (i. 17); that expression accentuating the matter, this the manner of teaching—"exquisita eloquutio, quæ artificio magis quam veritate nitatur et pugnet" (Cv.). For the unfavourable nuance of πιθός, see Col. ii. 4 (πιθανολογία), also Gal. i. 10, Matt. xxviii. 14. Eusebius excellently paraphrases (Praep. Ev., i., 3), τὰς μὲν ἀπατηλὰς κ. σοφιστικὰς πιθανολογίας παραιτούμενος). "With a contemptuous touch of irony that reminds one of Socrates in the Gorgias and Apology [cf. Ev., as previously cited, on τὶ εἰδέναι], he disclaims all skill in rhetoric, the spurious art of persuading without instructing, held nevertheless in high repute in Cor. But when the Ap. speaks of the demonstration of the Spirit, he soars into a region of which Socrates knew nothing. Socr. sets σοφία against πειθώ; the Ap. regards both as being on well-nigh a common level, from the higher altitude of the Spirit" (Ed.); since the time of Socrates, however, Philosophy had sunk into a πιθανολογία.—ἀπόδειξις, "the technical term for a proof drawn from facts or documents, as opposed to theoretical reasoning; in common use with the Stoics in this sense" (Hn.); see Plato, Theæt., 162 E, and Arist., Eth. Nic., i., 1; ii., 4, for the like antithesis (Ed.).

ἀποδ. πνεύματος καὶ σοφίας gathers up the force of the δύναμιν Θεοῦ of i. 24, and ἐγένετο σοφία κ.τ.λ. of i. 30 (see notes); the proof of the Gospel at Cor. was experimental and ethical, found in the new consciousness and changed lives that attended its proclamation: cf. vi. 11, ix. 1, 2 Cor. iii. 1 ff., 1 Thess. ii. 13 (λόγος Θεοῦ, ὃς κ. ἐνεργεῖται ἐν ὑμῖν τ. πιστεύουσιν).—πνεύματος καὶ δυνάμεως are not objective gen. (in ostendendo Spiritum, etc.), but subjective: the Spirit, with His power, gives the demonstration (similarly in xii. 7, see note); cf. vv. 10, 12, 2 Cor. iii. 3-18, Rom. viii. 16, xv. 19, for Paul's thoughts on the testimonium Spiritus sancti; also John xv. 26, 1 John v. 6 f.—Δύναμις, specially associated with Πνεῦμα after Luke xxiv. 49 (see reff. for P.), is certainly the spiritual power that operates as implied in i. 30, vi. 11, but not to the exclusion of the supernatural physical "powers" which accompanied Apostolic preaching (see note on ἐβεβαιώθη, i. 6; also xii. 1, 7-11, and the combination of Rom. xv. 17 ff.): "latius accipio, nempe pro manu Dei potente omnibus modis per apostolum se exserente" (Cv.). The art. is wanting with πνεύματος, though personal, after the anarthrous ἀποδείξει, according to "the law of correlation" (Wr., p. 175: contrast this with xii. 7, also the double ἀλλʼ ἐν [m] ἀποδείξει [n] Πνεύματος καὶ [o] δυνάμεως· 5. ἵνα ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν μὴ ᾖ ἐν σοφίᾳ ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλʼ ἐν [p] δυνάμει [p] Θεοῦ.

6. Σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν ἐν τοῖς [q] τελείοις· σοφίαν δὲ οὐ τοῦ αἰῶνος [r] τούτου, οὐδὲ τῶν [s] ἀρχόντων τοῦ [r][s] αἰῶνος [r] τούτου τῶν

m H.l. in N.T. See vb. in iv. 9. n In ver. 13, vii. 40; 2 Cor. iii. 3, 6; Rom. viii. 9, 13-15, and often in P., πν. is anarthrous in like connexion. o In combination with πν., xii. 10; Rom. i. 4, xv. 13, 19; 1 Th. i. 5; 2 Tim. i. 7; Heb. ii. 4; Lk. i. 17, iv. 14, xxiv. 49; Acts i. 8, x. 38. p See i. 18. q xiii. 10, xiv. 20; Eph. iv. 13; Ph. iii. 15; Col. i. 28, iv. 12; Heb. v. 14; Jas. i. 4; Mt. v. 48, xix. 21. r See i. 20. s Jo. xii. 31, xiv. 30, xvi. 11, with κοσμου; in pl. h.l.; cf. Eph. ii. 2, vi. 12. οι αρχοντες, Rom. xiii. 3; Mt. xx. 25; Lk. xxiii. 13, 35, xxiv. 20; Acts iii. 17, and six other places; Jo. vii. 26, 48, xii. 42.

art. of 1 with the anarthrous phrase of i. 18). The prpl. clause affirms not the agency by which, but the sphere of action in which, Paul's word operated.

Supply to this verse ἐγένετο from the ἐγενόμην of ver. 3.

Ver. 5. The Apostle's purpose in discarding the orator's and the sophist's arts was this: "that your faith might not rest in wisdom of men, but in (the) power of God". The κἀγὼ ἦλθον of ver. 1 dominates the paragraph; P. lives over again the experience of his early days in Cor.; this purpose then filled his breast: so Hf., Gd., with the older interpreters; most moderns read into the ἵνα the Divine purpose suggested by i. 27-31. Paul was God's mouthpiece in declaring the Gospel; he therefore sought the very end of God Himself, viz., that God alone should be glorified in the faith of his hearers (i. 31; cf. i. 15). Had he persuaded the Cor. by clever reasonings and grounded Christianity upon their Greek philosophy, his work would have perished with the wisdom of the age (see 6, also i. 19, iii. 19 f.).

The disowned σοφία ἀνθρώπων is the σοφ. τ. κόσμου of i. 10 (see note) in its moral character, a σοφ. σαρκική (2 Cor. i. 12)—"wisdom of men" as opposed to that of God,—ἀνθρωπίνη, ver. 13. Yet not God's wisdom, but primarily His power (see notes on i. 18, 24, 30) supplied the ground on which P. planted his hearers' faith. All through, he opposes the practical to the speculative, the reality of God's work to the speciousness of men's talk. The last ἵνα clause of this long passage corresponds to the first, ἵνα μὴ κενωθῇ ὁ σταῦρος τ. Χριστοῦ (i. 17). ἐν should be construed with ᾖ (consistat in, Bz.) rather than πίστις, pointing not to the object of faith but to its substratum: for this predicative ἐν—"should be (a faith) in," etc.—cf. iv. 20, Eph. v. 18, Acts iv. 12.

SUMMARY. Thus the Apostle's first ministry at Cor., in respect of his bearing (ver. 1), theme (2), temper (3), method (4), governing aim (5), illustrated and accorded with the Gospel, as that is a message from God through which His power works to the confounding of human wisdom by the seeming impotence of a crucified Messiah (i. 17 b-31).

§ 7. THE GOSPEL CONSIDERED AS WISDOM, ii. 6-9. So far Paul has been maintaining that his message is a "folly," with which "wisdom of word" is out of keeping; yet all the while he makes it felt that it is wisdom in the truest sense —"God's wisdom," convicting in its turn the world of folly. If relatively the Gospel is not wisdom, absolutely it is so,—to persons qualified to understand it. This P. now proceeds to show (ii. 6-iii. 2: cf. Introd. to Div. II.). The message of the cross is wisdom to the right people (§ 7), qualified to comprehend it (§ 8).

Ver. 6. Σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν κ.τ.λ.: "(there is) a wisdom, however, (that) we speak amongst the full-grown". The anarthrous, predicative σοφίαν asserts that to be "wisdom" which in ironical deference to the world has been styled "folly" (i. 21 ff.). ἐν τοῖς τελείοις, the mature, the initiates (opp. to νήπιοι, παιδία, iii. 1, xiv. 20; see parls.) = πνευματικοὶ in contrast with the relatively σάρκινοι (iii. 1; cf. note on μυστήριον, ver. 7). "The curtain must be lifted with a caution measured by the spiritual intelligence of the spectators, ἐπόπται" (Ev.). This τελειότης the Cor. had by no means reached; hence they failed to see where the real wisdom of the Gospel lay, and estimated its ministers by worldly standards. ἐν signifies not to, nor in relation to, but amongst the qualified hearers—in such a circle P. freely expounded deeper truths. λαλέω (cf. 7, 13), to utter, speak out: P. uses the pl. not thinking of Sosthenes in particular (i. 1), but of his fellow-preachers generally, including Apollos (i. 23, and xv. 11, etc. iii. 6, iv. 6).

The "wisdom" uttered in such company is defined first negatively: "but a t See i. 28. u See i. 21. v iv. 1; Eph. i. 9, iii. 4; Col. ii. 2, iv. 3; Rev. x. 7; Mt. xiii. 11. w Eph. iii. 9; Col. i. 26; Lk. x. 21; cf. Rom. xvi. 25. x Rom. viii. 29 f.; Eph. i. 5, 11; Acts iv. 28. y H.l.; cf. 2 Tim. i. 9; Tit. i. 2; also Eph. i. 4; 1 Pet. i. 20; Jo. xvii. 24; see x. 11 below.

[t] καταργουμένων· 7. ἀλλὰ λαλοῦμεν [u] σοφίαν [1] [u] Θεοῦ [1] ἐν [v] μυστηρίῳ, τὴν [w] ἀποκεκρυμμένην, ἣν [x] προώρισεν ὁ Θεὸς [y] πρὸ τῶν [y] αἰώνων

[1] Θεου σοφιαν: ℵABCDGP, 15 minuscc. σοφιαν Θ., L, etc.; a Syrian emendation; cf. ver. 6.

wisdom not of this age, nor of the rulers of this age, that are being brought to nought". For αἰών, see note to i. 20; it connotes the transitory nature of the world-powers (i. 19, 28; cf. vii. 31, 2 Cor. iv. 18; also 1 John ii. 17, 1 Peter i. 24 ff.). The ἄρχοντες τ. αἰῶνος τούτου were taken by Marcion, Or., and other ancients, to be the angelic, or demonic (Satanic), rulers of the nations—sc. the "princes" of Dan. x.-xii., and Jewish angelology, the κοσμοκράτορες τ. σκότους τούτου of Eph. vi. 12 (cf. 2 Cor. iv. 4, Eph. ii. 2, John xii. 31, xiv. 30, xvi. 11—where ἄρχων is applied to Satan; also Gal. iii. 19, Acts vii. 53, touching the office of angels in the Lawgiving): so Sm., after F. C. Baur—"the angels who preside over the various departments of the world, the Law in particular, but possess no perfect insight into the counsels of God, and lose their dominion—from which they take their name of ἀρχαί (= ἄρχοντες)—with the end of the world (xv. 24)"; see also, at length, Everling, Die Paulin. Angelologie u. Dämonologie, pp. 11 ff. But these super-terrestrial potentates could not, without explanation, be charged with the crucifixion of Christ (8); on the other hand, i. 27 ff. shows P. to be thinking in this connexion of human powers. Unless otherwise defined, οἱ ἄρχοντες denotes "the rulers" of common speech, those, e.g., of Rom. xiii. 3, Luke xxiii. 35. On τῶν καταργουμένων, see note to i. 17 (κενόω), 28, xv. 24, and other parls. The Jewish rulers, whose overthrow is certain and near (1 Thess. ii. 16, Rom. ix. 22, xi.), are aimed at, as being primarily answerable for the death of Jesus (cf. Acts xiii. 27 f.); but P. foresaw the supersession of all existing world-powers by the Messianic kingdom (xv. 24; cf. Rom. xi. 15, Acts xvii. 7); the pr. ptp., perhaps, implies a "gradual nullification of their potency brought about by the Gospel" (El.). P. cannot have meant by οἱ ἄρχοντες the leaders of thought (as Thd., Thp., Neander suppose, because of the association with σοφία); he held a broad, practical conception of wisdom (sagacity) as shown in power; the secular rulers, wise in their own way but not in God's, must come to nought. Statecraft, equally with philosophy, failed when tested by the cross.

Ver. 7. "(We speak . . . a wisdom not of this world . . .) but (ἀλλά, of diametrical opposition) a wisdom of God, in (shape of) a mystery."—ἐν μυστηρίῳ qualifies λαλοῦμεν, rather than σοφίαν (as Hn., Ev., Lt. read it—"couched in mystery"), indicating how it is that the App. do not speak in terms of worldly wisdom, and express themselves fully to the τέλειοι alone: their message is a Divine secret, that the Spirit of God reveals (10 f.), while "the age" possesses only "the spirit of the world" (12). Hence to the age God's wisdom is uttered "in a mystery" and remains "the hidden (wisdom)"; cf. 2 Cor. iv. 4; also Matt. xiii. 13 ff. (ἐν παραβολαῖς . . . λαλῶ), Luke x. 21 f.: λαλῶ ἐν μυστηρίῳ = ἀποκρύπτω.—μυστήριον (cf. xv. 51) has "its usual meaning in St. Paul's Epp.,—something not comprehensible by unassisted human reason" (El.; for a full account see Ed., or Bt., on the term). The Hellenic "mysteries," which flourished at this time, were practised at night in an imposing dramatic form; and peculiar doctrines were taught in them, which the initiated were sworn to keep secret. This popular notion of "mystery," as a sacred knowledge disclosed to fit persons, on their subjecting themselves to prescribed conditions, is appropriated and adapted in Bibl. Gr. to Divine revelation. The world at large does not perceive God's wisdom in the cross, being wholly disqualified; the Cor. believers apprehend it but partially, since they have imperfectly received the revealing Spirit and are "babes in Christ" (iii. 1 ff.); to the App., and those like them (10 ff.), a full disclosure is made. When he "speaks wisdom among the ripe," P. is not setting forth esoteric doctrines diff. from those preached to beginners, but the same "word of the cross"—for he knows nothing greater or higher (Gal.

[x] εἰς [x] δόξαν [x] ἡμῶν. 8. ἣν οὐδεὶς τῶν [a] ἀρχόντων τοῦ [r a] αἰῶνος [r] τούτου [z] ἔγνωκεν, εἰ γὰρ ἔγνωσαν, οὐκ ἂν τὸν [a] Κύριον τῆς [a] δόξης [b] ἐσταύρω-z xv. 43; 2 Cor. iii. 18; iv. 17; 10 times in P. besides; cf. Heb. ii. 10; 1 Pet. v. 1, 4, 10; Jo. xvii. 22. a Jas. ii. 1; similarly, Acts vii. 2 (Ps. xxviii. 3, xxiii. 7, 9); Eph. i. 17; cf. Heb. ix. 5. b See i. 23; cf. Mt. xx. 19, xxvi. 2; Lk. xxiii. 33; Jo. xix. 18; Acts ii. 36, iv. 10.

vi. 14)—in its recondite meaning and larger implications,—as, e.g., in xv. 20-27 of this Ep. (where he relents from the implied threat of iii. 1 ff.), in Rom. v. 12-21, and xi. 25 ff., or Col. i. 15 ff., Eph. v. 22-32.—τὴν ἀποκεκρυμμένην expands the idea of ἐν μυστηρίῳ (see parls.): P. utters, beneath his plain Gospel tale, the deepest truths "in a guise of mystery"—"that (wisdom) hidden away (ἀπὸ τ. αἰώνων, Col. i. 26), which God predetermined before the ages unto (εἰς, aiming at) our glory". That the Gospel is a veiled mystery to many accords with past history and with God's established purpose respecting it; "est occulta antequam expromitur: et quum expromitur, tamen occulta manet multis, imperfectis" (Bg.). The "wisdom of God" now revealed, was destined eternally "for us"—"the believers" (i. 21), "the called" (i. 24), "the elect" (i. 27 ff.), "those that received the Spirit of God" (10 ff.), as men who fulfil the ethical conditions of the case and whom "it has been God's good pleasure to save" (i. 21); see the same thought in Eph. i. 4 ff. This δόξα is not the heavenly glory of the saints; the entire "ministry of the Spirit" is ἐν δόξῃ and carries its subjects on ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν (2 Cor. iii. 8-18); His ἀπαρχὴ effects a glorious transformation, by which the base things of the world put to shame its mighty (i. 27 ff.), and "our glory" overthrows "the rulers of this world" (6), "increasing as theirs wanes" (Lt.), cf. Rom. viii. 30. This present (moral) glory is an "earnest" of "that which shall be revealed" (Rom. viii. 18 f.). For προώρισεν, marked out beforehand, see parls., and notes to Rom. viii. 29 f.

Ver. 8. ἣν οὐδεὶς κ.τ.λ.: "which (wisdom) none of the rulers of this age has perceived"—all blind to the significance of the rise of Christianity.—ἔγνωκεν, a pf., approaching the pr. sense (novi) which οἶδα had reached, but implying, as that does not, a process—has come to know, won the knowledge of.—οἱ ἄρχοντες κ.τ.λ., repeated with emphasis from ver. 6—sc. "the rulers of this (great) age," of the world in its length of history and fulness of experience (see x. 11, and note; cf. Eph. i. 10, iii. 5, Rom. xvi. 25 f.). The leaders of the time showed themselves miserably ignorant of God's plans and ways in dealing with the world they ruled; "for if they had known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory". The Lord of glory is He in whom "our glory" (7) has its manifestation and guarantee—first in His earthly, then in His heavenly estate (cf. xv. 43, 49).—τῆς δόξης, gen. of characterising quality (cf. Eph. i. 17, Acts vii. 2). This glory of the Son of God the disciples saw (John i. 14); of it believers now partake (Rom. viii. 29 f.), and will partake in full hereafter (2 Cor. iii. 18, Phil. iii. 21, etc.), when it culminates in a universal dominion (xv. 23-29, Phil. ii. 9 ff., Heb. i.). Paul's view of Christ always shone with "the glory of that light" in which he first saw Him on the road to Damascus (Acts xxii. 11). Caiaphas and the Sanhedrin, Pilate and the Roman court (cf. Acts xiii. 27 f., 1 Tim. vi. 13) saw nothing of the splendour clothing the Lord Jesus as He stood before them; so knowing, they could not have crucified Him. The expression κύριος τῆς δόξης is no syn. for Christ's Godhead; it signifies the entire grandeur of the incarnate Lord, whom the world's wise and great sentenced to the cross. Their ignorance was a partial excuse (see Luke xxiii. 34, Acts xiii. 27); but it was guilty, like that of Rom. i. 18 f. The crucifiers fairly represented worldly governments. Mark the paradox, resembling Peter's in Acts iii. 15: "Crux servorum supplicium—eo Dominum gloriæ affecerunt" (Bg.). The levity of philosophers in rejecting the cross of Christ was only surpassed by the stupidity of politicians in inflicting it; in both acts the wise of the age proved themselves fools, and God thereby brought them to ruin (i. 28). For εἰ . . . ἄν, stating a hypothesis contrary to past fact (the modus tollens of logic), see Bn. § 248; and cf. xi. 31.

Ver. 9 confirms by the language of Scripture (καθὼς γέγραπται) what has just been said. The verse is open to three different constructions: (1) It seems best to treat the relatives, ἃ, ὅσα, as in apposition to the foregoing ἣν clauses of vv. 7, 8 (the form of the proc See i. 31. d Isa. lxiv. 4 and lxv. 16 (see note below). e Rom. xi. 8 (Deut. xxix. 4); Mt. xiii. 13, Acts xxviii. 27 (Is. vi. 10).

σαν· 9. ἀλλὰ [c]καθὼς [c]γέγραπται, [d]"Ἃ [e]ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε καὶ [e]οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσε καὶ [f]ἐπὶ [f]καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ [f]ἀνέβη, ἃ [1] ἡτοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς τοῖς [g]ἀγαπῶσιν [g]αὐτόν".

10. Ἡμῖν δὲ [2] ὁ Θεὸς [3] [h]ἀπεκάλυψε [3] [i]διὰ τοῦ [i]Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ [4]·

f Hebraism: Acts vii. 23; Is. lxv. 17; Jer. iii. 16. With εν, Lk. xxiv. 38. g viii. 3; Rom. viii. 28; Mt. xxii. 37 and Lk. x. 27 (Deut. vi. 5); 1 Jo. iv. 20 f., v. 2; Lk. xi. 42; Jo. v. 42. h iii. 13, xiv. 30; Rom. i. 17; Gal. i. 16, iii. 23; Eph. iii. 5; Mt. xi. 25, xiii. 11. i Rom. v. 5, viii. 11; Eph. iii. 16; Ph. i. 19; 2 Tim. i. 14; Tit. iii. 5; Acts i. 2, xxi. 4.

[1] οσα, ABC, Clem. Rom., Cyr., Hier. α, ℵDGLP, etc., with many Ff.; Western and Syrian. οσα is easily corrupted into α, not vice versâ; and the simple relative in parl. clauses would make against οσα in copying.

[2] γαρ, B, 37 and seven minuscc., sah. cop., Clem., Bas., Euthal.; W.H., Tr. mg. δε, ℵACDGLP, etc., latt. vg. syrr., Or., Ath., Did., etc.; Tisch., Tr. txt. δε is superficially easier; γαρ intrinsically better.

[3] απεκαλυψεν ο Θ.: all uncc. exc. L; all oldest verss. exc. sah.

[4] Om. αυτου ℵ*ABC. Add αυτου ℵ[c]DGL, etc.; Western and Syrian.

noun being dictated by the LXX original), and thus supplying a further obj. to the emphatically repeated λαλοῦμεν of vv. 6, 7: "but (we speak), as it is written, things which eye," etc. (so Er., Mr., Hn., Al., Ed., El., Bt.). (2) Hf., Ev., after Lachmann, prefix the whole sentence to ἀπεκάλυψεν of ver. 10; but this subordination requires the doubtful reading δέ (for γάρ) in ver. 10, to which it improperly extends the ref. of the formula καθὼς γέγραπται, while it breaks the continuity between the quotation and the foregoing assertions (cf. i. 19, 31). (3) Bg., D.W., Gd., Lt., and others, see an anacoluthon here, and supply ἐστίν, factum est, or the like, as a peg for the ver. to hang upon, as in Rom. xv. 3—"But, as it is written, (there have come to pass) things which eye," etc. This, however, seems needless after the prominent λαλοῦμεν, and weakens the concatenation of vv. 6-9. The ἀλλὰ follows on the οὐδεὶς of ver. 8, as ἀλλὰ in ver. 7 (see note) on the οὐ of ver. 6. The entire sentence may be thus arranged:—

λαλοῦμεν Θεοῦ σοφίαν . . . τ. ἀποκεκρυμμένην, ἣν προώρισεν ὁ Θεὸς κ.τ.λ., ἣν οὐδεὶς τ. ἀρχόντων . . . ἔγνωκν κ.τ.λ.·
ἀλλὰ . . . ἃ ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδεν . . .
ὅσα ἡτοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς τ. ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν.

The words cited do not appear, connectedly, in the O.T. Of the four clauses, the 1st, 2nd, and 4th recall Isai. lxiv. 4 f. (Heb., 3 f.)—after the Hebrew text; the 3rd occurs in a similar strain in Isai. lxv. 17 (LXX, 16); see other parls. In thought, as Hf. and Bt. point out, this passage corresponds to Isai. lxiv.: in P. God does, as in Isaiah He is besought to do, things unlooked for by the world, to the confusion of its unbelief; in each case these things are done for fit persons—Isaiah's "him that waiteth for Him," etc., being translated into Paul's "those that love Him"; ἐποίησεν is changed to ἡτοίμασεν, in conformity with προώρισεν (7). A further analogy appears between the "terrible things in righteousness" which the prophet foresees in the coming theophany, and the καταργεῖν that P. announces for "the rulers of this world". Clement of Rome (ad Cor., xxxiv. 8) cites the text briefly as a Christian saying, but reverts from Paul's τ. ἀγαπῶσιν to the Isaianic τ. ὑπομένουσιν αὐτόν, manifestly identifying the O. and N.T. sayings.

Or. wrote (on Matt. xxvii. 9), "In nullo regulari libro hoc positum invenitur, nisi in Secretis Eliæ prophetæ"—a lost Apocryphum; Jerome found the words both in the Ascension of Isaiah and the Apocalypse of Elias, but denies Paul's indebtedness to these sources; and Lt. makes out (see note, ad loc.) that these books were later than Paul. Origen's suggestion has been adopted by many expositors, but is really needless; this is only an extreme example of the Apostle's freedom in adopting and combining O.T. sayings whose substance he desires to use. The Gnostics quoted the passage in favour of their method of esoteric teaching.

ὅσα, of the last clause, is a climax to ἃ of the first—"so many things as God prepared for those that love Him": cf. 2 Cor. i. 20, Phil. iv. 8, for the pronomi-τὸ γὰρ Πνεῦμα πάντα [k] ἐρευνᾷ,[1] καὶ τὰ [l] βάθη τοῦ Θεοῦ. 11. τίς γὰρ οἶδεν ἀνθρώπων τὰ [m] τοῦ [m] ἀνθρώπου, εἰ μὴ τὸ [n] πνεῦμα [m] τοῦ [mn] ἀνθρώπου τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ; οὕτω καὶ τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν[2] εἰ μὴ τὸ Πνεῦμα k Rom. viii. 27; 1 Pet. i. 11; Jo. v. 39, vii. 52; Rev. ii. 23.

l Rom. xi. 33; Eph. iii. 18, in this connexion; Rev. ii. 24, only other inst. of plural. Cf. Judith viii. 14.
m With generic art. in sing., Mt. xv. 11 ff., and in the expression ο υιος του ανθρωπου.
n v. 3 f., xiv. 14; Rom. i. 9, viii. 16, xii. 11; somewhat frequently in P. of human spirit; also Acts xvii. 16, xix. 21; Lk. i. 47; Jo. xiii. 21.

[1] ερaυνᾳ, ℵAB*C. So elsewhere in N.T.

[2] εγνωκεν, ℵABCDP, Euthal., Bas. (G εγνω). οιδεν, L, etc., conforming to first clause of the verse.

nal idiom.—In ἡτοίμασεν κ.τ.λ. Paul is not thinking so much of the heavenly glory (see note on δόξα, 7), as of the magnificence of blessing, undreamed of in former ages, which comes already to believers in Christ (cf. i. 5-7).—τ. ἀγαπ. αὐτὸν affirms the moral precondition for this full blessedness (cf. John xiv. 23)—a further designation of the ἅγιοι, πιστεύοντες, κλητοί, ἐκλεκτοὶ of chap. i.

§ 8. The Revealing Spirit, ii. 10-iii. 2. The world's rulers committed the frightful crime of "crucifying the Lord of glory," because in fact they have only "the spirit of the world," whereas "the Spirit of God" informs His messengers (10-12), who communicate the things of His grace in language taught them by His Spirit and intelligible to the spiritual (13-16). For the like reason the Cor. are at fault in their Christian views, being as yet but half-spiritual men (iii. 1-3).

Ver. 10. The true reading, ἡμῖν γάρ (cf. i. 26), links this ver. to the foregoing by way of illustration: "For to us (being of those that love Him) God revealed (them), through the Spirit": cf. i. 18, viii. 3, xiii. 2, 1 John iv. 7; also ἀπεκαλύφθη τ. ἁγίοις ἀποστόλοις κ.τ.λ., Eph. iii. 5, indicating the like ethical receptivity. ἀπεκάλυψεν echoes ἐν μυστηρίῳ and τ. ἀποκεκρυμμένην (7), signifying a supernatural disclosure (see notes on i. 7, xiv. 6); cf. esp. Rom. xvi. 25, κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου, and Eph. i. 17 in connexion with vv. 6 f. above. The tense (aor.) points to the advent of Christianity, "the revelation given to Christians as an event that began a new epoch in the world's history" (Ed.).—The Spirit reveals,—"for the Spirit investigates everything (πάντα ἐραυνᾷ), even the depths of God": He discloses, for He first discovers—οὐκ ἀγνοίας, ἀλλ' ἀκριβοῦς γνώσεως τὸ ἐρευνᾶν δεικτικόν (Cm.). The phrase describes an Intelligence everywhere active, everywhere penetrating (cf. Ps. cxxxix. 1-7). For the complementary truth concerning the relation of Father and Spirit, see Rom. viii. 27. The Spirit is the organ of mutual understanding between man and God. P. conceives of Him as internal to the inspired man, working with and through, though immeasurably above his faculties (see iii. 16, Rom. viii. 16, 26, etc.). τὰ βάθη (pl. of noun βάθος) are those inscrutable regions, below all that "the eye sees" and that "comes up into the heart of a man" (9), where God's plans for mankind are developed: cf. Rom. xi. 33 ff., Eph. 1. 9 ff., iii. 18, and by contrast Rev. ii. 24. These deep-laid counsels centre in Christ, and are shared by Him (Matt. xi. 27, John v. 20, xvii. 10, 25); so that it is one thing to have the Spirit who "sounds the deeps of God" and to "have the mind of Christ" (16). The like profound insight is claimed, in virtue of his possessing the Holy Spirit, by the writer of the Wisdom of Solomon (vii.), but in a ὑπεροχὴ λόγου καὶ σοφίας that goes to discredit the assumption; cf. also Sirach xlii. 18. The attributes there assigned to the half-personified "Wisdom," N.T. theology divides between Christ and the Spirit in their several offices towards man. The "Spirit" is apprehended in Wisdom under physical rather than, as by Paul, under psychological analogies.

Ver. 11. "For amongst men, who knows (οἶδεν) the things of the man, except the spirit of the man that is within him? So also the things of God none has perceived (ἔγνωκεν), except the Spirit of God." Far from being otiose, ἀνθρώπων is emphatic: P. argues from human to Divine personality; each heart of man has its secrets (τὰ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου); "nor even the dearest soul, and next our own, knows half the reasons why we smile or sigh"; there is a corresponding region of inner personal consciousness with God (τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ). As the man's own spirit lifts the veil and lights the τοῦ Θεοῦ. 12. ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐ τὸ [o] πνεῦμα τοῦ κόσμου [o] ἐλάβομεν, ἀλλὰ τὸ [p] Πνεῦμα τὸ [p] ἐκ τοῦ [p] Θεοῦ, ἵνα εἰδῶμεν τὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ [q] χαρισθέντα ἡμῖν· 13. ἃ καὶ λαλοῦμεν, οὐκ ἐν [r] διδακτοῖς [s] ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν [r] διδακτοῖς [t] Πνεύματος Ἁγίου,[1] [u] πνευo Rom. viii. 15; Acts viii. 15 ff., x. 47, xix. 2; Jo. xx. 22; cf. 2 Tim. i. 7. το πν. του κοσμου, h.l.; cf. Eph. ii. 2. p Rev. xi. 11; απο in same connexion, vi. 19; παρα, Jo. xv. 26. q Passive, Ph. i. 29; Phm. 22; Acts iii. 14; cf. Rom. viii. 32; Gal. iii. 18; Ph. ii. 9; Acts xxvii. 24. r Jo. vi. 45 (Isa. liv. 13); cf. 1 Th. iv. 9. s iv. 3, x. 13; Rom. vi. 19; Jas. iii. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 13; Num. v. 6 t See ver. 4. u iii. 1, xiv. 37; Gal. vi. 1.

[1] Om. αγιου all uncc. but DcLP. The insertion is a Syrian emendation.

recesses penetrable by no reasoning from without, so God's Spirit must communicate His thoughts,—or we shall never know them. This reserve belongs to the rights of self-hood. Paul's axiomatic saying assumes the personality of God, and man's affinity to God grounded therein. P. does not in this analogy limit the Ἅγιον Πνεῦμα by human conditions, nor reduce Him to a mere Divine self-consciousness (τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 12, guards us against this); the argument is a minori ad majus (as in Gal. iii. 15, Rom. v. 7, Luke xi. 13), and valid for the point in question. The Ap. ascribes to a man a natural πνεῦμα (cf. v. 5, 1 Thess. v. 23), which manifests itself in νοῦς and συνείδησις (Rom. ii. 15, vii. 25, etc.; see Cr. on these terms), akin to and receptive of the Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ; but not till quickened by the latter is the πνεῦμα ἀνθρώπου regnant in him, so that the man can be called πνευματικός (see note on 15).—On οἶδεν, as diff. from ἔγνωκεν, see note to ver. 8: "while οἶδα is simple and absolute, γινώσκω is relative, involving more or less the idea of a process of examination" (Lt.): "no one has got to know τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ"—has by searching (10) found Him out (Job xi. 7, xxiii. 9, etc.; John xvii. 25)—only His own Spirit knows, and therefore reveals Him.

Ver. 12. ἡμεῖς δέ, "But we": cf. the emphatic ἡμῖν of ver. 10 (see note) and the ἡμεῖς δὲ of i. 23, standing in contrast with the σοφοὶ and δυνατοὶ of the world. The κόσμος whose "spirit" the App. "did not receive," is that whose "wisdom God has reduced to folly" (i. 20 f.), whose "rulers crucified the Lord" (8), its spirit is broadly conceived as the power animating the world in its antipathy to God (cf. 2 Cor. iv. 4, Eph. ii. 2, John xii. 31, etc., 1 John iv. 1-6). Others (Est., Cv., Bz., Hn., Sm.) read the phrase in a more abstract—perhaps too modern—sense, "sapientia mundana et sæcularis," or "the world-consciousness" (Hf.), or "l'esprit de l'humanité . . . ce que les Païens appellent la muse et qui se concentre dans les génies" (Gd.).—"(Not the spirit of the world we received), but the Spirit which is from (issues from: ἐκ, antitheton ἐν, Bg.) God" (compare ὡς ἐκ Θεοῦ, 2 Cor. ii. 17); the phrase recalls the teaching of Jesus in John xiv. 26, xv. 26; see also Rom. v. 5, Gal. iv. 6. "The spirit of the world" breathes in men who are a part of the world; "the Spirit that is from God" visits us from another sphere, bringing knowledge of things removed from natural apprehension (see Isa. lv. 9). ἐλάβομεν implies actual, objective receiving (taking), as in iii. 8, xi. 23, etc.—ἵνα εἰδῶμεν κ.τ.λ. (see note on οἶδα, 11; and cf. the emphatic οἶδα of 2 Cor. v. 1, 2 Tim. i. 12)—a bold word here—"that we may know (certo scire, Cv.) the things that by God were bestowed in His grace upon us". τὰ χαρισθέντα, aor. ptp., points to the historic gifts of God to men in Christ, which would have been idle boons without the Spirit enabling us to "know" them: cf. Eph. i. 17 ff., ἵνα δῷ . . . πνεῦμα . . . εἰς τ. εἰδέναι. χαρίζομαι (to deal in χάρις: see note on χάρισμα, i. 7), to grant by way of grace, in unmerited favour (cf. esp. Rom. viii. 32, Gal. iii. 18).

Ver. 13. ἃ καὶ λαλοῦμεν—the vb. of 6, 7 (see note): there opposed to μυστήριον, here to εἰδῶμεν (cf. John iii. 11)—"which things indeed we speak out"; knowing these great things of God, we tell them (cf. John xviii. 20; also 2 Cor. iv. 2 ff., Luke xii. 2 f., Acts xxvi. 16). P. has no esoteric doctrines, to be whispered to a select circle; if the τέλειοι and πνευματικοὶ alone comprehend his Gospel, that is not due to reserve on his part. "The καὶ λαλοῦμεν makes it clear that P. does not mean (in 6 and iii. 1 f.) to distinguish two sorts of Gospel; his preaching has always the entire truth for its content, but expressed suitably to the growth of his hearers" (Hn.).

ματικοῖς[1] [v] πνευματικὰ [w] συγκρίνοντες. 14. [x] ψυχικὸς δὲ ἄνθρωπος οὐ [y] δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Θεοῦ· [z] μωρία γὰρ αὐτῷ ἐστι, v ix. 11, x. 3 f., xiv. 1 ff., Rom. i. 11, vii. 14, xv. 27; Eph. i. 3, v. 19, vi. 12; Col. i. 9, iii. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 5. w 2 Cor. x. 12; see note below. x xv. 44, 46; Jas. iii. 15; Jude 19; four times in Lk. and Acts in this sense. y Thrice in 2 Cor., and in 1 and 2 Th. z See i. 18.

[1] πνευματικως: B, 17; so W.H. mg. A good binary group.

The mode of utterance agrees with the character of the revealing Spirit: οὐκ ἐν διδακτοῖς ἀνθρωπίνης σοφίας λόγοις, ἀλλ' ἐν διδακτοῖς κ.τ.λ. "(which things we speak out), not in human-wisdom-taught words, but in (words) Spirit-taught"—verba rem sequuntur (Wetstein). The opposed gens. depend on διδακτοῖς, denoting agent with vbl. adj.—a construction somewhat rare, but cl. (so in John vi. 45, Isa. liv. 13; diff. in 1 Macc. iv. 7, διδακτοὶ πολέμου); they are anarthrous, signifying opposite kinds of wisdom.—διδακτὸς in earlier Gr. meant what can or ought to be taught; later, what is taught (cf. γνωστός, Rom. i. 19). Paul affirms that his words in matters of revelation, as well as thoughts, were taught him by the Spirit; he claims, in some sense, verbal inspiration. In an honest mind thought and language are one, and whatever determines the former must mould the latter. Cor. critics complained both of the imperfection of Paul's dialect (2 Cor. x. 10: see 1 above) and of the poverty of his ideas; here is his rejoinder. We arrive thus at the explanation of the obscure clause, πνευματικοῖς πνευματικὰ συνκρίνοντες,—combining spiritual things with spiritual, wedding kindred speech to thought (for the ptp. qualifies λαλοῦμεν): so Er., Cv., Bz., D.W., Mr., Hn., Lt., El., Bt.; "with spiritual phrase matching spiritual truth" (Ev.). Ver. 13 asserts the correspondence of Apostolic utterance and thought; in ver. 14 P. passes to the correspondence of men and things. Other meanings are found for συνκρίνω, and πνευματικοῖς may be masc. as well as neut.; thus the following variant renderings are deduced: (1) comparing sp. things with sp. (Vg., E.V., Ed.)—forming them into a correlated system; (2) interpreting, or proving, sp. things by sp.—sc. O.T. types by N.T. fulfilments (Cm. and Ff.); (3) adapting, or appropriating, sp. things to sp. men (Est., Olshausen, Gd.), with some strain upon the vb.; (4) interpreting sp. things to sp. men (Bg., Rückert, Hf., Stanley, Al., Sm.). The last explanation is plausible, in view of the sequel; but it misses the real point of ver. 13, and is not clearly supported by the usage of συνκρίνω, which "means properly to combine, as διακρίνω to separate" (Lt.).

Ver. 14. With the App. all is spiritual—words and thoughts; for this very reason men of the world reject their teaching: "But a natural man does not accept the things of the Spirit of God" (cf. Rom. viii. 5; John xv. 18-21, 1 John iv. 5).—Of the vbs. for receiving, λαμβάνω (12) regards the object, δέχομαι the manner and spirit of the act—to welcome (see parls.); there is no receptivity—"non vult admittere" (Bg.). Ψυχικός, in all N.T. instances, has a disparaging sense, being opposed to πνευματικός (as ψυχὴ is not to πνεῦμα), and almost syn. with σάρκινος or σαρκικός (iii. 1 f.). The term is in effect privative—ὁ μόνην τ. ἔμφυτον καὶ ἀνθρωπίνην σύνεσιν ἔχων (Cm.), "quemlibet hominem solis naturæ facultatibus præditum" (Cv.),—positive evil being implied by consequence. Adam's body was ψυχικόν, as not yet charged, like that of Christ, with the Divine πνεῦμα (xv. 44-49. syn. with χοϊκός, and contrasted with ἐπουράνιος). "The word was coined by Aristotle (Eth. Nic., III., x., 2) to distinguish the pleasures of the soul, such as ambition and desire for knowledge, from those of the body (ἡδοναὶ σωματικαί)." "Similarly Polybius, and Plutarch (de Plac. Phil., i., 9: ψυχικαὶ χαραί, σωματικαὶ ἡδοναί). "Contrasted with the ἀκρατής, the ψυχικὸς is the noblest of men. But to the πνευματικὸς he is related as the natural to the supernatural" (Ed.: see Cr., s. v.). This epithet, therefore, describes to the Cor. the unregenerate nature at its best, the man commended in philosophy, actuated by the higher thoughts and aims of the natural life—not the sensual man (the animalis of the Vg.), who is ruled by bodily impulse. Yet the ψυχικός, μὴ ἔχων πνεῦμα (Jude 19), may be lower than the σαρκικός, where the latter, as in iii. 3 and Gal. v. 17, 25, is already touched but not fully assimilated by the life-giving Πνεῦμα.—μωρία γὰρ αὐτῷ κ.τ.λ., rendered by Krenkel (Beiträge, pp. 379 ff.), "For καὶ οὐ δύναται γνῶναι, ὅτι [a] πνευματικῶς [b] ἀνακρίνεται· 15.[1] ὁ δὲ [a] πνευματικὸς [b] ἀνακρίνει μὲν [2] πάντα,[3] αὐτὸς δὲ ὑπ' οὐδενὸς [b] ἀνακρίνεται. 16. [c] τίς γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν Κυρίου, ὃς [d] συμβιβάσει αὐτόν;

a Rev. xi. 8. b iv. 3 f., ix. 3, x. 25, 27, xiv. 24; Lk. xxiii. 14, and five times in Acts. c Is. xl. 13; Rom. xi. 34; cf. Wisd. ix. 13. d Eph. iv. 16; Col. ii. 2, 19; Acts ix. 22, xvi. 10, xix. 33.

[1] Ver. 15 omd in ℵ* and harl.*, by homœoteleuton, ανακρινεται being repeated in vv. 14 and 15 (cf. txtl. note on i. 27).

[2] Om. μεν ACDG; ℵ[a]BLP, etc., insert it. The foregoing δε would condemn it with stylists.

[3] τα παντα: ACD*P, 17; W.H. mg. (bracketed). παντα, ℵ[a]BGL, etc. The chief copies that omit μεν, substitute for it τα before παντα.

folly belongs (cleaves) to him, and he cannot perceive that he is spiritually searched" (cf. xiv. 24 ff., ἀνακρίνεται)—an ingenious and grammatically possible translation, but not consistent with the emphatic ref. of μωρία in ch. i. to the world's judgment on the Gospel, nor with the fact that "the things of God" (σοφία Θεοῦ, πνευματικά) are the all-commanding topic of this paragraph. We adhere therefore to the common rendering: "For to him they are folly; and he cannot perceive (them), for (it is) spiritually (that) they are tried"—and he is unspiritual. For γνῶναι, see note on ἔγνωκεν (8).—Ἀνακρίνω must be distinguished from κρίνω, to judge, deliver a verdict; and from διακρίνω, to discern, distinguish diff. things; it signifies to examine, inquire into, being syn. on the one side with ἐραυνάω of ver. 10, and on the other with δοκιμάζω of 1 Thess. v. 21 (see parls.; also Lt. ad loc., and in his Fresh Revision[3], pp. 69 ff.): "ἀνάκρισις was an Athenian law-term for a preliminary investigation—corresponding mutatis mutandis to the part taken in English law-proceedings by the Grand Jury" (cf. Acts xxv. 26). The Gospel appears on its trial before the ψυχικοί; like the Athenian philosophers, they give it a first hearing, but they have no organon to test it by. The inquiry is stultified, ab initio, by the incompetence of the jury. The unspiritual are out of court as religious critics; they are deaf men judging music.

Ver. 15. "But the spiritual man tries (tests) everything"—a maxim resembling, perhaps designedly, the Stoic dicta concerning "the wise man". Paul sees "in the Πνεῦμα, the Divine power creatively working in the man and imparted to him, the κριτήριον for the right estimate of persons and things, Divine and human. The Stoa on its part was intently concerned 'to know the standard according to which man is judged by man' (Arrian-Epictetus, II., xiii., 16) . . . it found this criterion in the moral use of Reason. . . . The Christian believer and the Stoic philosopher both practise an ἀνακρίνειν; both are conscious of standing superior to all judgment from without; but the ground of this superiority, and the inferences drawn from it, are equally opposed in the two cases. The Stoic's judgment on the world leads him, under given conditions, to suicide ('The door stands open,' Epict.): the Christian's judgment on the world leads to the realisation of the victory of the children of God" (Hn.).—πάντα (not every one, but neut. pl.) is quite general—everything; cf., for the scope of this faculty, vi. 2 f., x. 15, 1 Thess. v. 21, 1 John ii. 20 f., iv. 1, Rev. ii. 2. Aristotle (Eth. Nic., III., iv.) says of ὁ σπουδαῖος (the man of character), ἕκαστα κρίνει ὀρθῶς, καὶ ἐν ἑκάστοις τἀληθὲς αὐτῷ φαίνεται . . . ὥσπερ κανὼν καὶ μέτρον αὐτῶν ὤν; Plato, De Rep., iii., 409 D (quoted by Ed.), ascribes the same universally critical power to ἡ ἀρετή. Paul's πνευματικὸς judges in virtue of a Divine, all-searching Presence within him; Aristotle's σπουδαῖος, in virtue of his personal qualities and attainments. Paul admirably displays in this Ep. the powers of the πνευματικὸς as ὁ ἀνακρίνων πάντα. There are, of course, limits to the exercise of the ἀνακρίνειν, in the position and opportunities of the individual.

αὐτὸς δὲ ὑπ' οὐδένος ἀνακρίνεται, "while he himself is put on trial by none,"—since none other possesses the probe of truth furnished by the Πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ; the πνευματικὸς stands on a height from which he overlooks the world, and is overlooked only by God. The statement is ideal, holding good of "the spiritual man" as, and so far as, he ἡμεῖς δὲ νοῦν Χριστοῦ[1] ἔχομεν. III. 1. Καὶ[2] ἐγώ,[2] ἀδελφοί, οὐκ ἠδυνήθην λαλῆσαι ὑμῖν ὡς [a]πνευματικοῖς, ἀλλ' ὡς [a]σαρκικοῖς,[3] ὡς

[a] σαρκινοις, 2 Cor. iii. 3; Rom. vii. 14; Heb. vii. 16; in LXX, 2 Chr. xxxii. 8; Ezek. xi. 19, xxxvi. 26.

[1] κυριου, BD*G (an untrustworthy group): conformed to parl. sentence.

[2] καγω: all uncc. but the Syrian L.

[3] σαρκινοις, ℵBC*D*, 17, 67. σαρκικοις, DcGLP; late Western and Syrian. Cf. Rom. vii. 14, Heb. vii. 16.

is such. Where a Christian is σάρκινος (iii. 1), his spiritual judgment is vitiated; to that extent he puts himself within the measure of the ψυχικός (cf. 1 John iii. 1, iv. 5). If μέν, after ἀνακρίνει, be genuine, it throws into stronger relief the superiority of the man of the Spirit to unspiritual judgment: he holds the touchstone and is the world's trier, not the world his. This exemption P. will claim for himself, on further grounds, in iv. 3 ff.—'Ανακρίνω, used by P. nine times in this Ep., and in no other, was probably a favourite expression with the overweening Cor.—like "criticism" to-day.

Ver. 16. Of the three clauses of Isa. xl. 13, P. adopts in Rom. xi. 34 the 1st and 2nd, here the 1st and 3rd; in both instances from the LXX (which renders the Heb. freely), in both instances without the καθὼς γέγραπται of formal quotation.—ὃς συνβιβάσει αὐτόν (qui instructurus sit eum, Bz.: on the rel. pron. with fut. ind. of contemplated result, see Krüger's Gr. Sprachl., I., § 53, 7, Anm. 8; Bn., § 318) indicates the Divine superiority to creaturely correction, which justifies the enormous claim of ver. 15*b*.—Συνβιβάζω means (1) to bring together, combine (Col. ii. 2, etc.); (2) to compare, gather, prove by putting things together (Acts xvi. 10); (3) widened in later Gr. to the sense to teach, instruct. The prophet pointed in evidence of God's incomparable wisdom and power to the vastness of creation, wherein lie unimaginable resources for Israel's redemption, that forbid despair. Here too the νοῦς in question is God's infinite wisdom, directing man's salvation through inscrutable ways (6-9); but the Apostle's contention is that this "mind" inspires the organs of revelation (10 ff.), and its superiority to the judgment of the world is relatively also theirs (14 ff.). Paul translates the νοῦν Κυρίου of Isaiah into his own νοῦν Χριστοῦ; to him these minds are identical (cf. Matt. xi. 27, John v. 20, etc.). Such interchanges betray his "innermost conviction of the Godhead of Christ" (El.).—νοῦς serves his turn better than the literal πνεῦμα of the original (ruach); the intellectual side of the πνεῦμα is concerned, the θεῖον ὄμμα (see note on νοῦς, i. 10). For the emphatic ἡμεῖς, cf. vv. 10, 12, and notes; for the anarthrous nouns, note on ver. 4; νοῦν Χ. is quasi-predicative—"it is Christ's mind—no other—that we have".—ἔχομεν is not to be softened into perspectam habemus, novimus (Gr.): Christ lives and thinks in the πνευματικός (vi. 17, 2 Cor. xiii. 3 ff., etc.; John xv. 1-8); the unio mystica is the heart of Paul's experience.

Chapter III.—Ver. 1. Κἀγώ, ἀδελφοί: The Ap. returns to the strain of ii. 1-5, speaking now not in general terms of ἡμεῖς, οἱ τέλειοι, etc.; but definitely of the Cor. and himself. They demonstrate, unhappily, the incapacity of the unspiritual for spiritual things. The καὶ carries us back to ii. 14: "A natural man does not receive the things of God . . ., and I (accordingly) could not utter (them) to you as to spiritual (men), but as to men of flesh". Yet the Cor. were not ψυχικοί (see note, ii. 14). For λαλῆσαι, see ii. 6; and on the receptivity of the πνευματικός, ii. 13 ff. Cf. Rom. viii. 5-9: οἱ κατὰ πνεῦμα ὄντες τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος φρονοῦσιν.—(οὐκ . . . ὡς πνευματικοῖς), ἀλλ' ὡς σαρκίνοις: "on the contrary, (I was obliged to speak to you) as to men of flesh"—grammatical zeugma, as well as breviloquence: the affirmative "I was able," carried over from the negative clause οὐκ ἠδυνήθην, passes into the kindred "I was obliged," that is necessarily understood (cf. Eph. iv. 29); ver. 7, vii. 19, x. 24, are similarly expressed, without the zeugma.—Σάρκινος (see parls.) differs from σαρκικός (3, ix. 11, etc.) as carneus from carnalis, fleischern from fleischlich (as leathern from leathery)—-ινος implying nature and constitution (ἐν σαρκὶ εἶναι), -ικὸς tendency or character (κατὰ σάρκα εἶναι). So σάρκινος is associated with νηπιότης, σαρκικὸς with ζῆλος καὶ ἔρις: see Trench, Syn., § lxx. The distinction

[b] νηπίοις ἐν Χριστῷ· 2. [c] γάλα ὑμᾶς [d] ἐπότισα, καὶ [1] οὐ [e] βρῶμα· οὔπω γὰρ ἠδύνασθε.[2]

3. [f] Ἀλλ' [f] οὔτε [3] ἔτι [4] νῦν δύνασθε, ἔτι γὰρ [g] σαρκικοί [5] ἐστε· [h] ὅπου γὰρ ἐν ὑμῖν [i] ζῆλος καὶ [i] ἔρις καὶ [6] διχοστασίαι,[6] οὐχὶ [g] σαρκι-

b xiii. 11, xiv. 20 (νηπιαζω); Rom. ii. 20; Gal. iv. 1, 3; Eph. iv. 14; 1 Th. ii. 7; Heb. v. 13; Mt. xi. 25, xxi. 16; Lk. x. 21; Ps. xviii. 8. c ix. 7; Heb. v. 12 f.; 1 Pet. ii. 2. d xii. 13, Rom, xii. 20; Rev. xiv. 8; Mt. x. 42. e In sing., viii. 8, 13, x. 3; Rom. xiv. 15, 20; Jo. iv. 34 f (αλλ' ουδε), iv. 3; 2 Cor. vii. 12; Gal. ii. 3; Acts xix. 2; Lk. xxiii. 15. g In this sense, 2 Cor. i. 12, x. 4; 1 Pet. ii. 11. h In the like sense, Col. iii. 11; Heb ix. 16, x. 18; Ja. iii. 16; 2 Pet. ii. 11 i Rom. xiii. 13; 2 Cor. xii. 20; Gal. v. 20; Sir. xl. 5. ζηλος alone, in this use, Acts v. 17, xiii. 45; Ja. iii. 14, 16. ερις, see i. 11.

[1] Om. και ℵABGP, 17, vg. syr. cop. Ins. και DGL, etc.: Western interpolation

[2] εδυνασθε: all uncc. but DL. Yet all but C have ηδυνηθην in ver. 1.

[3] ουδε: all uncc. but L. [4] B om. ετι, bracketed by Lachm. and W.H.

[5] D*G read σαρκινοι (twice), in conformity with ver. 1; G reads, perversely σαρκικοις there: instances of Western license.

[6] Om. και διχοστασιαι all uncc. but DGL. Harmonistic importation from Gal. v. 20.

is one of standpoint, not of degree: in the σάρκινος the original "flesh" remains (a sort of excuse, as in Rom. vii. 14); the σαρκικὸς manifests its disposition. Both words may, or may not (ix. 11, 2 Cor. iii. 3), connote the sinful, according to the σὰρξ in question.

The apposed ὡς νηπίοις ἐν Χριστῷ softens, almost tenderly, the censure: the Cor. are "in Christ"; they possess, in a measure, His Spirit; but they are "babes in Christ," not fairly grown out of "the flesh" (cf. Gal. v. 13-18); the new nature in them is still confronted with the old. The νήπιοι are the opp. of the τέλειοι (ii. 6; see other parls.). "I could not" suggests that Paul had attempted to carry his Cor. converts further, but had failed.

Ver. 2. "(Since you were babes), I gave you milk to drink, not meat:" a common figure for the simpler and more solid forms of instruction contrasted (see parls.). The teaching of 1 Thess. (see ii. 7 f.) is γάλα as compared with the βρῶμα of Rom. or Coloss.; so the Synoptics, in comparison with the Fourth Gospel. The zeugma ἐπότισα . . . βρῶμα is natural in Paul's conversational style; see ix. 7, per contra.—οὔπω γὰρ ἐδύνασθε: "for not yet (while I was with you) were you equal to it". This absolute use of δύναμαι (= δυνατός εἰμι) is cl., but h.l. for the N.T.; the tense impf., of continued state.

§ 9. God's Rights in the Church, iii. 3-9. One idea runs through this chapter and into the next,—that of God's Church, God's temple at Corinth, in whose construction so many various builders are engaged (5-17). For this building's sake, and because it is His, God beats down the pride of human craft, making all things, persons, times, serve His people, while they serve Christ, as Christ serves God (18-23). To God His servants are responsible; it is His to judge and commend them (iv. 1-5). Thus the thought that the Gospel is "God's power, God's wisdom," pursued since i. 18, is brought to bear upon the situation in Corinth. God who sends the message of the cross, admitting in its communication no mixture of human wisdom (ch. i.), chose and inspired His own instruments for its impartation (ch. ii.). What presumption in the Cor. parties to appropriate the diff. Christian leaders, and inscribe their names upon rival banners!

Ver. 3. Ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἔτι νῦν δύνασθε: "Nay, but not even yet (after this further interval), at the present time, are you strong enough (immo ne nunc quidem adhuc potestis, Bz.), for you are yet carnal". For ἔτι, cf. xv. 17, Gal. i. 10, v. 11; for σαρκικοί, see note on σάρκινοι (1). The Cor. are weak (otherwise than in x. 28) just where they think themselves strong (viii. 1), viz., in spiritual apprehension; their gifts of "word and knowledge" are a source of weakness, through the conceit and strife they engender. The ἀλλ' οὐδὲ clause, with its strong disjunctives, is better joined to ver. 3 (Al., W.H., Sm.) than to ver. 2. The foregoing οὔπω γὰρ ἐδύνασθε sufficiently explained the οὐκ ἠδυνήθην of Paul's previous ministry (1); οὐδὲ ἔτι νῦν δύνασθε describes the present condition of the Cor. (3 f.). It is reluctantly and with misgiving that the κοί [1] ἐστε καὶ [k] [l] κατὰ [l] ἄνθρωπον [k] περιπατεῖτε; 4. ὅταν γὰρ λέγῃ [m] τις, "Ἐγὼ μέν εἰμι [n] Παύλου," [m] ἕτερος δέ, "Ἐγὼ [n] Ἀπολλώ," οὐχὶ [2] [o] σαρκικοί [3] ἐστε; 5. τίς [4] οὖν ἐστι Παῦλος, [5] τίς [4] δὲ [6] Ἀπολλώς, [5] ἀλλ' ἢ [7] [p] διάκονοι δι' ὧν [q] ἐπιστεύσατε, καὶ ἑκάστῳ k 2 Cor. x. 2 f.; Rom. vi. 4, viii. 4, xiv. 15; Eph. ii. 2; 2 Jo. 6.

l ix. 8, xv. 32; Gal. i. 11, iii. 15; Rom. iii. 5, vii. 22. m Lk. ix. 57, 59, 61; xi. 15 f. n See i. 12. o ανθρωποι, ver. 21, i. 25, etc.; frequent in P. in such disparaging use, Heb. vii. 28; Acts xiv. 11; Jo. iii. 19; Mt. x. 17, xv. 9 (Isa. xxix. 13); Gen. vi. 5 f.; Isa. ii. 22, etc. p In this sense, 2 Cor. iii. 6, vi. 4, xi. 15, 23; Eph. iii. 7; Col. i. 7, 23, 25; 1 Tim. iv. 6. q See i. 21; also, in absolute use, 2 Cor. iv. 13; Acts viii. 13, xiii. 12, 48, xiv. 1, [illegible], xvii. 12, 34, xviii. 8.

[1] D*G read σαρκινοι (twice), in conformity with ver. 1; G reads, perversely, σαρκικοις there: instances of Western license.

[2] ουκ (before ανθρ.), ℵ*ABC, 17. ουχι, DLP; Western and Syrian: parl. to ver. 3.

[3] ανθρωποι: all uncc. but ℵcLP (Syrian) with syrutr., which carry over σαρκικοι from ver. 3.

[4] τι (twice), ℵ*AB, 17, latt. vg. æth., Lat. Ff. τις, CDGLP, syrutr. cop., Chr., etc.; seemingly a Western emendation, but not followed by Lat. cdd.

[5] Απολλως . . . Παυλος, in this order, all uncc. but DbL, which are followed by the bulk of minuscc. and syrutr., reversing the order to guard P.'s dignity.

[6] τι δε εστιν: ℵABCP, 17. Western and Syrian txts. om. εστιν.

[7] All uncc., but DbcLP, om. αλλ' η,—a Syrian insertion.

Apostle later in the Ep. enters into deep doctrine (βρῶμα, cf. note on ii. 6).—ὅπου γὰρ ἐν ὑμῖν κ.τ.λ., "for where (not when, nor whereas—Vg. cum, Mr. quandoquidem) amongst you there is jealousy and strife": this seems to limit the censure (cf. xv. 12, 34); the use of party-names was universal (i. 12), but not due in all cases to ζῆλος καὶ ἔρις. Otherwise the ὅπου clause must be read as a general principle applied to the Cor. = ὅπου γὰρ ζῆλος καὶ ἔρις, ὡς ἐν ὑμῖν—a construction inconsistent with the position of ἐν ὑμῖν. So far as these evils exist, the readers are σαρκικοί, not πνευματικοί. For ἔρις, see note to i. 11; ζῆλος is the emulation, then envy, which is a chief cause of ἔρις. These are companion "works of the flesh" in Gal. v. 20: for the honourable sense of ζῆλος, prevailing in cl. Gr., see 2 Cor. vii. 7, etc.; also Trench, Syn., § xxvi.; zealous and jealous reproduce the diff.

Paul seems to hear the Cor. denying the allegation made in 3*a*, Ἔτι σαρκικοί ἐστε, and so puts it to them again as a question prefaced by the reason (and limitation), ὅπου ἐν ὑμῖν ζῆλος, κ.τ.λ., and with the further challenge, οὐχί . . . καὶ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον περιπατεῖτε; To "walk according to man" (non secundum Deum, humano more, Bg.) is to behave as men are apt to do—the σάρκινοι, the ψυχικοί. This Pauline phrase (confined to the epp. of this group) has κατὰ Θεὸν for its tacit antithesis (cf. 4*b*); Mr.-Hn. quote the parl. καθ' υἱοὺς τ. ἀνθρώπων εἶναι, Sir. xxxvi. 28 (Vg. 25; E.V. 23); also Soph., Ajax, 747, 764, κατ' ἄνθρωπον φρονεῖν.

Ver. 4 is parl. to ver. 3. The protasis, ὅταν γὰρ κ.τ.λ., restates in concreto the charge made in ὅπου γὰρ κ.τ.λ.; while the interr. apodosis, οὐκ ἄνθρωποί ἐστε; gathers into a word the reproach of the foregoing οὐχὶ σαρκικοί ἐστε κ.τ.λ.: where and when the Cor. act in the manner stated, they justify P. in treating them as "carnal". To say "Are you not men?" is at once to accuse and to excuse: see parls.; also 'adām (mere man) as distinguished from 'īsh (Isa. ii. 9, etc.); cf. Xenoph., Anab., vi., 1. 26, Ἐγώ, ὦ ἄνδρες, ἥδομαι μὲν ὑπὸ ὑμῶν τιμώμενος, εἴπερ ἄνθρωπός εἰμι; Cyrop., vii., 2. 4; and the familiar saying, Humanum est errare.—ὅταν γὰρ λέγῃ τις: "For whenever any one says" (pr. sbj. of recurring contingency); every such utterance shows you to be men. On Ἐγὼ . . . Παύλου, see note to i. 12. The Ap. refers to the Pauline and Apollonian parties only: (1) Because they suffice, by way of example, to make good his point; (2) the main cause of strife, viz., the craving for λόγος σοφίας, lay between these two parties; (3) P. avoided bringing Cephas' name into controversy, while he deals freely with that of his friend and disciple, Apollos, now with him (xvi. 12).

Ver. 5. The Cor. Christians were ὡς ὁ Κύριος ἔδωκεν; 6. ἐγὼ [r] ἐφύτευσα, Ἀπολλῶς [d] ἐπότισεν, ἀλλ' ὁ Θεὸς [s] ηὔξανεν· 7. ὥστε οὔτε ὁ [r] φυτεύων ἐστί τι οὔτε ὁ [d] ποτίζων, ἀλλ' ὁ [s] αὐξάνων Θεός. 8. ὁ [r] φυτεύων δὲ καὶ ὁ [d] ποτίζων [t] ἕν εἰσιν· ἕκαστος δὲ τὸν [u] ἴδιον [v] μισθὸν λήψεται κατὰ τὸν [u] ἴδιον [w] κόπον.

r Mt. xv. 13, figuratively as here. See ix. 7.
s Transitively, 2 Cor. ix. 10 only; see also 2 Cor. x. 15; Eph. ii. 21; Col. i. 10, ii. 19; Acts vi. 7, xii. 24, xix. 20.
t Neut., in this collective sense, xii. 12; Eph. ii. 14; Jo. x. 30, xvii. 11, 21 ff.
u vii. 7, xv. 23, 38; Gal. vi. 5, 9; Rom. viii. 32, x. 3; Lk. vi. 44; Jo. i. 11, v. 18, viii. 44, xiii. 1.
v ix. 17 f.; Rom. iv. 41; 1 Tim. v. 18; 2 Jo. 8; Mt. v. 12, 46, vi. 1 ff.; x. 41 f., xx. 8; Mk. ix. 41; Jo. iv. 36.
w xv. 58, and eight times in P.; Jo. iv. 38; Rev. ii. 2, xiv. 13.

quarrelling over the claims of their teachers, as though the Church were the creature of men: "What therefore (I am compelled to ask) is Apollos? what, on the other side (δέ), is Paul?"—τί is more emphatic than τίς; it breathes disdain; "as though Apollos or Paul were anything!" (Lt.). Apollos precedes, in continuation of ver. 4. For both, the question is answered in one word—διάκονοι, "non autores fidei vestræ, sed ministri duntaxat" (Er.); cf. 2 Cor. i. 24, iv. 5.: ὁ Κύριος in the next clause is its antithesis. Paul calls himself διάκονος in view of specific service rendered (2 Cor. iii. 6, vi. 4, etc.), but δοῦλος in his personal relation to Christ (Gal. i. 10, etc.). "Through whose ministration you believed:" per quos, non in quos (Bg.: cf. i. 15). To "believe" is the decisive act which makes a Christian (see i. 21); for the relation of saving faith to the Apostolic testimony, cf. xv. 1-11; 2 Cor. i. 18-22, etc. Some Cor. had been converted through Apollos.

The above-named are servants, each with his specific gift: καὶ ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Κύρ. κ.τ.λ., "and in each case, (servants in such sort) as the Lord bestowed (on him)".—ἑκάστῳ is emphatically projected before the ὡς; cf. vii. 17, Rom. xii. 3. The various disposition of Divine gifts in and for the Church is the topic of ch. xii. "The Lord" is surely Christ, as regularly in Paul's dialect, "through whom are all things" (viii. 6, xii. 5; Eph. iv. 7-12, etc.)—the sovereign Dispenser in the House of God; from "Jesus our Lord" (ix. 1) P. received his own commission; the Apostolic preachers are alike "ministers of Christ" (iv. 1): so Thp., Rückert, Bt., Gd. However, Cm., and most modern exegetes, see God in ὁ Κύριος on account of vv. 6-9; but the relation of this ver. to the sequel is just that of the δι' αὐτοῦ to the ἐξ αὐτοῦ τὰ πάντα of viii. 6; cf. note on ἐξ αὐτοῦ, i. 30; and for the general principle, Matt. xxv. 14 ff.

Vv. 6, 7. The grammatical obj. of this sentence has been given by the foregoing context, viz., the Cor. Church of believers (cf. iv. 15).—Φυτεύω Paul uses besides only in ix. 7; his regular metaphor in this connexion is that of ver. 10. "Planting" and "watering" happily picture the relative services of P. and Ap. Ποτίζω, to give drink, to irrigate, may have for obj. men (2, xii. 13, etc.), animals (Luke xiii. 15), or plants. In ver. 2, Paul was the ποτίζων γάλα. The vb. takes a double acc., of person and thing (Wr., p. 284).—The ἀλλὰ of the last clause goes beyond a mere contrast (δέ) between God and men in their several parts, excluding the latter from the essential part: "but God—He only, and no other—made it to grow". The planting and watering of Christ's servants were occasions for the exercise of God's vitalising energy. While the former vbs. are aor., gathering up the work of the two ministers into single successive acts, ηὔξανεν is impf. of continued activity: "God was (all the while) making it to grow." Several of the Ff.—Aug. e.g.—saw in ποτίζειν the baptism, in φυτεύειν the instruction of catechumens,—"illustrating a general fault of patristic exegesis, the endeavour to attach a technical sense to words in the N.T. which had not yet acquired this meaning" (Lt.).—ὥστε, itaque (and so, so then), with ind. (cf. vii. 38, xi. 27, xiv. 22), points out a result immediately flowing from what has been said: "the planter" and "the waterer," in comparison with "the Lord" who dispensed their powers and "God" who makes their plants to grow, are reduced to nothing; "God who gives the growth" (qui dat vim crescendi, Bz.) alone remains. To the subject, ὁ αὐξάνων Θεός, the predicate τὰ πάντα ἐστὶν is tacitly supplied from the negative clauses foregoing.—For ἐστίν τι (anything of moment), cf. Gal. ii. 6, vi. 3, Acts v. 36, and note on τὶ εἰδέναι, ii. 2. The pr. ptp. with ὁ becomes, virtually, a (timeless) substantive—the planter, waterer, Increaser (Wr., p. 444).

9. [x] Θεοῦ γάρ ἐσμεν [x] συνεργοί· Θεοῦ [y] γεώργιον, Θεοῦ [z] οἰκοδομή ἐστε

10. Κατὰ τὴν [a] χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ τὴν [a] δοθεῖσάν μοι, ὡς [b] σοφὸς [c] ἀρχιτέκτων [d] θεμέλιον [d] τέθεικα,[1] ἄλλος δὲ [e] ἐποικοδομεῖ· ἕκαστος

x 1 Th. iii. 2; 2 Cor. vi. 1; συνεργος more generally; nine times in P.; 3 Jo. 8.

y H.l. in N.T.; Prov. xxiv. 5, xxx. i. 16; γεωργος, Jo. xv. 1; -γειν, Heb. vi. 7. z In this sense (concrete), Eph. ii. 21; also Mt. xxiv. 1. a See i. 4. b In such connexion, here only in N.T.; cf. Exod. xxxv. 10. c H.l. in N.T.; cf. Isa. iii. 3; Sir. xxxviii. 27; 2 Macc. ii. 29. d Lk. vi. 48, xiv. 29. For θεμ., see also Rom. xv. 20; Eph. ii. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 19; 2 Tim. ii. 19; Heb. vi. 1. e Eph. ii. 20; Col. ii. 7; Jude 20; cf. Rom. xv. 20.

[1] εθηκα, ℵ*ABC*, 17: Neutral and Alexandrian.

Ver. 8. In comparison with God, Ap. and P. are simply nothing (7): in relation to each other they are not rivals, as their Cor. favourers would make them (4): "But the planter and the waterer are one" (ἕν, one thing)—with one interest and aim, viz., the growth of the Church; cf. xii. 12, 20; also John x. 30. Their functions are complementary, not competitive: a further answer to the question, τί οὖν ἐστὶν Ἀπολλῶς κ.τ.λ.; The servants of God are nothing before Him, "one thing" before His Church: vanity and variance are alike impossible.

While one in aim, they are distinct in responsibility and reward: "But each will get his own (proper) wage, according to his own toil".—ἴδιος, appropriate, specific (cf. vii. 7, xv. 23, 28): "congruens iteratio, antitheton ad unum" (Bg.).—ἔργον (13-15) denotes the work achieved, κόπος the exertion put forth (see parls., and κοπιάω, xv. 10, etc.): τί γὰρ εἰ ἔργον οὐκ ἐτέλεσεν;—ἐκοπίασεν δέ (Thp.). The contrast ἕν εἰσιν . . . ἕκαστος δέ, between collective and individual relationships, is characteristic of Paul: cf. xii. 5-11, 27, xv. 10 f., Gal. vi. 2-5, Rom. xiv. 7-10. He forbids the man either to assert himself against the community or to merge himself in it. The fixed ratio between present labour in Christ's service and final reward is set forth, diff. but consistently, in the two parables of the Talents and Pounds, Matt. xxv. 14-30, Luke xix. 11-28.

Ver. 9. Θεοῦ . . . συνεργοὶ sums up in two words, and grounds upon a broad principle (γάρ), what vv. 6 ff. have set out in detail: "we are God's fellow-workmen"—employed upon His field, His building; and "we are God's fellow-workmen"—labouring jointly at the same task. The συν- of συνεργοὶ takes up the ἕν εἰσιν of ver. 8; the context (cf. xii. 6) forbids our referring it to the dependent gen. (cf. also 2 Cor. i. 24, vi. 1, Phil. iii. 17, 3 John 8), as though P. meant "fellow-workers with God": "the work (Arbeit) of the διάκονος would be improperly conceived as a Mit-arbeit in relation to God; moreover the metaphors which follow exclude the thought of such a fellow-working" (Hn.); also Bg., "operarii Dei, et co-operarii invicem".

As in regard to the labourers, so with the objects of their toil, God is all and in all: Θεοῦ γεώργιον, Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή ἐστε, "God's tilth (arvum, land for tillage, Ed.), God's building you are". For God as γεωργῶν, cf. John xv. 1; as οἰκοδομῶν, Heb. iii. 4, xi. 10. "Of the two images, γεώργ. implies the organic growth of the Church, οἰκοδ. the mutual adaptation of its parts" (Lt.); the one looks backward to vv. 6 ff., the other forward to vv. 10 ff.—Οἰκοδομὴ displaces οἰκοδόμημα in later Gr.—Θεοῦ, anarthrous by correlation (see note on ἀποδ. Πν., ii. 4): the three gens. are alike gens. of possession—"God's workmen, employed on God's field-tillage and God's house-building". Realising God's all-comprehending rights in His Church, the too human Cor. (3 f.) will come to think justly of His ministers.

§ 10. The Responsibility of the Human Builders, iii. 10-17. After the long digression on Wisdom (i. 17-iii. 2), occasioned by the Hellenic misconception of the Gospel underlying the Cor. divisions, the Ap. returned in vv. 3 ff. to the divisions themselves, dealing particularly with the rent between Apollonians and Paulinists. His first business was to reduce the Church leaders to their subordinate place, as fellow-servants of the one Divine cause (§ 9). They are temple-workmen—not himself and Apollos alone, but all who are labouring on the foundation which he has laid down—and must therefore take heed to the quality of their individual work, which will undergo a searching and fiery test.

Ver. 10. Κατὰ τὴν χάριν κ.τ.λ.: while "the grace of God" has been δὲ [f] βλεπέτω [f] πῶς [e] ἐποικοδομεῖ· 11. [d] θεμέλιον γὰρ [c] ἄλλον οὐδεὶς δύναται [d] θεῖναι [g] παρὰ τὸν [h] κείμενον, ὅς ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς [1] ὁ [1] Χριστός.[1] 12. εἰ δέ τις ἐποικοδομεῖ ἐπὶ τὸν [d] θεμέλιον τοῦτον [2] [i k] χρυσόν,[3] f Eph. v. 15; Lk. viii. 18. For βλεπω (impv.), viii. 9, x. 12, xvi. 10, and frequently.

g παρα = η, Lk. iii. 13; Heb. i. 4, xi. 4. See note below.
h Mt. v. 14; Rev. iv. 2, xxi. 16.
i Acts iii. 6, xx. 33; 1 Pet. i. 18. For χρυσ., 1 Tim. ii. 9; Heb. ix. 4; 1 Pet. i. 7; Rev. xxi. 18, 21.
k Rev. xvii. 4, xviii. 12, 16. For λιθ. τιμ., Rev. xxi. 11, 19.

[1] Ιησ. Χρ., ℵABLP, above fifty minn., syr[sch.] sah. cop. Χρ. Ιησ., C[3]D, some minn., latt. vg. syr[p.] (Western). Χρ., C*. Ιησ. ο. Χρ. (T.R.), a few minn.

[2] Om. τουτον ℵ*ABC*—a Western and Syrian addition, as in ℵ[c]C[3]DLP.

[3] χρυσιον, αργυριον: ℵB (C in latter inst., defective in former), 73, Clem., Or., Bas. B, æth. ins. και; so W.H. mg.

given to all Christians, constituting them such (see i. 4), to the Ap. a special and singular "grace was given," "according to" which he "laid a foundation," whereon the Church at Cor. rests: see the like contrast in Eph. iii. 2-9, iv. 7-16; and for Paul's specific gift as founder, xv. 10, 2 Cor. iii. 5 ff., Rom. i. 1-5, xv. 15 ff. The office of the founder is his own, and incommunicable: "you have not many fathers" (iv. 15).

σοφὸς is a correct attributive to ἀρχιτέκτων: see σοφία (τ. ἀρχόντων), ii. 6, and note; so in the LXX, Exod. xxxv. 31, Isa. iii. 3, it characterizes the craftsman's skill; in Arist., Eth. Nic., σοφία is the ἀρετὴ τέχνης—indeed this was its primitive sense (see Ed.). The Church architect (Christ, in the first instance, Matt. xvi. 18) is endowed with the σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ, the νοῦς Χριστοῦ (ii. 6-16; cf. 2 Cor. iii. 4-6, Rom. xv. 16-20). The Gr. ἀρχιτέκτων was not a designer of plans on paper; he was like the old cathedral builders, the master-mason, developing his ideas in the material. "As a wise master-builder, I laid a foundation (θεμέλιον ἔθηκα), but another builds thereupon" (ἄλλος δὲ ἐποικοδομεῖ): P. knew that by God's grace his part was done wisely; let his successors see to theirs. Not "the foundation"—that will be defined immediately (11*b*): P. contrasts himself as foundation-layer with later workmen; hence the vbs. are respectively past and pr. The θεμέλιον, laid out once for all by the ἀρχιτέκτων, determines the site and ground-plan of the edifice (cf. Eph. ii. 20).—With the distributive ἄλλος cf. ἕκαστος (11): if Apollos, by himself, were intended, ἐποικοδομεῖ would have to be read as impf. (for ἐπῳκ., was building: cf. aor., 14), since he is not now at Cor. Many Christian teachers are busy there (iv. 15). For this indef. ἄλλος, cf. xii. 8 ff., xv. 39; and for ἐγώ . . . ἄλλος δέ, Luke ix. 19, John iv. 37, xiv. 16, xxi. 18. For the compound vb., see parls.; ἐπ- points to the basis, which gives the standard and measure to all subsequent work.—Hence the warning, ἕκαστος δὲ βλεπέτω πῶς κ.τ.λ.: "But let each man see (to it) how he is building thereupon!" Working upon the foundation, he must follow the lines laid down; he must use fit material. Not "how he is to build" (as in vii. 32, aor. sbj.), but "how he is a-building" (pr. ind.)—the work is going on. For the moods of the Indirect Question, see Wr., pp. 373 ff., Bn., §§ 341-356.

Ver. 11 is a parenthetical comment on θεμέλιον: As to the foundation, that is settled; the workman has to build upon it, not to shift it, nor add to it.—θεμέλιον γὰρ ἄλλον οὐδεὶς δύναται θεῖναι παρὰ κ.τ.λ.: "For another foundation none can lay, beside (other than. παρά, possibly suggesting also in competition with; or contrary to) that which is laid down, which is JESUS CHRIST;" other builders there are beside the architect, but no other ground for them to build upon.—κεῖμαι serves as pf. pass. to τίθημι (Phil. i. 16, etc.), connoting fixity of situation (positum est), and so of destination, as in Luke ii. 34. The work of the Apostolic founders is done, once and for ever; so long as the Church lasts, men will build on what they laid down.—θεμέλιον, here masc. (read as adj., sc. λίθον), as in 2 Tim. ii. 19, Heb. xi. 10, Rev. xxi. 14, 19, and sometimes in LXX; neut. in Acts xvi. 26, as in the κοινή, and commonly in LXX.—ὅς ἐστιν—continuative, rather than definitive (as in 5): "There is but one foundation, and it is Jesus Christ"; cf. ii. 2, xv. 1-11, etc.—Ἰησοῦς Χριστός (not Χ. Ἰ., nor ὁ Χ.), the actual historical person, not any doctrine or argument about Him—"Jesus" revealed and known as "Christ": see Acts ii. 22, 36, xvii. 3, etc., for the formation of the

ἄργυρον,[1] [k]λίθους [k]τιμίους—[l]ξύλα, [m]χόρτον, [n]καλάμην—13. ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον [o]φανερὸν [o]γενήσεται· ἡ γὰρ [p]ἡμέρα [q]δηλώσει, ὅτι ἐν [r]πυρὶ [s]ἀποκαλύπτεται· καὶ ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον [t]ὁποῖόν ἐστι τὸ

l N.T., h.l.; Ezra v. 8.
m Elsewhere "grass," Mt. vi. 30, etc.
n N.T., h.l.; Exod. v. 12, xv. 7; Isa. v. 24.
o xi. 19, xiv. 25; Ph. i. 13; Mk. vi. 14; Lk. viii. 17; Acts vii. 13.
p See i. 8.
q See i. 11.
r In like connexion, 2 Th. i. 8; Heb. x. 27, xii. 29; 1 Pet. i. 7; 2 Pet. iii. 7; Jude 7; frequent in Rev. and Mt.; Mk. ix. 43, 48 f.; Jo. xv. 6.
s See ii. 10.
t Gal. ii. 6; 1 Th. i. 9; Acts xxvi. 29; Ja. i. 24.

[1] χρυσιον, αργυριον: ℵB (C in latter inst., defective in forn 73, Clem. Or., Bas. B, æth. ins. και; so W.H. mg.

name; and for this, with Paul the rarer, order, cf. ii. 2, Rom. v. 15, xvi. 25, etc.,—also Heb. xiii. 8; in each instance Jesus Christ connotes the recognised facts as to His life, death, etc. (cf. note on i. 2).

Ver. 12. After the interjected caution to let the foundation alone, P. turns to the superstructure, to which the work of his coadjutors belongs; δὲ indicates this transition.—εἰ δέ τις ἐποικοδομεῖ, εἰ with ind. (as in 14 f. etc.),—a supposition in matter of fact, while ἐὰν with sbj. (as in iv. 15) denotes a likely contingency. The doubled prp. ἐπί (with acc.)—an idiom characterising later Gr., which loves emphasis—implies growth by way of accession: "if any one is building-on,—onto the foundation"; contrast ἐπὶ with dat. in Eph. ii. 20. The material superimposed by the present Cor. builders is of two opposite kinds, rich and durable or paltry and perishing: "gold, silver, costly stones—wood, hay, straw,"—thrown together "in lively ἀσύνδετον" (Mr.). The latter might serve for poor frail huts, but not for the temple of God (17).—λίθοι τίμιοι, the marbles, etc., used in rearing noble houses; but possibly Isa. liv. 11 f. (cf. Rev. xxi. 18-21) is in the writer's mind. The figure has been interpreted as relating (a) to the diff. sorts of persons brought into the Church (Pelagius, Bg., Hf.), since the Cor. believers constitute the Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή (9), the ναὸς Θεοῦ (16)—"my work are you in the Lord" (ix. i.; cf. Eph. ii. 20 ff., 2 Tim. ii. 19 ff., 1 Peter ii. 4 f.; also the striking parl. in Mal. iii. 1 ff., iv. 1); (b) to the moral fruits resulting from the labours of various teachers, the character of Church members, this being the specific object of the final judgment (2 Cor. v. 10, Rom. ii. 5-11; cf. 1 Cor. xiii. 13) and that which measures the work of their ministers (1 Thess. ii. 19 ff., etc.)—so Or., Cm., Aug., lately Osiander and Gd.; (c) to the doctrines of the diff. teachers, since for this they are primarily answerable and here lay the point of present divergence (cf. viii. 10 f., Rom. xiv. 15; 2 Cor. xi. 1 ff., 13 ff., Gal. i. 7, etc.)—so Clem. Al., and most moderns. The three views are not really discrepant: teaching shapes character, works express faith; unsound preaching attracts the bad hearer and makes him worse, sound preaching wins and improves the good (see i. 18, 24; 2 Tim. iv. 3; John iii. 18 ff., x. 26 f.). "The materials of this house may denote doctrines moulding persons," or "even persons moulded by doctrines" (Ev.),—"the doctrine exhibited in a concrete form" (Lt.).

Ver. 13. "The work of each (ἑκάστου resuming the ἕκαστος of 10) will become manifest:" while the Wheat and Tares are in early growth (Matt. xiii. 24 ff.), they are indistinguishable; one man's work is mixed up with another's—"for the Day will disclose (it)".—Ἡ ἡμέρα can only mean Christ's Judgment Day: see parls., esp. i. 8, iv. 3 ff., and notes; also Rom. ii. 16, Acts xvii. 31, Matt. xxv. 19. "The day" suggests (cf. 1 Thess. v. 2 ff., Rom. xiii. 11 ff.) the hope of daylight upon dark problems of human responsibility. But this searching is figured as the scrutiny of fire, which at once detects and destroys useless matter: ὅτι ἐν πυρὶ ἀποκαλύπτεται, "because it (the Day) is revealed in fire". For ἀποκαλύπτεται (pr., implying certainty, perhaps nearness), see notes on i. 7, ii. 10—a supernatural, unprecedented "day," dawning not like our mild familiar sunrise, but "in" splendour of judgment "fire": cf. 2 Thess. i. 8. This image comes from the O.T. pictures of a Theophany: Dan. vii. 9 f., Mal. iv. 1, Isa. xxx. 27, lxiv. 1 ff., etc.—καὶ ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον ὁποῖόν ἐστι κ.τ.λ.: "and each man's work, of what kind it is,—the fire will prove it". The pleonastic αὐτὸ is due to a slight anacoluthon: the sentence begins as though it were to end, "the fire will show"; φανερώσει is, however, replaced by the stronger δοκιμάσει suitable to πῦρ, and this u xi. 28; 2 Cor. viii. 8, xiii. 5; 1 Th. v. 21; Lk. xiv. 19; 1 Pet. i. 7; Zech. xiii. 11.

[t] πῦρ [1] [u] δοκιμάσει· 14. εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον [v] μένει [2] ὃ [s] ἐπῳκοδόμησε,[3] [w] μισθὸν λήψεται· 15. εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον [x] κατακαήσεται, [y] ζημιωθήσεται, αὐτὸς δὲ σωθήσεται, [z] οὕτω δὲ [z] ὡς διὰ [r] πυρός. 16. [a] οὐκ [a] οἴδατε ὅτι [b] ναὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ [c] οἰκεῖ [4] [c] ἐν [4]

v xiii. 13; 2 Cor. iii. 11, ix. 9; Rom. ix. 11; Heb. x. 34, xii. 27, xiii. 1, 14; Jo. iii. 36, vi. 27, ix. 41. w Ver. 8. x Mt. iii. 12, xiii. 30, 40; 2 Pet. iii. 10; Jo. xv. 6. y Mt. xvi. 26 and parls., for this sense; cf. 2 Cor. vii. 9; Ph. iii. 8. z iv. 1, ix. 26; Eph. v. 28, 33; Ph. iii. 17; 1 Th. ii. 4; Jas. ii. 12; Lk. xxiv 24. a Ten times in this Ep.—v. 6, etc.; Rom. vi. 16; Jas. iv. 4. b vi. 19; 2 Cor. vi. 16; cf. Eph. ii. 21 f.; also 2 Th. ii. 4; Rev. iii. 12, xi. 1; Jo. ii. 19; Mt. xxvi. 61. c Rom. vii. 18, 20, viii. 9, 11; 1 Tim. vi. 16.

[1] το πυρ αυτο δοκιμ.: ABCP, 17, 37, 73, other minn., syr$^{sch.}$ Om. αυτο ℵDL, etc., latt. vg. sah. cop.: Western.

[2] μενεῖ: latt. (manserit), Aug., Ambrst., sah. cop. So Lachm., Tisch., Al., El., W.H., and nearly all modern edd.

[3] εποικοδομησεν: all uncc. but B^{3}C. See Wr., p. 84.

[4] εν υμιν οικει (?) BP, 17 (a good group); preferred by W.H. in txt.

altered vb. requires with it αὐτό, to recall the object τὸ ἔργον. Mr. and El. attach the pronoun to το πῦρ, "the fire itself," but with pointless emphasis. Others avoid the pleonasm by construing ἑκάστου τὸ ἔργον at the beginning as a nominativus pendens ("as to each man's work"), resembling that of John xv. 2; but the qualification that follows, ὁποῖόν ἐστιν, makes this unlikely: cf. Gal. ii. 6, for the interpolated interr. clause.—δοκιμάζω is to assay (see LXX parls.),—suggested by the "gold, silver" above: "probabit, non purgabit. Hic locus ignem purgatorium non modo non fovet, sed plane extinguit" (Bg.).—Ἕκαστος, thrice repeated in vv. 10-13, with solemn individualising emphasis.

Vv. 14, 15. The opp. issues of the fiery assay are stated under parl. hypotheses: εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον . . . μενεῖ . . . εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον κατακαήσεται, "If any one's work shall abide . . . shall be burned up". The double ind. with εἰ balances the contrasted suppositions, without signifying likelihood either way: for the opposed vbs., cf. xiii. 8, 13; μενεῖ recalls ὑπομενεῖ of Mal. iii. 2.—ὃ ἐποικοδόμησεν (wanting augment: usage varies in this vb.; Wr., p. 83) reminds us that the work examined was built on the one foundation (10 ff.).—μισθὸν λήμψεται and ζημιωθήσεται are the corresponding apodoses,—μισθὸν being carried over to the second of the parl. clauses (Mr., Gd., Lt., Ed.): "He will get a reward . . . will be mulcted (of it)".—ζημιόω retains in pass. its acc. of thing, as a vb. taking double acc.; derived from ζημία (opp. of κέρδος: cf. Phil. iii. 7), it signifies to fine, inflict forfeit (in pass., suffer forfeit) of what one possessed, or might have possessed. "αὐτὸς δέ—opposed to μισθός: his reward shall be lost, but his person saved" (Lt.); αὐτὸς is nearly syn. with the ψυχὴ of Matt. xvi. 25 f., etc. The man built on the foundation, though his work proves culpably defective: σωθήσεται promises him the σωτηρία of Christ's heavenly kingdom (see i. 18, and other parls.). Such a minister saves himself, but not his hearers: the opp. result to that of ix. 27, etc. αὐτὸς δὲ σωθήσεται, οὕτως δὲ ὡς διὰ πυρός (δὲ correcting δέ, as in ii. 6)—"yet so (saved) as through fire,"—like Lot fleeing from Sodom; his salvation is reduced to a minimum: "He rushes out through the flame, leaving behind the ruin of his work . . . for which, proved to be worthless, he receives no pay" (Bt.), getting through "scorched and with the marks of the flame" upon him (Lt.); "s'il est sauvé, ce ne peut être qu'en échappant à travers les flammes, et grâce à la solidité du fondement" (Gd.); to change the figure, "ut naufragus mercator, amissa merce et lucro, servatus per undas" (Bg.). For the prp., in local sense, see Gm., and Wr., p. 473; διὰ πυρός, proverbial for a hairbreadth escape (see Lt. ad loc.; Eurip., Andr., 487; Elec., 1182, and LXX parls.). The διὰ has been read instrumentally, "by means of fire,"—sc. the fire of purgatory (see Lt.); an idea foreign to this scene. Cm., by a dreadful inversion of the meaning, reads the διὰ as ἐν πυρί—"will be preserved in fire!" (σώζω nowhere has this sense of τηρέω): εἰπὼν Σωθήσεται, οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ τὴν ἐπίτασιν τῆς τιμωρίας ᾐνίξατο. For other interpretations, see Mr.

Vv. 16, 17. However poor his work, ὑμῖν[1]; 17. εἴ τις τὸν [b] ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ [d] φθείρει, [d] φθερεῖ τοῦτον[2] ὁ Θεός· ὁ γὰρ [b] ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἅγιός ἐστιν, [e] οἵτινές ἐστε ὑμεῖς.

18. Μηδεὶς ἑαυτὸν [f] ἐξαπατάτω· εἴ τις [g] δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι ἐν ὑμῖν, d xv. 33; 2 Cor. vii. 2, xi. 3; Eph. iv. 22; 2 Pet. ii. 12; Jude 10.

e 2 Cor. viii. 10; Rom. vi. 2; Gal. v. 4; Jas. iv. 14; Acts vii. 53.
f 2 Cor. xi. 3; Rom. vii. 11, xvi. 18; 2 Th. ii. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 14.
g In this sense, viii. 2, xiv. 37; Gal. vi. 3; Ph. iii. 4; Jas. i. 26.

[1] εν υμιν οικει (?), BP, 17 (a good group); preferred by W.H. in txt.
[2] αυτον, ADG (Western).

the workman of ver. 15 built upon Christ. There are cases worse than his, and to the εἴ τινος τὸ ἔργον alternatives of vv. 14 f. the Ap. has a third to add in the εἴ τις . . . φθείρει of ver. 17. Beside the good and ill builders, who will gain or lose reward, there are destroyers of the house, whom God will destroy; the climax of the βλεπέτω πῶς, ver. 10. Gd. well explains the absence of connecting particles between vv. 15 and 16,—a "brusque transition" due to the emotion which seizes the Apostle's heart at the sight of "workmen who even destroy what has been already built"; hence the lively apostrophe and the heightened tone of the passage.—The challenge οὐκ οἴδατε; is characteristic of this Ep. (see parls.), addressed to a Church of superior knowledge (i. 5, viii. 1). For the form οἴδατε, of the κοινή, see Wr., pp. 102 f. —The expression ναὸς Θεοῦ (see parls.) accentuates the Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή, expounded since ver. 9: "Do you not know that you are (a building no less sacred than) God's temple?" Not "a temple of God," as one of several; to P. the Church was the spiritual counterpart of the Jewish Temple, and every Church embodied this ideal. For the anarthrous (predicative) phrase, cf. Θεοῦ βασιλείαν, vi. 9, and see note on ii. 4.—Ναός (see parls.) denotes the shrine, where the Deity resides; ἱερόν (ix. 13, etc.), the sanctuary, the temple at large, with its precincts.—ὅτι is not repeated with the second half of the question, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν οἰκεῖ, the two propositions being virtually one; God's temple in Christian men is constituted by the indwelling of His Spirit: "and (that) the Spirit of God dwells in you?" cf. Eph. ii. 21, also 1 Peter ii. 5. The same relationship is expressed by other figures in xii. 5, Eph. iv. 4, etc. So the O.T. congregation of the Lord had for its centre the Shekinah in the Holy Place: Isa. vi., Ezek. xxxvii. 27; cf. 2 Cor. vi. 16 ff. This truth is applied to the Christian person in vi. 19.

"If any one destroys the temple of God, God will destroy him"—talione justissima (Bg.). On the form of hypothesis, see ver. 14.—φθείρω signifies to corrupt morally, deprave (injure in character), xv. 33, 2 Cor. xi. 3, as well as to waste, damage (injure in being: see parls.)—mutually implied in a spiritual building. This Church was menaced with destruction from the immoralities exposed in chh. v., vi., and from its party schisms (i.-iii.), both evils fostered by corrupt teaching. The figure is not that of Levitical defilement (φθείρω nowhere means to pollute a holy place); this φθορά is a structural injury, to be requited in kind. —ὁ Θεὸς closes the warning, with awful emphasis (cf. 1 Thess. iv. 6, Rom. xii. 19); God is bound to protect His temple (cf. Ps. xlvi., xlviii., lxxiv., Isa. xxvii. 3, lxiv. 10 ff.).—The injury is a desecration: "for the temple of God is holy,—which (is what) you are". The added clause οἵτινές ἐστε ὑμεῖς reminds the Cor. at once of the obligations their sanctity imposes (see notes on ἡγιασμένοις, κλητοῖς, ἁγίοις, i. 2; cf. 1 Peter ii. 5), and of the protection it guarantees (2 Cor. vi. 14 ff., 2 Thess. ii. 13; John x. 29; Isa. xliii. 1-4, etc., Zech. ii. 8).—οἵτινες, the qualitative relative, refers to ἅγιος more than to ναός, and is predicate (see Wr., pp. 206 f.) with ὑμεῖς for subject.

§ 11. THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD, iii. 18-23. Affectation of philosophy, —"the wisdom of the world," which P. has repudiated on behalf of the Gospel (i., ii.)—was at the bottom of the Cor. troubles. Those who follow human wisdom exalt human masters at the expense of God's glory, and there are teachers who lend themselves to this error and thus build unworthily on the Christian foundation—some who are even destroying, under a show of building, the temple of God (iii. 3-17). That the warnings P. has given to his fellow-labourers bear on the popular λόγος σοφίας is apparent from the manner in which he reverts to the topic at this ἐν τῷ [h]αἰῶνι τούτῳ μωρὸς γενέσθω, ἵνα γένηται σοφός· 19. ἡ γὰρ σοφία τοῦ [k]κόσμου [k]τούτου [l]μωρία [m]παρὰ τῷ[1] [m]Θεῷ ἐστί· γέγραπται γάρ, [n]"Ὁ [o]δρασσόμενος τοὺς σοφοὺς ἐν τῇ [p]πανουργίᾳ αὐτῶν"· 20. καὶ πάλιν, "Κύριος γινώσκει τοὺς [q]διαλογισμοὺς τῶν σοφῶν,[2] ὅτι εἰσὶ [r]μάταιοι". 21. ὥστε μηδεὶς καυχάσθω [s]ἐν ἀνθρώποις·

h See i. 20. i See i. 25. k v. 10, vii. 31; Eph. ii. 2; 1 Jo. iv. 17; six times in Jo. l See i. 18. m In this sense, Rom. ii. 11, 13; Gal. iii. 11; Eph. vi. 9; 2 Th. i. 6; Jas. i. 27; 1 Pet. ii. 4; Mt. vi. 1; Lk. i. 30, ii. 52; Acts xxvi. 8. n Job v. 13; see note below. o N.T. h.l.; Lev. ii. 2, v. 12; Num. v. 26; Ps. ii. 12. p 2 Cor. iv. 2, xi. 3; Eph. iv. 14; Lk. xx. 23; Jos. ix. 10; πανουργος, 2 Cor. xii. 16. q In this sense, Rom. i. 21; Ph. ii. 14; 1 Tim. ii. 8; Jas. ii. 4; Mt. xv. 19, etc.; Lk. ix. 46 f., xxiv. 38; Ps. xciii. 11. r xv. 17; Tit. iii. 9; Jas. i. 26; 1 Pet. i. 18; Acts xiv. 15; Exod. xx. 7; Ezek. xi. 2. s See i. 31.

[1] Om. τῳ CDG.

[2] ανθρωπων, some eight minuscc., am., arm., Marcion as quoted by Epiph., Hier. (in free quot.), I XX.

point. § 11 resumes the strain of §§ 4-8, impressing on teachers and taught alike the true relationship of things human and Divine.

Ver. 18. Accordingly, the Μηδεὶς ἑαυτὸν ἐξαπατάτω looks forward, not backward: one may "deceive himself" about the mixing of man's wisdom with God's, but scarcely about the truth of the threatening of ver. 17. "If any one thinks to be wise amongst you, in this age (αἰῶνι, world-period: see parls.) let him become foolish, that he may become wise."—δοκεῖ not videtur (Vg., A.V.), but putat—"seemeth to himself, the usual (though perhaps not universal) sense of δοκεῖν in St. Paul" (Lt.: see parls., esp. xiv. 37): the danger is that of self-deception (cf. the irony in iv. 10, viii. 1 ff.), a danger natural in the case of teachers, esp. if intellectual and cultured—there were a few such at Cor. (i. 26); cf. the exhortations of James iii. 1, 13-18.—ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ is antithetical to ἐν ὑμῖν (put the comma between them), "amongst you"—God's temple, Christ's property (17, 23, etc.)—in accordance with ii. 6, 13, and with the contrast between the two wisdoms that dominates this whole Division. Men must not think to be wise in both spheres; the Church's wise are the world's fools, and vice versâ. The cross is μωρία to the world, and he who espouses it a μωρὸς in its opinion—a fool with a criminal for his Master; and one can only be a Christian sage—wise after the manner of ii. 8 ff.—upon condition of bearing this reproach (so Or., Cm., Luther, Hf., Gd., Hn.). Paul was crazy in the eyes of the world (iv. 10, 2 Cor. v. 13; Acts xxvi. 24), but how wise amongst us! Cf. Christ's paradox of losing the soul to gain it.

Ver. 19*a* gives the reason why the philosophy of the times must be renounced by the aspirant to Christian wisdom: "For the wisdom of the world is folly with God" (= i. 20); and since it is folly with God, it must be counted folly, and not wisdom, amongst you (18). God's judgment is decisive for His Church.—παρὰ Θεῷ, apud Deum, judice Deo (see parls.).

Vv. 19*b*, 20. That the above is God's judgment appears from two sayings of Scripture, bearing on the two classes of worldly wise—the men of affairs (such as the ἄρχοντες of ii. 6) and the philosophers (i. 20), distinguished respectively by πανουργία and διαλογισμοί. In the first text (the only N.T. quotation from Job: Phil. i. 19, perhaps an allusion), Paul improves on the LXX, possibly from another version, substituting the vivid ὁ δρασσόμενος (He that grips: cf. δραξάμενος φάρυγγος, Theocritus, xxiv. 28) for ὁ καταλαμβάνων, and πανουργίᾳ αὐτῶν for φρονήσει,—both nearer to the Heb. (LXX reads πανουργίαν in ver. 12). The words (from Eliphaz) are "appropriated because of their inherent truth" (Lt.); they reassert the anticipation expressed in ii. 6. For πανουργία, see parls.; note its deterioration of meaning, as in Eng. craft. When the world's schemers think themselves cleverest, Providence catches them in their own toils.—The second text P. adapts by turning ἀνθρώπων into σοφῶν: what is true of the vanity of human thoughts generally (machsh'both 'ādām) he applies par excellence to "the reasonings of the wise".—διαλογισμοί, signifying in Plutarch's later Gr. debates, arguings (see parls.), recalls i. 19 f. above, echoing the quotation of that passage. On μάταιοι, futile, see note to xv. 14 (κενός).

Ver. 21*a*. ὥστε μηδεὶς καυχάσθω ἐν

22. πάντα γὰρ [t] ὑμῶν ἐστιν, [u] εἴτε Παῦλος [u] εἴτε Ἀπολλὼς [u] εἴτε Κηφᾶς, εἴτε κόσμος εἴτε [v] ζωὴ εἴτε [v] θάνατος, εἴτε [v w] ἐνεστῶτα εἴτε [v x] μέλλοντα· πάντα [t] ὑμῶν ἐστιν[1]· 23. ὑμεῖς δὲ [t] Χριστοῦ, Χριστὸς δὲ [t] Θεοῦ.

t For this gen., see i. 12, and ver. 4 above.
u In extended enumerations, x. 31, xii. 13, xiii. 8; Rom. xii. 6 ff.; Col. i. 16.
v Rom. viii. 38. ζωη, θαν. alone, 2 Cor. iv. 12; Rom. viii. 6; Ph. i. 20; 1 Jo. iii. 14; Jo. v. 24.
w vii. 26; Gal. i. 4; Heb. ix. 9.
x Col. ii. 17; Heb. ix. 11, x. 1.

[1] Om. 2nd εστιν all uncc. but DbcL.

ἀνθρώποις: "And so let no one glory in men".—ὥστε often, with P., introduces the impv. at the point where argument or explanation passes into exhortation; cf. note on ver. 7, and see iv. 5, v. 8, etc.—ἐν ἀνθρώποις states the forbidden ground of boasting (see parls.), supplying the negative counterpart of i. 31. Paul condemns alike the self-laudation of clever teachers, hinted at in ver. 18, and the admiration rendered to them, along with all partisan applause.

Vv. 21*b*-23 form an unbroken chain, linking the Cor. and their teachers to the throne of God. Not till the last words of ver. 23 do we find the full justification (sustaining the initial γάρ) for the prohibition of ver. 21*a*; "only when the other side to the πάντα ὑμῶν has been expressed, is the object presented in which alone the Church ought to glory" (Hf.); standing by itself, "All things are yours" would be a reason in favour of, rather than against, glorying in human power. The saying of ver. 21*b* is, very possibly, taken from the lips of the Cor. δοκοῦντες (18), who talked in the high-flown Stoic style, affirming like Zeno (in Diog. Laert., vii., 1. 25), τῶν σοφῶν πάντα εἶναι, or daring with Seneca (de Benef., vii., 2 f.) "emittere hanc vocem, Haec omnia mea esse!" similarly the Stoic in Horace (Sat. I., iii., 125-133; Ep. I., i., 106 ff.): "Sapiens uno minor est Jove, dives, liber, honoratus, pulcher, rex denique regum!" Some such pretentious vein is hinted at in iv. 7-10, vi. 12 and x. 22 f., vii. 31. (οἱ χρώμενοι τ. κόσμον: see notes); the affecters of philosophy at Cor. made a "liberal" use of the world. As in vi. 12 and x. 22 f., the Ap. adopts their motto, giving to it a grander scope than its authors dreamed of (22), but only to check and balance it, reproving the conceit of its vaunters by the contrasted principle (δέ) of the Divine dominion in Christ, which absorbs all human proprietorship (23).

First amongst the "all things" that the Cor. may legitimately boast, there stand —suggested by ἀνθρώποις, 21 — "Paul, Apollos, Cephas," the figureheads of the Church factions (i. 12),—enumerated with εἴτε . . . εἴτε (whether P. or Ap. or Ceph.), since these chiefs belong to the Church alike, not P. to this section, Ap. to that, and so on. Christ (i. 12) is not named in this series of "men"; a diff. place is His (23).—From "Cephas" the enumeration passes per saltum to "the world" (εἴτε κόσμος—anarthrous, as thought of qualitatively; cf. Gal. vi. 14), understood in its largest sense,—the existing order of material things; cf. note on i. 20. The right to use worldly goods, asserted broadly by Greek Christians at Cor. (vi. 12, vii. 31, x. 23 f.: see notes), is frankly admitted; the Church (represented by its three leaders) and the world both exist for "you," —are bound to serve you (cf. 1 Tim. ii. 2-4, iv. 8, vi. 17; Ps. viii., etc.); the Messianic kingdom makes the saints even the world's judges (vi. 2, Rom. iv. 13; Rev. v. 10, etc.).—εἴτε ζωὴ εἴτε θάνατος, by another bold and sudden sweep, carries the Christian empire into the unseen. Not Life alone, but Death —king of fears to a sinful world (Rom. v. 17, 21, Heb. ii. 15)—is the saints' servant (xv. 26, etc.). They hold a condominium (Rom. viii. 17, 1 Thess. v. 10) with Him who is "Lord of living and dead" (Rom. xiv. 9, etc.; Eph. iv. 9 f., Rev. i. 18); cf. ἐμοὶ τὸ ζῆν Χριστός, καὶ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος, Phil. i. 21.—ζωὴ and θάνατος extend the Christian's estate over all states of being; εἴτε ἐνεστῶτα, εἴτε μέλλοντα, stretch it to all periods and possibilities of time. The former of these ptps. (pf. intransitive of ἐνίστημι) denotes what has come to stand there (instans),—is on the spot, in evidence; the latter what exists in intention,—to be evolved out of the present: see the two pairs of antitheses in Rom. viii. 38 f.; these things cannot hurt the beloved of God (Rom.), nay, must help and serve them (1 Cor.). See other parls. for "things present" (esp. Gal. i. 4) and "to come" (esp. Rom. viii. 17-25).

The Apostle repeats triumphantly his

IV. 1. [a] Οὕτως ἡμᾶς [b] λογιζέσθω [c] ἄνθρωπος [a] ὡς [d] ὑπηρέτας Χριστοῦ, καὶ [e] οἰκονόμους [f] μυστηρίων Θεοῦ. 2. [g] ὃ[1] δὲ[1] [h] λοιπόν, a See iii. 15. b In similar constr., Rom. viii. 36, ix. 8; 2 Cor. x. 2; Ph. iii. 13; Acts xix. 27; Mk. xv. 28 (Isa. liii. 12). c xi. 28; 2 Cor. xii. 4; Rom. ii. 1, vii. 24, ix. 20; Gal. vi. 1, 7. d Acts xiii. 5, xxvi. 16; Lk. i. 2; Jo. xviii. 36. e Tit. i. 7; 1 Pet. iv. 10; Lk. xii. 42 (πιστος). f See ii. 7. g ωδε, similarly in Heb. vii. 8; Rev. xiii. 10, 18, xiv. 12, xvii. 9. h See i. 16.

[1] ωδε, all uncc. but DcEL; also oldest verss. ο δε, however, in Chr. and Gr. Comm. Lachm., following the bulk of minuscc., placed the full stop after ωδε.

πάντα ὑμῶν, having gathered into it the totality of finite existence, to reverse it by the words ὑμεῖς δὲ Χριστοῦ, "but (not and) you are Christ's!" (cf. vi. 20, Rom. xii. 1 f., 2 Cor. v. 15). The Cor. readers, exalted to a height outsoaring Stoic pride, are in a moment laid low at the feet of Christ: "Lords of the universe—you are His bondmen, your vast heritage in the present and future you gather as factors for Him". P. endorses the doctrine of the kingship of the spiritual man, dilating on it with an eloquence surpassing that of Stoicism; "but," he reminds him, his wealth is that of a steward. Our property is immense, but we are Another's; we rule, to be ruled. A man cannot own too much, provided that he recognises his Owner.

Finally, Christ who demands our subordination, supplies in Himself its grand example: Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ, "but Christ is God's". We are masters of everything, but Christ's servants; He Master of us, but God's Servant (cf. Acts iii. 13, etc.). For His filial submission, see xi. 3, xv. 22 ff., Rom. vi. 10, and notes; also John viii. 29, x. 29, etc. We cannot accept Cv.'s dilution of the sense, "Hæc subjèctio ad Christi humanitatem refertur"; for the ὑμεῖς Χριστοῦ, just affirmed, raises Christ high over men. It is enough to say with Thd., Χριστὸς Θεοῦ οὐχ ὡς κτίσμα Θεοῦ, ἀλλ' ὡς Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ: cf. Heb. v. 8. The sovereignty of the Father is the corner-stone of authority in the universe (xi. 3, xv. 28).

The Ap. has now vindicated God's rights in His Church (see Introd. to § 10), and recalled the Cor. from their carnal strife and pursuit of worldly wisdom to the unity, sanctity, and grandeur of their Christian calling, which makes them servants of God through Christ, and in His right the heirs of all things.

§ 12. CHRIST'S SERVANTS ANSWERABLE TO HIMSELF, iv. 1-5. The Ap. has shown his readers their own true position—so high and yet so lowly (§ 11); Paul, Apollos, Cephas are but part of a universe of ministry that waits upon them. But more is to be said about the Christian leaders, whose names are so much abused at Cor. If the Church is to understand its proper character, it must reverence theirs. They are its servants; it is not their master. They are its property, because they are Christ's property; and His instruments first of all. P. thus resumes the train of thought opened in § 10, where the work of Church-builders was discriminated in relation to the building; now it is viewed in its relation to God the Householder. Here lies another and the final ground of accusation against the Cor. parties: those who maintained them, in applauding this chief and censuring that, were putting themselves into Christ's judgment-seat, from which the Apostle thrusts them down.

Ver. 1. "In this way let a man take account of us, viz., as servants of Christ, etc." Οὕτως draws attention to the coming ὡς: the vb. λογιζέσθω implies a reasonable estimate, drawn from admitted principles (cf. Rom. vi. 11; xii. 1, λογικήν), the pr. impv. an habitual estimate. The use of ἄνθρωπος for τις (xi. 28, etc.), occasional in cl. Gr., occurs "where a gravior dicendi formula is required" (El.). Ὑπηρέτης (only here in Epp.: see parls.) agrees with οἰκέτης (Rom. xiv. 4, domestic) in associating servant and master, whereas διάκονος rather contrasts them (iii. 5, see note; Mark ix. 35): see Trench, Syn., § 9.—ὡς ὑπηρ. Χριστοῦ κ. οἰκονόμους κ.τ.λ., "as Christ's assistants, and stewards of God's mysteries"—in these relations Jesus set the App. to Himself and God: see Matt. xiii. 11, 52. With P. the Church is the οἶκος (1 Tim. iii. 15), God the οἰκοδεσπότης, its members the οἰκεῖοι (Gal. vi. 10, Eph. ii. 19), and its ministers—the App. in chief—the οἰκονόμοι (ix. 17, Col. i. 25, etc.). The figure of iii. 9 ff. is kept up: those who were ἀρχιτέκτων and ἐποικοδομοῦντες in the rearing of the house, become ὑπηρέται and οἰκονόμοι in its internal economy. The οἰκονόμος was a confidential housekeeper or overseer, commonly a slave, charged with pro-

[i] ζητεῖται [1] ἐν τοῖς [e] οἰκονόμοις, ἵνα [k] πιστός τις [l] εὑρέθῃ. 3. ἐμοὶ δὲ [m] εἰς [m] ἐλάχιστόν ἐστιν ἵνα ὑφ᾽ ὑμῶν [n] ἀνακριθῶ ἢ ὑπὸ [o] ἀνθρωπίνης [p] ἡμέρας, [q] ἀλλ᾽ [q] οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν [n] ἀνακρίνω· 4. οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐμαυτῷ [r] σύνοιδα, ἀλλ᾽ οὐκ [s] ἐν τούτῳ [s] δεδικαίωμαι, ὁ δὲ [n] ἀνακρίνων με

i In this sense, 2 Cor. xiii. 3; Lk. xii. 48, xiii. 6 f.; Mk. viii. 11 f.
k Ver. 17, vii. 25, in this sense; nine times besides in P.; also in Mt., Lk., Heb., 1 Pet., Rev.
l Of moral judgments, xv. 15; 2 Cor. xi. 12, xii. 20; Gal. ii. 17; Ph. iii. 9; 1 Pet. i. 7; six times in Rev.; Acts xxiv. 5.
m Cf. Acts xix. 27. Ειμι εις, h.l. in this sense.
n See ii. 14.
o See ii. 13.
p See i. 8.
q iii. 2; Acts xix. 2.
r Acts v. 2, xii. 12, xiv. 6 only; Lev. v. 1; Job xxvii. 6; 1 Macc. iv. 21; 2 Macc. iv. 41, etc. See note below.
s vi. 11; Rom. iii. 4 (Ps. l. 6), v. 9; Gal. ii. 17, iii. 11, 24, v. 4; 1 Tit. iii. 16; Acts xiii. 39.

[1] ζητειτε, ℵACDgr.Ggr.P: adopted in many minuscc. ζητειται, BL and most minuscc.; so latt. vg. cop. syrr. Doubtful whether the -τε (imperative) is a grammatical emendation, or a mere itacism; neither a clear Western nor Alexandrian reading, DG and AC, in each case, being deserted by their companion verss.

visioning the establishment. Responsible not to his fellows, but to "the Lord," his high trust demands a strict account (Luke xii. 41-48).—On μυστ. Θεοῦ, see notes to ii. 7, 9 f.: the phrase implies not secrets of the master kept from other servants, but secrets revealed to them through God's dispensers, to whose judgment and fidelity the disclosure is committed (cf. ii. 6, iii. 1).

Ver. 2. ὧδε λοιπὸν (proinde igitur) ζητεῖται, ἐν τοῖς οἰκονόμοις κ.τ.λ.: "In such case, it is further sought in stewards (to be sure) that one be found faithful". ὧδε gathers up the position given to "us" in ver. 1; ἐν τοῖς οἰκονόμοις is therefore pleonastic, but repeated for distinctness and by reference to the well-understood rule for stewards (Luke xii. 48). λοιπὸν brings in the supplement to an imperfect representation: it is not enough to be steward—a faithful steward is looked for (an echo of Luke xii. 42 f.). ζητεῖται . . . ἵνα resembles παρακαλῶ ἵνα, i. 10 (see note): the telic force of the conj. has not disappeared; one "seeks" a thing in order to "find" it.

Ver. 3. ἐμοὶ δὲ εἰς ἐλαχιστόν ἐστιν ἵνα κ.τ.λ.: "For myself however it amounts to a very small thing that by you I should be put to trial, or by a human day (of judgment)." Fidelity is required of stewards: yes, but (δέ) who is the judge of that fidelity? Not you Cor., nor even my own good conscience, but the Lord only (4: cf. Rom. xiv. 4); P. corrects the false inference that might be drawn from iii. 22. ἐμοὶ δὲ takes up the general truth just stated, to apply it as a matter between me and you. P. is being put on his trial at Cor.—his talents appraised, his motives scrutinised, his administration canvassed with unbecoming presumption. For εἰς in this somewhat rare, but not necessarily Hebraistic sense, cf. vi. 16, Acts xix. 27; see Wr., p. 229. ἵνα . . . ἀνακριθῶ (construction more unclassical than in 1) equals τὸ ἀνακριθῆναι—unless the clause should be rendered, "that I should have myself tried by you,"—as though P. might have challenged the judgment of the Cor. (see ix. 2, 2 Cor. iii. 1, xii. 11) but dismissed the thought. Ἀνακρίνω (see note, ii. 15) speaks not of the final judgment (κρίνω, 5, v. 12, etc.), but of an examination, investigation preliminary to it. The "human (ἀνθρωπίνης, cf. ii. 13) day," of which P. thinks lightly, is man's judgment—that of any man, or all men together; he reserves his case for "the day (of the Lord": see i. 8).—ἀλλ᾽ οὐδὲ ἐμαυτὸν ἀνακρίνω: "nay, I do not even try myself!" The ἀλλ᾽ οὐδέ (cf. iii. 3) brings forward another suggestion, contrary to that just rejected (ἵνα ὑφ᾽ ὑμῶν ἀνακρ.), to be rejected in its turn. In another sense P. enjoins self-judgment, in xi. 28-32; and in ii. 16 he credited the "spiritual man" with power "to try all things". Ὁ ἑαυτὸν ἀνακρίνων, the self-trier, is one who knows no higher or surer tribunal than his own conscience; Christ's Ap. stands in a very diff. position from this. This transition from Cor. judgment to self-judgment shows that no formal trial was in question, such as Weizsäcker supposes had been mooted at Cor.; arraigned before the bar of public opinion, P. wishes to say that he rates its estimate εἰς ἐλαχιστὸν in comparison with that of his heavenly Master.

Ver. 4. The negative clauses, οὐδὲν γὰρ . . . ἀλλ᾽ οὐκ, together explain, parenthetically, Paul's meaning in ver. 3: "For I am conscious of nothing against myself" (in my conduct as Christ's minister to you: cf. 10, 18; 2 Cor. i. 12-

Κύριός ἐστιν. 5. ὥστε μὴ [t] πρὸ [t] καιροῦ τι κρίνετε, ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ ὁ Κύριος, ὃς [1] καὶ [u] φωτίσει τὰ [v] κρυπτὰ τοῦ [w] σκότους καὶ [x] φανερώσει τὰς [y] βουλὰς τῶν [y] καρδιῶν· καὶ τότε ὁ [z] ἔπαινος γενήσεται ἑκάστῳ ἀπὸ τοῦ [z] Θεοῦ.

t Mt. viii. 29 only. Sir. xxx. 24, xlvi. 28, li. 38. u In this use, 2 Tim. i. 10; cf. Jo. i. 9; Eph. i. 18; Heb. vi. 4, x. 32. v xiv. 25; 2 Cor. iv. 2; Rom. ii. 16, 29; 1 Pet. iii. 4; Mt. x. 26. w Rom. xiii. 12; eight times besides in P. in the ethical sense; 1 Pet. ii. 9; 1 Jo. i. 6; Mt. vi. 23; Jo. iii. 19; Acts xxvi. 18. x In this connexion, 2 Cor. v. 10 f.; Eph. v. 13; 1 Jo. ii. 19, iii. 2; Rev iii. 18; Mk. iv. 22; Jo. iii. 21. y Of human βουλη, Lk. xxiii. 51; Acts xix. 1 (some texts), xxvii 12, 42. In pl., N.T. h.l. βουλην καρδιας, Sir. xxxvii. 13. z Rom. ii. 29; επαινος (with man for obj.) generally, 2 Cor. viii. 18; Rom. xiii. 3; Ph. iv. 8; 1 Pet. i. 7, ii. 14.

[1] DG, Aug., om. ος: a Western variant.

17)—nothing that calls for judicial inquiry on your part or misgiving on my own—"but not on this ground (οὐκ ἐν τούτῳ) have I been justified". Σύνοιδα with reflexive pron. (h. l. in N.T.) has this connotation, of a guilty conscience, occasionally in cl. Gr. (see Lidd.); cf. the Horatian "Nil conscire sibi, nulla pallescere culpa" (Al.). "By" signifies "against" in Bible Eng. (see New Eng. Dict. s. v., 26 d; cf. Deut. xxvii. 16, Ezek. xxii. 7); "I know no harm by him" is current in the Midland counties (Al.).—For δικαιόω ἐν, see parls. The pf. pass. δεδικαίωμαι defines an act of God complete in the past and determining the writer's present state. P. has been and continues justified—not on the sentence of his conscience as a man self-acquitted ("not of works of righteousness, which we had done," Tit. iii. 5 ff.), but as an ill-deserving sinner counted righteous for Christ's sake (i. 30, vi. 11, xv. 17; 2 Cor. v. 17-21, Rom. iii. 23 ff., iv. 25, vii. 24-viii. 1, etc.). This past "justification" is the ground of his whole standing before God (Rom. v. 1 ff.); it forbids presuming on the witness of his own conscience now. A good conscience is worth much; but, after P.'s experience, he cannot rely on its verdict apart from Christ's. Paul looks for his appraisement at the end (5), to the source from which he received his justification at the beginning. Accordingly for the present, he refers to Christ the testing of his daily course: ὁ δὲ ἀνακρίνων με Κύριός ἐστιν, "but he that does try (examine) me is the Lord"—not you, nor my own conscience; I am searched by a purer and a loftier eye. "The Lord is alone qualified for this office" (cf. v. 3 ff., and notes; Rev. ii., iii., John v. 22, etc.). The Lord's present ἀνάκρισις prepares for his final κρίσις (5). The above interpretation, which maintains the Pauline use of δικαιόω, is that of Calovius, Rückert, Mr., Hn., Bt., and others. Cm., Cv., Est., Bg., Al., Ev., Ed., Gd., Sm., etc., insist on taking the term "in a meaning entirely diff. from its ordinary dogmatic sense" (Gd.), referring it iu spite of the tense, on account of ver. 5, to the future judgment; but this brings confusion into Paul's settled language, and abandons the rock of his personal standing before God and men (cf. Gal. ii. 15 ff.). Since P. accepted justification by faith in Christ, not his innocence, but his Saviour's merit has become his fixed ground of assurance.

Ver. 5. The practical conclusion of the statement respecting Christ's servants (see note on ὥστε, iii. 21): "So then do not before the time be passing any judgment". τι, the cognate acc. = κρίσιν τινά, as in John vii. 24. πρὸ καιροῦ (the fit time, not the set time) signifies prematurely (so Æsch., Eumen., 367), as ἐν καιρῷ seasonably (Luke xii. 42). Our Lord gives another reason for not judging, in Matt. vii. 1 ff.; this prohibition, like that, points to His tribunal, bidding men hold back their verdicts on each other in deference to His (cf. Rom. xiv. 10). "Until the Lord come:" ἕως ἂν indicates contingency in the time, not the event itself; for this uncertainty, cf. 1 Thess. v. 2, Matt. xxv. 13, Luke xii. 39, Acts i. 7, etc. His coming is the ἀποκάλυψις toward which the hope of this Church was directed from the first (i. 7: see note); it will reveal with perfect evidence the matters on which the Cor. are officiously and ignorantly pronouncing.—ὃς καὶ φωτίσει κ.τ.λ.: "who shall also illuminate the hidden things of darkness". φωτίζω points to the cause, as φανερόω to the result, and ἀποκαλύπτω (ii. 10) to the mode of Divine disclosures. Christ's presence of itself illuminates (cf. 2 Cor. iv. 6, and other parls.); His Parousia is light as well as fire (iii. 13)—both instruments of judgment. τὰ κρυπτὰ

6. Ταῦτα δὲ, ἀδελφοί, [a] μετεσχημάτισα εἰς ἐμαυτὸν καὶ Ἀπολλὼ [1] δι' ὑμᾶς, ἵνα [b] ἐν ἡμῖν [b] μάθητε τὸ μὴ [c] ὑπὲρ [c] ὃ [2] γέγραπται φρονεῖν, [3] a 2 Cor. xi. 13 ff.; Ph iii. 21; 4 Macc. ix. 22. Also Joseph., Ant., vii., 10. 5; Philo, Leg. ad. Gai., § 11; Plato, Leges, x. 903 E. b Cf. Jo. xiii. 35; Gen. xlii. 33. c x. 13; 2 Cor. xii. 6.

[1] Απολλων, ℵ*AB*. See W.H., Notes on Selected Readings, p. 157. B³, by a curious blunder, απο πολλων.

[2] (υπερ) α, ℵABCP 17, 31, 73. Referring to Scripture at large.

[3] Om. φρονειν ℵ*ABD*G, latt. vg., Or., Aug., Ambrst. ℵcCDcLP cop. syrr., Cyr. insert (? Alexandrian); Ath., φυσιουσθαι.

τοῦ σκότους, "the secrets hidden in the darkness" (res tenebris occultatas, Bz.)—not necessarily evil things (see Rom. ii. 16, 2 Cor. iv. 6), but things impenetrable to present light.—Chief amongst these, "the Lord will make manifest (φανερώσει) the counsels of the hearts". These God (and with Him Christ, ὁ ἀνακρίνων: 4) already searches out (Rom. viii. 27; Ps. cxxxix., etc.); then He will make plain to men, about themselves and each other, what was dark before. The καρδία is the real self, the "hidden," "inward man" (Eph. iii. 16 f., 1 Pet. iii. 4, and other parls.), known absolutely to God alone (cor hominis crypta est, Bz.); its "counsels" are those self-communings and purposings which determine action and belong to the essence of character.—"And then (not before) the (due) praise will come (ὁ ἔπαινος γενήσεται) to each from God (not from human lips)." ἀπὸ τ. Θεοῦ for it is on God's behalf that Christ will judge; His commendation is alone of value (Rom. ii. 29; John v. 44). The Church is God's field and temple (iii. 9 ff.); all work wrought in it awaits His approval. ἑκάστῳ recalls the lesson of iii. 8, 11-13, respecting the discriminating and individual character of Divine rewards. "Praise" ambitious Gr. teachers coveted: let them seek it from God. "Praise" the Cor. partisans lavished on their admired leaders: this is God's prerogative, let them check their impertinent eulogies. Enough was said in iii. 15, 17, of condemned work; P. is thinking here of his true συνεργοί (1 f.), who with himself labour and hope for approval at the Day of Christ; little need they reck of the criticisms of the hour.

§ 13. Disciples above their Master, iv. 6-13. What the Ap. has written, from iii. 3 onwards, turns on the relations between himself and Apollos; but it has a wide application to the state of feeling within the Church (6 f.). To such extravagance of self-satisfaction and conceit in their new teachers have the Cor. been carried, that one would think they had dispensed with the App., and entered already on the Messianic reign (8). In comparison with them, P. and his comrades present a sorry figure, as victims marked for the world's sport—famished, beaten, loaded with disgrace, while their disciples flourish! (9-13.)

Ver. 6. Ταῦτα δὲ κ.τ.λ. (δὲ metabatikon, of transition): "Now these things I have adapted (in the way I have put them) to myself and Apollos".—μετα-σχηματίζω (see parls.), to change the dress, or form of presentment (σχῆμα), of anything. P. has put in a specific personal way—speaking in concreto, exempli gratia—what he might have expressed more generally; he has done this δι' ὑμᾶς, "for your better instruction,"—not because he and Ap. needed the admonition. The rendering "I have in a figure transferred" (E.V.), suggests that the argument of iii. 3-iv. 5 had no real connexion with P. and A., and was aimed at others than their partisans—an erroneous implication: see Introd. to Div. I. P. writes in the σχῆμα κατ' ἐξοχήν, aiming through the Apollonian party at all the warring factions, and at the factious spirit in the Church; his reproaches fall on the "puffed up" followers, not upon their unconsenting chiefs (4). We found certain other teachers, active at Cor. in the absence of P. and A., rebuked in iii. 11-17; the Cor. will easily read between the lines. This μετασχηματισμὸς is "id genus in quo per quandam suspicionem quod non dicimus accipi volumus" (Quintilian, Instit., ix., 2).—Ἀπολλών, the preferable reading here and in Tit. iii. 13, like the gen. of i. 12, iii. 4, is acc. of Attic 2nd decl.; 'Απολλώ (3rd) is attested in Acts xix. 1.

ἵνα ἐν ἡμῖν μάθητε τὸ Μὴ ὑπὲρ ἃ γέγραπται: "that in our case you may learn the (rule), Not beyond the things ἵνα μὴ [d] εἷς ὑπὲρ τοῦ [d] ἑνὸς [e] φυσιοῦσθε κατὰ [f] τοῦ ἑτέρου. 7. τίς γάρ σε [g] διακρίνει; τί δὲ ἔχεις ὃ οὐκ ἔλαβες; [h] εἰ δὲ καὶ ἔλαβες, [h] τί [h] καυχᾶσαι ὡς μὴ λαβών; 8. ἤδη κεκορεσμένοι ἐστέ, ἤδη [k] ἐπλουτήσατε, χωρὶς ἡμῶν [l] ἐβασιλεύσατε· καὶ [m] ὄφελόν γε [l] ἐβασιλεύσατε, d 1 Th. v. 11; cf. x. 17; Gal. iv. 22; Eph. iv. 4 f. e 18 f., v. 2, viii. 1, xiii. 4; Col. ii. 18; -ωσις, 2 Cor. xii. 20.

f vi. 1, x. 24, 29, xiv. 17; Ro. ii. 1, xiii. 8; Gal. vi. 4; Phil. ii. 4.
g H.l. with pers. obj.; cf. vi. 5; Acts xv. 9; Jude 22.
h For interr. after ει, xii. 17. See i. 29.
i Acts xxvii. 38; Deut. xxxi. 20.
k 2 Cor. viii. 9; Rom. x. 12; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 18; 5 times in Rev.; Lk. i. 53, xii. 21.
l xv. 25; Rom. v. 14, 17, 21, vi. 12; 1 Tim. vi. 15; Rev. v. 10, etc.
m 2 Cor. xi. 1; Gal. v. 12; Rev. iii. 15.

that are written": cf. the cl. Μηδὲν ἄγαν. The art. τὸ seizes the Μὴ ὑπὲρ clause for the obj. of μάθητε; for the construction, cf. Gal. v. 14, Luke xxii. 37, and see Wr., pp. 135, 644; the elliptical form ("Not" for "Do not go," or the like) marks the saying as proverbial, though only here extant. Ewald suggests that it was a Rabbinical adage—as much as to say, Keep to the rule of Scripture, Not a step beyond the written word! "γέγραπται in his libris semper ad V. T. refertur" (Grotius); but in a general maxim it is superfluous to look for particular passages intended. In iii. 19 f., and indirectly in vv. 4 f. above, P. has shown the Cor. how to keep their thoughts about men within the lines marked out in Scripture.—The 1st ἵνα is definitely applied by the second, apposed ἵνα: "that you be not puffed up, each for his individual (teacher) against the other". Scripture teaches the Cor. both not to "glory in men" and not to "judge" them (iii. 21, iv. 4 f.).—φυσιοῦσθε (φυσιόω, older Gr. φυσάω or φυσιάω, to inflate) is best explained as irreg. pr. sbj. (cf. ζηλοῦτε, Gal. iv. 17); John xvii. 3 is the only clear ex. of ἵνα with ind. in N.T.—see however Wr., pp. 362 f. Mr. obviates the difficulty by rendering ἵνα where, against Bibl. and later Gr. use. Fritzsche read ὃ (T. R.) for ἃ in the previous clause; then, by a double itacism, ἕνα for ἵνα and φυσιοῦσθαι for φυσιοῦσθε, thus getting ingeniously an inf. clause in 6*c*, standing in apposition to the ὃ of 6*b*—"Not beyond what is written,—i.e., that one be not puffed up for the one," etc.).—εἷς ὑπὲρ τ. ἑνός, a reciprocal phrase (cf. 1 Thess. v. 11), "one for the one (teacher), another for the other" (see i. 12),—zeal "for the one" admired master generating an animus "against the other" (κατὰ τοῦ ἑτέρου, the second) correspondingly despised. Those who cried up Apollos cried down Paul, and vice versâ.

Ver. 7. τίς γάρ σε διακρίνει; "for who marks thee off?" (or "separates thee?—discernit, Vg.")—what warrant for thy boasting, "I am of Paul," etc., for ranging thyself in this coterie or that? "The διάκρισις was self-made" (El.). The other rendering, "Who makes thee to differ?" (to be superior: eximie distinguit, Bg.)—sc. "who but God?"—suits the vb. διακρίνω, but is hardly relevant. This question stigmatises the partisan conceit of the Cor. as presumptuous; those that follow, τί δὲ . . . εἰ δὲ καὶ . . . marks it as ungrateful; both ways it is egotistic.—τί δὲ ἔχεις κ.τ.λ.: "what moreover hast thou that thou didst not receive?"—i.e., from God (i. 4 f., 30, iii. 5, 10, xii. 6, etc.). For this pregnant sense of λαμβάνω, cf. Acts xx. 35.—"But if indeed thou didst receive (it), why glory as one that had not received?" The receiver may boast of the Giver (i. 31), not of anything as his own. καὶ lends actuality to the vb.; "εἰ καί, de re quam ita esse ut dicitur significamus" (Hermann); cf. 2 Cor. iv. 3. καυχᾶσαι, a rare form of 2nd sing. ind. mid.; Wr., p. 90. For ὡς with ptp., of point of view (perinde ac), see Bm., p. 307; cf. ver. 3.

Ver. 8 depicts the unjustifiable "glorying" of the readers with an abruptness due to excited feeling (cf. the asyndeton of iii. 16): "How much you have received, and how you boast of it!—So soon you are satiated!" etc. The three first clauses—ἤδη, ἤδη, χωρὶς κ.τ.λ.—are exclamations rather than questions (W.H.). Distinguish ἤδη, jam, by this time; νῦν, nunc, at this time (iii. 2, etc.); ἄρτι, in præsenti, modo, just now or then, at the moment (xiii. 12, etc.). κεκορεσμένοι ἐστέ (κορέννυμι, to glut, feed full; in cl. Gr. poetical, becoming prose in κοινή; for tense-form, cf. i. 10, ἦτε κατηρτ.: "So soon you have had your fill (are quite satisfied)!" The Cor. reported themselves, in the Church Letter (?), so well fed by Paul's successors, so furnished in talent and grace, that they desired nothing more.—ἤδη ἐπλουτήσατε (aor., not pf. as before): "So soon you grew rich!" The Thanksgiving (i. 5) and the list of ἵνα καὶ ἡμεῖς σὺν ὑμῖν [n] συμβασιλεύσωμεν. 9. δοκῶ γὰρ ὅτι [1] ὁ Θεὸς ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἀποστόλους [p] ἐσχάτους [q] ἀπέδειξεν ὡς [r] ἐπιθανατίους, ὅτι [s] θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν τῷ κόσμῳ, καὶ ἀγγέλοις καὶ ἀνθρώποις· 10. ἡμεῖς [t] μωροὶ διὰ Χριστόν, ὑμεῖς δὲ [u] φρόνιμοι ἐν Χριστῷ· ἡμεῖς [v] ἀσθενεῖς, ὑμεῖς δὲ [v] ἰσχυροί· ὑμεῖς [w] ἔνδοξοι, ἡμεῖς δὲ [x] ἄτιμοι·

n 2 Tim. ii. 12.
o See iii. 18, and note below.
p In this sense, xv. 8; Matt. xix. 30; Mk. ix. 35; Luke xiv. 9 f.; Jo. viii. 9.
q 2 Th. ii. 4; Acts ii. 22, xxv. 7. -ξις, ii. 4.
r H.l.
s N.T. h.l. in this sense; see Acts xix. 29, 31.
t See i. 25.
u x. 15; 2 Cor. xi. 19; Rom. xi. 25, xii. 16; Matt. vii. 24, x. 16, xxv. 2 ff.; Lk. xvi. 8.
v See i. 25.
w Eph. v. 27; Luke vii. 25, xiii. 17; LXX passim.
x xii. 23; Mt. xiii. 57; Mk. vi. 4; Isa. liii. 3.

[1] δοκω γαρ, ο Θεος, without οτι: all pre-Syrian uncc.

charisms in xii. appear to justify this consciousness of wealth; but ostentation corrupted Cor. riches; spiritual satiety is a sign of arrested growth: contrast Phil. iii. 10-14, and cf. Rev. iii. 17, "Thou sayest, ὅτι Πλούσιός εἰμί καὶ πεπλούτηκα". The climax of this sad irony is χωρὶς ἡμῶν ἐβασιλεύσατε (aor. again), "Without us (without our help) you have come to your kingdom!"—"Gradatio: saturi, divites, reges" (Bg.). Paul was given to understand, by some Cor., that they had outgrown his teaching: "Then," he says, "you have surely entered the promised kingdom and secured its treasures, if God's stewards have nothing more to impart to you!—I only wish you had!" so he continues in the words καὶ ὄφελόν γε κ.τ.λ., "Ay, I would indeed that you had entered the kingdom, that we too might share it with you!" It is Paul's sigh for the end.—Βασιλεύω (see parls.) can only relate to the βασιλεία Θεοῦ, the Messianic reign (20, vi. 9 f., xv. 50; N.T. passim; cf. Luke xxii. 28 ff.; vi. 2 f. below; the judicial assumptions of the Cor., in 3 ff., square with this); and the aor. in vbs. of "state" is inceptive (Br. § 41)—not "you reigned," but "became kings" (ἐβασιλεύσατε). This, of course, can only come about when Christ returns (see i. 7, 9, and notes); then His saints will share His glory (2 Tim. ii. 10).—ὄφελον (losing its augm.) is in N.T. and later Gr. practically an adv.; it marks, with following ind. past, an impracticable wish (Wr., p. 377); γε (to be sure) accentuates the personal feeling. Πλουτέω, βασιλεύω remind us again of Stoic pretensions; see note, iii. 22.

Ver. 9 gives reason in Paul's sorrowful state for the wish that has escaped him. δοκῶ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς κ.τ.λ. (ὅτι vanting after δοκῶ, as in vii. 40; so in Eng.): "For, methinks, God has exhibited (spectandos proposuit, Bz.) us, the apostles, last"—at the end of the show, in the meanest place (for the use of ἔσχατος, cf. Mark ix. 35; for the sentiment, xv. 19 below)—"as (men) doomed to death". One imagines a grand procession, on some day of public festival; in its rear march the criminals on their way to the arena, where the populace will be regaled with their sufferings. Paul's experience in Ephesus suggests the picture (cf. xv. 32); that of 2 Cor. ii. 14 is not dissimilar. "The app." (cf. ix. 1, xv. 5 ff.), not P. alone, are set in this disgrace: Acts i.-xii. illustrates what is said; possibly recent (unrecorded) sufferings of prominent missionaries gave added point to the comparison. Ἀπο-δείκνυμι (to show-off) takes its disparaging sense from the connexion, like δειγματίζω in Col. ii. 15. ἐπιθανατίους (later Gr.) = ἐπὶ τ. θάνατον ὄντας.—ὅτι θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν τῷ κόσμῳ does not give the reason for the above ἀπόδειξις, but re-affirms the fact with a view to bring forward the spectators; this clause apposed to the foregoing, in which ὅτι was implicit: "Methinks God has set forth us the app. last, as sentenced to death,—that we have been made a spectacle to the world," etc. Hf. would read ὅ,τι θέατρον, "which spectacle," etc.—a tempting constr., suiting the lively style of the passage; but ὅστις occurs as adj. nowhere in the N.T. (unless, possibly, in Heb. ix. 9), and rarely at all in Gr. θέατρον "may mean the place, spectators, actors, or spectacle: the last meaning is the one used here, and the rarest" (Lt.). "To the world:" so Peter, e.g., at Jerus., Paul in the great Gentile capitals. "Both to angels and men" extends the ring to include those invisible watchers—"καί singles them out for special attention" (Lt.)—of whose presence the Ap. was aware (see xi. 10, and other parls.); angels, as such, in contrast with men,—not the good or bad y xi. 26, xv. 25; 11 times besides in P.; freq. in Acts and Rev.

11. [y] ἄχρι [z] τῆς [z] ἄρτι ὥρας καὶ [a] πεινῶμεν καὶ [a b] διψῶμεν καὶ [c] γυμνητεύομεν,[1] καὶ [d] κολαφιζόμεθα, καὶ [e] ἀστατοῦμεν, 12. καὶ [f] κοπιῶμεν [g] ἐργαζόμενοι ταῖς ἰδίαις [g] χερσί· [h] λοιδορούμενοι [i] εὐλοz Art. with αρτι, h.l. Cf. εως αρτι, 13; also ο νυν καιρος, Rom. iii. 26, etc. a xi. 21, 34; Phil. iv. 12; Lk. i. 53, vi. 21, 25. πειν. κ. διψ, Rom. xii. 20; Matt. v. 6, xxv. 35 ff.; Rev. vii. 16; Jo. vi. 35. b διψαω (alone), Jo. xix. 28. λιμος κ. διψος, 2 Cor. xi. 27. c H.l.; Dio Chrys. xxv. 3. d 2 Cor. xii. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 20; Matt. xxvi. 67. e H.l. αστατος in Arist. and later Gr. f In lit. use, Eph. iv. 28; 2 Tim. ii. 6; Acts xx. 35; Matt. vi. 28; Luke v. 5. g Eph. iv. 28; 1 Thess. iv. 11; Wisd. xv. 17; εργαζομαι (absolute) is fairly common. h 1 Pet. ii. 23; Acts xxiii. 4; Jo. ix. 28. i Absolutely, xiv. 16; Rom. xii. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 9.

[1] γυμνιτευομεν: all uncc. but L (B*D* -νειτ-). From γυμνιτης, Wr., p. 114.

angels specifically (cf. note on vi. 3). Eph. iii. 10 f. intimates that the heavenly Intelligences learn while they watch.

Ver. 10 represents the contrasted case of the App. and the Cor. Christians, as they appear in the estimate of the two parties. "We" are μωροί, ἀσθενεῖς, ἄτιμοι (cf. i. 18-27, iii. 18, and notes; with ii. 3, for ἀσθ.); "you," φρόνιμοι, ἰσχυροί, ἔνδοξοι—the last adj. in heightened contrast to ἄτιμοι; not merely honoured (ἔντιμοι, Phil. ii. 29), but glorious—P. reflects on the relatively "splendid" (Luke vii. 25) worldly condition of the Cor. as compared with his own. μωροὶ διὰ Χριστόν, "fools because of Christ" (cf. Matt. v. 11)—who makes us so, sends us with a "foolish" message (i. 23). Distinguish διά (ix. 23, 2 Cor. iv. 11, etc.) from ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, which means "on Christ's behalf," as representing Him (2 Cor. v. 20, etc.). The Ap. does not call the Cor. σοφοί (see iii. 18), but, with a fine discrimination, φρόνιμοι ἐν Χριστῷ (prudentes in Christo); he appeals to them as such in x. 15, 2 Cor. xi. 19—the epithet was one they affected; writing at Cor., he is perhaps thinking of them in Rom. xi. 25, xii. 16. The φρόνιμος is the man of sense—no fanatic, rushing to extremes and affronting the world needlessly: this Church is on dangerously good terms with the world (viii. 10, x. 14-33, cf. 2 Cor. vi. 14-vii. 1); see Introd., pp. 731 f.; "Christum et prudentiam carnis miscere vellent" (Cv.). They deem themselves "strong" in contrast with the "feeble in faith" (Rom. xiv. 1), with whom P. associates himself (ix. 22, etc.), able to "use the world" (vii. 31) and not hampered by weak-minded scruples (vi. 12, x. 23, viii.; see note on iii. 22). In the third clause P. reverses the order of prons. (you . . . we), returning to the description of his own mode of life. The ἀγενής (i. 28) is without the birth qualifying for public respect, the ἄτιμος (see parls.) is one actually deprived of respect—in cl. Gr., disfranchised.

Vv. 11, 12*a*. ἄχρι τῆς ἄρτι ὥρας . . . ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶν describes the ἄτιμοι, reduced to this position by the world's contempt and with no means of winning its respect—a life at the farthest remove from that of the Gr. gentleman. The despicableness of his condition touches the Ap. New features are added to this picture in 2 Cor. xi. 23-33. On ἄρτι, see note to ἤδη, ver. 8; cf. ver. 13.—Hunger, thirst, ill-clothing—the common accompaniments of poverty; blows, homelessness, manual toil—specific hardships of Paul's mission. The sentences are pl.: all Christian missionaries (9) shared in these sufferings, P. beyond others (xv. 10).—γυμνιτεύω (later Gr.) denotes light clothing or armour; cf. γυμνός, Matt. xxv. 36, Jas. ii. 15 (ill-clad).—κολαφίζω (see parls.), to fisticuff, extended to physical violence generally—sometimes lit. true in Paul's case.—ἀστατέω, to be unsettled, with no fixed home—to Paul's affectionate nature the greatest of privations, and always suspicious in public repute—to be a vagrant. On ἐργαζ. τ. ἰδ. χερσίν—at Eph. now (Acts xx. 34), at Cor. formerly (Acts xviii. 3)—see note, ix. 6; manual labour was particularly despised amongst the ancients: "Non modo labore meo victum meum comparo, sed manuario labore et sordido" (Cv.).

Vv. 12*b*, 13. Beside their abject condition (11, 12*a*), the world saw in the meekness of the App. the marks of an abject spirit, shown in the three particulars of λοιδορούμενοι . . . παρακαλοῦμεν: "id mundus spretum putat" (Bg.).—λοιδορ. (reviled to our faces) implies insulting abuse, δυσφημούμενοι (defamed) injurious abuse: for the former, cf. 1 Peter ii. 23.—διωκόμενοι ἀνεχόμεθα, "persecuted, we bear with (lit. put-up with) it"—implying patience, while ὑπομένω (xiii. 7, etc.) implies courage in the sufferer. The series of ptps. is pr., denoting habitual treatment—not "when" but "while we are reviled," etc.—εὐλογοῦμεν . . . παρακαλοῦμεν: to revilings γοῦμεν, [k] διωκόμενοι [l] ἀνεχόμεθα, 13. [m] βλασφημούμενοι[1] [n] παρακαλοῦμεν· ὡς [o] περικαθάρματα[2] τοῦ κόσμου ἐγενήθημεν, πάντων [p] περίψημα, [q] ἕως [q] ἄρτι.

14. Οὐκ [r] ἐντρέπων ὑμᾶς γράφω ταῦτα, ἀλλ' ὡς τέκνα μου k xv. 9; 2 Cor. iv. 9; Rom. xii. 14; Gal. i. 13; Phil. iii. 6; 2 Tim. iii. 12; Rev. xii. 13; Acts vii. 52, etc.; Matt. v. 10, etc. l Absol., 2 Cor. xi. 4, 20. m δυσφ., N.T. h.l.; 1 Macc. vii. 41. δυσφημια, 2 Cor. vi. 8. n Absol., 2 Cor. v. 20; Rom. xii. 8; 2 Tim. iv. 2; Tit. i. 9; Luke iii. 18. o H.l.; Prov. xxi. 18. p H.l.; Tobit v. 19; Ignatius ad Eph. viii. 1, xviii. 1. q viii. 7, xv. 6; Mt. xi. 12; four times in John. r Active, h.l.; cf. 2 Thess. iii. 14; Tit. ii. 8; Heb. xii. 9, etc. εντροπη, see vi. 5. s 17, x. 14, xv. 58, and frequently in P.; Heb. vi. 19; Jas. i. 16, etc.; 1 Jo., passim; 1 Pet. ii. 11, iv. 12; 2 Pet. iii. and Jude, αγαπ. For τεκνα, in P., 2 Cor. vi. 13; Gal. iv. 19; Phil. ii. 22; 1 Thess. ii. 7, 11; 1 Tim. i. 2, 18; 2 Tim. ii. 1; Tit. i. 4; Phm. 10.

[1] δυσφημουμενοι, ℵ*ACP 17.
βλασφημ., ℵcBDG, etc., latt. vg.—Western and Syrian emendation.
[2] ωσπερει καθαρματα, G and six minuscc.

they retort with blessings, to calumnies with benevolent exhortation; "they beg men not to be wicked, to return to a better mind, to be converted to Christ" (Gd.); cf. the instructions of Luke vi. 27 ff. "It is on this its positive side that" Christian meekness "surpasses the abstention from retaliation urged by Plato" (Crit., p. 49: Ed.).—ὡς περικαθάρματα τοῦ κόσμου . . . πάντων περίψημα (from περι-καθαίρω, -ψάω respectively, to cleanse, wipe all round, with -μα of result): the ne plus ultra of degradation; they became "as rinsings of the world,—a scraping of all things" (purgamenta et ramentum, Bz.),—the filth that one gets rid of through the sink and the gutter.

The above terms may have a further significance: "the Ap. is carrying on the metaphor of ἐπιθανατίους above. Both περικαθ. and περίψ. were used esp. of those condemned criminals of the lowest class who were sacrificed as expiatory offerings, as scapegoats in effect, because of their degraded life. It was the custom at Athens to reserve certain worthless persons who in case of plague, famine, or other visitations from heaven, might be thrown into the sea, in the belief that they would 'cleanse away,' or 'wipe off,' the guilt of the nation" (Lt.). περικάθαρμα (for the earlier κάθαρμα) occurs in this sense in Arr.-Epict., III., xxii., 78; also in Prov. xxi. 11 (LXX). This view is supported by Hesychius, Luther, Bg., Hn., Ed.; rejected, as inappropriate, by Er., Est., Cv., Bz., Mr., Gd., El. Certainly P. does not look on his sufferings as a piaculum; but he is expressing the estimate of "the world," which deemed its vilest fittest to devote to the anger of the Gods. Possibly some cry of this sort, anticipating the "Christiani ad leones" of the martyrdoms, had been raised against P. by the Ephesian populace (cf. xv. 32; also Acts xxii. 22).—ἕως ἄρτι, repeated with emphasis from ver. 11, shows P. to be writing under the smart of recent outrage. With his temper, Paul keenly felt personal indignities.

§ 14. PAUL'S FATHERLY DISCIPLINE, iv. 14-21. All has now been said that can be concerning the Divisions at Cor.—the causes underlying them, and the spirit they manifest and foster in the Church. In their self-complacent, ungrateful thoughts, the Cor. have raised themselves quite above the despised and painful condition of the App. of Christ; "imitabantur filios qui illustrati parum curant humiles parentes—ex saturitate fastidium habebant, ex opulentia insolentiam, ex regno superbiam" (Bg.). The delineation of Paul's state and theirs in the last Section is, in truth, a bitter sarcasm upon the behaviour of the readers; yet P. wishes to admonish, not to rebuke them (14). He states, in a softened tone, the measures he is taking to rectify the evils complained of. His severity springs from the anxious heart of a father (14 f.). Yet in the father's hand, before the paragraph ends, we see again the rod (21).

Ver. 14. Οὐκ ἐντρέπων κ.τ.λ.: "Not (by way of) shaming you do I write this, but admonishing (you) as my children beloved". It is in chiding that the Ap. addresses both the Cor. and Gal. as his "children" (2 Cor. vi. 13, xii. 14, Gal. iv. 19); τέκνον ἀγαπητὸν he applies besides only to Timothy (ver. 17 and 2 Tim. i. 2). Not intentionally here, but in vi. 5 and xv. 34 he does speak πρὸς ἐντροπήν.—τὸ νουθετεῖν (= ἐν νῷ τιθέναι) is the part of a father (Eph. vi. 4), or brother (2 Thess. iii. 15); "the vb. has a lighter meaning than ἐντρέπειν or ἐπιτιμᾶν, and implies

[s] ἀγαπητὰ [t] νουθετῶ.[1] 15. ἐὰν γὰρ [u] μυρίους [v] παιδαγωγοὺς ἔχητε ἐν Χριστῷ, ἀλλʼ οὐ πολλοὺς πατέρας· ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ[2] διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς [w] ἐγέννησα· 16. [x] παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς, [y] μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε. 17. διὰ τοῦτο[3] [z] ἔπεμψα [z] ὑμῖν Τιμόθεον, ὅς ἐστι [a] τέκνον[4] μου[4] [a] ἀγαπητὸν καὶ [a] πιστὸν [a] ἐν [a] Κυρίῳ, ὃς ὑμᾶς [b] ἀναμνήσει τὰς [c] ὁδούς μου τὰς ἐν Χριστῷ,[5] καθὼς [d] πανταχοῦ ἐν [d] πάσῃ

t Rom. xv. 14; Col. i. 28, iii. 16; 1 Thess. v. 12, 14; 2 Thess. iii. 15; Acts xx. 31.
u xiv. 19; Matt. xviii. 24.
v Gal. iii. 24 f.
w Phm. 10; cf. Gal. iv. 19; 1 Thess. ii. 7 f., 11.
x See i. 10.
y xi. 1; Eph. v. 1; 1 Thess. i. 6, ii. 14; Heb. vi. 12. For the vb., 2 Thess. iii. 7, 9.
z Phil. ii. 19; Acts xi. 29; dat. commodi.
a Eph. i. 1; Col. i. 2; Acts xvi. 15. πιστος, see ver. 2. b 2 Cor. vii. 15; 2 Tim. i. 6; Heb. x. 32; Mk. xi. 21, xiv. 72. -σις, xi. 24.
c Pl., Rom. iii. 16, xi. 33; Heb. iii. 10; James i. 8; Rev. xv. 3; Acts ii. 28, xiii. 10; xiv. 16; freq. in O.T. d Acts xvii. 30, xxiv. 3.

[1] νουθετων (?): so ℵACP 17 (Alexandrian, and perhaps Neutral), followed by Tisch., W.H., Tr. marg., Nestle.
νουθετω BDGL, etc., latt. vg.—Western and Syrian.

[2] B om. Ιησου, with several Ff.

[3] (δια τουτο) αυτο (?) ins. ℵ*AP 17, syrp., Euthal.; so Tisch., W.H. marg.
Om. αυτο ℵcBCDGL, etc., syrsch.; W.H. txt., Al., Tr., Nestle. The double pronoun is characteristic of Paul; αυτο might easily be lost through homœoteleuton.

[4] μου τεκνον, ℵABCP 17, 37, Euthal.

[5] Χριστῳ Ιησου, ℵCDb 17, 37, cop. syrp. Euthal.—Alexandrian. κυριῳ Ιησου (om. Χριστῳ): D*G—Western.
Χριστῳ, ABDcLP, etc., syrsch.—Neutral and Syrian.

a monitory appeal to the νοῦς rather than a direct rebuke or censure" (El.).

Ver. 15. Reason for this lighter reproof, where stern censure was due—"For if you should have ten thousand tutors in Christ, yet (you have) not many fathers!" The relation of the ἐποικοδομοῦντες to the θεμέλιον τιθείς (iii. 10) is exchanged for that of the παιδαγωγοὶ to the πατήρ. The παιδαγωγός (boy-leader) was not the schoolmaster, but the home-tutor—a kind of nursery-governor—who had charge of the child from tender years, looking after his food and dress, speech and manners, and when he was old enough taking him to and from school (see Lt. on Gal. iii. 24). This epithet has a touch of disparagement for the readers (cf. Gal. iii. 25); as Or. says (Catena), referring to iii. 1 f., οὐδεὶς ἀνὴρ παιδαγωγεῖται, ἀλλʼ εἴ τις νήπιος καὶ ἀτελής.—μυρίους (xiv. 19) indicates the very many—probably too many—teachers busy in this Church (cf. Jas. iii. 1, and iii. 18 above), in whose guidance the Cor. felt themselves "rich" and Apostolic direction superfluous (8).—ἀλλά (at certe) introduces an apodosis in salient contrast with its protasis: "You may have ever so many nurses, but only one father!" From this relationship "non solum Apollos excluditur, successor; sed etiam comites, Silas et Timotheus" (Bg.): ἐγώ (I and no other) ἐγέννησα ὑμᾶς (cf. Philem. 10, Gal. iv. 19); in the Rabbinical treatise Sanhedrin, f., xix. 2, the like sentiment occurs, "Whoever teaches the son of his friend the law, it is as if he had begotten him"; similarly Philo, de Virtute, p. 1000.—διὰ τ. εὐαγγελίου: cf. 1 Peter i. 23; also i. 18 above, 1 Thess. i. 5, ii. 19; John vi. 63, etc.

Ver. 16. "I beseech you therefore (as your father), be imitators of me." γίνεσθε (pr. impr.) signifies, in moral exhortations, be in effect, show yourselves (cf. Eph. iv. 32, v. 17). μιμηταὶ γίνεσθε demands, beyond μιμεῖσθε, a character formed on the given model. Imitation is the law of the child's life; cf. Eph. v. 1; and for the highest illustration, John v. 17-20. It is one thing to say "I am of Paul" (i. 12), another to tread in Paul's steps. The imitation would embrace, in effect, much of what was described in vv. 9 ff.

Ver. 17. "For this reason"—viz., to help you to imitate me as your father—"I sent to you Timothy, who is a beloved child of mine, and faithful in the Lord". Timothy had left P. before this letter was written, having been sent forward along with Erastus (possibly a Cor., Rom. xvi. 23) to Macedonia (Acts xix. 22), but with instructions, as it now appears, to go forward to Cor.; respecting his ἐκκλησίᾳ [e]διδάσκω. 18. ὡς μὴ ἐρχομένου δέ μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς [f]ἐφυσιώθησάν [g]τινες· 19. ἐλεύσομαι δὲ ταχέως πρὸς ὑμᾶς, [h]ἐὰν ὁ [h]Κύριος [h]θελήσῃ, καὶ [i]γνώσομαι οὐ τὸν [k]λόγον τῶν [f]πεφυσιωμένων ἀλλὰ τὴν [kl]δύναμιν· 20. οὐ γὰρ ἐν [k]λόγῳ ἡ [m]βασιλεία τοῦ [m]Θεοῦ ἀλλ' [l]ἐν [kl]δυνάμει. 21. τί θέλετε; [n]ἐν [n]ῥάβδῳ ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἢ ἐν ἀγάπῃ [o]πνεύματί τε [p]πρᾳότητος[1];

e Of Christian doctrine, Rom. xii. 7; eight times besides in P.; Heb. v. 12; 1 Jo. ii. 27; Gospp. and Acts, passim.

f See ver. 6 above. g In this sense, 2 Cor. iii. 1, x. 2; Gal. i. 7, ii. 12; 1 Tim. i. 6; 7 times in Pastt.; 2 Pet. iii. 9, 16; Jude 4. h James iv. 15; Sir. xxxix. 6. i 2 Cor. ii. 9, xiii. 6; Rom. vii. 7; Gal. ii. 9; Phil. ii. 22, iii. 10; 1 Th. iii. 5; 1 Jo. iii. 16; Rev. ii. 23, etc. k 1 Thess. i. 5; in similar contrasts, 2 Cor. x. 11; Rom. xv. 18; Col. iii. 17; 1 John iii. 18. l See i. 18; 10 times besides in like use in P. For εν δυναμει, xv. 43; 2 Cor. vi. 7; Rom. i. 4, xv. 13, 19; Col. i. 11, 29; 2 Th. i. 11, ii. 9; Mk ix. 1, etc. m vi. 9 f., xv. 50; Rom. xiv. 17; Gal. v. 21; Eph. v. 5; Col. iv. 11; 1 Th. ii. 12; 2 Th. i. 5; Rev. xii. 10; Mark, Luke, Acts, passim. n Rev. ii. 27, xii. 5, xix. 15; Isa. x. 24. o In like use, 2 Cor. iv. 13; Rom. viii. 15, xi. 8 (Isa. xxix. 10); Gal. vi. 1; Eph. i. 17, etc. p 2 Cor. x. 1; six times besides in P.; James i. 21, iii. 13; 1 Pet. iii. 15; Ps. xliv. 4.

[1] πραυτητος, ABC 17. So commonly, in oldest copies; see Wr., p. 48.

visit, see notes to xvi. 10 f. The Cor. had heard already (through Erastus ?) of Timothy's coming; P. does not announce the fact, he explains it: "This is why I have sent T. to you"; to the τέκνα ἀγαπητά (14) P. sends a τέκνον ἀγαπητόν (see Phil. ii. 19-22), adding καὶ πιστὸν ἐν Κυρ., since it was a trusty agent, one "faithful in the Lord"—in the sphere of Christian duty—that the commission required. For ἐν Κυρίῳ, see parls., esp. Eph. vi. 21, Col. iv. 7; πιστὸς τῷ Κυρίῳ (Acts xvi. 15) denotes a right relationship to Christ, πιστὸς ἐν Κυρίῳ includes responsibility for others.—"Who will remind you of my ways, that are in Christ" (τὰς ὁδούς μου τὰς ἐν Χριστῷ); the adjunct is made a definition by the repeated art. ἀναμιμνήσκω with double acc., like ὑπομιμν. in John xiv. 26, combines our remind (a person) and recall (a thing). Paul's "ways" had been familiar in Cor. (cf. Acts xx. 31-35; also 2 Cor. i. 12 ff.), but seemed forgotten; the παιδαγωγοὶ had crowded out of mind the πατήρ. He means by ὁδοί μου habits of life to be copied (16)—the ἀγωγὴ of 2 Tim. iii. 10 f.—not doctrines to be learnt; see further ix. 19-27, x. 33-xi. 1, 2 Cor. vi. 4-10, x. 1. For ἐν Χριστῷ, see note on ἐν Χ. 'Ι., i. 2. In Paul's gentler qualities Tim. would strongly recall him to the Cor., by conduct even more than words.—"According as" (not how) "I teach"—in accordance with my teaching. Paul's ways and teaching are not the same thing; but the former are regulated by the latter; they will find the same consistency in Tim. "(As I teach) everywhere, in every Church:" the "ways" P. and Tim. observe, and to which the Cor. must be recalled, are those inculcated uniformly in the Gentile mission; see i. 2 (σὺν πᾶσι . . . ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, and notes), also xi. 16, xiv. 33.

Vv. 18, 19. ὡς μὴ ἐρχομένου δέ μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐφυσιώθησάν τινες: "Some however have been puffed up, under the idea that I am not coming to (visit) you". The contrastive δὲ points to a group of inflated persons (cf. 6, v. 2, viii. 2) hostile to Paul's "ways". The wish was father to the thought, which was suggested to "some" by the fact of Timothy's coming. They bore themselves more insolently as not fearing correction;—or did they imagine that Paul is afraid of them! Amongst these, presumably, were mischievous teachers (iii. 11-17) who had swelled into importance in Paul's absence, partisans who magnified others to his damage and talked as though the Church could now fairly dispense with him (3, 6, 8, 15). On ὡς with ptp., see Bn. § 440 f., or Goodwin's Syntax, or Grammar, ad rem; cf. note on ὡς μὴ λαβών, ver. 7, also 2 Cor. v. 20, 2 Pet. i. 3: "because (as they suppose) I am not coming". The aor. ἐφυσιώθησαν points to the moment when they heard, to their relief, of Timothy's coming. δὲ is postponed in the order of the sentence to avoid separating the closely linked opening words (Wr., pp. 698 f.)—"But (despite their presumption) I shall come speedily, if the Lord will". They say, "He is not coming; he sends Tim. instead!" he replies, "Come I will, and that soon" (see xvi. 8, and note).—ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος θελήσῃ (see parls.), varied to ἐπιτρέψῃ in xvi. 7; the aor. sbj. refers the "willing" to the (indeterminate) time of the visit. "The Lord" is Christ; that θέλω and θέλημα (see note

V. 1. [a]Ὅλως [b]ἀκούεται ἐν ὑμῖν [c]πορνεία, καὶ [d]τοιαύτη πορνεία [d]ἥτις οὐδὲ [e]ἐν τοῖς [e]ἔθνεσιν ὀνομάζεται,[1] ὥστε [f]γυναῖκά τινα τοῦ a vi. 7, xv. 29; Matt. v. 34.

b Mk. ii. 1; see note below.
c In like connexion, Matt. v. 34; Gen. xxxviii. 24; see vi. 13, 18.
d Cf. Heb. ii. 3.
e Rom. i. 13, ii. 24; Gal. i. 16, ii. 2; Col. i. 27; 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 12; Acts xv. 12, xxi. 19.
f vii. 2, 29; Mt. xiv. 4, xxii. 28; Deut. xxviii. 30.

[1] Om. ονομαζεται all uncc. but ℵcLP, and all oldest verss. but syrr.—Added by Syrian emendation.

on xii. 11) are elsewhere referred by P. to God (Mr.) is no sufficient reason for diverting ὁ Κύρ. from its distinctive sense (cf. 17 above, and note on i. 31). Christ determines the movements of His servants (1; cf. 1 Thess. iii. 11, Acts xvi. 7, xviii. 9, etc.).

"And I shall know (take cognisance of) not the word of those that are puffed up (pf. pass. ptp., of settled state), but their power." "γνώσομαι: verbum judiciale; paternam ostendit potestatem" (Bg.). High-flown pretensions P. ignores; he will test their "power," and estimate each man (he is thinking mainly of the ἐποικοδομοῦντες of chap. iii.) by what he can do, not say. The "power" in question is that belonging to "the kingdom of God" (i. 18, 24, ii. 4).

Ver. 20. "For not in word (lies) the kingdom of God, but in power:" another of Paul's religious maxims (see note on i. 29), repeated in many forms: cf. 2 Cor. x. 11, xiii. 3 f., etc. The βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ always (even in Rom. xiv. 17) bears ref. to the final Messianic rule (see vi. 9 f., xv. 24, 50); the "power of God" called it into being and operates in every man who truly serves it. That Divine realm is not built up by windy words. To the same test P. offers himself in 2 Cor. xiii. 1-10. For εἶναι (understood) ἐν, see ii. 5 and note.

Ver. 21. τί θέλετε; "What is your will?"—what would you have? τί a sharper πότερον; the latter only once (John vii. 17) in N.T.—"With a rod am I to come to you? or in love and a spirit of meekness?" ἐν ῥάβδῳ (= ἐν κολάσει, ἐν τιμωρίᾳ, Cm.) is sound Gr. for "armed with a rod" (cf. Sir. xlvii. 4, ἐν λίθῳ; Lucian, Dial. Mort., xxiii. 3, καθικόμενος ἐν τ. ῥάβδῳ; add Heb. ix. 25, 1 John v. 6)—the implement of paternal discipline (14) called for by the behaviour of "some" (18).

There is reason, however, in the stern note of this question, for connecting it with ch. v. 1 (so Oec., Cv., Bz., Hf.). P. is approaching the subject of the following Section, which already stirs his wrath. For the sbj. of the dubitative question, ἔλθω, see Wr., p. 356: ἐν ὑμῖν τὸ πρᾶγμα κεῖται (Cm.).—ἐν ἀγάπῃ κ.τ.λ. (ἔλθω); cf. 2 Cor. ii. 1; the constr. of ii. 3 above is somewhat diff. (see note). πνεύματί τε πραΰτητος defines the particular expression of love in which P. desires to come: cf. xiii. 6 f. The Ap. does not mean the Holy Spirit here specifically, though the thought of Him is latent in every ref. to the "spirit" of a Christian man. Πραΰτης (cf. 2 Cor. x. 1) is the disposition most opposed to, and exercised by, the spirit of the conceited and insubordinate τινὲς at Cor.

Division II. Questions of Social Morals, v.-vii. The Ap. has done with the subject of the Parties, which had claimed attention first because they sprung from a radical misconception of Christianity. But in this typical Hellenic community, social corruptions had arisen which, if not so universal, were still more malignant in their effect. The heathen converts of Cor., but lately washed from the foulest vice (vi. 9 ff.), were some of them slipping back into the mire (2 Cor. xii. 21). An offence of incredible turpitude had just come to the Apostle's ears, to the shame of which the Church appeared indifferent (v.). This case, demanding instant judicial action (1-5), leads the Ap. to define more clearly the relation of Christians to men of immoral life, as they may be found within or without the Church (6-13). From sins of uncleanness he passes in ch. vi. to acts of injustice committed in this Church, which, in one instance at least, had been scandalously dragged before the heathen law-courts (1-8). In vi. 12-20 P. returns to the prevalent social evil of Cor., and launches his solemn interdict against fornication, which was, seemingly, sheltered under the pretext of Christian liberty! It is just here, and in the light of the principles now developed, that P. takes up the question of marriage or celibacy, discussed at large in ch. vii. The fact that the Ap. turns at this juncture to the topics raised in the Church Letter, and that ch. vii. is headed with the πατρὸς [f] ἔχειν· 2. καὶ ὑμεῖς [g] πεφυσιωμένοι ἐστέ; καὶ οὐχὶ μᾶλλον [h] ἐπενθήσατε, ἵνα [i] ἐξαρθῇ[1] [k] ἐκ [k] μέσου ὑμῶν ὁ τὸ [l] ἔργον τοῦτο ποιήσας[2]; 3. ἐγὼ [m] μὲν [m] γὰρ ὡς[3] [n] ἀπὼν τῷ [o] σώματι, [n] παρὼν δὲ τῷ [o] πνεύματι, ἤδη [p] κέκρικα ὡς [n] παρὼν τὸν οὕτω τοῦτο [q] κατερ-

g See iv. 6. h 2 Cor. xii. 21; James iv. 9; Rev. xviii. 11 ff.; Mt. v. 4, ix. 15; Mk. xvi. 10; Lk. vi. 25. i Col. ii. 14; Mk. xiii. 15; Jo. xvii. 15, xxi. f. k 2 Cor. vi. 17 (Isa. lii. 11); Col. ii. 14; 2 Thess. ii. 7; Acts xvii. 33, xxiii. 10; Mt. xiii. 49. l In this sense, Mt. xxiii. 3; Lk. xi. 48; Jo. viii. 41. m See xi. 18. n 2 Cor. x. 1 f., 11, xiii. 2, 10; Phil. i. 27; Col. ii. 5. o vii. 34; Rom. viii. 10; Eph. iv. 4; 1 Thess. v. 23. p Pf., vii. 37. See ii. 2. q In like sense, Rom. i. 27, ii. 9, vii. 8 ff.

[1] αρθη: all uncc. but L.

[2] πραξας (?), ℵAC, several good minn.; so Tisch., W.H., Nestle. Latt. gessit. ποιησας, BDGLP, etc. (vg. fecit)—probably Western and Syrian. So Treg., El., R.V.

[3] Om. ως (απων) ℵABCD*P 17, 37, vg., syr^sch. cop.

formula Περὶ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοι, must not be allowed to break the strong links of subject-matter and thought binding it to chh. v. and vi. Its connexion with the foregoing context is essential, with the following comparatively accidental.

§ 15. THE CASE OF INCEST, v. 1-8. About the party-strifes at Cor. P. has been informed by the members of a particular family (i. 11); the monstrous case of incest, to which he turns abruptly and without any preface (cf. i. 10), is notorious.

Ver. 1. Ὅλως ἀκούεται κ.τ.λ.: "There is actually fornication heard of amongst you!" No wonder that the father of the Church is compelled to show the "rod" (iv. 21). Not ἀκούω, as in xi. 18, but the impersonal ἀκούεται (cf. ἠκούσθη, Mark ii. 1), indicating common report in the Church (ἐν ὑμῖν),—and (ὅλως: see parls.) undoubted fact.—Πορνεία signifies any immoral sexual relation, whether including (as in Matt. v. 32) or distinguished from (Matt. xv. 19) μοιχεία.

The sin is branded as of unparalleled blackness by the description, καὶ τοιαύτη πορνεία ἥτις κ.τ.λ.: "Yes, and a fornication of such sort"—the καί climactic—"as (there is) not even among the Gentiles!" While mere πορνεία was excused—not to say approved—in heathen society, even by strict moralists, such foulness was abominated. Of this crime the loose Catullus says (76. 4): "Nam nihil est quidquam sceleris quo prodeat ultra"; and Cicero, pro Cluent., 6, 15: "scelus incredibile, et præter hanc unam in omni vita inauditum"; Euripides' Hippolytus speaks for Gr. sentiment. Greek and Roman law both stamped it with infamy; for Jewish law, see Lev. xviii. 7 f., Deut. xxi 30. also Gen. xlix. 4.—ἥτις, of quality (as in iii. 17), in place of the regular correlative οἷα (xv. 48). Neither ὀνομάζεται (T.R.) nor ἀκούεται is understood in the ellipsis, simply ἐστίν—"such as does not exist"; the exceptional heathen instances are such as to prove the rule. The actual sin is finally stated: ὥστε γυναῖκά τινα κ.τ.λ., "as that one (or a certain one) should have a wife of his father".—ἥτις defines the quality, ὥστε (with inf.) the content and extent of the πορνεία.—γυν. τοῦ πατρός (instead of μητρυίαν) is the term of Lev. xviii. 8. ἔχειν indicates a continued association, whether in the way of formal marriage or not; nor does ἔργον (2), nor κατεργασάμενον (3), make clear this latter point. That "the father" was living is not proved by the ἀδικηθεὶς of 2 Cor. vii. 12; P. can hardly have referred to this foul immorality in the language of 2 Cor. ii. 5-11, vii. 8-12; the "grief" and "wrong" of those passages are probably quite diff. The woman was not a Christian, for Paul passes no sentence upon her; see ver. 13.

Ver. 2. What are the Cor. doing under this deep disgrace? Not even grieving. Καὶ ὑμεῖς πεφυσιωμένοι ἐστέ; κ.τ.λ.: "And are you (still) puffed up? and did you not rather mourn?" For the grammatical force of πεφυσ. ἐστέ, see parls. in i. 10, iv. 8; and for the vb., note to iv. 6. P. confronts the pride of the Cor. Church with this crushing fact; no intellectual brilliance, no religious enthusiasm, can cover this hideous blot: "argumentatur a contrario, ubi enim luctus est, cessit gloria" (Cv.). The ver. is best read interrogatively, in view of the οὐχὶ in 2nd clause (cf. i. 20), and in Paul's expostulatory style (cf. iv. 7 f.).—ἐπενθήσατε (see parls.) connotes funeral γασάμενον, 4. ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου [r] ἡμῶν [1] Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,[2] [r] συναχθέντων ὑμῶν καὶ οὗ [s] ἐμοῦ [s] πνεύματος σὺν τῇ [t] δυνάμει τοῦ [t] Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,[3] 5. [u] παραδοῦναι [v] τὸν [v] τοιοῦτον τῷ [u] [w] Σατανᾷ εἰς [x] ὄλεθρον τῆς [y] σαρκός, ἵνα τὸ [y] πνεῦμα σωθῇ ἐν τῇ

r H.I. for Epp.; in Gospp. and Acts, passim. s With pron., xiv. 14, xvi. 18; 2 Cor. ii. 13, vii. 13; Rom. i. 9; Gal. vi. 18; Phil. iv. 23; Phm. 25; 2 Tim. iv. 22; Mk. ii. 8, viii. 12; Luke i. 47, viii. 55. t 2 Cor. xii. 9; 2 Pet. i. 16; Lk. v. 17. u In this sense, 1 Tim. i. 20. v Ver. 11, vii. 15, 28, xvi. 16, 18; 12 times besides in P.; 3 Jo. 8; Mt. xix. 14; Ac. xxii. 22. w vii. 5; 2 Cor. ii. 11, xi. 14, xii. 7; Rom. xvi. 20; 1 T . ii. 18; 2 Th. ii. 9; 1 Tim. i. 20, v. 15; Gospp. and Rev., passim. x 1 Th. v. 3; 2 Th. i. 9; 1 Tim. vi. 9; Prov. xxi. 7. y 2 Cor. vii. 1; Rom. i. 3 f.; Col. ii. 5; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Heb. xii. 9; M . xxvi. 41.

[1] Om. ημων all uncc. but P.

[2] Om. Χριστου ABD*; most critical edd. Copyists are apt to complete the name.

[3] Om. Χριστου ℵABDP 46.

mourning—over "a brother dead to God, by sin, alas! undone;" the tense signifies "going into mourning"—"breaking out in grief" (Ev.) when you heard of it. Of such grief the fit sequel is expressed by ἵνα ἀρθῇ ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν, "that he should be removed from your midst, who so perpetrated this deed". This is the later Gr. "sub-final" ἵνα, of the desired result: see Wr., p. 420; Bm., p. 237; cf. xiv. 12 f.—πράξας, as distinguished from ποιήσας (T.R.), implies quality in the action (see parls.).

Vv. 3-5. The removal of the culprit is, in any case, a settled matter: ἐγὼ μὲν γάρ, "For I at least" . . . ἤδη κέκρικα, "have already decided"—without waiting till you should act or till I could come. For ἤδη see note, iv. 8; κέκρικα, pf. of judgment that has determinate effect.—μέν solitarium—"I indeed (whatever you may do)".—ἀπὼν τῷ σώματι παρὼν δὲ τῷ πνεύματι, "while absent in the body yet present in the spirit": by absence the Ap. might seem disqualified for judging (cf. 2 Cor. xii. 20-xiii. 2); he declares that he is spiritually present, so present to his inmost consciousness are the facts of the case; cf. Col. ii. 5. "St. Paul's spirit, illumined and vivified, as it unquestionably was, by the Divine Spirit, must have been endowed on certain occasions with a more than ordinary insight into the state of a Church at a distance" (Ev.; cf. John i. 48; 2 Kings v. 26): "I have already passed sentence, as one present, on him that has so wrought this thing". ὡς παρὼν means "as being present," not "as though present"—which rendering virtually surrenders the previous ἀπών . . . παρὼν δέ.—κατεργάζομαι, to work out, consummate (see parls.); the qualifying οὕτως probably refers to the man's being a Christian (cf. 12 f.)—"under these conditions" (cf. iii. 16 f., vi. 15).

The judgment already determined in the Apostle's mind is delivered in ver. 5, supplying a further obj. (of the thing ; cf. for the construction, Acts xv. 38) to κέκρικα: "I have already judged him . . . (have given sentence), in the name of our Lord Jesus, to deliver him that is such (τὸν τοιοῦτον) to Satan for destruction of his flesh, that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus". The clauses of ver. 4, with their solemn, rounded terms, make fit way for this awful sentence; "graviter suspensa manet et vibrat oratio usque ad ver. 5" (Bg.). The prp. phrases ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τ. κυρ. Ἰ., σὺν τ. δυνάμει τ. κυρ. ἡμῶν Ἰ., may be connected, either of them or both, with παραδοῦναι or with the subordinate συναχθέντων; and the four combinations thus grammatically possible have each found advocates. The order of words and balance of clauses, as well as intrinsic fitness of connexion, speak for the attachment of the former adjunct to παραδ. Σατ., the latter to συναχθ. ὑμῶν: so Luther, Bg., Mr., Al., Ev., Bt., El. "In the name of the Lord Jesus" every Church act is done, every word of blessing or banning uttered; that Name must be formally used when doom is pronounced in the assembly (see parls.). The gen. abs. clause is parenthetic, supplying the occasion and condition precedent (aor. ptp.) of the public sentence; all the responsible parties must be concurrent: "when you have assembled together, and my spirit, along with the power of our Lord Jesus". Along with the gathered assembly, under Paul's unseen directing influence, a third Supreme Presence is necessary to make the sentence valid; the Church associates itself

[a] ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ [a] Κυρίου[1] [z] Ἰησοῦ.[1] 6. οὐ [a] καλὸν τὸ [b] καύχημα ὑμῶν· [c] οὐκ [c] οἴδατε ὅτι [d] μικρὰ [de] ζύμη [d] ὅλον τὸ [de] φύραμα [de] ζυμοῖ; 7. [f] ἐκκαθάρατε οὖν[2] τὴν [g] παλαιὰν [e] ζύμην, ἵνα ἦτε νέον [e] φύραμα, καθώς ἐστε [h] ἄζυμοι· καὶ γὰρ τὸ [i] πάσχα ἡμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν [1k] ἐτύθη

z See i. 8.
a In like sense, ix. 15; seven times besides in P.; Jas. ii. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 12, Mt. xv. 26, xxvi. 10; Lk. xxi. 5.
b ix. 15 f.; 7 times besides in P.; Heb. iii. 6.
c See iii. 16.
d Gal. v. 9. μικρος, cf. Jas. iii. 5; Mt. xiii. 32.
e Mt. xiii. 33, xvi. 6 ff., and parls. For φυραμα, Rom. ix. 21, xi. 16.
f 2 Tim. ii. 21; Deut. xxvi. 13; Judges vii. 4.
g In like sense, Rom. vi. 6; Eph. iv. 22; Col. iii. 9.
h Mt. xxvi. 17, and parls.; Acts xii. 3, xx. 6; Lev. ii. 4, etc.
i Mt. xxvi. 2, etc. From LXX (Heb. pesach); in 2 Chron. φασεκ. πασχα θυω, Mk. xiv. 12; Lk. xxii. 7.
k x. 20; Acts xiv. 13, 18.

[1] τ. κυρ. ημων Ιησου Χριστου, ACP, minuscc.[15], syrr. cop., many Ff. τ. κυρ. Ι. Χριστου, D Ambrst. Cf. ver. 4, i. 8, and 1 Thess. for Pauline usage.

[2] Om. ουν all uncc. but ℵcCLP; all critical edd.

"with the power" of its Head. Realising that it is clothed therewith, the Cor. Church will deliver the appalling sentence inspired by the absent Ap.—σὺν τῇ δυνάμει κ.τ.λ. is a h.l.; ἐν δυνάμει (ii. 5, etc.) is frequent in P. "Our Lord Jesus" is Christ the Judge (see i. 8).

"Delivering to Satan," in the view of many (including Aug., Cv., Bz., and latterly Hn.), is a synonym for excommunication,—a thrusting out of the condemned into "the kingdom of darkness," where "the god of this world" holds sway (2 Cor. iv. 4, Eph. ii. 2, vi. 12, Col. i. 13, etc.); similarly in 1 Tim. i. 20. But there is no proof that such a formula of excommunication existed either in the Synagogue or the early Church; and the added words, εἰς ὄλεθρον τῆς σαρκός κ.τ.λ., point to some physically punitive and spiritually remedial visitation of the sinner. The σάρξ to be destroyed, it is replied, lies in the man's sinful passions; but these would, presumably, be strengthened rather than destroyed by sending him back to the world. "The flesh," as antithetical to "the spirit" (see parls.), is rather the man's bodily nature; and physical maladies, even death, are ascribed in the N.T. to Satan (2 Cor. xii. 7, Luke xiii. 16, John viii. 44, Heb. ii. 14), while on the other hand affliction is made an instrument of spiritual benefit (ix. 27, xi. 30 ff., 2 Cor. iv. 16 f., xii. 7, 1 Peter iv. 1 f.); moreover, the App. did occasionally, as in the cases of Ananias and Elymas (Acts v., xiii.), pronounce penal sentences in the physical sphere, which took immediate effect on the condemned. It appears certain that P. imposed in this case a severe physical infliction—indeed, if ὄλεθρος is to be pressed (see parls.), a mortal stroke—as the only means of marking the gravity of the crime and saving the criminal. "Il ne faut pas en douter, c'est une condamnation à mort que Paul prononce" (Renan); not however a sudden death, rather "a slow consumption, giving the sinner time to repent" (Gd.). The ejection of the culprit the Church of itself could and must effect (2, 13); for the aggravated chastisement the presence of the Apostle's "spirit," allied "with the power of the Lord Jesus," was necessary.—ὁ Σατανᾶς (Heb. hassatān, Aram. s'tanā: see parls.), "the Adversary," sc. of God and man, to whom every such opportunity is welcome (John viii. 44). That Satan's malignity should be (as one may say) overreached by God's wisdom and mercy (cf. iii. 19) is nothing very wonderful (see 2 Cor. xii. 7, Luke xxii. 31 f., also the temptation of our Lord, and of Job); hate is proverbially blind. On "the day of the Lord," when the ultimate salvation or perdition of each is fixed, see i. 8, Rom. ii. 5-16. That some Cor. afterwards sought proof of Paul's supernatural power goes to show, not that this sentence proved abortive, but rather that the offender averted it by prompt repentance.

Ver. 6. "Your vaunt is not good:" καύχημα, materies gloriandi (cf. αἰσχρὸν κλέος, Eurip., Helena, 135: Mr.), found in the state of the Church, of which the Cor. were proud (iv. 6 ff.) when they ought to have been ashamed.—καλόν, good in the sense of seemly, of fine quality; cf. 2 Cor. viii. 21, John x. 32, etc. For οὐκ οἴδατε . . .; see iii. 16.—The Cor. might reply that the offence, however shameful, was the sin of one man and therefore a little thing; P. retorts, that it is "a little leaven," enough to "leaven the whole kneading": cf. the Parables of Matt. xiii. 33 and Luke xii. 1. A sin so virulent held an indefinite power of corruption; it tainted the entire community. The φύραμα (φυράω, Χριστός· 8. ὥστε [1] ἑορτάζωμεν,[1] μὴ ἐν [e] ζύμῃ [g] παλαιᾷ μηδὲ ἐν [e] ζύμῃ [m] κακίας καὶ [m] πονηρίας, ἀλλ' ἐν [h] ἀζύμοις [n] εἰλικρινείας καὶ [o] ἀληθείας.

l H.l. for vb. εορτη, Col. ii. 16; passim in Gospp.
m Rom. i. 29. κακια, xiv. 20; Eph. iv. 31; Col. iii. 8; Tit. iii. 3; Jas. i. 21; 1 Pet. ii. 1, 16; Acts viii. 22; Mt. vi. 34. πονηρια, Eph. vi. 12; Acts iii. 26; Mt. xxii. 18; Mk. vii. 22; Lk. xi. 39.
n 2 Cor. i. 12, ii. 17; -νης, Phil. i. 10.
o In this sense, 2 Cor. vii. 14, xii. 6; Rom. ix. 1; Eph. iv. 25; Phil. i. 18; 2 Jo. 1; 3 Jo. 1; Acts xxvi. 25; Mk. v. 33.

[1] εορταζομεν, ADP, minuscc.[20]; by itacism.

to mix) is the lump of dough kneaded for a single batch of bread: see parls.

Ver. 7. ἐκκαθάρατε, "Cleanse out"—the aor. implying a summary, and ἐκ- a complete removal (see parls.; for simple καθαίρω, John xv. 2), leaving the Church "clean": an allusion to the pre-Paschal removal of leaven (Exod. xii. 15 ff., xiii. 7). For τ. παλαιὰν ζύμην, cf. Ignatius, ad Magn., 10, τ. κακὴν ζύμην τ. παλαιωθεῖσαν κ. ἐνοξίσασαν, applying, however, to Judaism what here relates to Gentile vice. The "old leaven" (denoting not persons—the incestuous and his like—but influences: see 8) must be cleansed away, "in order that you may be a fresh kneading". νέον, new in point of time (see parls.)—the mass of dough, with the evil ferment removed, kneaded over again. The Cor. are to be clear of the παλαιὰ ζύμη "in accordance with the fact that" (καθώς) they "are ἄζυμοι," a term not used literally—as though the Church was at this (sc. Paschal) season eating unleavened bread: such a παρατήρησις of Jewish law by Gentiles P. would hardly have encouraged (see Gal. iv. 9 ff.)—but morally, in consistency with the allegorical strain of the passage; "in the purpose and command of God, and in their own profession, they are separated from all sin, which is to them what, during the passover week, leaven was to the Jews. This objective use of unleavened corresponds to that of sanctified in i. 2" (Bt.). Cf. the ἤδη καθαροί ἐστε of John xv. 3; and for the general principle, i. 30, vi. 11, Rom. vi. 1-11, etc.

Ver. 8 explains the symbolical ἄζυμοι. Participation in the sacrifice of Christ presumes unleavenedness in the participants; the unleavened bread and the passover are related (objectively) as repentance and faith (subjectively): "For indeed our passover has been slain, even Christ". τὸ πάσχα . . . ἐτύθη (aor., of historical fact)—the Passover Lamb killed, and leaven not yet cast out: what a contradiction! The Law prescribed no exact time, but usage required every scrap of leaven to be got rid of from the house at the beginning (eve) of the day, Nisan 14, on which the Lamb was slain. πάσχα stands for the Paschal Lamb, the sacrifice of which legally constituted the Passover (Mark xiv. 12, cf. John i. 29).

"Our (Christian) passover," cf. Heb. xiii. 10; and for Paul's appropriation to the Church of the things of the Old Covenant, Rom. xi. 17, Gal. iv. 26, vi. 16, Phil. iii. 3. This identification of Christ crucified with the Paschal Lamb lends some support to the view that Jesus died, as the Fourth Gospel appears to represent, on the 14*th Nisan;* but the precise coincidence is not essential to his interpretation. The Pascha (Aram. pascha = Heb. pesach)—in O.T. "Jehovah's Passover"—was the sacrificial covenant-feast of the kingdom of God in Israel. It contained three essential elements: (1) the blood of the victim, sprinkled at the exodus on each house-door, afterwards on the national altar, as an expiation to God (cf. Rom. iii. 25), who "passes over" when He "sees the blood"; (2) the flesh of the lamb, supplying the food of redeemed Israel as it sets out to the Holy Mount and the Promised Land (see x. 16 f., John vi. 32, 51); (3) the continued feast, an act of fellowship, grounded on redemption, between Jehovah and Israel and amongst the Israelites; cf. x. 16-22, xi. 20, and notes.

With the leaven removed and the Passover Lamb slain, "let us keep the feast" (ἑορτάζωμεν, pr. sbj. of continued action)—this term again allegorical not literal (see ἄζυμοι, 7), "a figurative characterisation of the whole Christian conduct of life" (Mr.). ἅπας ὁ βίος αὐτοῦ πανήγυρις ἁγία (Clem. Al., Strom., viii., quoted by Ed.); to the same effect Cm., δείκνυσιν ὅτι πᾶς ὁ χρόνος ἑορτῆς ἐστι καιρὸς τ. Χριστιανοῖς διὰ τ. ὑπερβολὴν τ. ἀγαθῶν αὐτοῖς δοθέντων. διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ ὁ υἱὸς τ. Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος γέγονε καὶ ἐτύθη, ἵνα σε ἑορτάζειν ποιήσῃ; cf., earlier than P., Philo's interpretation of p 2 Cor. vii. 8; Rom. xvi. 22; etc.

9. [o]Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν [p]τῇ [p]ἐπιστολῇ μὴ [q]συναναμίγνυσθαι [r]πόρνοις· 10. καὶ[1] οὐ [s]πάντως τοῖς πόρνοις τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, ἢ τοῖς [t]πλεονέκταις ἢ[2] [u]ἅρπαξιν ἢ [v]εἰδωλολάτραις, [w]ἐπεὶ [x]ὀφείλετε[3] [w]ἄρα

q 2 Th. iii. 14.
r vi. 9; Eph. v. 5; 1 Tim. i. 10; twice in Heb., and in Rev.
s ix. 10, 22, xvi. 12; Rom. iii. 9; 4 times in Acts and Lk.
t vi. 10; Eph. v. 5; -τεω, 2 Cor. ii. 11, vii. 2, xii. 17 f., 1 Th. iv. 6.
u vi. 10; Mt. vii. 15; Lk. xviii. 11; -γη, Mt. xxiii. 25; Heb. x. 34.
v vi. 9, x. 7; Eph. v. 5; Rev. xxi. 8, xxii. 15.
w vii. 14.
x In this tense and sense (ωφειλ), 2 Cor. xii. 11; Heb. ii. 17; Lk. xvii. 10.

[1] Om. και all uncc. but ℵcDcLP.

[2] και (not η before αρπ.), all uncc. but ℵcDbcL.

[3] ωφειλετε, all uncc. but D³P.

the Feast, De migr. Abrah., 16; De congr. quærend. erudit. gratia, 28. For ὥστε with impv., see note on iv. 5.—The ἄζυμα (unleavened cakes), to be partaken of by the ἄζυμοι (7), are described by the attributes εἰλικρινίας καὶ ἀληθείας, "of sincerity and truth"—a sound inward disposition, and a right position in accord with the reality of things. To the forbidden ἐν ζύμῃ παλαιᾷ (see note, 7) is added, by way of closer specification, μηδὲ ἐν ζύμῃ κακίας κ. πονηρίας (malitiæ et nequitiæ)—"κακία the vicious disposition, πονηρία the active exercise of it" (Lt.); see Trench, Syn., § 11. The associations of approaching Easter, probably, suggested this train of thought (cf. xv. 23, ἀπαρχή); nowhere else does P. call Christ "the Pascha".

§ 16. A Previous Letter Misread, v. 9-13. The Cor. Church were taking no action against the offender of § 15; in this neglect they disregarded the Apostle's instructions conveyed by some recent letter. These instructions they appear to have misunderstood, reading them as though Paul forbade Christians to have any dealings with immoral persons, and asking for further explanation. Not improbably, they were making their uncertainty on the general question an excuse for hesitation in this urgent and flagrant case. Accordingly the Ap., after giving sentence upon the πόρνος of vv. 1 f., repeats with all possible distinctness his direction to excommunicate persons of openly immoral life from the Church. Profligates of the world must be left to God's sole judgment. P. felt that there was an evasion, prompted by the disposition to palter with sin, in the misunderstanding reported to him; hence the closing words of the last Section, condemning the "leaven of badness and wickedness" and commending the "unleavened bread of sincerity and truth". On the nature and occasion of the lost letter, see Introd., chap. ii.

Ver. 9. "I wrote to you in the (my) letter"—the last the Cor. had received from P., which is recalled by the matter just discussed. The Ff., except Ambrosiaster (? Hilary of Rome, prob. Isaac, a converted Jew), referred the ἔγραψα to this Ep., reading the vb. as epistolary aorist (as in 11; see Bn. § 44); but there is nothing in 1 Cor. to sustain the ref., and ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ seems "added expressly to guard against this interpretation" (Ed.). Modern expositors, from Cv. downwards, find the traces here of a lost Ep. antecedent to our First; 2 Cor. x. 10 f. intimates that the Cor. had received several letters from P. before the canonical Second. Some have found in 2 Cor. vi. 14-vii. 1 a stray leaf of the missing document; that par. is certainly germane to its purpose (see Hilgenfeld, Einleit. in das N.T., p. 287; Whitelaw, in Classical Review, 1890, pp. 12, 317 f.). The ambiguity lay in the word συναναμίγνυσθαι (to mix oneself up with), which forbids social intimacy, while those who wished to misunderstand took it as a prohibition of all intercourse.

Ver. 10 gives the needful definition of the above injunction. οὐ πάντως is best understood as by Er. (non omnino), Cv. (neque in universum), Mr., Bt., Ed., El., as not absolutely, not altogether, οὐ negativing πάντως and making the inhibition a qualified one: "I did not altogether forbid your holding intercourse with the fornicators of this world". To make the πάντως emphasise the οὐ (as in Rom. iii. 9)—"Assuredly I did not mean to forbid association with fornicators outside the Church" (Lt.)—is to lend the passage the air of recommending association with unconverted profligates!—What applies to one sort of immorality applies to others: ἢ τ. πλεονέκταις καὶ ἅρπαξιν ἢ εἰδωλολάτραις, "or with the covetous and rapacious, or with idolaters". The πλεονεκται (from πλέον and ἔχω: see parls.) are the self-aggrandising in general;

y Eph. i. 21, iii. 15; Mk. iii. 14. z vi. 10; -ρειν, iv. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 23; -ρια, 1 Tim. v. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 9; Prov. xxvi. 21; Sir. xxiii. 8.

ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου ἐξελθεῖν. 11. νυνὶ[1] δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν μὴ [q] συναναμίγνυσθαι ἐάν τις ἀδελφὸς [y] ὀνομαζόμενος ᾖ [r] πόρνος ἢ [t] πλεονέκτης ἢ [v] εἰδωλολάτρης ἢ [z] λοίδορος ἢ [a] μέθυσος ἢ [u] ἅρπαξ, [b] τῷ [b] τοιούτῳ μηδὲ [c] συνεσθίειν· 12. τί γάρ μοι καὶ[2] [d] τοὺς [d] ἔξω κρίνειν; οὐχὶ [e] τοὺς [e] ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε, [d] τοὺς δὲ [d] ἔξω ὁ Θεὸς κρίνει; 13. καὶ[3] [f] ἐξαρεῖτε[4] τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν.

a vi. 10; twice in Prov., and in Sir. b See ver. 5. c Gal. ii. 12; Acts x. 41, xi. 3; Lk. xv. 2; Gen. xliii. 32; Ps. c. 5. d Col. iv. 5; 1 Th. iv. 12; Mk. iv. 11; Prol. to Sirach (εκτος). e H.l.; cf. 2 Cor. iv. 16; Rom. vii. 22; Eph. iii. 16. f N.T. h.l., Deut. xvii. 7, 12, xxiv. 7.

[1] ν υ ν, ℵ[c]ABD[c]GLP; Treg., W.H., Nestle. νυνι, ℵ*CD*[b]; Tisch.

[2] Om. κ α ι all uncc. but DL.

[3] Om. κ α ι all uncc. but D[3]L.

[4] ε ξ α ρ α τ ε: all uncc. but D[3]L (εξαρειτε); see Deut. (parl.).

ἅρπαγες, those who seize with violence; sins of greed are frequent in commercial cities. "Idolaters" (the first appearance of the word in literature: cf. notes on viii. 1 and x. 19) included the entire pagan world; Cor. idolatry was specially associated with sensual sin.—ἐπεὶ . . . ἄρα κ.τ.λ., "since in that case"—the logical consequence of absolute non-intercourse—"you were bound to go out of the world!" — ἑτέραν οἰκουμένην ὠφείλετε ζητῆσαι (Thp.). One could not pursue any avocation at Cor. without daily contact with such sinners. ὠφείλετε, in the impf. tense of the unfulfilled condition (implied in ἄρα); for the omission, common with vbs. of this nature, of the ἂν of contingency, see Wr., p. 382, and cf. Heb. ix. 26. For the principle implied—as against the cloister—see John xvii. 14-19.

Ver. 11. νῦν δὲ ἔγραψα, "But now I have written"—in contrast to the Εγραψα . . . ἐν τῇ ἐπιστ. of ver. 9: "If any one doubted the purport of the former letter, it shall be impossible to mistake my meaning now". The logical (not temporal) sense of νῦν (or νυνί) is preferred by some interpreters: "But now—after this, as things now appear—(you must understand that) I wrote," etc., this ἔγραψα thus repeating the former. Νυνὶ δὲ bears the like emphatic temporal sense in 2 Cor. viii. 11, Eph. ii. 13.—ἐάν τις ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος, "if any one bearing the name of brother"—the point of the amended rule, which P. in writing before had apparently left to the common-sense of his readers, but is compelled to make explicit. So the μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι clearly signifies not to hold fraternal, friendly commerce with vicious men: cf. xv. 33. Such a one may be "named," but is not, "a brother"; cf. Rev. iii. 1.—Among the kinds of sinners proscribed P. now inserts the λοίδορος (see note on iv. 12), the "railer," "reviler"—the foul-mouthed abuser of others; and the μέθυσος, "drunkard"—a word bearing in earlier Gr. a comic sense, tipsy, afterwards seriously used (Lt.): these sins are companions; cf. vi. 10.—τῷ τοιούτῳ μηδὲ συνεσθίειν: "with him that is such (I bid you) not even to eat". The inf. is pr.—of usage, practice; cf. Gal. ii. 12. "Eating together is a sign of friendliness; business transactions are not. If the ref. be restricted to Christian fellowship (sc. the Agapé), the emphatic not even is out of place" (Ed.). To forbid intercourse to this extent implies expulsion from the Church, and more; cf. 2 Thess. iii. 14 f. (milder treatment), Mt. xviii. 17. That it should be possible for an actual "idolater"—not merely one who "sits in an idol's house" (viii. 10) as a place indifferent, or who still in some sort believes in its power (viii. 7)—to be in the Church is evidence of the laxity of Cor. Christianity. That this was really the case, and that some Cor., perhaps of philosophical, semi-pantheistic tendencies, wished to combine the worship of the heathen temple with that of the Christian Church, appears likely from x. 14-22; the same syncretism is found in India now; cf. the case of Naaman, 2 Kings v. 17 f.

Vv. 12, 13. τί γάρ μοι τοὺς ἔξω κ.τ.λ.; "For what business of mine is it (Quid mea refert? Cv.) to judge those that are outside? (Is it) not those within (that) you judge, while those without God judges?" By these questions P. justifies his excluding the impure ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζ. from the communion and social courtesies of a Rom. v. 7; 2 Cor. x. 12; Acts v. 13; Esth. vii. 5; Job xv. 12. b H.l.; Thuc. i. 128; Xen. Mem. ii. 9. 1. c See iv. 6. d In this sense, Rom. iii. 4 (Ps. i. 6); Mt. v. 40; Gen. xxvi. 21; Job xiii. 19, xxxix. 34. e Acts xxiii. 30, xxiv. 19, xxv. 9; Mt. xxviii. 14. f In this sense, ver. 9; cf. αμαρτωλοι, Gal. ii. 15, etc.; απιστοι, ver. 6 below. g In this comprehensive use, xiv. 33, xvi. 1, 15; 2 Cor. viii. 4; Rom. xii. 13, xvi. 15; about 12 times besides in P.; Heb. vi. 10; Jude 3. h See ver. 6.

VI. 1. [a] Τολμᾷ τις ὑμῶν [b] πρᾶγμα [b] ἔχων [b] πρὸς [c] τὸν [c] ἕτερον [d] κρίνεσθαι [e] ἐπὶ τῶν [f] ἀδίκων, καὶ οὐχὶ [e] ἐπὶ [g] τῶν [g] ἁγίων; 2. [h] οὐκ [1]

[1] η ουκ: all uncc. but D³L. H perhaps lost by confusion with final N of εγενηθημεν; hence Syrian text.

the Church. He holds jurisdiction over those within its pale; of their conduct the Church (ὑμεῖς) is bound to take note; the world outside must be left to the judgment of God: "cives judicate, ne alienos" (Bg.). The Ap. places himself and the Cor. on the one side (cf. 4; also xii. 25 f.), in contrast with God who judges τοὺς ἔξω. "Within" and "without" denoted in Synagogue usage members and non-members of the sacred community (see parls.): οἱ ἔσω = οἱ ἅγιοι, οἱ οἰκεῖοι τῆς πίστεως, οἱ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, etc. Yet this mutual judgment of Christians by each other has great limitations (Rom. xiv. 4-10; Matt. vii. 1 ff.); its sphere lies in vital matters of character essential to Church life; and there it is subject to the final Court of Appeal (see iv. 3 ff.).—ὁ Θεὸς κρίνει (not κρινεῖ): P. is not anticipating the Last Judgment, but laying down the principle that God is the world's Judge; see Rom. ii. 16, iii. 6, Heb. xii. 23, etc.—The interrog. οὐχὶ holds under its regimen the two clauses linked by the contrastive δέ; El. however reads τοὺς δὲ ἔξω κ.τ.λ. assertively, as a concluding "grave enunciation".

From his digression to the lost Ep. and the general social problem, the Ap. returns, with vehement emphasis, to the offender of vv. 1 f. and demands his expulsion in the solemn words of the Deuteronomic law. τὸν πονηρὸν is not Satan ("scelerum omnium principem," Cv.), nor "the wicked" in general—each case as it arises (Hf.); but "istum improbum" (Bz.), the case of notorious and extreme guilt which gave rise to the whole discussion.—ἐξάρατε (cf. ἐκκαθάρατε, 7) takes up again the ἵνα ἀρθῇ of ver. 2, with the added thought (ἐξ- . . . ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν) of the riddance effected by his removal. The terrible sentence of vv. 3 ff. had not, in so many words, prescribed ejection, though implying it; and P. needed to be very explicit: see note on ver. 9. The formal expulsion must proceed from the Cor.,—ὑμεῖς κρίνετε; the Church is a self-governing body.

§ 17. Law-suits in Heathen Courts, vi. 1-6. Beside the πόρνος, amongst those to be excommunicated at Cor., stood the πλεονέκτης (v. 11); fraud and robbery were only less rife than licentiousness; and this element of corruption, along with the other, had reappeared within the Church (8). Instead of being repressed by timely correction, the evil had grown rank; in several instances aggrieved Christian parties had carried their complaints before the civil Courts, to the scandal of the Church and to Paul's high indignation. Two links of thought connect chh. v. and vi.: (1) the kindred nature of sins of impurity and of covetousness, both prevalent at Cor., both destructive of society; (2) the lamentable lack of Church discipline (v. 12), which enabled these mischiefs to gather head.

Ver. 1. Τολμᾷ τις ὑμῶν κ.τ.λ.; "Does any one of you dare?" etc.—"notatur læsa majestas Christianorum" (Bg.): τολμᾶν, sustinere, non erubescere. This also was matter of common knowledge, like the crime of v. 1. The abrupt interrog. marks the outburst of indignant feeling. You treat the Church, the seat of the Holy Spirit (iii. 16 f.), as though it were without authority or wisdom; you take your case from the highest court to the lowest! So the appellant is first censured; in ver. 4 the whole Church comes in for blame.—Πρᾶγμα (res, negotium), κρίνεσθαι (mid.; see parls.), ἐπὶ with gen., ἐν (2), κριτήριον (2), καθίζω (4), and perhaps ἥττημα (7), are all in this passage technical legal expressions.—Οἱ ἄδικοι—the term applied by the Jews (cf. Gal. ii. 15), and then by Christians, to the heathen—marks the action censured as self-stultifying—to seek for right from "the unrighteous"! P. himself appealed to Roman justice, but never in matters "between brother and brother," nor in the way of accusing his injurers (Acts xxviii. 19); only in defence of his work.—Οἱ ἅγιοι indicates by contrast the moral dignity of Christians (see i. 2, and note), a judicial attribute; cf. sanctitas

[h] οἴδατε ὅτι [g] οἱ [g] ἅγιοι τὸν [i] κόσμον [i] κρινοῦσι; καὶ εἰ [k] ἐν ὑμῖν [ik] κρίνεται ὁ [i] κόσμος, [l] ἀνάξιοί ἐστε [m] κριτηρίων ἐλαχίστων; 3. [h] οὐκ

i Rom. iii. 6; Acts xvii. 31 (οικουμενην); 4 times in John. k Acts xvii. 31; Lk. xi. 15. l H.l.; -ως, xi. 27; ουκ αξιους, Acts xiii. 46. m Jas. ii. 6; Judges v. 10; 3 Kings vii. 7 (44); Dan. vii. 10.

fori (Quintilian, xi., 3. 58). There exists a similar Rabbinical inhibition: "It is forbidden to bring a matter of right before idolatrous judges. . . . Whosoever goeth before them with a law-suit is impious, and does the same as though he blasphemed and cursed; and hath lifted his hand against the law of Moses our Teacher,—blessed be he!" (Shulchan aruch, Choshen hammishpat, 29). The Roman Government allowed the Jews liberty of internal jurisdiction; the Beth-din (house of judgment) was as regular a part of the Israelite economy as the Beth-keneseth (synagogue). In Rom. xiii. 1 ff. P. regards the power of the State from a diff. point of view.

Ver. 2. ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε κ.τ.λ.; "Or (is it that) you do not know?" etc. If the appeal to non-Christian tribunals is not made in insolence (τολμᾷ) towards the Church, it must be made in ignorance of its matchless prerogative. That "the saints will judge the world" is involved in the conception of the Messianic kingdom (Dan. vii. 22; cf. Matt. xx. 21); Israel, with its Christ, is to rule, and therefore judge, the nations (Acts i. 6, etc.: cf. Gal. vi. 16). See Wisd. iii. 7 f., where participation in this Messianic power is asserted for "the souls of the righteous" in their future state. After the manner of Jesus, the Ap. carried over to the new Israel of God the promises of dominion claimed under the Old Covenant, transforming in transferring them (2 Tim. ii. 12; Rev. xx. 4, xxii. 5, etc.). Paul reminds his readers of a truth they should have known, since it belongs to the nature of "the kingdom of God" (9) and to the glory they look for at "the unveiling of Christ" (i. 7 ff.; cf. iv. 8, Rom. viii. 17, etc.). Cm. and others see here a virtual judgment of the world, lying in the faith of the saints as contrasted with its unbelief (cf. Luke xi. 31, John iii. 18 ff., Rom. viii. 3),—a thought irrelevant here. Ver. 3, moreover, carries the judgment in question into a region far beyond that of Christian magistrates, whose appointment some prosaic interpreters see here predicted. The Ap. argues à majori ad minus, from the grand and celestial to earthly commonplace. The early Church ascribed this dignity esp. to the martyrs: τοῦ Χριστοῦ πάρεδροι . . . καὶ μέτοχοι τῆς κρίσεως αὐτοῦ καὶ συνδικάζοντες (Euseb., H.E., vi., 42; see Ed.).—ἐν ὑμῖν, in consessu vestro—picturing Christ and His saints in session, with "the world" brought in for trial before them. "It is absurd in itself, and quite inconsistent with the Divine idea and counsel, that any of you should now appear at their bar, who shall some day appear at yours" (Ev.).—κρίνεται, pr. tense, of faith's certainty (cf. v. 13).—κριτήριον (see 4) signifies place rather than matter of judgment (see parls.); for the latter sense lexical warrant is wanting. The question is: "Are you unworthy of (sitting on) the smallest tribunals?" of forming courts to deal with trifling affairs of secular property?—cf. our "petty sessions". Cm. reads the sentence as affirmative, ἀνάξιοι as nimis digni, and τ. κριτηρ. ἐλαχ. as the heathen tribunals: "It is beneath your dignity to appear before these contemptible courts!" But this does not square with ver. 4.

Ver. 3. The question of ver. 2 urged to its climax: "Know you not that we shall judge angels?" Paul already does this, hypothetically, in Gal. i. 8. Instructed through the Church (Eph. iii. 10), the heavenly powers will be subject to final correction from the same quarter. The angels were identified, in later Jewish thought, with the forces of nature and the destiny of nations (Ps. civ. 4; Dan. x. 13, xii. 1); they must be affected by any judgment embracing the κόσμος. "There is, it seems, a solidarity between the Princes of the nations (cf. Paul's ἀρχαὶ κ. ἐξουσίαι, xv. 24, etc.) and the nations directed by them; according to Shir rabba, 27 b, God does not punish a people until He has first humbled its Angel-prince in the higher world, and according to Tanchuma, Beshallach, 13, He will hereafter judge the nations only when He has first judged their Angel-princes" (Weber, Altsynag. paläst. Théologie, p. 165); Satan is κατ' ἐξοχὴν "the god of this world" (2 Cor. iv. 4; cf. John xiv. 30, Luke iv. 6), and has his "angels" whom P. styles "world-rulers" (Eph. vi. 12, Matt. xxv. 41). On the throne of world-judgment Christ will sit (Acts xvii. 31, Matt. xxv. 31 f.), and "the saints"—sc. after their own acquittal—as His assessors.—κρινοῦσιν in this context

[h] οἴδατε ὅτι [n] ἀγγέλους [1] κρινοῦμεν; [o] μήτι [o] γε [p] βιωτικά· 4. [p] βιωτικὰ μὲν οὖν [m] κριτήρια, ἐὰν ἔχητε τοὺς [q] ἐξουθενημένους ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, τούτους [r] καθίζετε· 5. πρὸς [s] ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω. [t] οὕτως οὐκ ἔστιν [1] ἐν ὑμῖν σοφὸς [2] οὐδὲ [2] εἷς, [2] ὃς δυνήσεται [u] διακρῖναι [v] ἀνὰ n In like connexion, Rom. viii. 38; Gal. i. 8; 2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6; Job iv. 18.

o H.l.; class. p Lk. xxi. 34; Aristot., Polyb., Philo. Al.
q See i. 28.
r Transit., Eph. i. 20; Acts ii. 30.
s xv. 34; Job xx. 3; Ps. xxxiv. 26, etc. Cf. iv. 14.
t Gal. iii. 3; Mt. xxvi. 40; Mk. vii. 18; Jo. xviii. 22.
u N.T. h.l., in this sense. Cf. iv. 7; xi. 29.
v Mt. xiii. 25; Mk. vii. 31; Rev. vii. 17; Ex. xi. 7; Isa. lvii. 5.

[1] ενι, ℵBCLP, minn. [70] or more (cf. Gal. iii. 28, Col. iii. 11).
εστιν, DG 37, etc.: Western correction.

[2] ουδεις σοφος, ℵBC 17, 46, 73; so crit. edd.
ουδε εις σοφος, GP 37, Aug., Ambrst. (quisquam sapiens),—later Western; σοφος simply, D*, earlier Western (?); σοφος ουδε εις, D[3]L, etc.,—Syrian.

qualifies its objects as culpable; cf. ἵνα καταργήσῃ in xv. 24; also v. 12 above, and other parls. The anarthrous ἀγγέλους signifies beings of this order, in contrast with men (cf. iv. 9; also Jude 6); "P. does not wish to mark out this or that class of angels, but to awaken in the Church the sense of its competence and dignity by reminding it that beings of this lofty nature will one day be subject to its jurisdiction" (Gd.; also El.).—μήτιγε βιωτικά (nedum quidem: not surely a continued interrog., as W.H. punctuate) —in sharp contrast to "angels"—"(to say) nothing verily of secular matters!". —μήτιγε (sc. λέγωμεν) is a N.T. h.l., —a sound cl. idiom (see Lidd. on μήτις, also El. ad. loc.),—negative syn. for πόσῳ μᾶλλον (Rom. xi. 12, 24); for the γε, cf. iv. 8.—βιωτικός, of later Gr. (after Aristotle), denotes matters relating to βίος (one's "living"), which differs from ζωή as vita quam from vita qua vivimus —"quae ad hujus vitæ usum pertinent" (Bz.), or "ad victum pertinentia" (Cv.); see Lt. ad loc., and Trench, Syn., § 27.

Vv. 4, 5*a*. Ver. 4 is rendered in three diff. ways, as (a) τ. ἐξουθενημένους ἐν τ. ἐκκλησίᾳ is taken to mean the heathen iudges, the ἄδικοι of ver. 1 whom the Church could not respect (ἐν, in the eyes of; cf. xiv. 11); then τούτους καθίζετε becomes an indignant question—"Do you set up these (as your judges)?" so Mr., Hn., Tisch., W.H., R.V. text. The position of καθίζετε and the strain put upon its meaning speak against this view—the Cor. Christians did not appoint the city magistrates; also the unlikelihood of Paul's using language calculated to excite contempt toward heathen rulers. (b) The prevalent construction (Vg., Syr., Bz., Cv., Bg., Ed., El., Lt., A.V., R.V. marg.) understands τ. ἐξουθ. ἐν τ. ἐκκλ. as the despised of the Church itself (καυχᾶσθαι ἐν ἀνθρ., iii. 21, iv. 6 ff. implies such a counterpart); then καθίζετε is read as impv., and P. says in sarcasm, "If you have lawsuits in secular affairs, set up the lowest amongst you (for judges of these low matters)!" κριτήρια however (see note on 2, and R.V. marg.) signifies not trials, nor matters of trial, but tribunals, and is therefore an unsuitable obj. to ἐὰν ἔχητε: βιωτικὰ κριτήρια are the things wanting to the Church, which P. is advising them to set on foot. Moreover, Paul would hardly speak of Christians as "despised" among their fellows, without some touch of blame for their despisers. (c) For these reasons, it is better, as Hf. suggests, to put the comma before, instead of after, ἐὰν ἔχητε, attaching τοὺς ἐξουθ. to this vb. and reading βιωτ. κριτ. as a nom. (or acc.) pendens to the sentence (cf. Rom. viii. 3, Heb. viii. 1; and Bm., pp. 379 ff.): we thus translate, "Well then, for secular tribunals—if you have men that are made of no account in the Church, set these on the bench!" That this prideful Church has such persons is undoubted; P. puts the fact hypothetically, as a thing one does not like to assume. μὲν οὖν throws into relief, by way of emphatic resumption, the βιωτικά . . . κριτήρια.—πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω, "Unto your shame (lit. for a shame to you) I say (it)": this relates to the foregoing sentence (cf. xv. 34); it is a shame the Cor. Church should have members looked on with utter contempt (cf. xii. 21-25); but since it has, it is fitting that they should be its judges in things contemptible! P. writes with anger, whereas he did not, though he might seem to do, in iv. 14.

Ver. 5*b*. Laying aside sarcasm, the Ap. asks most gravely: "(Is it) so (that) there is no wise man found amongst you, who will be able to decide between his [w] μέσον τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ; 6. ἀλλὰ ἀδελφὸς [w] μετὰ ἀδελφοῦ [d w] κρίνεται, [x] καὶ [x] τοῦτο [e] ἐπὶ [y] ἀπίστων.

7. Ἤδη μὲν οὖν [1] [z] ὅλως [a] ἥττημα ἐν [2] ὑμῖν ἐστιν ὅτι [b] κρίματα ἔχετε μεθ᾽ ἑαυτῶν· [c] διατί [3] οὐχὶ μᾶλλον [d] ἀδικεῖσθε; [c] διατί [3] οὐχὶ μᾶλλον [e] ἀποστερεῖσθε; 8. ἀλλὰ ὑμεῖς [d] ἀδικεῖτε καὶ [e] ἀποστερεῖτε, w Job ix. 3 (or dat.).

x Rom. xiii 11; Eph ii. 8; Phil. i. 28; 3 Jo. 5.
y vii. 12 ff., x. 27, xiv. 22 ff.; 2 Cor. vi. 14 f.; 1 Tim. v. 8.
z See v. 1.
a Rom. xi. 12; Isa. xxxi. 8; -αομαι, 2 Cor. xii. 13; 2 Pet. ii. 19 f.
b N.T. h.l.; Ex. xviii. 22.
c 2 Cor. xi. 11; Rom. ix. 32; Rev. xvii. 7; Acts v. 3; oftener in Gospp.
d Pass. (or mid.), 2 Cor. vii. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 12; Acts vii. 24; Rev. ii. 11. For act., 2 Cor. vii. 2; Gal. iv. 12; Col. iii. 25; Phm. 18, etc.
e vii. 5; 1 Tim. vi. 5; Mk. x. 19.

[1] Om. ουν ℵ*D* 17, latt. vg. cop. So Tisch.; not W.H.
[2] Om. εν all uncc.; all critical edd.
[3] δια τι: critical edd., except Tisch.

brothers?" οὕτως intensifies the question (cf. Gal. iii. 3)—τοσαύτη σπάνις (Cm.)—"so utter a lack of men of sense amongst you Cor., with all your talent and pretensions?" (i. 5, iii. 18, iv. 10). ἐνί, prp. with ellipsis of ἐστίν (Wr., p. 96)—there exists, is found (see parls.).—ἀνὰ μέσον (Hebraistic prpl. phrase) τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ—lit. "between his brother"—a defective expression, as though due to confusion of τῶν ἀδελφῶν with the more Hebraistic ἀδελφοῦ καὶ ἀδελφοῦ: an example of the laxity of Paul's conversational Gr.; unless, as Sm. conjectures, there is a "primitive error," and τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ should be corrected to τῶν ἀδελφῶν.

Ver. 6. "Nay, but brother goes to law with brother—this too before unbelievers!" This is an answer to the question of ver. 5, not a continuation of it. The litigation shows that there is no man in the Church wise enough to settle such matters privately; or he would surely have been called in. The ἄδικοι of ver. 1 here figure as ἄπιστοι; see parls; contrast with οἱ πιστεύοντες (i. 21).

§ 18. Warning to Immoral Christians, vi. 7-11. Behind the scandal of the law-suits there lay a deeper mischief in their cause. They were immediately due to unchristian resentment on the part of the aggrieved; but the chief guilt lay with the aggressors. The defrauders of their brethren, and all doers of wrong, are warned that they forfeit their place in God's kingdom (9 f.), and reminded that the sins they thus commit belong to their unregenerate state (11).

Ver. 7. Ἤδη μὲν οὖν, "Indeed then, to begin with": on ἤδη (already, i.e. before litigation), see note to iv. 8. μὲν here, otherwise than in ver. 4, suggests a suppressed δέ: "but ye aggravate matters by going before the heathen" (Lt.).—ὅλως (see v. 1) ἥττημα (cl. ἧττα): "it is absolutely a failure on your part"—not a mere defect, nor a loss (sc. of the Messianic glory: so Mr., in view of 9), but a moral defeat (see parls.). Ἡττάομαι (see Lidd., s. v., I. 3) signifies to be worsted, beaten in a suit (Lat. causa cadere); this sense excellently suits the context and Paul's epigrammatic style: "Indeed then it is already an unmistakable defeat for you that you have law-suits"—you are beaten before you enter court, by the mere fact that such quarrels arise and reach this pitch.—κρίμα is the πρᾶγμα (1) ripened into an actual case at law. μεθ᾽ ἑαυτῶν, for μετ᾽ ἀλλήλων, implies intestine strife; the 3rd pl. reflexive pron. frequently serves all three persons (Jelf's Gr. Gram., § 654, 2 b).—ἀδικεῖσθε, ἀποστερεῖσθε, mid. voice: "injuriam accipitis, fraudem patimini" (Vg.)—"Why do you not rather submit to wrong, to robbery?" (see Wr., p. 218). Paul reproduces the teaching of Jesus in Luke vi. 27 ff., etc., which applies more strictly as the relationships of life are closer; cf. His own example (1 Pet. ii. 23), and that of the Ap. (iv. 12 f., 16). οὐχὶ μᾶλλον, as in v. 2.

Ver. 8. ἀλλὰ ὑμεῖς κ.τ.λ.: "Nay, but you commit wrong and robbery—this too (cf. 6) upon your brothers!" Mr. reads this, like the parl. ἀλλὰ clause of ver. 6, as a further question; it is the answer to the question of ver. 7—the sad fact contrasted with the duty of the Christian. The spiritual kinship which heightens the duty of submission to wrong, aggravates its commission.

Vv. 9, 10. On ἢ οὐκ οἴδατε; see note to ver. 2. The wrongers of their brethren are surely unaware of the fact that "wrong-doers (ἄδικοι) will not inherit [x] καὶ [x] ταῦτα [1] ἀδελφούς. 9. [f] ἢ [f] οὐκ [f] οἴδατε ὅτι [g] ἄδικοι [h 1] βασιλείαν [2] [h] Θεοῦ [2] οὐ [i] κληρονομήσουσι; [k] μὴ [k] πλανᾶσθε· οὔτε [3] [l] πόρνοι οὔτε [3] [m] εἰδωλολάτραι οὔτε [3] [n] μοιχοὶ οὔτε [3] [o] μαλακοὶ οὔτε [3] [p] ἀρσενοκοῖται 10. οὔτε [3] [q] κλέπται, οὔτε [3] [r] πλεονέκται, οὔτε [3] [s] μέθυσοι, οὐ [3] [t] λοίδοροι, οὐχ [3] [u] ἅρπαγες [h 1] βασιλείαν [h] Θεοῦ οὐ [4] [i] κληρονομήσουσιν. 11. καὶ [v] ταῦτά τινες ἦτε· ἀλλὰ [w] ἀπελούσασθε, ἀλλὰ [x] ἡγιάσθητε, ἀλλ'

f See iii. 16. With ἤ, ver. 2 above.
g See ver. 1.
h See iv. 20.
i xv. 50; Gal. v. 21; Mt. xxv. 34. κληρον., Gal. iv. 30 (Gen. xxi. 10); Heb. i. 14, vi. 12; Rev. xxi. 7; Mt. v. 5, xix. 29, etc. (ζωην αιων.).
k xv. 33; Gal. vi. 7; Jas. i. 16; Isa. xli. 10.
l See v. 9.
m See v. 10.
n Heb. xiii. 4; Lk. xviii. 11; Job xxiv. 15; -ευω more freq.
o H.l., of persons; Prov. xxv. 15, xxvi. 22. See note below.
p 1 Tim. i. 10. See Lev. xviii. 22.
q 1 Pet. iv. 15; Jo. xii. 6, etc.; ο κλεπτων, Eph. iv. 28.
r See v. 11.
s See v. 11.
t See v. 11.
u See v. 11.
v As if for τουτο, Jo. xv. 17; 3 Jo. 4.
w Acts xxii. 16; Job ix. 30; cf. Jo. xiii. 10; Rev. i. 5 (λουω); Eph. v. 26 and Tit. iii. 5 (λουτρον).
x See i. 2.

[1] τουτο, all uncc. but L.

[2] Θεου βασιλειαν (in this order: cf. ver. 10): all uncc. but L.

[3] ουτε seven times (πορνοι . . . πλεονεκται), then ου (μεθυσοι), ου, ουχ: ℵACP. BL, and Syrian text, read ουτε eight times, then ου, ουχ. D*, ουδε seven times, ουτε twice, then ουχ.

[4] Om. ου all uncc. but LP (Syrian); cf. ver. 9.

God's kingdom" (which nevertheless they profess to seek, i. 7 ff.)—an axiom of revelation, indeed of conscience, but the over-clever sometimes forget elementary moral principles; hence the μὴ πλανᾶσθε. Their conduct puts them on a level with the heathen (οἱ ἄδικοι, 1). Θεοῦ βασιλείαν (doubly anarthrous; see note on ii. 5), "God's kingdom"—the expression indicating the region and nature of the realm from which unrighteousness excludes; "the kingdom of God is righteousness" (Rom. xiv. 17; cf. Matt. v. 10, xiii. 43, Luke xiv. 14, Rev. i. 18, ii. 8 f., etc.). The deception taking place on this fundamental point springs from the frivolity of the Hellenic nature; it had a specific cause in the libertinism deduced from the gospel of Free Grace and the abrogation of the Mosaic Law (12 f., see notes; cf. Rom. vi. 1, 15, Gal. v. 13).—In vv. 9*b*, 10 the general warning is carried into detail. Ten classes of sinners are distinguished, uncleanness and greed furnishing the prevailing categories (cf. v. 9-11): "neither fornicators (the conspicuous sin of Cor.: v. 1, etc.; vii. 2) . . . neither covetous men—no drunkards, no railers, no plunderers (see txtl. note) will inherit," etc. Idolaters are ranged between fornicators and adulterers—an association belonging to the cultus of Aphrodité Pandemos at Cor. μαλακοί, soft, voluptuous, appears in this connexion to signify general addiction to sins of the flesh; lexical ground is wanting for the sense of pathici, suggested to some interpreters by the following word and by the use of molles in Latin. For ἀρσενοκοῖται (cl. παιδεράσται), whose sin of Sodom was widely and shamelessly practised by the Greeks; cf. Rom. i. 24 ff., written from Cor. The three detached classes appended by οὐ to the οὔτε list were specified in v. 11; see notes.

Ver. 11. καὶ ταῦτά τινες ἦτε: "And these things you were, some (of you)". The neuter ταῦτα is contemptuous—"such abominations!" τινὲς softens the aspersion; the majority of Cor. Christians had not been guilty of extreme vice. The stress lies on the tense of ἦτε; "you were"—a thing of the past, cf. Rom. vi. 19, Eph. ii. 11 f.—"But you washed yourselves! but you were sanctified; but you were justified!"—ἀλλὰ thrice repeated, with joyful emphasis, as in 2 Cor. ii. 17, vii. 11. The first of the three vbs. is mid., the other two pass. in voice. ἀπελούσασθε refers to baptism (cf. Acts xxii. 16, Col. ii. 11 f., Eph. v. 26 f., 1 Pet. iii. 21; see i. 13 for its signal importance), in its spiritual meaning; the form of the vb. calls attention to the initiative of the Cor. in getting rid, at the call of God, of the filth of their old life; in baptism their penitent faith took deliberate and formal expression, with this effect. But behind their action in submitting to baptism, there was the action of God, operating to the effect described by the terms ἡγιάσθητε, ἐδικαιώθητε. These twin conceptions of the Christian state in its beginning appear commonly in the reverse order (see i. 30, Rom. vi. 19, etc.); in Rom. v., [y] ἐδικαιώθητε [y] ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου[1] Ἰησοῦ[2] καὶ [y] ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν.

12. Πάντα μοι [z] ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ᾽ οὐ πάντα [za] συμφέρει· πάντα μοι y See iv. 4.

z x. 23 (same contrast); 2 Cor. xii. 4; freq. in Gospp. and Acts.
a x. 23, xii. 7; 2 Cor. viii. 10, xii. 1; Heb. xii. 10; Mt. v. 29 f., xviii. 6, xix. 10; Jo. xi. 50, xvi. 7, xviii. 14; Acts xix. 19, xx. 20.

[1] (Κυρ.) ημων (?), BCP, 17, 37, 73, vg., syrr., cop.; W.H. bracket.

[2] Add Χριστου all uncc. but ADcL; all crit. edd.

vi. they are seen to be related as the resurrection and death of Christ, and in Rom. vi. to be figured respectively in the ἀνάδυσις and κατάδυσις which formed the two movements of baptism; see notes ad locc., also Tit. iii. 5 ff. The order of the words does not justify Calovius, Lipsius, and Mr., with Romanist interpreters, in finding here "the ethical continuatio justificationis,"—an explanation contrary to the uniform Pauline signification of δικαιόω; the Ap. is thinking (in contrast with vv. 9 f.) of the status attained by his readers as ἅγιοι (i. 2, iii. 17, vi. 1), behind which lay the fundamental fact of their δικαίωσις. The qualifying prpl. phrases both belong to the three closely linked vbs. Baptism is received "in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (quoted with formal solemnity: cf. note on i. 2): "in the Spirit of our God" it is validated and brings its appropriate blessings (cf. John iii. 5-8: water is the formal, the Sp. the essential source of the new birth).

Βαπτίζειν ἐν Πν. ἁγίῳ was the distinctive work of Jesus Christ (Matt. iii. 11, etc.); to be ἐν Πνεύματι (Θεοῦ, Χριστοῦ) is the distinctive state of a Christian, including every element of the new life (19, ii. 12, iii. 16, 2 Cor. i. 21 f., Rom. v. 5, viii. 2, 9, etc.). Sanctification esp. is grounded in the Holy Spirit; but He is an agent in justification too, for His witness to sonship implies the assurance of forgiveness (Rom. viii. 15 ff.). The name of our Lord Jesus Christ sums up the baptismal confession (cf. Rom. x. 8 ff.); the Spirit of our God constitutes the power by which that confession is inspired, and the regeneration effectuated which makes it good: the two factors are identified in xii. 3 (see note). "Our God," in emphatic distinction from the gods in whose service the Cor. had been defiled (see viii. 4 ff., 2 Cor. iv. 4, Eph. ii. 2; cf. Ps. xcix. 9).

§ 19. THE SANCTITY OF THE BODY, vi. 12-20. The laxity of morals distinguishing the Cor. Church was in some instances defended, or half-excused, by appealing to the principle of Christian liberty, which P. had himself enunciated in asserting the freedom of Gentile Christians from the Mosaic ceremonial restrictions. From his lips the libertarians took their motto, Πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν. The Ap. does not retract this sentence, but he guards it from abuse: (1) by setting over against it the balancing principle of expediency, οὐ πάντα συμφέρει; (2) by defining, in the twofold example of ver. 13, the sphere within which it applies, distinguishing liberty from licence. This leads up to a reiterated prohibition of fornication, grounded on its nature as a sin against the body itself, and an act which flagrantly contradicts the sanctity of its limbs, as they belong to Christ, being purchased by Him for the service of God (15-20).

Ver. 12. Πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν stands twice here, and twice in x. 23; P. harps on the saying in a way to indicate that it was a watchword with some Cor. party—perhaps amongst both Paulinists and Apollonians; his μοι endorses the declaration (cf. viii. 8 f., x. 23 ff., Rom. xiv. 14, 20). Very likely it had been quoted in the Church Letter. This sentence, like those of ii. 14, iii. 21, iv. 1 (see notes), recalls the attributes of the Stoic ideal σοφός, to whom it belongs ἐξεῖναι ὡς βουλόμεθα διεξάγειν (Arr.-Epict., II., i., 21-28; see Hn. ad loc.).—ἀλλ᾽ οὐ πάντα συμφέρει: "Yes, but not all things are advantageous".—Συμφέρει (conducunt) signifies contributing to some one's benefit—here one's own, in x. 24 one's neighbour's.—Parl. to the former ἀλλ᾽ οὐ, is ἀλλ᾽ οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι κ.τ.λ.: "All things are in my domain; yes, but I will not be dominated by anything". That is "unprofitable" to a man which "gets the mastery" over him. "Such and such a thing is in my power; I will take care that it does not get me into its power. I will never by abuse of my liberty forfeit that liberty in its noblest part." This gives the self-regarding, as x. 23 f. the other-regarding rule of Christian temperance in the use of things lawful. Cf. the instructive chapter Περὶ

[a] ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ [b] ἐξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τινος. 13. τὰ [c] βρώματα τῇ [d] κοιλίᾳ καὶ ἡ [d] κοιλία τοῖς [c] βρώμασιν, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ [e] ταύτην καὶ [e] ταῦτα [f] καταργήσει· τὸ δὲ σῶμα οὐ τῇ [g] πορνείᾳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῷ σώματι· 14. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ τὸν Κύριον [h] ἤγειρεν, καὶ ἡμᾶς [1] [i] ἐξεγερεῖ [1] διὰ τῆς [k] δυνάμεως [k] αὐτοῦ. 15. [l] οὐκ [l] οἴδατε ὅτι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν [2] [m] μέλη Χριστοῦ ἐστιν;

b vii. 4; Lk. xxii. 25; Eccl. ix. 17.
c 1 Tim. iv. 3; Heb. ix. 10, xiii. 9; Mt. xiv. 15; Mk. vii. 19; Lk. iii. 11.
d In this sense, Phil. iii. 19; Mt. xv. 17; Rev. x. 9 f.
e For repetition, cf. vii. 7.
f See i. 28.
g See v. 1.
h xv. 4 ff., 2 Cor. i. 9, iv. 14, v. 15; Rom. passim; Gal. i. 1; Eph. i. 20; Col. ii. 12; 1 Th. i. 10; 2 Tim. ii. 8; Heb. xi. 19; 1 Pet. i. 21, etc.
i Rom. ix. 17 (Exod. ix. 16), in diff. sense.
k See i. 18.
l See iii. 16, vi. 2.
m In like sense, xii. 12 ff.; Rom. xii. 4 f.; Eph. iv. 16, 25, v. 30.

[1] εξεγερει, ℵCD³KL, etc., syrr., cop., many Ff.; εξεγειρει, AD*PQ 37. εξηγειρεν (?), B 67 (a group preserving some valuable readings), cod. amiatinus of vg.; W.H. marg. Beza and Elzevir read υμας, with no certain MS. authority.

[2] ημων, ℵ*A.

ἐλευθερίας in Arr.-Epict., IV., i. For the play on ἔξεστιν, cf. ii. 15. The emphatic οὐκ ἐγὼ is the jealous self-assertion of the spiritual freeman, fearful of falling again under the dominion of the flesh: cf. ix. 26 f., Gal. v. 13, 16.

Ver. 13. The maxim "All things are lawful to me" has been guarded within its province; now it must be limited to its province: "Foods (are) for the belly, and the belly for its foods".—τὰ βρώματα, the different kinds of food—about which Jewish law, ascetic practice (Rom. xiv. 1 ff.), and the supposed defilement of the idolothyta (viii., x. 25 ff.) caused many embarrassments. The Ap., adopting the profound principle of Jesus (Mark vii. 15-23), cuts through these knotty questions at a stroke: the βρώματα are morally indifferent; for they belong to the κοιλία, not the καρδία (cf. Rom. xiv. 17). Food and the stomach are appropriated to each other; the main question about the former is whether or no it suits the latter.—A second reason for the moral indifference of matters of the table lies in their perishing nature; κοιλία and βρώματα play a large and troublesome part in the existing order, "but God will abolish both this and these". For the somewhat rare antithetic repetition of οὗτος, cf. vii. 7, also Josh. viii. 22 (LXX). The nutritive system forms no part of the permanent self; it belongs to the passing σχῆμα τ. κόσμου τούτου (vii. 31), to the constitution of "flesh and blood" (xv. 50) and the σῶμα ψυχικόν; hence the indifference of foods (viii. 8): "quæ destruentur, per se liberum habent usum" (Bg.; cf. Col. ii. 20 f.).—"But the body" has relations more vital and influential than those concerned with its perishing sustenance—it "is not for fornication, but for the Lord and the Lord for the body": the same double dat. clause of mutual appropriation links τὸ σῶμα with ὁ Κύριος as τὰ βρώματα with ἡ κοιλία; each is made for the other and requires the other. "The body"—regarded as a whole, in contrast with its temporary apparatus—is fashioned for the Lord's use; to yield it to harlotry is to traverse Christ's rights in it and disqualify oneself for a part in His resurrection (14). The Lord Jesus and πορνεία contested for the bodies of Christian men; loyal to Him they must renounce that, yielding to that they renounce Him. In Gr. philosophical ethics the distinction drawn in this ver. had no place; the two appetites concerned were treated on the same footing, as matters of physical function, the higher ethical considerations attaching to sexual passion being ignored. Hence the degradation of woman and the decay of family life, which brought Greek civilisation to a shameful end.

Ver. 14 is parl. to ver. 13*b* ("God" the agent in both), as ver. 13*c* to ver. 13*a*: the previous δὲ contrasted the several natures of βρώματα and σῶμα; this the opp. issues, καταργήσει and ἐξεγερεῖ. ὁ Κύριος is the determining factor of both contrasts. "God will abolish both the belly and its foods . . . but God both raised up the Lord, and will raise up us also through His power." P. substitutes "us," in the antithesis, for "our bodies," since the man, including his body (see xv. 35, 49), is the subject of resurrection. The saying ἀπαρχὴ Χριστός, of xv. 23, supplies the nexus between τ. Κύριον ἤγειρεν and ἡμ. ἐξεγερεῖ; cf. also 2 Cor. iv. 14, Rom. viii. 11, xiv. 9, Col. iii. 1, Phil. iii. 21; John v. 20-30, xiv. 2 ff., etc.

[n] ἄρας [1] οὖν τὰ [m] μέλη τοῦ Χριστοῦ ποιήσω [o] πόρνης [m] μέλη; μὴ γένοιτο· 16. [l] ἢ [l] οὐκ [l] οἴδατε ὅτι ὁ [p] κολλώμενος τῇ [o] πόρνῃ ἓν σῶμά ἐστιν; "Ἔσονται γάρ," [q] φησίν, "οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν·" 17. ὁ δὲ [p] κολλώμενος τῷ Κυρίῳ ἓν πνεῦμά ἐστι. 18. [r] φεύγετε

n See v. 2. o Heb. xi. 31; Jas. ii. 25; Rev. xvii. 1 ff.; Mt. xxi. 31 f.; Lk. xv. 30. p Rom. xii. 9; Acts v. 13, etc.; Lk. x. 11, xv. 15; esp. Mt. xix. 5 (Gen. ii. 24). q 2 Cor. x. 10; Heb. viii. 5, in parenthetic use. r x. 14; 1 Tim. vi. 11; 2 Tim. ii. 22; Sir. xxi. 2.

[1] αρα ουν, CP, and several minuscc. Final σ of αρας easily lost in following ο; and αρα ουν is plausibly Pauline (G, η αρα ουν).

The prefix in ἐξ-εγερεῖ is local—out of (sc. the grave; cf. ἐξ-ανάστασις, Phil. iii. 11); not de massa dormientium (Bg.). The raising of Christ (cf. Eph. i. 19 ff.), then of Christians, from the dead is the supreme exhibition of God's supernatural "power" (see Rom. iv. 17-24, Matt. xxii. 29, Acts xxvi. 8, etc.). Christ is raised as "Lord," and will rule our life yon side of death more completely than on this (Acts ii. 36, Col. i. 18, Phil. iii. 20 f.).

Vv. 15-17 unfold in its repulsiveness, by vivid concrete presentment, the opposition between the two claimants for bodily service already contrasted: the rival of Christ is ἡ πόρνη! "Or (if what I have said is not sufficient) do you not know that your bodies are Christ's limbs? Should I then take away the limbs of Christ and make them a harlot's limbs? Far be it!"—Αἴρω is to remove, carry off, as in v. 2 (see parls.), Vg. tollens, implying "a voluntary and determined act" (Ed.); for the introductory aor. ptp., see Bn., §§ 132, 138. ποιήσω, either (deliberative) aor. sbj. or fut. ind.—"Am I to make, etc.?" or, "Am I going to make?" The former idiom suits an act of choice; this question the tempted Cor. Christian must put to himself: cf. the interrog. form of Rom. vi. 1, 15 (-ωμεν).

What is true of Christian men individually, that they are μέλη Χριστοῦ and parts of the σῶμα Χριστοῦ, is true specifically of the physical frame of each; similarly in vv. 19 f. Paul applies to the Christian man's body the glorious truth stated respecting the Christian society in iii. 16 f. In the Hellenic view, the body was the perishing envelope of the man; in the Scriptural view, it is the abiding vehicle of his spirit. To devote the body to a harlot, one must first withdraw it from Christ's possession: to do that, and for such a purpose—the bare statement shows the infamy of the proposal. The Biblical formula of deprecation, μὴ γένοιτο, is frequent also in Epictetus; cf. Odyssey, vii., 316, μὴ τοῦτο φίλον Διῒ πατρὶ γένοιτο.

Ver. 16 justifies the strong expression πόρνης μέλη (15), implying that the alliance is a kind of incorporation: "Or (if you object to my putting it in this way), do you not know that he who cleaves to the harlot is one body (with her)?" ὁ κολλώμενος (see parls.), qui agglutinatur scorto (Bz.), indicates that sexual union constitutes a permanent bond between the parties. What has been done lives, morally, in both; neither is henceforth free of the other. The Divine sentence (uttered prophetically by Adam) which the Ap. quotes to this effect was pronounced upon the first wedded pair, and holds of every such union, whether lawful or unlawful—honourably true (vii. 4, Heb. xiii. 4), or shamefully. In Eph. v. 31 the same Scripture is cited at length, where the Ap. is making out the correspondence between wedlock and Christ's union with the Church: in that place the spiritual union is treated as parl. to the natural union, where this follows the Divine order; here it stands out as prohibitory to a natural union which violates that order. Here only Paul uses the parenthetical φησίν ("says He," sc. God) in citing Scripture; it is common in Philo, and in the Ep. of Barnabas.—ἔσονται . . . εἰς (Hebraism) = γενήσονται.

Ver. 17. ὁ δὲ κολλώμενος τῷ Κυρίῳ κ.τ.λ.: "But he who cleaves to the Lord is one spirit (with Him)". Adhesion by the act of faith (i. 21, etc.) to Christ (as Lord, cf. xii. 3, etc.) establishes a spiritual communion of the man with Him as real and close as the other, bodily communion ("tam arcte quam conjuges sunt unum corpus," Bg.), and as much more influential and enduring as the spirit is above the flesh. "The Spirit" is the uniting bond (iii. 16, Rom. viii. 8 f., etc.), but the Ap. is thinking of the nature and sphere of this union; hence the anarthrous, generic πνεῦμα, contrasted with σάρξ (16). In 2 Cor. iii. 17 "the Lord" is identified with "the Spirit," and believers are repeatedly said τὴν [s] πορνείαν. πᾶν [t u] ἁμάρτημα ὃ ἐὰν [u] ποιήσῃ [v] ἄνθρωπος, [w] ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματός ἐστιν· ὁ δὲ [x] πορνεύων [y] εἰς τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα [y] ἁμαρτάνει. 19. [1] ἢ [1] οὐκ [1] οἴδατε ὅτι τὸ [1] σῶμα [1] ὑμῶν [z] ναὸς τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν Ἁγίου [2] Πνεύματός [2] ἐστιν, οὗ ἔχετε ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐστὲ [a] ἑαυτῶν; 20. [b] ἠγοράσθητε γὰρ [b c] τιμῆς. [d] δοξάσατε [e] δὴ τὸν [d] Θεὸν ἐν τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν καὶ [3] ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν, ἅτινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ.[3]

s See v. 1.
t Rom. iii. 25; Mk. iii. 28 f.; Isa. lviii. 1.
u 2 Cor. xi. 7; Jo. viii. 34; 1 Jo. iii. 4, 8 f.; Jas. v. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 22.
v See iii. 4.
w Prep., xv. 27; 2 Cor. xii. 2.
x x. 8; Rev. ii. 14, 20, xvii. 2, xviii. 3, 9; Mk. x. 19; Ps. lxxii. 27.
y viii. 12; Mt. xviii. 15; Lk. xv. 18, 21; Gen. xx. 6, 9.
z See iii. 16.
a Genitive, see i. 12.
b In this sense, vii. 23; 2 Pet. ii. 1; Rev. v. 9, xiv. 3 f.; ἐξαγορ., Gal. iii. 13, iv. 5.
c In this sense, Mt. xxvii. 6, 9; Acts iv. 34, v. 2 f., vii. 16, xix. 19.
d 2 Cor. ix. 13; Rom. i. 21, xv. 6, 9; Gal. i. 24; 1 Pet. ii. 12, iv. 11, 16; Lk. passim, etc.
e H.l. in P.; Heb. ii. 16; 4 times in Acts and Lk.

[1] τα σωματα, A²L, and minuscc.[45], cop.; cf. ver. 15.

[2] πνευματος αγιου (?): B 120, f. vg. So W.H. marg.

[3] Om. και . . . Θεου all pre-Syrian uncc. The vg. (after the old lat.) reads, glorificate (clarificate, Cypr., Ambrst.) deum et portate (tollite, Tert.) in corpore vestro: portate (scil. Deum) is probably due to the corruption of αρα γε (found in Methodius before δοξασατε) into αρατε. This error was widely spread; there are traces of it in Chrysostom. See W.H., Notes on Selected Readings, p. 114.

to be ἐν Πνεύματι; so that between them and Christ there exists a κοινωνία Πνεύματος (i. 9, 2 Cor. xiii. 13; John xvi. 14, etc.). For the intimacy of this association of members with the Head, see Gal. ii. 20, Eph. ii. 5 f., iii. 16 f., Col. ii. 10, iii. 1 ff., John xv. 1 ff., xvii. 23 ff., etc.

Ver. 18. With vehement abruptness P. turns from exposition to exhortation. "Flee fornication"—other sins may be combated; this must be fled, as by Joseph in Potiphar's house. φεύγετε the opposite of κολλᾶσθαι (16). The parl. φεύγετε ἀπὸ τ. εἰδωλολατρείας of x. 14 shows "the connexion in Cor. between impurity and idolatry" (Ed.: cf. the lists of sins in 9 and v. 11.)—Ἡ πορνεία contradicts Christ's rights in the body (13-17) and severs the committer from Him; P. has now to say that this is a sin against the nature of the human body: "Every act of sin (ἁμάρτημα) which a man may possibly do, is outside of the body; but the fornicator (ὁ πορνεύων) sins against his own body". The point of this saying lies in the contrasted prepositions ἐκτὸς and εἰς: all bodily sins "defile the flesh" (2 Cor. vii. 1), but other vices—those of the κοιλία, e.g.—look outside the body; this in its whole essence lies within our physical nature, so that, while it appropriates the person of another (16), it is a self-violation. Hence transgressions of the Seventh Commandment are "sins of the flesh" and "of the passions" par éminence. They engage and debauch the whole person; they "enter into the heart," for "they proceed out of the heart" and touch the springs of being; in the highest degree they "defile the man" (Mark vii. 20 ff.). That inchastity is extreme dishonour is realised in the one sex; Christianity makes it equally so in the other.

Vv. 19, 20. What a deadly sin, an act of high treason, this is for the Christian, Paul's final appeal shows: "Or (if you do not yet realise the heinousness of fornication), do you not know that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have (οὗ ἔχετε, gen. by attraction to Πνεύματος) from God?" The Holy Spirit dwells in the readers: how but in their body, since they are in the body? (iii. 16, cf. Rom. viii. 11; also John ii. 21): there is the same tacit inference from whole to part as in ver. 15; the same assumption that the body is essential to the man, which underlies the doctrine of the Resurrection (xv.). The Christian estimate of πορνεία is thus categorically opposed to the heathen estimate. In the temple of Aphrodité prostitutes were priestesses, and commerce with them was counted a consecration; it is an absolute desecration of God's true temple in the man himself.—"And (that) you are not your own?" This too P. asks his readers if they "do not know?" The possessor is God, who has occupied them by His Spirit, having first purchased them with His Son's blood: cf. i. 30, iii. 23; Rom. viii. 32, 2 Cor. v. 18 ff., Acts xx. 28. "For you were bought at a price!"—the τιμὴ

VII. 1. Περὶ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοι[1]· [a] Καλὸν [b] ἀνθρώπῳ γυναικὸς μὴ [c] ἅπτεσθαι· 2. διὰ δὲ τὰς[2] [d] πορνείας[2] ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ

a vv. 8, 26 Rom. xiv. 21; 1 Tim. ii. 3; Mt. xviii. 8; Gen. ii. 18. b In this connection, Mt. xix. 5, 10 (Gen. ii. 24). c In this sense, N.T. h.l.; Gen, xx. 6; Prov. vi. 29. d See v. 1; Mt. xv. 19; Mk. vii. 21.

[1] Om. μοι ℵBC 17, 46, am. fu.*, Tert. So crit. edd.

[2] την πορνειαν: G, vg. syr[utr.], Tert., Ambrst.

P. does not need to state; it was τίμιον αἷμα (1 Pet. i. 18 f.; Eph. i. 7, Matt. xx. 28, Rev. v. 9). Ἀγοράζω, to purchase, syn. with (ἀπο)λυτρόομαι, to ransom (i. 30, Tit. ii. 14): the latter points to the means of redemption, the former to the proprietorship which it creates (cf. περιεποιήσατο, Acts xx. 28); both ideas meet in Eph. i. 14. The gen. of price, τιμῆς, indicates the value at which God rates His purchase.—δοξάσατε δὴ κ.τ.λ.: "Now glorify God in your body"—sc. by a chaste life (contrast Rom. ii. 23). δή (rare in N.T.; h. l. in P.), kindred to the temporal ἤδη, makes the command peremptory, breaking off discussion (cf. Acts xiii. 2). ἐν, in, not with, your body—the temple wherein each man serves as priest; here the ναός, in Rom. xii. 2 the θυσία.—καὶ ἐν τ. πνεύματι κ.τ.λ., of the T.R., is a Syrian gloss, added as if to complete the sense; cf. vii. 34.

§ 20. MARRIAGE OR CELIBACY? vii. 1-9. At this point the Ap. takes up the questions addressed to him by the Cor. Church (see Introd., chap. ii.). In replying to Paul's previous letter, they had asked for clearer instructions to regulate their intercourse with men living in heathen sins (v.); this request led up to the inquiries respecting the desirability of marriage, respecting the duties of married Christians, and the lawfulness of divorce for a Christian married to a heathen, with which ch. vii. is occupied. The headings of vv. 1, 25, chh. viii., xi., xvi., indicate various matters on which the Cor. had consulted their Ap. The local impress and temporary aim of the directions here given on the subject of marriage must be borne in mind; otherwise Paul's treatment will appear to be narrow and unsympathetic, and out of keeping with the exalted sense of its spiritual import disclosed in Eph. v. Indeed, ch. xi. 3-15 of this Ep. show that P. had larger conception on the relations of man and woman than are here unfolded. The obscurity of expression attaching to several passages betrays the writer's embarrassment; this was due partly to the low moral sensibility of the Cor., and partly to the uncertain continuance of the existing order of life (26-31), which weighed with the Ap. at the time of writing and led him to discourage the formation of domestic ties. In later Epistles, when the present economy had opened out into a larger perspective, the ethics of marriage and the Christian household are worthily developed (see Col. and Eph.).

Ver. 1. Περὶ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατε: "Now about the things on which you wrote (to me)".—Περὶ ὧν = περὶ τούτων περὶ ὧν (not ἅ); cf. the constructions of rel. pron. in ver. 39, x. 30; see Wr., p. 198.—δὲ metabatikon leads to a new topic, in orderly transition from the last: "Now I proceed to deal with the matters of your letter to me"; the questions proposed about marriage are discussed on the ground prepared by the teaching of chh. v. and vi. They form a part of the wide social conflict between Christian and Pagan life at Corinth: see Introd. to Div. II. P. answers at once, affirmatively, the question of principle put to him: "It is right (καλόν, honourable, morally befitting—pulchrum, conveniens, Bg.; see note on v. 6) for one (ἀνθρώπῳ, homini: not ἀνδρί, man distinctively, viro) not to touch a woman" (to live in strict celibacy).—καλὸν contradicts the οὐ καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ present in the minds of some of the questioners, influenced by the sensuous atmosphere of Cor. Paul is not disparaging marriage, as though he meant καλλίον μὴ ἅπτ., but defending celibacy against those who thought it inhuman.

Ver. 2: a single life is good in itself, "but" is not generally expedient at Cor.—διὰ τὰς πορνείας, "because of the (prevalent) fornications" (the unusual pl. indicating the variety and extent of profligacy: cf. 2 Cor. xii. 21); for this reason marriage, as a rule, is advisable here.—It must be Christian marriage, as opposed to heathen libertinism and Jewish polygamy: "let each (man) have his own wife, and each (woman) her proper husband". The pr. impv., ἐχέτω (sc. directive, not permissive), signifies "have and keep to" (cf. 2 Tim. i 13).

[e] γυναῖκα [e] ἐχέτω, καὶ[1] ἑκάστη τὸν ἴδιον ἄνδρα ἐχέτω.[1] 3. τῇ γυναικὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ τὴν [f] ὀφειλομένην[2] εὔνοιαν[2] [f g] ἀποδιδότω· [h] ὁμοίως [h] δὲ [h] καὶ ἡ γυνὴ τῷ ἀνδρί· 4. ἡ γυνὴ τοῦ ἰδίου σώματος οὐκ [i] ἐξουσιάζει, ἀλλ' ὁ ἀνήρ· [h] ὁμοίως [h] δὲ [h] καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ τοῦ ἰδίου σώματος οὐκ [i] ἐξουσιάζει, ἀλλ' ἡ γυνή· 5. μὴ [k] ἀποστερεῖτε ἀλλήλους, [l] εἰ [l] μή [l] τι ἂν[3] [m] ἐκ [m] συμφώνου [n] πρὸς [n] καιρόν, ἵνα [o] σχολάζητε[4] τῇ νηστείᾳ[5] καὶ[5] τῇ [p] προσευχῇ καὶ πάλιν [q] ἐπὶ τὸ [q] αὐτὸ [q] συνέρχησθε,[6] ἵνα μὴ

e See v. 1.
f οφειλην, Rom. xiii. 7; Mt. xviii. 32.
g Rom. xii. 17; 1 Th. v. 15; 1 Tim. v. 4; Rev. xviii. 6; Mt. xviii. 28 ff., xxii. 21; Lk. x. 35.

h Jas. ii. 25; Mt. xxvii. 41; Lk. v. 10, x. 32. i See vi. 12. k See vi. 7 f. In this sense, Ex. xxi. 10. l 2 Cor. xiii. 5; Lk. ix. 13. m H.l. συμφωνως, Eccl. vii. 15; -νειν, Acts v. 9, xv. 15, etc.; -νησις, 2 Cor. vi. 15. n 1 Th. ii. 17; Lk. viii. 13; Wisd. iv. 4. o Mt. xii. 44; Ex. v. 8, 17; Ps. xlv. 10. p In sing., absol., Rom. xii. 12; Col. iv. 2; Acts i. 4. q (ητε) xi. 20, xiv. 23; Acts i. 15, ii. 47; Lk. xvii. 35.

[1] Om. και εκαστη . . . εχετω: G, Tert.; by homœoteleuton.

[2] οφειλην: all pre-Syrian uncc., 17, 46, 67, vg. cop. οφειλ. ευνοι.: a gloss.

[3] Om. αν (?) B, Dam., Clem.; W.H. bracket. A copyist's grammatical addition (?).

[4] σχολασητε, all pre-Syrian uncc. (see note below).

[5] Om. τη νηστειᾳ και pre-Syrian uncc. and verss. An ecclesiastical gloss.

[6] ητε, all uncc. but KLP. Verss. render freely.

The variation ἑαυτοῦ γυν. . . . ἴδιον ἄνδρα distinguishes the husband as head and principal (xi. 3); "if this passage stood alone, it would be unsafe to build upon it, but this diff. of expression pervades the whole of the Epp." (Lt.: cf. xiv. 35; Eph. v. 22, etc.; Tit. ii. 5; 1 Peter iii. 1, 5). Throughout the passage there is a careful balancing of the terms relating to man and wife, bringing out the equality of the Christian law.—P. does not lay down here the ground of marriage, as though it were "ordained for a remedy against sin," but gives a special reason why those should marry at Cor. who might otherwise have remained single: see note on δέ, ver. 1.

Vv. 3, 4. Within the bonds of wedlock, "the due" should be yielded (3) by each for the satisfaction and according to the rights of the other (4). This dictum defends marital intercourse against rigorists, as that of ver. 1 commends celibacy against sensualists. The word ὀφειλή guards, both positively and negatively, the κοίτη ἀμίαντος (Heb. xiii. 4); what is due to one alone must be given to one alone (τῇ γυναικί, τῷ ἀνδρί). The gloss of the T.R., as old as the Syriac Version, is a piece of mistaken delicacy.—The precise repetition of ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ corrects the onesidedness of common sentiment and of public law,—both Greek and Jewish: she is as much the mistress of his person, as he the master of hers.—ἐξουσιάζω (= ἐξουσίαν ἔχω) implies moral power, authority (cf. vi. 12). τοῦ ἰδίου . . . οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, "elegans paradoxon" (Bg.)—his (her) own is not his (her) own.

Ver. 5. μὴ ἀποστερεῖτε κ.τ.λ.: "Do not rob one another"—sc. of the ὀφειλή; the deprivation is an injustice (same vb. as in vi. 7 f.); "congruit hoc verbum cum verbo debendi" (Bg.). This also, with ver. 4, against the rigorists. The impvs. of this context are pr., relating to habits of life.—εἰ μὴ κ.τ.λ. qualifies the command not to rob, by stating an exception: this exception, however, the Ap. "valde limitat" (Bg.), first by τι (in some measure, somehow), next by ἄν (haply, if the case should arise), thirdly by ἐκ συμφώνου (of consent: making the separation no longer robbery), lastly by πρὸς καιρόν (for a season). Such separation may be made for specific religious ends—"that you may be disengaged for prayer" (vacetis orationi, Vg.), and with a view to renewed intercourse (καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ἦτε). So fearful was the Ap. of putting a strain on the ill-disciplined Cor. nature, with sensual incitements rife in the atmosphere: "lest Satan be tempting you because of your want of self-control".—ἀκρασία, later Gr. for ἀκράτεια (opp. of ἐγκράτεια, cf. ix. 25), signifies non-mastery of appetite.—Σχολάζω (here in aor., of particular occasion; πειράζητε, pr., of constant possibility), construed with dat. or πρός τι, in cl. Gr. often denotes leisure from ordinary for higher pursuits—e.g., σχολάζειν μουσικῇ, φιλοσοφίᾳ; also used of scholars who "devote themselves" to a master: a negative condition of προσκαρτερεῖσ-

[r] πειράζῃ ὑμᾶς ὁ [rs] Σατανᾶς διὰ τὴν [t] ἀκρασίαν ὑμῶν.[1] 6. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω κατὰ [u] συγγνώμην, οὐ κατ᾽ [v] ἐπιταγήν· 7. θέλω γὰρ[2] πάντας ἀνθρώπους εἶναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτόν, ἀλλ᾽ ἕκαστος ἴδιον [w] χάρισμα[3] ἔχει[3] ἐκ Θεοῦ, ὃς[4] μὲν [x] οὕτως ὃς[4] δὲ [x] οὕτως. 8. λέγω δὲ τοῖς [y] ἀγάμοις καὶ ταῖς [z] χήραις, [a] Καλὸν αὐτοῖς ἐστιν[5] ἐὰν μείνωσιν ὡς κἀγώ· 9. [b] εἰ [b] δὲ [b] οὐκ [c] ἐγκρατεύονται [d] γαμησάτωσαν· [e] κρεῖσσον[6] γάρ ἐστι [d] γαμῆσαι[7] ἢ [f] πυροῦσθαι.

r 1 Th. iii. 5 (πειραζ. ο πειραζων), Mt. iv. 1, 3; also x. 13 below. Jas. i. 13; Gen. xxii. 1; 3 Kings x. 1, etc.
s See v. 5.
t Mt. xxiii. 25; freq. in cl. Gr.; -της, 2 Tim. iii. 3. Antonym of εγκρατεια, Gal. v. 23, etc.
u N.T. h.l.; Sir. iii. 13.
v ver. 25; 2 Cor. viii. 8; 1 Tim. i. 1; Tit. i. 3, ii. 15; Wisd. xiv. 16 (τυραννων επιταγαις).
w See i. 7.
x Cf. vi. 13.
y vv. 11, 32, 34. Of the man, Iliad iii. 40; of woman (rarely), Eurip. Hel. 690.
z 1 Tim. v. 3 ff.; Acts vi. 1, ix. 41; Jas. i. 27, etc.
a See ver. 1.
b ix. 2, xi. 6, xv. 13 ff. (δε), xvi. 22; Rom. viii. 9 (δε), xi. 21; 2 Th. iii. 10, 14 (δε); 1 Tim. iii. 5 (δε), v. 8 (δε); etc.
c ix. 25; Gen. xliii. 31; 1 Kings xiii. 12; -της, Tit. i. 8; -τεια, Gal. v. 23; Acts xxiv. 25; 2 Pet. i. 6. See ακρασια, ver. 5.
d vv. 10, 28 f., etc.; 1 Tim. iv. 3, v. 11, 14; etc.
e Phil. i. 23; 1 Pet. iii. 17; 2 Pet. ii. 21; Prov. iii. 14; cf. ver. 38 below, xi. 17; Heb. i. 4, etc.
f 2 Cor. xi. 29; Eph. vi. 16; 2 Pet. iii. 12; Rev. i. 15, iii. 18. H.l., in this sense.

[1] B, Method. om. υμων (?); bracketed by W.H. May be a copyist's addition,—a case for the maxim, Brevior lectio præferenda.

[2] δε (?): ℵ*ACD*G 17, 46, latt. am. fu. cop., Or., Cyr., Dam., Cyp. (Western and Alexandrian). So Tisch., Tr., W.H., R.V., El., Nestle.
γαρ: B and Syrian uncc., syrr.

[3] εχει χαρισμα: all pre-Syrian uncc.

[4] ο (μεν) . . . ο (δε): all pre-Syrian uncc.

[5] Om. εστιν all pre-Syrian uncc.

[6] κρειττον, ℵBD; κρεισσον, ACGLP, etc.

[7] γαμειν (?), ℵ*AC 17, 46. So Tisch., Tr. marg., W.H. text, Nestle. γαμησαι, BDGKLP, etc. W.H. marg., R.V.

θαι τῇ προσευχῇ (Rom. xii. 12, Col. iv. 2).

Vv. 6, 7. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω points to the leading direction given in ver. 2, from which vv. 3-5 digressed: "I advise you to be married (though I think celibacy good, 1), κατὰ συγγνώμην," secundum indulgentiam (Vg.)—i.e., συγκαταβαίνων τ. ἀσθενείᾳ ὑμῶν (Thp.); οὐ κατ᾽ ἐπιταγήν,—ex concessione, non ex imperio (Bz.). The rendering "permission" is somewhat misleading; συγγνώμη is quite distinct from the γνώμη opposed to ἐπιταγὴ in ver. 25; it signifies either pardon (venia, excuse for a fault), or, as here, allowance, regard for circumstances and temperament.—In θέλω δὲ κ.τ.λ. the Ap. states his personal bent, which he had set aside in the recommendation just given: "But I would have all men to be as indeed myself," sc. cœlibem—and contentedly so (cf. Acts xxvi. 29). ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτόν, paratactic acc. (attracted to πάντας ἀνθρώπους) = ὡς καὶ αὐτός εἰμι; καὶ emphasises the assertion that the writer is what he would like others to be. It is manifest (see also ix. 5) that the Ap. was unmarried, although Clem. Alex. and some moderns have inferred otherwise from Phil. iv. 3. That he had never been married is by no means certain. Two things, however, are clear: that if P. had known the married state, it was before his apostleship—"wife and children are never hinted at, he goes about entirely free from such ties" (Lt.); further, that if in early life he had entered this state, it was not δι᾽ ἀκρασίαν; he possessed the "grace-gift" (χάρισμα) of undisquieted continence (opposed to πυροῦσθαι, 9; cf. Matt. xix. 12), which was in his case an adjunct of his χάρις ἀποστολῆς. — "However (= I cannot have every one like myself, but) each has a charism of his own from God, the one in this shape and the other in that." ὁ δὲ οὕτως does not refer to the married Christian, as though his state were in itself a charism, but to any special endowment for service in Christ's kingdom other than that stated. On χάρισμα see i. 7; and cf. xii. 4-11.

Vv. 8, 9 re-state the answer given in vv. 1, 2 to the question concerning celibacy v. marriage. "But I say to the unmarried and the widows, it is right (καλόν; cf. 1) for them if they remain as indeed I (am)." The Ap. extends the

10. Τοῖς δὲ [d] γεγαμηκόσι [e] παραγγέλλω, οὐκ ἐγὼ ἀλλ' ὁ Κύριος, [g] γυναῖκα ἀπὸ ἀνδρὸς μὴ [h] χωρισθῆναι·[1] 11. ἐὰν δὲ καὶ [h] χωρισθῇ, μενέτω [f] ἄγαμος ἢ τῷ ἀνδρὶ [i] καταλλαγήτω· καὶ ἄνδρα γυναῖκα μὴ g xi. 17; 10 times besides in P.; freq. in Acts; 8 times in Syn. Gospp.

h In this sense, Mt. xix. 6; Judges iv. 11.

i 2 Cor. v. 18 ff.; Rom. v. 10; αποκαταλλ., Eph. ii. 16; Col. i. 20 f.; διαλλ., Mt. v. 24.

[1] χωρίζεσθαι, ADG (Western).

reassurance given in ver. 1, and fortifies it by his own example, so that those out of wedlock who were under no constraint to enter its bonds might be free from misgiving and reproach. τοῖς ἀγάμοις, in contrast to τοῖς γεγαμηκόσιν, ver. 10: the term is masc.—"to unmarried men"; the case of "maidens" is discussed later (25 ff.). "The widows," who would frequently have the disposal of themselves, are included here—they are advised again to the like effect in vv. 39 f. Holsten omits καὶ ταῖς χήραις as out of place; Bois ingeniously suggests that this may be a primitive corruption for καὶ τοῖς χήροις, "the widowers".—As the πορνεῖαι without (2), so ἀκρασία within (5) might make abstention from marriage perilous; hence the qualification added in ver. 9: "But if they have not self-control, let them marry; for better it is to marry than to burn on (with desire)".—πυροῦσθαι, pr. of continued state—"occulta flamma concupiscentiæ vastari" (Aug.); the vb. is used of any consuming passion, as in 2 Cor. xi. 29. Not "better in so far as marriage is sinless, burning is sinful (Matt. v. 28),"—so Mr.; if marriage and parenthood are holy (14), the fire which burns toward that end surely may be so—"the sacred lowe o' weel-placed love"; but "better" as the unsatisfied craving is a continual temptation, and according to the rule of ver. 35. Better to marry than to burn; but if marriage is impossible, better infinitely to burn than to sin.

§ 21. Prohibition of Divorce, vii. 10-16. Pagan sentiment and law, while condoning fornication, were exceedingly lax in permitting divorce (see Hermann-Stark, Griech. Privat-alterthümer, §§ 30. 15, 17), as Jewish practice was on the side of the husband (Matt. v. 31 f., xix. 7 ff.); and marriages were often contracted without affection. Unfit unions became irksome in the extreme, with the stricter ethics and high ideal of the new faith; in many cases one of the partners remained a heathen (12 f.). It was asked whether Christians were really "bound" (δεδουλωμένοι, 15) by the ties of the old life formed under unholy conditions, and whether it was right for man and wife to live together while one was in the kingdom of God and the other in that of Satan. These questions, propounded in the letter from Cor., Paul has now to answer—(a) as respects Christian couples (10 f.), (b) as respects married pairs divided in religion (12-16).

Vv. 10, 11. "But in the case of those that have married (τ. γεγαμηκόσιν, pf. of settled fact), I charge . . . wife not to separate from husband . . . and husband not to send away (or let go) wife." The parenthesis, "not I but the Lord" (it is His command, not mine), refers the indissolubility of marriage to the authority of Christ. The exceptional cause of divorce allowed by Jesus, παρεκτὸς λόγου πορνείας (Matt. v. 32, xix. 9; also unmentioned in Mark x. 11, Luke xvi. 18), is not contemplated in the instance of wedded Christians (Paul is addressing both partners at once). The Apostle's tone is changed (cf. 6 ff.); he is laying down the law, and on Supreme Authority. He cites Christ's words in distinction from his own (12), not as though his word was insufficient (see, to the contrary, 40, ii. 16, v. 3 f., xiv. 37, etc.), but inasmuch as this was a principle upon which "the Lord" had pronounced categorically.—It is noticeable that the case of the woman seeking separation comes first and is dwelt upon; Christianity had powerfully stirred the feminine mind at Cor. (see xi. 5 ff., xiv. 34 f.). In some cases, not so much incompatibility as ascetic aversion (cf. 3 f.) caused the wish to separate.—The γυναῖκα μὴ χωρισθῆναι is qualified by the parenthesis ἐὰν δὲ καὶ χωρισθῇ: "but if indeed she have separated, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband". P. is not allowing exceptions from the rule of Christ, but advising in cases where the mischief was done; the aor. sbj., χωρισθῇ, is timeless, taking its occasion from the context: see Bn., § 98. Her remaining unmarried is virtually included in the law of Christ (Matt. v. 32, xix. 9). καταλλαγήτω, pass., "let [k] ἀφιέναι. 12. [1] τοῖς δὲ [1] λοιποῖς ἐγὼ [1] λέγω,[1] οὐχ ὁ Κύριος, εἴ τις ἀδελφὸς γυναῖκα ἔχει [m] ἄπιστον καὶ αὐτὴ[2] [n] συνευδοκεῖ [o] οἰκεῖν [o] μετ' αὐτοῦ, μὴ [k] ἀφιέτω αὐτήν· 13. καὶ γυνὴ ἥτις[3] ἔχει ἄνδρα [m] ἄπιστον καὶ αὐτὸς[4] [n] συνευδοκεῖ[5] [o] οἰκεῖν [o] μετ' αὐτῆς, μὴ [k] ἀφιέτω αὐτόν· 14. [p] ἡγίασται γὰρ ὁ ἀνὴρ ὁ [m] ἄπιστος ἐν τῇ γυναικί,[6] καὶ [p] ἡγίασται ἡ γυνὴ ἡ [m] ἄπιστος ἐν τῷ ἀνδρί[7]· [q] ἐπεὶ [q] ἄρα τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν [r] ἀκάk In this sense, h.l.; cf. Mt. xix. 29; Mk. i. 20; Lk. xviii. 28; Jo. xiv. 18; Herod. v. 39; Jos. Ant. xv. 7, 10.

l 2 Cor. xiii. 2; Rom. xi. 7; 1 Th. iv. 13, v. 6; 1 Tim. v. 20; same idiom in Rev., Acts, and Syn. Gospp.
m See vi. 6. n Rom. i. 32; Lk. xi. 48; Acts viii. 1, xxii. 20; cf. ευδοκ. with inf., i. 21. o H.l. in N.T.; Gen. xxvii. 44. p See i. 2. q See v. 10. r 2 Cor. vi. 17 (Isa. lii. 11); Eph. v. 5; freq. in Syn. Gospp., Acts, and Rev., of πνευματα; also Acts x. 14; Rev. xvii. 4.

[1] λεγω εγω: ℵABCP (pre-Syrian and non-Western).

[2] αὗτη, latt. vg., Tert.; crit. edd.: see ουτος, ver. 13. In uncc. no distinction.

[3] ει τις: ℵD*GP, latt. vg., Chr., Ambrst., Aug., Dam. (Western).

[4] ουτος, all uncc. but D^cKL.

[5] ευδοκει, B.

[6] DG add τη πιστη.

[7] αδελφῳ, all pre-Syrian uncc.; vg. and syrr., ανδρι.

her get herself reconciled": the vb. indicates the fact of alienation or dissension, but not the side on which it exists (cf. the theological use of καταλλάσσω in Rom. v. 10 f.); if the husband disallows her return, she must remain ἄγαμος.—Romanists have inferred from the text, after Aug., and notwithstanding Matt. v. 32, that even adultery leaves the marriage-vow binding on the wronged partner; but this question is not in view here (see Ed. in loc.).

Vv. 12, 13. "But to the rest"—as distinguished from Christian couples (10) —"say I, not the Lord": this is my word, not His. On the problem of mixed marriages, which Jesus had no occasion to regulate, the Ap. delivers his own sentence. Not that he exhorts, whereas the Lord commands (Cm.)—λέγω is a word of authority (virtually repeating παραγγέλλω, 10), as in xiv. 34, 37, xv. 51, 2 Cor. vi. 13, Rom. xii. 3; much less, that he disclaims inspiration upon this point (Or., Tert., Milton), or betrays a doubt of his competence (Baur): he quoted the dictum of Jesus where it was available, and on the fundamental matter, and indicates frankly that in this further case he is proceeding on his personal judgment. The Christian spouse is forbidden to cast off the non-Christian in terms identical for husband and wife, only γυνὴ ἥτις (or εἴ τις: 13) standing over against εἴ τις ἀδελφός (12). Ἀφίημι, used of the ἀνὴρ specifically in ver. 11, is now applied to both parties: cl. Gr. uses ἀποπέμπειν or ἀπολύειν (Matt. v. 31) of the husband as dismissing the wife, ἀπολείπειν of the wife as deserting the husband; "in the structure of the two verses, with their solemn repetition, the equal footing of man and wife is indicated" (Hn.; cf. notes on 2-4 above). συν-ευδοκεῖ, "is jointly well-pleased,"—implying that the ἄπιστος agrees with the Christian spouse in deprecating separation, which the latter (after 10 f.) must needs desire to avoid; cf., for the force of συν-, Luke xi. 48, Acts viii. 1.

Ver. 14 obviates the objection which the Christian wife or husband (for the order, see note on 10 f.) might feel to continued union with an unbeliever (cf. Paul's own warning in 2 Cor. vi. 14 ff.): "Will not the saint," some one asks, "be defiled, and the 'limbs of Christ' (vi. 15) be desecrated by intercourse with a heathen?" To such a protest ἡγίασται γὰρ κ.τ.λ. replies: "For the husband that is an unbeliever, has been sanctified in his wife," and vice versâ. ἡγίασται . . . ὁ ἄπιστος is a paradox: it does not affirm a conversion in the unbeliever remaining such—whether incipient or prospective (D.W., and some others)—the pf. tense signifies a relationship established for the non-Christian in the past,—sc. at the conversion of the believing spouse; but man and wife are part of each other, in such a sense (cf. vi. 16 f., by contrast) that the sanctification of the one includes the other so far as their wedlock is concerned. The married believer in offering her- (or him-) self to God could not but present husθαρτά ἐστι, νῦν δὲ ἅγιά ἐστιν. 15. εἰ δὲ ὁ [m] ἄπιστος [h] χωρίζεται, [h] χωριζέσθω· οὐ [s] δεδούλωται ὁ ἀδελφὸς ἢ ἡ[1] ἀδελφὴ ἐν [t] τοῖς [t] τοιούτοις. [u] ἐν δὲ εἰρήνῃ [u x] κέκληκεν ἡμᾶς[2] ὁ [x] Θεός· 16. [v] τί γὰρ [v w] οἶδας, γύναι, [w] εἰ τὸν ἄνδρα σώσεις; ἢ [v] τί [v w] οἶδας, ἄνερ, s ix. 19; Rom. vi. 18, 22; Gal. iv. Tit. ii. 2 Pet. ii. 19; Acts vii. 6.

t Neut., Rom. i. 32, ii. 2 f.; Gal. v. 21, 23; Eph. v. 27.
u Gal. i. 6; Eph. iv. 4; 1 Th. iv. 7.
v Here only
w Cf. Acts x. 18, xix. 2; Jo. ix. 25; Jer. xxxvii. 6.

[1] ℵGP om. second η.

[2] υμας (?): ℵ*ACK 46, 73, cop. (Alexandrian); so Tisch., W.H. txt., Nestle, R.V. marg.
ημας: BDGL, latt. vg., syrr. (Western); Treg., Al., W.H. marg., R.V. txt., El.

band (or wife) in the same act—"sanctified in the wife, brother," respectively—and treats him (or her) henceforth as sacred. "Whatever the husband may be in himself, in the wife's thought and feeling he is a holy object. . . . Similarly the Christian's friends, abilities, wealth, time, are, or should be, holy" (Bt.). Marriage with an unbeliever after conversion is barred in 2 Cor. vi. 14.

The (relative) sanctity of the unconverted spouse is made more evident by the analogous case of children: "Else one must suppose that your children are unclean; but as it is, they are holy!" P. appeals to the instinct of the religious parent; the Christian father or mother cannot look on children, given by God through marriage, as things unclean. Offspring are holy as bound up with the holy parent; and this principle of family solidarity holds good of the conjugal tie no less than of the filial derived therefrom. See the full discussion of this text in Ed.; it has played no small part in Christian jurisprudence, and in the doctrine of Infant Baptism; it "enunciates the principle which leads to Infant Baptism, viz. that the child of Christian parents shall be treated as a Christian" (Lt.).—On ἐπεὶ ἄρα, alioqui certe, si res se aliter haberet, see v. 10 and parls.; νῦν δέ, as in v. 11, is both temporal and logical (cf. xv. 20, Rom. vi. 22).

Ver. 15*a*. The Christian wife or husband is not to seek divorce from the non-Christian (12-14); but if the latter insists on separation, it is not to be refused: "But if the unbeliever separates, he may separate"—let the separation take its course (χωριζέσθω, pr. impv.): for this impv. of consent, cf. ver. 36, xiv. 38.—οὐ δεδούλωται (pf. of fixed condition) "the brother or the sister in such circumstances is not kept in bondage"; cf. ver. 39—the stronger vb. of this passage implies that for the repudiated party to continue bound to the repudiator would be slavery. Christ's law forbids putting away (10 ff.), but does not forbid the one put away to accept dismissal. Whether the freedom of the innocent divorced extends to remarriage, does not appear: the Roman Church takes the negative view—though contrary to the Canon Law (see Wordsworth, in loc.); the Lutheran Church the affirmative, allowing remarriage on desertio malitiosa; "in view of ver. 11, the inference that the divorced should remain unmarried is the safer" (so Hn., against Mr.). If, however, the repudiator forms a new union, cutting off the hope of restoration, the case appears then to come under the exception made in Matt. v. 31. With ἐν τοιούτοις, neut., cf. ἐν τούτοις, Rom. viii. 37; and ἐν οἷς, Phil. iv. 11.

Vv. 15*b*, 16. ἐν δὲ εἰρήνῃ ὁ Θεός . . . σώσεις; The Christian spouse forsaken by the heathen is free from the former yoke; but such freedom is undesirable. Two considerations make against it: Peace is better for a Christian than disruption (15*b*); and there is the possibility of saving the unbeliever by remaining with him, or her (16). Thus P. reverts, by the contrastive δέ, to his prevailing thought, that the marriage tie, once formed, should in every way possible be maintained. On this view of the connexion, the full stop should be set at ἐν τοιούτοις, and the colon at ὁ Θεός. "In peace," etc.—opposed to χωριζέσθω, like καταλλαγήτω in ver. 11—appeals to the ruling temper of the Christian life, determined once for all by God's call in the Gospel, "ex quo consequitur retinendum esse nobis infidelem, ac omnibus officiis demerendum; nedum ut vel eum ipsi deseramus, vel ad nos deserendos provocemus" (Bz.); cf. Rom. xii. 18, for the general thought. For the construction of ἐν εἰρήνῃ, cf. 1 Thess. iv. 7, Gal. i. 6, Eph. iv. 4.—Ver. 16 follows up the x Gal. i. 7, 19; see note below.

y In this sense, 2 Cor. x. 13; Heb. vii. 2; Mk. vi. 41; Lk. xii. 13; Josh. xiii. 7. Cf. i. 13.
z See i. 9 (God the caller).
a See iii. 3.

ʷεἰ τὴν γυναῖκα σώσεις[1]; 17. ˣεἰ ˣμὴ ἑκάστῳ ὡς ʸἐμέρισεν[2] ὁ Θεός,[3] ἕκαστον ὡς ᶻκέκληκεν ὁ ᶻΚύριος,[4] οὕτω ᵃπεριπατείτω· καὶ

[1] Add η μη (for ει μη of ver. 17) a few minn., hcl.-syr. marg., and Chr.; by itacism.

[2] μεμερικεν, ℵ*B. So most crit. edd.; see, however, El. in favour of the aorist. Possibly Rom. xii. 3 has influenced the copyists.

[3] (μεμερ.) ο Κυριος: all pre-Syrian uncc.

[4] (κεκλης.) ο Θεος: as above (ver. 15). See parls.

appeal to Christian principle, by a challenge addressed in turn to the wifely and the manly heart: "(Keep the peace, if you can, with the unconverted spouse), for how do you know, O wife, that you will not save your husband? or how do you know, O husband, that you will not save your wife?" That εἰ in this connexion (see parls.), after τί οἶδας implying a fear, may mean "that . . . not" in English idiom (as though it were: "How do you know? it may be you will save, etc.!") is admitted by Hn. and Ed., though they reject the above interpretation, which is that of the ancient commentt. from Cm. down to Lyra, of Cv. and Bz., and of Ev. and Lt. amongst moderns: see the convincing notes of the two last-named; "Confirmatio est superioris sententiæ: non cur discedente infideli liberetur fidelis; sed contra, cur ita sit utendum hac libertate, ut infidelem, si fieri potest, retineat fidelis ac Christo lucrificet" (Bz.).—τί οἶδας; connotes "not the manner in which the knowledge is to be obtained, but the extent of it" (Ed.)—"what do you know as to the question whether, etc.?"

The above sentences are curiously ambiguous; taken by themselves, they may be read as reasons either against or for separation. The latter interpretation is adopted, as to ver. 15*b* by most, and as to ver. 16 by nearly all recent exegetes (including Bg., Mr., Hf., Hn., Al., Bt., Ed., Gd., El.): "God has called us in peace (and peace is only possible through separation); for how do you know, wife or husband, that you will save the other?" As much as to say, "Why cling to him, or her, on so ill-founded a hope?" Grammatical considerations being fairly balanced, the tenor of the previous context determines the Apostle's meaning. In the favourite modern exposition, the essential thought has to be read between the lines. It should also be observed that the Cor., with their lax moral notions, needed dissuasives from rather than encouragements to divorce; and on the other hand, that to discountenance the hope of a soul's salvation is strangely unlike the Ap. (cf. x. 33). On the construction here adopted, P. returns at the close of the Section to the thought with which it opened—μὴ χωρισθῆναι.

§ 22. God's Calling and One's Earthly Station, vii. 17-24. In treating of questions relating to marriage, the Apostle's general advice—admitting of large exceptions (2, 9, 15)—had been that each, whether single or married, should be content with his present state (1, 8, 10-14, 27). The Christian revolution had excited in some minds a morbid restlessness and eagerness for change, which disturbed domestic relations (cf. Matt. x. 36), but was not confined thereto. This wider tendency the Ap. combats in the ensuing paragraph; he urges his readers to acquiesce in their position in life and to turn it to account as Christians. In Thessalonica a similar excitement had led men to abandon daily work and throw their support upon the Church (1 Thess. iv. 11 f., 2 Thess. iii. 6-15). Hn., in Meyer's Comm., p. 229, points out the close resemblance, both in form and matter, between this section and certain passages in Epictetus (Dissertt., I., xix., 47 ff.; II., ix., 19 f.). The freedom of the inner man and loyal acceptance of the providence of God are inculcated by both the Stoic and the Christian philosopher, from their differing standpoints.

Ver. 17. "Only, in each case as the Lord has apportioned to him, in each case as God has called him, so let him (the believer) walk." Under this general rule the exceptional and guarded permission of divorce in ver. 15 was to be understood. For εἰ μὴ in this exceptive sense (= πλήν), cf. Rom. xiv. 14, Gal. i. 7, 19; see Bm., p. 359. The repeated distributive ἕκαστος extends the principle pointedly to every situation in life; cf. vv. 20, 24, iii. 5, 8-13. On μεμέρικεν, οὕτως ἐν [b] ταῖς [b] ἐκκλησίαις πάσαις [c] διατάσσομαι.[1] 18. [d] περιτετμημένος τις [z] ἐκλήθη; μὴ [e] ἐπισπάσθω· [f] ἐν [f] ἀκροβυστίᾳ τις[2] [z] ἐκλήθη[2]; μὴ [d] περιτεμνέσθω· 19. ἡ [g] περιτομὴ [h] οὐδέν ἐστι, καὶ

b Pl., xi. 16, xiv. 33 f., xvi. 1, 19; 7 times in 2 Cor.; 5 times besides in P.; Rev. i. 4 ff., xxii. 16; Acts xv. 41, xvi. 5. c Mid., xi. 34; Tit. i. 5; Acts vii. 44, xx. 13, xxiv. 23. In this connexion, xvi. 1. d Gal. ii. 3, v. 2 f., vi. 12 f.; Col. ii. 11; cf. Acts xv. 1, 5, xvi. 3, xxi. 21. e H.l.; Isa. v. 18. See note below. f Rom. iv. 10 ff. ακροβ. freq. in P.; Acts xi. 3. g Rom. ii. 25-29; often in P.; Jo. vii. 22 f., Acts vii. 8, x. 45, xi. 2. h xiii. 2; 2 Cor. xii. 11; Mt. xxiii. 16, 18; Jo. viii. 54.

[1] διδασκω, D*G, latt. vg. (doceo). Cf. iv. 17.

[2] κεκληται τις: ℵABP 17, 37, 46. τις κεκληται: D*G, Dam. (Western). τις εκληθη (as in parl. clause), DcKL, etc. (Syrian).

see ver. 33 and i. 12: the Christian's secular status is a μέρος which "the Lord," the Disposer of men's affairs, has assigned him (cf. Matt. xxv. 14 f.).—ὡς κέκληκεν, on the other hand, refers not to the secular "vocation" but, as always (see 15, 18, 21 f., i. 9, 26, etc.), to the "call" of God's grace in the Gospel, which came to the individual readers under these circumstances or those.—οὕτως περιπατείτω enjoins the pursuance of the Christian life in harmony with the conditions thus determined at its outset. P. does not mean to stereotype a Christian's secular employment from the time of his conversion, but forbids his renouncing this under a false notion of spiritual freedom, or in contempt of secular things as though there were no will of God for him in their disposition.

The last clause of the ver. shows that the tendency here reproved was widespread; cf. i. 2, xi. 16, xiv. 33, 36.

Vv. 18, 19. The rule of ver. 17 applied to the most prominent and critical distinction in the Church, that between Jew and Gentile: περιτετμημένος τις ἐκλήθη κ.τ.λ.; "Was any one called (as) a circumcised man? let him not have the mark effaced".—ἐπισπάσθω alludes to a surgical operation (ἐπισπάω, to draw over) by which renegade Jews effaced the Covenant sign: see 1 Macc. i. 11 ff., Joseph., Ant., xii., 5, 1; Celsus, vii., 25. 5; also Schürer, Hist. of Jewish People, I., i., p. 203, and Wetstein ad loc. Such apostates were called m'shūkim, recutiti (Buxtorf's Lexic., p. 1274).—On the opp. direction to the Gentile, μὴ περιτεμνέσθω, the Ep. to the Gal. is a powerful commentary; here the negative reasons against the change suffice (17, 19).—The variation in tense and order of words in the two questions is noticeable: "Was any one a circumcised man at the time of his call (ἐκλήθη)? . . . Has any one been called (κέκληται) though in uncircumcision?"—To clinch the matter (cf. i. 31, iii. 7) P. applies one of his great axioms: "Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing; but keeping of God's commands"—that is everything.

In Gal. v. 6, vi. 15 this maxim reappears, with πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη and καινὴ κτίσις respectively in the antithesis: this text puts the condition of acceptance objectively, as it lies in a right attitude toward God (cf. Rom. ii. 25 ff.); those other texts supply the subjective criterion, lying in a right disposition of the man. In Gal. v., οὐκ ἰσχύει—opposed to ἐνεργουμένη—signalises the impotence of external states, the other two passages their nothingness as religious qualifications.—"Those who would contrast the teaching of St. Paul with that of St. James, or exaggerate his doctrine of justification by faith, should reflect on this τήρησις ἐντολῶν Θεοῦ" (Lt.).

Ver. 20. Diff. views are taken of this ver., as κλῆσις is referred to the religious call or secular calling of the man; and as ᾗ is accordingly rendered "wherewith" (instrum. dat.: cf. Eph. iv. 1, 2 Tim. i. 9), or "wherein" (governed by the foregoing ἐν: cf. 15, 18, 24; see Wr., pp. 524 f.). The latter interpretation is negatived by the fact that it destroys the unity of sense between κλῆσις and ἐκλήθη (see note on 18: does κλῆσις in Gr. anywhere mean avocation?). Besides, "circumcision" and "uncircumcision" are not "callings". Yet P. is manifestly referring to outward conditions affecting the religious call. The stress of the sentence lies on μενέτω (cf. 24); and Gal. iii. 2 f., v. 2-6, give the clue to the Apostle's meaning. A change of secular condition adopted under the idea that circumcision or uncircumcision is "something," that it makes a diff. in the eyes of God, would be a change of religious princple, an abandonment of the basis of our call to salvation by grace and through faith; cf. Gal. ii. 11-21.

ἡ [g] ἀκροβυστία [h] οὐδέν ἐστιν, ἀλλὰ [i] τήρησις [i] ἐντολῶν [i] Θεοῦ. 20. ἕκαστος [n] ἐν τῇ [k] κλήσει ᾗ [k n z] ἐκλήθη, ἐν ταύτῃ μενέτω· 21. δοῦλος [z] ἐκλήθης; μή σοι [l] μελέτω· ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ δύνασαι ἐλεύθερος γενέσθαι, μᾶλλον [m] χρῆσαι· 22. ὁ γὰρ ἐν Κυρίῳ [z] κληθεὶς δοῦλος, [n] ἀπελεύθερος Κυρίου ἐστιν· [o] ὁμοίως καὶ [1] ὁ ἐλεύθερος [z] κληθείς, [p] δοῦλός ἐστι [p] Χριστοῦ. 23. [q] τιμῆς [q] ἠγοράσθητε· μὴ γίνεσθε δοῦλοι [r] ἀνθρώ-

i τηρ. (cf. Acts iv. 3, v. 18) εντ., N.T. h.l.; Sir. xxxii. 23; Wisd. vi. 18 (νομων). τηρειν εντ., Mt. xix. 17; Jo. xiv. 21, xv. 10; Acts xv. 5 (νομον); 1 Jo. ii. 3 f., iii. 22, 24, v. 3; Rev. xiv. 12. εντολ. Θε., Mt. xv. 3; Rev. xii. 17, xiv. 12; Ezra x. 3; cf. Κυρ. εντ., xiv. 37. k See i. 26. l ix. 9; 1 Pet. v. 7; Acts xviii. 17; 5 times in Gospp. m ver. 31, ix. 12, 15; 1 Tim. i. 8, v. 23; Acts xxvii. 17. n H.l.; see note below. o See ver. 3. p Rom. i. 1, etc.; Gal. i. 10; Eph. vi. 6; Col. iii. 21, iv. 12; Ja. i. 1; 2 Pet. i. 1. q See vi. 20. r Cf. Gal. i. 10; Eph. vi. 6; Col. iii. 22 f.

[1] Om. και ℵABP 17, 46, vg. syrr. δε και, DG 37. και only, KL, etc.

The Gentile who embraced circumcision in order to fulfil the law of God was severing himself from Christ and falling from grace. The "abide" of 1 Cor. is parl. to the "stand fast" of Gal.

Ver. 21. From the chief religious, the Ap. passes to the chief social distinction of the times: cf. Gal. iii. 28, Col. iii. 11. This contrast is developed only on one side—no freeman wished to become a slave, as Gentiles wished to be Jews; but the slaves, numerous in this Church (i. 26 ff.), sighed for liberty; their conversion stimulated this longing. The advice to the slave is read in two opposite ways: (a) "In slavery wast thou called? never mind (μή σοι μελέτω)! But still if thou canst also become free, rather make use of it (than not)"—so Ev. excellently renders, with Cv., Bz., Gr., Hf., Bt., Gd., Lt., supplying τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ for complement to μᾶλλον χρῆσαι; while (b) Est., Bg., D.W., Mr., Hn., Weiss, Weizsäcker, Al., El., Sm. supply τῇ δουλείᾳ, and suppose P. to recommend the slave, with liberty offered, to "make use rather" of his servile condition. εἰ καὶ may either mean (a) "if verily" (Luke xi. 18; so ἐὰν καὶ in xi. 28, Gal. vi. 1), or (b) "although" (Phil. ii. 17, Luke xi. 8, etc.). The ancient commentators differed on this text, with a leaning to (b). The advocates of (b) exaggerate the sense of vv. 20, 24, which condemns change not per se but, as in the case of circumcision, because it compromises Christian faith and standing. "Freedom" is the object proximately suggested to "rather use" by "free" just above; and the sense of χράομαι in ver. 31, ix. 12, 15—to "avail oneself of an opportunity of good" (Lt.)—speaks in favour of (a). The οὐ δεδούλωται of ver. 15 and the μὴ γίνεσθε δοῦλοι ἀνθρώπων of ver. 23 indicate Paul's feeling for freedom; and the δύνασθαι ἐλεύθερος γενέσθαι was to the Christian slave a precious item in his providential μέρος (17).

Upon this view, ἀλλὰ . . . χρῆσαι forms a parenthesis, resembling in its connexion the οὐ δεδούλ. clause of ver. 15, by which P. intimates that in urging contentment with a slave's lot he does not preclude his embracing liberty, should it be offered. Having said this by the way, he supports his μή σοι μελέτω by the comforting reflexion of ver. 22*a*, which is completed in ver. 22*b* by the corresponding truth for the freeman.

Ver. 22. The two sentences, balanced by ὁμοίως (cf. 3 f.), do not precisely match: ὁ ἐν Κυρίῳ κληθεὶς δοῦλος is "the slave that was called in the Lord" (i.e., under Christ's authority), but ὁ ἐλεύθερος κληθεὶς is rather "the freeman, in that he was called"; his call has made the latter Christ's slave, while the former, though a slave, is the Lord's freedman.—ἀπελεύθερος, libertus (the prp. implying severance as in ἀπολύτρωσις, i. 30)—freedman of a Lord; "Christ buys us from our old master, sin, and then sets us free; but a service is still due from the libertus to the patronus" (Lt.); cf. Rom. vi. 17 f.; also ἔννομος Χριστοῦ, ix. 21, with the same gen. of possession. Ignatius makes a touching allusion to this passage, ad Rom., 4: "I am till the present time a slave; but if I suffer I shall be Jesus Christ's freeman, and I shall rise up [in the resurrection] free!"

Ver. 23. τιμῆς ἠγοράσθητε (see note on vi. 20) explains the position both of the δοῦλος ἀπελεύθερος and the ἐλεύθ. δοῦλος by the same act of purchase: the slave has been liberated from sin, and the freeman bound to a new Lord. The point of the appended exhortation, μὴ γίνεσθε δοῦλ. ἀνθρ., is not obvious: we can scarcely imagine free Christians selling

πων. 24. ἕκαστος ἐν ᾧ [u] [x] ἐκλήθη, ἀδελφοί, ἐν τούτῳ μενέτω [s] παρὰ τῷ [1] Θεῷ.

25. Περὶ δὲ τῶν [t] παρθένων [u] ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω· [v] γνωμὴν δὲ [v] δίδωμι, ὡς [w] ἠλεημένος [w] ὑπὸ [w] Κυρίου [x] πιστὸς εἶναι. 26. νομίζω οὖν τοῦτο [y] καλὸν ὑπάρχειν διὰ τὴν [z] ἐνεστῶσαν [a] ἀνάγκην, ὅτι s For sense of παρα, cf. Lk. i. 30, ii. 52; 1 Pet. ii. 4. t In this ch. and 2 Cor. xi. 2; Mt. i. 23 (Isa. vii. 14), xxv. 1 ff.; Lk. i. 27; Acts xxi. 9; Rev. xiv. 4. u See ver. 6. v See i. 10; γν. διδ, 2 Cor. viii. 10. w 2 Cor. iv. 1; Ph. ii. 27; 1 Tim. i. 13, 16. The vb., Rom. ix. 15 ff., xi. 30 ff.; Mt. v. 7. x See iv. 2. y See ver. 1. z See iii. 22. a 2 Cor. vi. 4, xii. 10; 1 Th. iii. 7; Lk. xxi. 23; 1 Kings xxii. 2.

[1] Om. τῷ all uncc. but A, which is followed by a considerable minority of minn.

themselves into slavery; and subservience to party leaders (so Mr., Hf., Lt., El.; cf. i. 12, ii. 4, etc.) appears foreign to this context. It is better to take the warning quite generally: as much as to say, "Let no human influence divert you from service to God, or infringe on the devotion due to your Redeemer"; cf. Gal. v. 1, vi. 14. Public opinion and the social pressure of heathenism were too likely to enslave the Corinthians.

Ver. 24 reiterates with urgency, as addressed to "brethren," the fundamental rule laid down in ver. 20. ἐν τῇ κλήσει ᾗ now becomes, abstractly, ἐν ᾧ . . . ἐν τούτῳ—"wherein each was called, in that let him abide in the sight of God"; here as there the Christian vocation is intended, the status of faith and saintship, with which no human power may interfere and which, when duly realised, will of itself control outward relations and circumstances (Gal. ii. 20, Rom. xiv. 23). For παρὰ Θεῷ, cf. iii. 19 and parls.

§ 23. Advantages of the Single State, vii. 25-35. Paul's opinion had been asked particularly, in this connexion, about the case of marriageable daughters (25): was it wise for fathers, as things were, to settle their daughters in marriage? He delivers his judgment on this delicate matter, turning aside in vv. 29-31 to a general reflexion upon the posture of Christians towards the perishing world around them; then returning to point out the freedom from care and material engrossment enjoyed by the unwedded (32 ff.), he restates in ver. 36 his advice περὶ τῶν παρθένων.

Ver. 25. Περὶ δὲ τῶν παρθένων: a topic pointedly included in the περὶ ὧν ἐγράψατε of the Church Letter (1). In vv. 1-16 P. had spoken of the conduct of self-directing men and women in regard to marriage; there remains the case of daughters at home, for whose disposal the father was responsible (36 f.). On this point Paul has no "command" to give, whether proceeding immediately (10, ix. 14) or mediately (xiv. 37) from "the Lord"; he "gives" his γνώμη, his settled and responsible "opinion". He pronounces "as (i.e., feeling myself to be; cf. 29 ff., iv. 7, 18) one ἠλεημένος ὑπὸ Κυρίου πιστὸς εἶναι"—conscious that he is "faithful through the mercy effectually shown" him (pf. pass. ptp.; cf. 1 Tim. i. 13, 16) "by the Lord,"—faithful in this pronouncement to his stewardship under Christ (see iv. 1 f., and ii. 16). His advice is therefore to be trusted. The distinction made is not between higher and lower grades of inspiration or authority (cf. note on 12); but between peremptory rule, and conditional advice requiring the concurrence of those advised. Paul's opinion, qua opinion, as much as his injunction, is that of the Lord's steward and mouthpiece.

Ver. 26. νομίζω οὖν τοῦτο κ.τ.λ.: "I consider therefore"—the formula by which one gives a γνώμη (contrast the παραγγέλλω, διατάσσομαι of 10, 17)—"this to be good because of the present straits": καλὸν ὑπάρχειν, "good in principle" or "in nature" (cf. xi. 7, xii. 22); the existing situation is such as to make the course recommended entirely right and honourable (see note on καλόν, 1, also 8, 38).—The ἀνάγκη—narrowness, "pinching stress" (Ev.)—belongs to the καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος (29), the brief earthly continuance visible for the Church, a period exposed to persecution (28) with its hardships and perils; this "might or might not be the beginning of the ἀνάγκη μεγάλη predicted by Jesus" in Luke xxi. 23 (Lt.). ἐνεστῶσαν signifies "present" rather than "impending" (see iii. 22, Gal. i. 4); the distress of the time, which P. was feeling keenly at Ephesus (iv. 9 ff., xv. 32), portended a speedy crisis.—ὅτι καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ τὸ οὕτως εἶναι is open to three constructions, as ὅτι is rendered that, because, or which (ὅ,τι): (a) makes

[y] καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ τὸ [b] οὕτως εἶναι. 27. [c] δέδεσαι [c] γυναικί; μὴ [d] ζήτει [e] λύσιν. [f] λέλυσαι ἀπὸ γυναικός; μη [d] ζήτει γυναῖκα. 28. ἐὰν δὲ καὶ [g] γήμῃς,[1] οὐχ ἥμαρτες· καὶ ἐὰν [1] γήμῃ ἡ [t] παρθένος, οὐχ ἥμαρτε· [h] θλίψιν δὲ τῇ [i] σαρκὶ [h] ἕξουσιν [k] οἱ [k] τοιοῦτοι, ἐγὼ

b Ver. 40; Jo. iv. 6. c Ver. 39; Rom. vii. 2. d In like sense, Rom. ii. 7; Col. iii. 1; 1 Pet. iii. 11; Rev. ix. 6; Mt. vi. 33, xiii. 45. e N.T. h.l.; Eccl. viii. 1; Wisd. viii. 8. f Acts xxii. 30; Jo. xi. 44; Ps. cxlv. 7. g See ver. 9; also note below. h Jc. xvi. 33; Rev. ii. 10; Sir. ii. 3. i For dat., 2 Cor. xii. 7; for use of σαρξ, v. 5. k See v. 5.

[1] γαμησῃς, ℵ(A)BP 17, 37, 46. γημῃς, KL, etc. λαβῃς γυναικα, DG, l tt. vg., Tert.

the clause an expanded restatement of τοῦτο καλὸν ὑπάρχειν—"I think then this to be good . . . that it is good (I say) for a man to remain as he is" (so Mr., Ed., El., and most); (b) makes it the ground, lying in the principle stated in ver. 1, for Paul's specific advice in the matter of the παρθένοι—"I think this to be good (in their case) . . . because it is good for one (ἀνθρώπῳ; see note on 1) to remain as one is," sc. to continue single (Bz., D.W., Gd.); (c) by attaching ὅ,τι as relative to the antecedent τοῦτο, and defining it by the subsequent τ. οὕτως εἶναι, Hn. gets another rendering —"I think this to be good (in the case of maidens) because of the present straits, which is good (as I have said, 1) for one generally, viz., to remain unmarried." (b) and (c), yielding a like sense, avoid the anacoluthon — the former at the expense of leaving τοῦτο undefined, the latter by an artificial arrangement of the words; both explanations are somewhat wide of the mark, for διὰ τ. ἐνεστ. ἀνάγκην supplies here the ground of advice, and ver. 1, on which they are based, is differently conceived (see note). In giving his advice "about the maidens," P. suddenly bethinks himself to widen it to both sexes (see 27 f.). So he recasts his sentence, throwing the ὅτι καλόν κ.τ.λ., with characteristic conversational freedom (cf. iv. 9), into apposition to the incomplete inf. clause: "I think this to be good because of the present straits —yes, that it is good ἀνθρώπῳ (for any one, not τ. παρθένοις only) not to change one's state". οὕτως εἶναι, "to be just as one is" (see parls.)—a state defined by the context.

Vv. 27, 28 apply in detail the advice just given, and first as it bears on men, then on maidens.—δέδεσαι, λέλυσαι, pf. pass. of present state determined by the past; μὴ ζήτει, pr. impv., "do not be seeking". The two directions of ver. 27 reinforce, from the new point of view, the instructions of vv. 10-16 and 8 respectively.—λέλυσαι, as opp. of δέδεσαι, applies either to bachelor or widower.

In ver. 28 the general advice of 27 is guarded from being overpressed; cf. the relation of ver. 2 to 1 and ver. 9 to 8. The punctuation of El. and Nestle best marks the connexion of thought, closing ver. 27 with a full st p, each of the parl. ἐὰν . . . ἥμαρτες (-ν) clauses with a colon, and separating θλίψιν δὲ and ἐγὼ δὲ by a comma. In the second supposition (both with ἐὰν and sbj. of probable contingency) P. reverts to the case of "the maiden," from which he was diverted in ver. 26; he makes her, by implication, responsible for her marriage, although in 36 ff., later, the action of the father is alone considered.—γαμέω is used in the act. here, and in ver. 39, both of man and woman; cl. Gr. applies it to the latter in pass.; cf. note on the double ἀφιέτω in vv. 12 f. ἔγημα and ἐγάμησα are the older and later aors.—The aor. in the apodosis — ἥμαρτες, ἥμαρτεν — is proleptic (Bn. § 50; Bm., pp. 198 f., 202), rather than gnomic (Mr., Hn., Ed.), as though by way of general reflexion: the Ap. addresses specific instances— "thou didst not . . . she did not sin"; cf. for tense, John xv. 11, Rev. x. 7.

The marriage Paul discourages is no sin, but will bring suffering from which he would fain save his friends. "But affliction for the flesh such (as may marry) will have, but I am seeking to spare you." With θλίψις cf. σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκί (2 Cor. xii. 7; also v. 5 above); there is some thought, possibly, of recompense to "the flesh" which has had its way against advice. The affliction that Paul foresees is aptly indicated by Photius: "More easily and with small distress shall we endure if we have no wives and children to carry along with us in persecutions and countless miseries". At such times, for those who have domestic cares, there arises "the terrible δὲ ὑμῶν [l] φείδομαι. 29. [m] Τοῦτο δέ [m] φημι, ἀδελφοί, ὁ [n] καιρὸς [1] [o] συνεσταλμένος [2]· [p] τὸ [p] λοιπόν [2] ἐστιν [2] ἵνα καὶ οἱ [q] ἔχοντες [q] γυναῖκας ὡς μὴ [q] ἔχοντες ὦσι, 30. καὶ οἱ [r] κλαίοντες ὡς μὴ [r] κλαίοντες, καὶ οἱ [r] χαίροντες ὡς μὴ [r] χαίροντες, καὶ οἱ [s] ἀγοράζοντες ὡς μὴ [t] κατέχοντες, 31. καὶ οἱ [u] χρώμενοι τῷ [3] κόσμῳ [3] τούτῳ [3] ὡς μὴ [v] καταχρώμενοι· [w] παράγει γὰρ τὸ [x] σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου.

l 2 Cor. i. 23, xii. 6, xiii. 2; Rom. viii. 32, xi. 21; Acts xx. 29; 2 Pet. ii. 4 f. m xv. 50; see vi. 16. Cf. i. 12. n In like sense, 2 Cor. vi. 2; Rom. xiii. 11; Eph. v. 16; Col. iv. 5; 2 Tim. iv. 6; Rev. xii. 12; Lk. xix. 44; Jo. vii. 8. o N.T. h.l. (cf. Acts v. 6); Sir. iv. 31. p See i. 16; το λ., Ph. iii. 1, iv. 8; 2 Th. iii. 1; Heb. x. 13; Mk. xiv. 41. q See v. 1. r 2 Cor. vi. 10; Rom. xii. 15; Jo. xvi. 20. s See vi. 20. t In this sense, 2 Cor. vi. 10; Josh. i. 11. See xi. 2. u See ver. 21. v ix. 18. w Mt. ix. 9, etc.; mid., 1 Jo. ii. 8, 17. x Ph. ii. 8; Isa. iii. 17.

[1] Beza and Elzevir read οτι ο καιρος, after DG and the Western txt.

[2] συνεσταλμενος εστιν το λοιπον, ℵABD* (om. το) P 17, 37, 46, and many Ff. With this order of words, the stop follows εστιν: so B* (according to Tisch.); see note below. G 67, latt. vg., Tert., Hier., Aug. write εστιν twice. συνεσταλμ. το λοιπον εστιν, DcKL, etc.—L, syrr. cop., followed by Elz. and Griesbach, put the stop at εστιν; Stephens, Bz., and most edd. of T.R. placed it before το λοιπον.

[3] τον κοσμον (om. τουτ.), ℵAB, cop. DG 17 add τουτον. τῳ κοσμῳ τουτῳ: Syrian uncc., etc.; a grammatical emendation.

alternative, between duty to God and affection to wife and children" (Lt.).—φείδομαι appears to be a conative present (see Bn. § 11; cf. Ro. ii. 4, Gal. v. 4).

Vv. 29-31. τοῦτο δέ φημι, ἀδελφοί, κ.τ.λ.: "This moreover I assert, brethren: The time is cut short".—φημί, as distinguished from λέγω, "marks the gravity and importance of the statement" (El.).—Συνστέλλω (to contract, shorten sail) acquired the meaning to depress, defeat (1 Macc. iii. 6, 2 Macc. vi. 12); hence some render συνεσταλμένος by "calamitous," but without lexical warrant.—ὁ καιρός (see parls.) is "the season," the epoch of suspense in which the Church was then placed, looking for Christ's coming (i. 7) and uncertain of its date. The prospect is "contracted"; short views must be taken of life.

The connexion of τὸ λοιπὸν and ἵνα . . . ὦσιν with the foregoing affords a signal example of the grammatical looseness which mars Paul's style. (a) As to τὸ λοιπόν: (1) Cm., the Gr. Ff., Bz., Al., Ev., Hn., Gd., Ed., R.V. mg. attach it to συνεστ. ἐστίν, in a manner "contrary to its usual position in Paul's epp. and diluting the force of the solemn ὁ καιρὸς . . . ἐστίν" (El.). (2) The Vg. and Lat. Ff., Est., Cv., A.V. read τὸ λοιπὸν as predicate to ἐστὶν understood, thus commencing a new sentence,—"reliquum est ut," etc.; this is well enough in Latin, but scarcely tolerable Greek. (3) Mr., Hf., Bt., El., Lt., W.H., R.V. txt. subordinate τὸ λοιπόν, thrown forward with emphasis, to the ἵνα clause (cf. Gal. ii. 10, Rom. xi. 31)—"so that henceforth indeed those that have wives may be as without them," etc.; this gives compactness to the whole sentence, and proper relevance to the adv. Those who realise the import of the pending crisis will from this time sit loose to mundane interests. (b) As to the connexion of ἵνα . . . ὦσιν: this clause may define either the Apostle's purpose, as attached to φημί (so Bz., Hf., Ed.), or the Divine purpose implied in συνεστ. ἐστίν (so most interpreters). Both explanations give a fitting sense: the Ap. urges, or God has determined, the limitation of the temporal horizon, in order to call off Christians from secular absorption. In this solemn connexion the latter is, presumably, Paul's uppermost thought.

Vv. 29*b*, 30 are "the picture of spiritual detachment in the various situations in life" (Gd.). Home with its joys and griefs, business, the use of the world, must be carried on as under notice to quit, by men prepared to cast loose from the shores of time (cf. Luke xii. 29-36; by contrast, Luke xiv. 18 ff.). From wedlock the Ap. turns, as in vv. 17-24, to other earthly conditions—there considered as stations not to be wilfully changed, here as engagements not to be allowed to cumber the soul. Ed. observes that the Stoic condemned the interaction, here recognised, between "the y Mt. xxviii. 14; Wisd. vi. 16, vii. 23. μεριμ-να, Mt. xiii. 22, etc.

32. θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς [y] ἀμερίμνους εἶναι. ὁ [a] ἄγαμος [a] μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, πῶς [b] ἀρέσει [1] τῷ Κυρίῳ· 33. ὁ δὲ [c] γαμήσας [a] μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ κόσμου, πῶς [b] ἀρέσει [1] τῇ γυναικί.[2] 34. [d] μεμέρισται [2] ἡ γυνὴ [2] καὶ ἡ [e] παρθένος [2]· ἡ [e] ἄγαμος [a] μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, ἵνα ᾖ ἁγία καὶ [3] [f] σώματι [4] καὶ πνεύματι [4]· ἡ δὲ [c] γαμήσασα [a] μεριμνᾷ τὰ τοῦ

z See ver. 8.
a xii. 25; Ph. ii. 20, iv. 6; Mt. vi. 25 ff., x. 19.
b x. 33; Rom. viii. 8, xv. i. ff.; Gal. i. 10; 1 Th. ii. 4, 15, iv. 1; 2 Tim. ii. 4.
c See ver. 9, and note on ver. 28.
d In this sense, see i. 13; diff. in ver. 17.
e See ver. 25.
f See v. 3.

[1] α ρ ε σ η (thrice): all pre-Syrian uncc.

[2] A perplexed varia lectio :—

(1) και (μεμερισται), ℵABDgr.P 17, vg. syrsch. cop. Om. και DcGKL, etc. (later Western and Syrian).

(2) και (η γυνη): all uncc. but D*E, and most minn. Om. και D*, etc., codd. mentioned by Hier., syrsch. cop.

(3) η γυνη η αγαμος και η παρθενος (μεριμνᾳ), BP 46, 73, four other minn., vg. cop., Eus., Amb., Hier., Pel. So Tr., W.H., R.V. marg.

η γυνη και η παρθενος η αγαμος (μεριμνᾳ), ℵADGKL, etc., latt. syrr. (? Western and Syrian). [ℵAFb 17 write η αγαμος after both γυνη and παρθενος.] So Tisch., R.V. txt., El., Nestle. See, on punctuation, note below.

The text here adopted reads: (33) μεριμνᾳ τα του κοσμου, πως αρεσῃ τῳ κοσμῳ, και μεμερισται. (34) και η γυνη η αγαμος και η παρθενος μεριμνᾳ τα του κυριου κ.τ.λ. See Heinrici's conjecture, stated below.

[3] Om. και ADI²P 17, 37, syrsch. cop.

[4] τῳ (σωμ., πν.), ℵABP 17, 37, 46.

soul's emotions and external conditions; the latter he would have described as a thing indifferent, the former as a defect: πᾶν μὲν γὰρ πάθος ἁμαρτία" (Plut., Virt. Mor., 10). "Summa est, Christiani hominis animum rebus terrenis non debere occupari, nec in illis conquiescere: sic enim vivere nos oportet, quasi singulis momentis migrandum sit e vita" (Cv.).—ὡς μὴ ἔχοντες κ.τ.λ., not like, in the manner of, but "with the feeling of those who have not," etc., ὡς with ptp. implying subjective attitude—a limitation "proceeding from the mind of the speaking or acting subject" (Bm., p. 307); cf. ver. 25 and note.—ἀγοράζοντες (marketing) gives place in the negative to κατέχοντες, possessing, holding fast (cf. 2 Cor. vi. 10).—Χράομαι governs acc. occasionally in late Gr.; the case of τὸν κόσμον may be influenced by καταχρώμενοι, with which cl. authors admit the acc. The second vb. (with dat. in ix. 18) is the intensive of the first —to use to the full (use up); not to misuse—a meaning lexically valid, but inappropriate here. "Abuse" had both meanings in older Eng., like the Lat. abutor; it appears in Cranmer's Bible with the former sense in Col. ii. 22.

A reason for sparing use of the world lies in its transitory form, 31*b*—a sentence kindred to the declaration of ver. 29*a*.—σχῆμα (cf. iv. 6, and other parls.) denotes phenomenal guise—habitus, fashion—as distinguished from μορφή, proper and essential shape: see the two words in Phil. ii. 6 ff., with the discussions of Lt. and Gifford ad loc. "The world" has a dress suited to its fleeting existence.—παράγει affirms "not so much the present actual fact, as the inevitable issue; the σχῆμα of the world has no enduring character" (El.); "its fascination is that of the theatre" (Ed.); cf. 1 John ii. 17. The Ap. is thinking not of the fabric of nature, but of mundane human life—the world of marryings and marketings, of feasts and funerals.

> Then what this world to thee, my heart?
> Its gifts nor feed thee nor can bless.
> Thou hast no owner's part in all its fleetingness.
> —J. H. Newman.

Vv. 32-34. θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς κ.τ.λ. (cf. 7): "But I want you to be unanxious (ἀμερίμνους);" cf. φείδομαι, ver. 28. This is the reason why P. labours the advice of this section; see our Lord's dehortations from ἡ μέριμνα τοῦ αἰῶνος in Matt. vi. 25-34 and xiii. 22.—Vv. 32*b*-34 describe, not without a touch of humour, the exemption in this respect of the unmarried: he "is anxious in respect of the things of the Lord"—not "of the world, as to how he should please his wife!" After bidding the readers to be ἀμέριμνοι, P. writes μεριμνᾷ τ. τοῦ Κυρίου, with a κόσμου, πῶς [b] ἀρέσει [1] τῷ ἀνδρί. 35. τοῦτο δὲ πρὸς τὸ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν [g] συμφέρον [2] λέγω· οὐχ ἵνα [h] βρόχον ὑμῖν [i] ἐπιβάλω, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ [k] εὔσχημον καὶ [l] εὐπρόσεδρον [3] τῷ Κυρίῳ [m] ἀπερισπάστως.

g συμφορον, x. 33; Eccl. ii. 3 (Symmachus).
h N.T. h.l.; Prov. vi. 5, vii. 21, xxii. 25.
i With dat., Mk. xi. 7, xiv. 46; Acts iv. 3; Prov. xx. 26.
k xii. 24; Acts xiii. 50, xvii. 12; Mk. xv. 43. Cf. xii. 23, xiv. 40.
l ευπαρεδρον, h.l. Cf. ix. 13; Prov. viii. 3 (παρεδρευω); Wisd. vi. 15, ix. 4 (-εδρος).
m H.l.; -στος, Wisd. xvi. 11; Lk. x. 40; Sir. xli. 2 (περισπασθαι).

[1] αρεσῃ (thrice): all pre-Syrian uncc. [2] συμφορον, ℵ*ABD* 17.
[3] ευπαρεδρον: all uncc. but KL.

certain catechresis in the vb., for the sake of the antithesis. The accs. are of limitation rather than of transitive obj. πῶς ἀρέσῃ is indirect question, retaining the deliberative sbj.—"is anxious . . . (asking) how he should please," etc. For the supreme motive, "pleasing the Lord," cf. iv. 1-5, 2 Cor. v. 9, etc. ὁ γαμήσας, aor. of the event (pf. in 10: cf. note), which brought a new care.—Accepting the reading καὶ μεμέρισται. καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄγαμος, with the stop at μεμέρ. (the only possible punctuation with ἡ ἄγαμος in this position: see txtl. note), then it is added about the married Christian, that "he has been (since his marriage) divided,"—parcelled out (see note on i. 12): part of him is assigned to the Lord, part to the world. Lt. says that this rendering (R.V. mg.) "throws sense and parallelism into confusion, for καὶ μεμέρισται is not wanted with ver. 33, which is complete in itself": nay, the addition is made just because the parl. would be untrue if not so qualified; the married Christian does not care simply for "the things of the world" as the unmarried for "the things of the Lord," he cares for both "and is divided," giving but half his mind to Christ (so Ewald, Hf., Hn., Ed.). The attachment of καὶ μεμέρισται to ver. 34, with the Western reading (see txtl. note), retained by Mr., Bt., El., Lt., Sm., A.V., and R.V. txt., in accordance with most of the older commentt., gives to μερίζω a meaning doubtful in itself and without N.T. parl.: "And there is a distinction between the wife and the maiden". Gd. escapes this objection by reading μεμέρισται κ. ἡ γυνὴ as a sentence by itself, "the wife also is divided"—then continuing, "And the unwedded maiden cares for," etc.; an awkward and improbable construction as the text stands (but see Hn. below). Txtl. criticism and exegesis concur in making καὶ μεμέρισται a further assertion about ὁ γαμήσας, revealing his full disadvantage.

Hn., by a very tempting conjecture, proposes to insert a second μεμέρισται after the first: πῶς ἀρέσῃ τ. γυναικί, καὶ μεμέρισται· μεμέρισται καὶ ἡ γυνή. ἡ ἄγαμος καὶ ἡ παρθένος μεριμνᾷ κ.τ.λ.—"He that has married is anxious in regard to the things of the world, how he may please his wife, and is divided; divided also is the wife. The unmarried (woman), with the maiden, is anxious as to the things of the Lord." This would account for the double καί, which embarrasses the critical text; it gives a fuller and more balanced sense, in harmony moreover with Paul's principle of putting husband and wife on equal terms (2 ff., 11-16); and nothing was easier than for a doubled word, in the unpunctuated and unspaced early copies, to fall out in transcription. Placing the full stop at μεμέρισται, without the aid of Hn.'s emendation, ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄγαμος καὶ ἡ παρθένος are made the combined subject of μεριμνᾷ (34), "the unmarried woman" being the general category, within which "the maiden," whose case raised this discussion (25), is specially noted; the two subjects forming one idea, take a sing. verb.

The purpose ἵνα ᾖ ἁγία κ.τ.λ. is the subjective counterpart of the question πῶς ἀρέσῃ of ver. 32; note the similar combination in Rom. xii. 1, also 1 Thess. iv. 3; and see notes on ἁγίοις, ἡγιασμένοις, i. 2. Holiness τῷ σώματι (dat. of sphere; see Wr., p. 270) comes first in this connexion (cf. 4; vi. 20), and τῷ πνεύματι is added to make up the entire person and to mark the inner region of sanctification; "the spirit" which animates the body, being akin to God (John iv. 24) and communicating with His Spirit (Rom. viii. 16), is the basis and organ of our sanctification (cf. 1 Thess. v. 23, 2 Thess. ii. 13).—Of ἡ γαμήσασα, "she that has married," on the contrary, the same must be said as of ὁ γαμήσας (33); she studies to "please her husband" as well as "the Lord".

Ver. 35. A third time P. declares that

36. Εἰ δέ τις [n] ἀσχημονεῖν ἐπὶ τὴν παρθένον αὐτοῦ [o] νομίζει, ἐὰν ᾖ [p] ὑπέρακμος, καὶ οὕτως [q] ὀφείλει γίνεσθαι, ὃ θέλει ποιείτω· οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει· [r] γαμείτωσαν.[1] 37. ὃς δὲ ἕστηκεν [s] ἑδραῖος[2] ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ,[2] μὴ [t] ἔχων [t] ἀνάγκην, [u] ἐξουσίαν δὲ [u] ἔχει περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου [v] θελήματος, καὶ τοῦτο [w] κέκρικεν ἐν τῇ[3] καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ[3] τοῦ[4] [x] τηρεῖν n xiii. 5; Deut. xxv. 3; Ezek. xvi. 7 f. -ων, xii. 23; -οσυνη, Rom. i. 27.

o With inf., Acts viii. 20; 2 Macc. vii. 19; cl. Gr.
p H.l.; παρακμαζω, Sir. xlii. 9.
q Pres., in this sense, ix. 10, xi. 7, 10; 2 Cor. xii. 14; Rom. xv. 1; Eph. v. 28; 2 Th. i. 3, ii. 13; Heb. v. 3, 12, etc.
r See ver. 9.
s xv. 58; Col. i. 23.
t Heb. vii. 27; Lk. xiv. 18; Jude 3.
u Rom. ix. 21; 2 Th. iii. 9; Acts ix. 14; Lk. xii. 5, xix. 17; Mt. vii. 29, ix. 6; Mk. iii. 15; Jo. x. 18, xix. 10, 11; h.l. with περι.
v Of human will, xvi. 12; Eph. ii. 3; 2 Pet. i. 21; Lk. xxiii. 25; Jo. i. 13; 3 Ki. v. 8.
w See ver. 3.
x 2 Cor. xi. 9; 1 Th. v. 23; 1 Tim. v. 22, vi. 14; Jas. i. 27; Jude 21.

[1] γαμειτω, DG syr[sch.], Epiph., Aug.; non peccat si nubat, latt. vg., Ambrst.

[2] εν τη καρδια εδραιος: so pre-Syrian uncc.

[3] εν τη ιδια καρδια (om. αυτου), ℵABP 31, 46.

[4] Om. του ℵABP, minn.[20]. Ins. του DGKL (Western and Syrian).

he is consulting for the welfare of his readers (cf. 28*b*, 32*a*), not insisting on his own preference nor laying down an absolute rule: "looking to (πρός) your advantage I say (it)". τὸ σύμφορον is the abstract of συμφέρει (vi. 12, x. 23).—The βρόχος is the noose or lasso by which a wild creature is snared: P. does not wish by what he says to deprive the Cor. of any liberty,—to capture his readers and shut them up to celibacy—"not that I may throw a snare over you". He aims at what is socially εὔσχημον, "of honourable guise," as belonging to the Christian decorum of life (see parls.); and at what is religiously εὐπάρεδρον τῷ Κυρίῳ, "promotive-of-fit-waiting on the Lord".—ἀπερισπάστως recalls the περιεσπᾶτο used of Martha in Luke x. 38-42, and suggests that the Ap. had this story in his mind, esp. as μεριμνάω, his leading expression in this Section, is the word of reproof used by Jesus there. Epictetus' dissuasive from marriage, in his Dissertt., III., xxii., 67 ff., curiously resembles Paul's: τοιαύτης οὔσης καταστάσεως οἵα νῦν ἐστιν, ὡς ἐν παρατάξει, μή ποτ' ἀπερίσπαστον εἶναι δεῖ τ. Κυνικὸν ὅλον πρὸς τῇ διακονίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐπιφοιτᾶν ἀνθρώποις δυνάμενον, οὐ προσδεδεμένον καθήκουσιν ἰδιωτικοῖς οὐδ' ἐμπεπλεγμένον (cf. 2 Tim. ii. 4) σχέσεσιν, ἃς παραβαίνων οὐκέτι σώσει τὸ τοῦ καλοῦ καὶ ἀγαθοῦ πρόσωπον, τηρῶν δ' ἀπολεῖ τὸν ἄγγελον κ. κατάσκοπον κ. κήρυκα τῶν θεῶν; (69).

§ 24. Freedom to Marry, vii. 36-40. The question of the marriage of Cor. Christian maidens Paul has discussed on grounds of expediency. The narrow earthly horizon, the perils of the Christian lot, the division between religious and domestic duty esp. probable under these conditions, render the married state undesirable (28-34). The Ap. does not on these grounds forbid marriage,—to do so would entangle some of his readers perilously; he recommends what appears to him the course generally fitting, and advantageous for their spiritual interests (35 f.). If the parent's judgment points the other way, or if circumstances are such as to enforce consent, then so let it be (36). But where the father can thus decide without misgiving, he will do well to keep his daughter at home (37 f.). Similarly in the case of the Christian widow: she is free to marry "in the Lord"; but, in Paul's decided opinion, she will be happier to refrain (39 f.). The Ap. gives inspired advice, and the bias of his own mind is clearly seen; but he finds no sin in marriage; he guards sensitively the rights of individual feeling and conscience, and leaves the decision in each case to the responsible parties.

Ver. 36. By a contrastive δὲ P. passes from the εὔσχημον at which his dissuasive was aimed, to the ἀσχημονεῖν that might be thought to result in some cases from following it.—The vb. (= ἀσχήμων εἶναι) signifies either to act unbecomingly (xiii. 5), or to suffer disgrace, turpem videri (Vg.); the antithesis, and the adjunct ἐπὶ τὴν παρθένον, dictate the former sense, which is post-classical.—On νομίζει (is of opinion), see ver. 26. It was socially discreditable, both amongst Greeks and Jews (cf. Sirach xlii. 9), to keep one's daughter at home, without obvious reason, for any long period beyond adult age; a Christian father might feel this τὴν ἑαυτοῦ παρθένον, [y]καλῶς [y]ποιεῖ.[1] 38. ὥστε καὶ ὁ [z]ἐκγαμίζων[2] [3] [y]καλῶς [y]ποιεῖ,[8] ὁ δὲ[4] μὴ [z]ἐκγαμίζων[5] [y a]κρεῖσσον [y]ποιεῖ.[6] 39. γυνὴ [b]δέδεται νόμῳ[7] [c]ἐφ᾽ [c]ὅσον [c]χρόνον ζῇ ὁ ἀνὴρ αὐτῆς· ἐὰν δὲ [d]κοιμηθῇ ὁ ἀνὴρ αὐτῆς,[8] [e]ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶν ᾧ θέλει [f]γαμηθῆναι, μόνον [f]ἐν [f]Κυρίῳ. 40. [g]μακαριωτέρα δέ ἐστιν ἐὰν [h]οὕτω μείνῃ, [i]κατὰ τὴν ἐμὴν [i]γνώμην· [k]δοκῶ δὲ[9] κἀγὼ [l]πνεῦμα Θεοῦ [l]ἔχειν.

y Ph. iv. 14; Acts x. 33; Jas. ii. 8, 19; 2 Pet. i. 19; 3 Jo. 6; 3 Ki. viii. 18.
z Mt. xxii. 30, xxiv. 38; Lk. xvii. 27, xx. 35.
a See ver. 9.
b See ver. 27. c Rom. vii. 1; Gal. iv. 1; cf. Mk. ii. 19; 2 Pet. i. 13. d xi. 30, xv. 6 ff.; 1 Th. iv. 13 ff.; 2 Pet. iii. 4; Jo. xi. 11 f., etc. e ix. 19; Rom. vi. 20, vii. 3; h.l. with inf. f xi. 11, etc., characteristic and peculiar to P.; cf. εν Χρ. g Of (human) persons, Rom. iv. 7 f. (from LXX), xiv. 22; Jas. i. 12, 25; 1 Pet. iii. 14, iv. 14; Rev. i. 3, etc.; Acts xxvi. 2; Mt. v. 3 ff., etc. Compar. h.l. h See ver. 26. i See ver. 6. k See iii. 18. l Rom. viii. 9; Jude 19. Cf. ii. 12.

[1] ποιησει, ℵAB 17, 46, 67, cop. [2] γαμιζων, ℵABD 17, 46.

[3] γαμιζων την εαυτου παρθενον: ℵABDP 17, 37, 46, latt. vg. syrr.; BD put εαυτου after παρθενον (?).

[4] και ο μη: ℵ*ABDG 17, 37, 46. [5] γαμιζων, ℵ*ABDG 17, 46.

[6] ποιησει, ℵ*AB 17, 37, 46, 67, cop., Bas.
Minn. 3 and 114 om. ver. 38 in consequence of the homœoteleuton ποιει (vv. 37 f.); through same mistake G and several other copies om. ver. 38*a*, ωστε . . . ποιει.

[7] Om. νομῳ (derived from Rom. vii. 2) ℵ*ABD* 17, 67, the oldest copies of vg., Clem., Or., Athan., Tert.

[8] Om. αυτης ℵABKP, more than seventy minn.

[9] δοκω γαρ (?): B 17, 37, 67, Cyr., Amb., Ambrst. Preferred by W.H.

discredit for his religion's sake (cf. x. 32), and might be reproached as doing his child and society a wrong. — ἐὰν ᾖ ὑπέρακμος, "if she be past the bloom (of youth)"—the μέτριος χρόνος ἀκμῆς, fixed by Plato (Rep., vi., 460 E) at twenty, the ætas nubilis.—καὶ οὕτως ὀφείλει (see parls.) γίνεσθαι—"and so matters ought to proceed" (pr. inf.)—states a further presumable reason for consent: duty may require it—where, e.g., the girl has been promised, or is so situated that a continued veto may give rise to peril or scandal (cf. 2). In such circumstances the father's course is clear: "let him do what he wills" (θέλει); cf. ver. 35. γαμείτωσαν — i.e., the daughter and her suitor, the claim of the latter being hinted at in the previous ὀφείλει: pr. impv.; "Let the marriage take its course".

Ver. 37. For the opposite resolution, adopted by a father who "keeps his own virgin (daughter)" instead of "marrying" her (38), four conditions are laid down: (1) unshaken firmness in his own mind (ἕστηκεν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ἑδραῖος, cf. Rom. xiv. 5, 23), as against social pressure; (2) the absence of constraint (μὴ ἔχων ἀνάγκην) arising from previous engagement or irresistible circumstances; (3) his full authority to act as he will (ἐξουσίαν δὲ ἔχει κ.τ.λ.) — slaves, on the other hand, could not dispose of their children, and the unqualified patria potestas belonged only to Roman citizens (see Ed. in loc.); ἐξουσία, however, signifies moral power, which reaches in the household far beyond civil right; (4) a judgment deliberately and independently formed to this effect (τοῦτο κέκρικεν ἐν τῇ ἰδίᾳ καρδίᾳ). Granting all this, the father who "has decided to keep his own maiden, does well"—καλῶς, rightly, honourably well (see note on καλόν, 1). The repeated καρδία (the mind, the seat of thought and will, rather than the heart with its modern emotional connotation; cf. ii. 9, iv. 5, and notes), and the phrase περὶ τοῦ ἰδίου θελήματος, press on the father the necessity of using his judgment and acting on his personal responsibility; as in vv. 6 f., 28, 35, the Ap. is jealous of allowing his own authority or inclination to overbear the conscience of his disciples; cf. Rom. xiv. 4-10, 22 f.—This ἀνάγκη urges in the opp. direction to that of ver. 26; in both cases the word signifies compulsion, dictating action other than that one would independently have taken.—ἐξουσίαν . . . περί κ.τ.λ. is "power as touching his own resolve," the right to act as one will—in other words, mastery of the situation.—The obj., τ. παρθένον, suggests the tacit complement to τηρεῖν (see parls.): "to keep intact, in what he believes to be the best state" for the Lord's service (Ed.). "The will of the maiden is left wholly out of court" (Hn.); social custom ignored this factor in marriage; for all that, it might constitute the opposed ἀνάγκη, and might, in some circumstances, practically limit the paternal ἐξουσία; see ver. 28*b*, and note.

a x. 19; Acts xv. 29, xxi. 25; Rev. ii. 14, 20. VIII. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῶν [a] εἰδωλοθύτων· οἴδαμεν, ὅτι πάντες [b] γνῶσιν ἔχομεν. ἡ [b] γνῶσις [c] φυσιοῖ, ἡ δὲ ἀγάπη [d] οἰκοδομεῖ. 2. εἰ δέ [1] b In this disparaging sense, xiii. 2, 8; Rom. ii. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 20; see also i. 5. c See iv. 6. d In this sense, x. 23, xiv. 4, 17; 1 Th. v. 11; Acts ix. 31, xx. 32; Mt. xvi. 18.

[1] Om. δε ℵABP 17, 46, 73, vg. (older codd.), cop.

Ver. 38, the sum of the matter: either to marry one's daughter or refuse her in marriage is, abstractly viewed, an honourable course; the latter, in Paul's judgment, and for Christians in the present posture of things, is better. "Ce bien et mieux résument tout le chapitre" (Gd.).

Vv. 39, 40 dispose, by way of appendix to the case of the maiden and to the like effect, of the question of the remarriage of Christian widows. Ver. 39 is repeated in almost identical terms, for another purpose, in Rom. vii. 2.—On δέδεται and γαμηθῆναι (cl. γαμεθῆναι), see vv. 27 f.; κοιμηθῇ, the term for Christian death (see parls.).—"She is free to be married to whom she will," while the maiden is disposed of by her father's will (36 f.); μόνον ἐν Κυρίῳ (cf. 2 Cor. vi. 14 ff., 1 Thess. iv. 3 ff.) forbids union with a heathen; it also forbids any union formed with un-Christian motives and otherwise than under Christ's sanction (cf. Thess. iv. 4 f.).—"But more blessed she is" (μακαριωτέρα δέ: see parls.)—not merely happier by exemption from trouble (26 ff.), but religiously happier in her undivided devotion to the Lord (32 ff.)—"if she abide as she is". This advice was largely followed in the Pauline Churches, so that before long widows came to be regularly enrolled for Church service (1 Tim. v. 3-16).—κατὰ τὴν ἐμὴν γνώμην (see note on 26): Paul's advice, not command.—δοκῶ δὲ κἀγώ κ.τ.λ.: "However I think, for my own part (however others may deem of me), that I have (an inspiration of) God's Spirit" (the anarthrous πνεῦμα Θεοῦ: cf. xii. 3, etc.); see for Paul's claim to Divine guidance, extending to his opinions as well as commands, ver. 25, ii. 10-16, iv. 1, ix. 2, xiv. 37.—On δοκῶ, see note to iv. 9; it is the language of modesty, not misgiving. The Ap. commends his advice in all these matters, conscious that it proceeds from the highest source and is not the outcome of mere human prudence or personal inclination.

Division III. Contact with Idolatry, viii.-x. We have traced in the previous chapters the disastrous reaction of the old leaven upon the new Christian kneading at Cor. But Christian society had its external as well as its internal problems—a fact already evident in the discussion of ch. vi. respecting the carrying of disputes to the heathen law-courts. A much larger difficulty, involving the whole problem of social intercourse between Christians and their heathen neighbours, had been raised by the Church Letter—the question περὶ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων (viii. 1). Was it lawful for a Christian to eat flesh that had been offered in sacrifice to an idol? Social festivities commonly partook of a religious character, being conducted under the auspices of some deity, to whom libations were poured or to whom the animals consumed had been dedicated in sacrifice. The "idol's house" (viii. 10) was a rendezvous for banquets. Much of the meat on sale in the markets and found on ordinary tables came from the temples; and without inquiry it was impossible to discriminate (x. 25-28). Jewish rule was uncompromisingly strict upon this point; and the letter of the Jerusalem Council, addressed to the Churches of Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, had directed "the brethren from among the Gentiles" to "abstain from idolothyta" (Acts xv. 29). The Cor. Church, in consulting Paul, had expressed its own leaning towards liberty in this matter (viii.); what will the Ap. say? It is a real dilemma for him. He has to vindicate the broad principles of spiritual religion; at the same time he must avoid wounding Jewish feeling, and must guard Gentile weakness against the seductions of heathen feasts and against the peril of relapsing into idolatry through interτις [e] δοκεῖ [f] εἰδέναι [1] [f] τι, οὐδέπω [2] οὐδὲν [3] ἔγνωκε [4] [g] καθὼς [g] δεῖ γνῶναι· 3. εἰ δέ τις [h] ἀγαπᾷ τὸν [h] Θεόν, οὗτος [i] ἔγνωσται ὑπ' [5]

e See iii. 18.
f εγνωκεναι, see ii. 8.
g Cf. Rom. viii. 26; Eph. vi. 20; Col. iv. 4, 6; 1 Th. iv. 1; 2 Th. iii. 7; 1 Tim. iii. 15.
h Rom. viii. 28; Mt. xxii. 37; Lk. x. 27 (Deut. vi. 5); 1 Jo. iv. 20 f., v. 2.
i Gal. iv. 9; 2 Tim. ii. 19 (Nu. xvi. 5); Mt. vii. 23, xxv. 12.

[1] εγνωκεναι, all pre-Syrian uncc., 17, 46, many Ff.

[2] ουπω, ℵABP 17, 46, 73. ουδεπω, Western and Syrian.

[3] Om. ουδεν all pre-Syrian uncc.—T.R. a grammatical emendation.

[4] εγνω, all pre-Syrian uncc. The -κε a doubling of the following κα-.

[5] Om. υπ' αυτου ℵ* 17, Clem.

course with unconverted kindred and neighbours. In theory Paul is for freedom, but in practice for great restrictions upon the use of idolothyta. (1) He admits that the question is decided in principle by the fundamental truth of religion, viz., that God is one, from which it follows that the sacrifice to the idol is an invalid transaction (viii. 1 ff.; x. 19, 26). But (2) many have not grasped this inference, being still in some sense under the spell of the idol; for them to eat would be sin, and for their sake stronger-minded brethren should abstain (viii. 7-13; x. 23-30). To this effect (3) P. sets forth his own example, (a) in the abridgment of his personal liberty for the good of others (ix. 1-22; x. 33-xi. 1), and (b) in the jealous discipline of bodily appetite (ix. 23 ff.). The last consideration leads (4) to a solemn warning against contamination by idolatry, drawn (a) from the early history of Israel, and further (b) from the communion of the Lord's Table, which utterly forbids participation in "the table of demons" (x. 1-22). These instances show in a manner evident to the good sense of the readers (x. 15), that to take part in a heathen sacrificial feast is in effect a recognition of idolatry and an apostasy from Christ.

§ 25. Knowledge of the One God and One Lord, viii. 1-6. In inquiring from their Ap. "about the εἰδωλόθυτα," the Cor. had intimated their "knowledge" of the falsity of the entire system of idolatry. Here Paul checks them at the outset. The pretension betrays their one-sided intellectualism. Such matters are never settled by knowledge; love is the true arbiter (2 f.). After this caution, he takes up the statement of the Cor. creed made in the Church Letter, with its implications respecting idolatry (4 ff.).

Ver. 1*a*. Περὶ δὲ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων: another topic of the Church Letter, to which the Apostle continues his reply (see note on vii. 1; also Introd., chap. ii.). The word εἰδωλόθυτον (see parls.), "the idol-sacrifice," substituted for the ἱερόθυτον (x. 28) of the heathen vocabulary, conveys an implicit judgment on the question in hand; see note on εἴδωλον, ver. 4, and on x. 19 f.; also Acts xv. 20, τὰ ἀλισγήματα τῶν εἰδώλων.—οἴδαμεν—ὅτι πάντες γνῶσιν ἔχομεν: the common rendering, "We know that we all have knowledge" yields a weak tautology, and misses the irony of the passage; otherwise than in οἴδαμεν ὅτι of ver. 4, this is the causal ὅτι (so Bg., Hn., Ed.). The Cor. in making their inquiry virtually answered it themselves; they wrote Οἴδαμεν ὅτι οὐδὲν εἴδωλον ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ (4); and P. takes them up at the first word with his arresting comment: "'We know' (say you?) because 'we all have knowledge'!—Knowledge puffs up," etc.—For γνῶσιν ἔχομεν, cf. ver. 10; the phrase breathes the pride of the Cor. illuminati; in γνῶσις this Church felt itself rich (i. 5, iv. 10); its wealth was its peril.

Ver. 1*b*. The Ap. gives to Cor. vanity a sudden, sharp rebuke by his epigram, Ἡ γνῶσις φυσιοῖ, ἡ δὲ ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ: "Knowledge puffs up, but Love builds up". Hn. aptly compares Aristotle's axiom, Τὸ τέλος οὐ γνῶσις, ἀλλὰ πρᾶξις (Nic. Eth., i., 1). For φυσιόω, to inflate, see note on iv. 6. The appeal of the Church to Knowledge as decisive in the controversy about "meats" disclosed the great flaw in its character—its poverty of love (xiii. 1 ff.). The tacit obj. of οἰκοδομεῖ is the Church, the Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή (iii. 9, 16); Eph. iv. 15 f. describes the edifying power of love; see also Matt. xxii. 37-40, 1 John iv. 16-21. For the Biblical use of ἀγάπη, see note to xiii. 1. The divisive question at issue Love would turn into a means of strengthening the bonds of Church life; Knowledge operating alone makes it an engine of destruction (11 f.).

Vv. 2, 3. Loveless knowledge is ruinous

αὐτοῦ.[1] 4. περὶ [2] τῆς [k] βρώσεως [2] οὖν τῶν [a] εἰδωλοθύτων · [l] οἴδαμεν [l] ὅτι οὐδὲν [m] εἴδωλον ἐν κόσμῳ, καὶ ὅτι οὐδεὶς Θεὸς ἕτερος [3] [n] εἰ [n] μὴ k 2 Cor. ix. 10; Rom. xiv. 17; Col. ii. 16; Heb. xii. 16.

l iii. 16, vi. 2 f., etc.; diff., ver. 1.
m x. 19, xii. 2; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Rom. ii. 22; 1 Th. i. 9; 1 Jo. v. 21; Rev. ix. 20; Acts vii. 41, xv. 20; see also ver. 1, v. 10. In LXX passim, for Heb. 'elilim, and gillulim.
n For this use, see i. 14.

[1] Om. υπ' αυτου ℵ* 17, Clem. Alex.

[2] περι δε της γνωσεως, D*gr.; περι της γνωσεως ουν, P 121.

[3] Om. ετερος all pre-Syrian uncc.

(1*b*); more than that, it is self-stultifying. The contrasted hypotheses—εἴ τις δοκεῖ ἐγνωκέναι τι (= δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι, iii. 18) and εἴ τις ἀγαπᾷ τὸν Θεόν—define the position of men who build upon their own mental acquirements, or who make love to God the basis of life. For emphatic δοκεῖ, cf. iii. 18, vii. 40; it implies an opinion, well- or ill-founded, and confidence in that opinion. The pf. ἐγνωκέναι signifies knowledge acquired (for which, therefore, one might claim credit), while the aors. ἔγνω and γνῶναι denote the acquisition of (right) knowledge, rendered impossible by self-conceit—"he has never yet learnt as he ought to do". For τι—probably τὶ in this connexion, something emphatically, something great—cf. note on τὶ εἰδέναι, ii. 2. The Enchiridion of Epictetus supplies a parl. to ver. 2: "Prefer to seem to know nothing; and if to any thou shouldst seem to be somebody, distrust thyself"; similarly Socrates, in Plato's Apology, 23.

Ver. 3 is one of Paul's John-like sayings. In the apodosis he substitutes, by an adroit turn, "is known (ἔγνωσται: pf. pass. of abiding effect upon the obj.) by God" for "hath come to know God," the expected consequence—see the like correction in Gal. iv. 9; cf. Phil. ii. 12 f., iii. 12; John xv. 16; 1 John iv. 10. Paul would ascribe nothing to human acquisition; religion is a bestowment, not an achievement; our love or knowledge is the reflex of the divine love and knowledge directed toward us. Philo, quoted by Ed., has the same thought: γνωριζόμεθα μᾶλλον ἢ γνωρίζομεν (De Cherub., § 32).—οὗτος ἔγνωσται ὑπ' αὐτοῦ (sc. τοῦ Θεοῦ), "he (and not the other) is known by Him". Ev. reverses the ref. of the prons.: "He (God) hath been known by him (the man loving Him)"—an unlikely use of οὗτος.

Ver. 4. After his thrust at Cor. γνῶσις, P. resumes, with οὖν (cf. xi. 17-20), from ver. 1 the question "About the eating of idolothyta," repeating the "we know" at which he had interrupted his correspondents. For οἴδαμεν in a confessio fidei, cf. 1 John v. 18 ff. That the theological statement given in vv. 4 ff. comes from the mouth of the Corinthians seems probable from the following considerations: (a) the repeated οἴδαμεν (h.l. in this Ep.; cf. the frequent interrog. οὐκ οἴδατε; of chh. iii., v., vi.; also xii. 2), by which P. associates himself with the readers, who are men of knowledge (i. 5, x. 15, etc.); (b) the solemn rhythm of vv. 4*b* and 6, resembling a confessional formula (cf. Eph. iv. 4 ff., 1 Tim. iii. 16)—ver. 5 may be an interjected comment of the Church Letter upon its creed; (c) the expression "gods many and lords many" applied to heathen divinities, which is foreign to Pauline as to Jewish phraseology, but natural on the lips of old polytheists; (d) the aptness with which ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν πᾶσιν ἡ γνῶσις (7) fits in with this explanation, being understood as Paul's reply to his readers' declaration of their enlightened faith. See, on this question, W. Lock in Expositor, V., vi., 65. The articles of belief cited from the Cor. in vv. 4*b* and 6 had probably been formulated first by P., like the Πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν of vi. 12, and so would be fitly quoted to him.—οὐδὲν εἴδωλον ἐν κόσμῳ (cf. x. 19), being parl. to οὐδεὶς Θεός κ.τ.λ., should be rendered not "An idol is nothing," etc., but "There is no idol in the world" (so R.V. virtually, Mr., Hf., Bt., Ed., Sm.). Existence is denied to the idol not absolutely (see 5, x. 19 f.), but relatively; it has no real place ἐν κόσμῳ, no power over the elements of nature; "the earth is the Lord's," etc. (x. 26); there is no Zeus in the sky, nor Poseidon ruling the sea, but "one God and Father" everywhere,—a faith emancipating enlightened Christians from every heathenish superstition.—οὐδὲν εἴδωλον κ.τ.λ. forms the polemic counterpart to οὐδεὶς Θεὸς εἰ μὴ εἷς (see parls.),—the cornerstone of Jehovism, which Christ has made the world's creed.—εἴδωλον (sc. a thing possessing εἶδος, form only), semblance, phantasm, renders in the LXX several Hebrew words for false gods—

εἷς· 5. καὶ γὰρ εἴπερ εἰσὶ [o] λεγόμενοι Θεοί, εἴτε ἐν οὐράνῳ εἴτε ἐπὶ τῆς[1] γῆς, ὥσπερ εἰσὶ θεοὶ πολλοὶ καὶ [p] κύριοι πολλοί, 6. ἀλλ'[2] ἡμῖν εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατήρ, [q] ἐξ [q] οὗ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἡμεῖς [r] εἰς [r] αὐτόν· καὶ εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, [s] δι' [s] οὗ[3] τὰ πάντα καὶ ἡμεῖς [s] δι' [s] αὐτοῦ.[4]

o Eph. ii. 11; 2 Th. ii. 4. p Cf. Acts xxv. 26; 1 Tim. vi. 15; Lk. xvi. 13; Rev. xvii. 14.
q See i. 30.
r Rom. xi. 36; Eph. i. 5; cf. Col. i. 16.
s Rom. xi. 36; Col. i. 16; Heb. i. 2; Jo. i. 3, etc. Cf. xv. 57; 1 Tim. ii. 5; Rom. i. 5, v. 1 f., 17, 21; Gal. i. 1; Eph. i. 5, ii. 18; 1 Th. v. 9; Tit. iii. 6; 1 Jo. iv. 9.

[1] Om. της all uncc. and many minn.

[2] Om. αλλ' (?) B, basm., Ir[int.], Eus.; Lachm. and W.H. bracket. ημιν δε, 17, cop., Cyr[hier.], Epiph.

[3] ον (?) B, æth., Epiph.; W.H. marg.

[4] The minn. 55, 72, 109, 178, supported by Gregory of Nazianzus orat. 39, 12, Basil in several passages, Cyr., Dam., make the addition και εν πνευμα αγιον εν ῳ τα παντα—a Trinitarian gloss. Chrysostom[202] expressly controverts this reading.

—esp. 'elīlīm, nothings, and hebhel, emptiness; the term was applied first to the images, then to the (supposed) godships they represent, branding them as shams and shows: see 1 Thess. i. 9, Acts xiv. 15, Ps. xcvi. 5. The κόσμος reveals the being and power of the One God (Rom. i. 20); idolaters have no living God, but are ἄθεοι ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ (Eph. ii. 12).

Ver. 5: a comment of the Cor. on their confession of faith, showing their "knowledge" of its bearing.—καὶ γὰρ εἴπερ εἰσίν κ.τ.λ.: "For indeed, granting the existence of so-called gods, whether in heaven or upon earth, as indeed there are many (such) gods and lords, yet to us," etc. The -περ of εἴπερ and ὥσπερ enhances the supposition (see El., ad loc.), allowing its utmost possibility.—εἴπερ κ.τ.λ. admits their existence (in some sense) as reputed deities; ὥσπερ κ.τ.λ. points to their astonishing multitude, while distinguishing them, in a manner parl. to the distinction between ὁ Θεὸς and ὁ Κύριος, as "gods" in their assumed deity and "lords" in their assumed dominion. The repeated εἰσὶν asserts an actual being of some sort behind the εἴδωλον (see x. 19-22), but the θεότης or κυριότης is merely λεγομένη; for the force of this ptp., cf. 2 Thess. ii. 4, Eph. ii. 11. With πολλοὶ cf. κατείδωλον πόλιν, Acts xvii. 16, and the Gr. saying, Πάντα θεῶν πλέα.—Κύριος is a title often given to gods in Gr. inscriptions; a h.l. for Bib. Gr.: cf., however, 'adonīm in Isa. xxvi. 13; also Deut. x. 17; Ps. cxxxvi. 2 f.—In heaven, on earth: the two great domains of God's kingdom (Matt. vi. 10), usurped by the false gods.

Ver. 6 affirms in positive Christian terms, as ver. 4*b* stated negatively and retrospectively, the creed of the Cor. believers. The "one God" of O.T. monotheism is "to us one God the Father". "Of whom are all things, and we for Him:" the universe issues from God, and "we," His sons in Christ, are destined therein for His use and glory—He would reap in "us" His glory, as a father in the children of his house; see, on this latter purpose, Eph. i. 5, 10 ff., 18*b*, iii. 9 ff.; also 1 Peter ii. 9, Jas. i. 18, John xvii. 9 f., etc.; cf. Aug., "Fecisti nos ad Te". In the emphatic ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτὸν there speaks the joyful consciousness of Gentiles called to know and serve the true God; cf. xii. 2 f., Eph. ii. 11 ff.—The "one Lord Jesus Christ" is Mediator, as in 1 Tim. ii. 5—"through whom are all things, and we through Him"; again ἡμεῖς stands out with high distinction from the dim background of τὰ πάντα. The contrasted ἐξ οὗ, εἰς αὐτὸν of the previous clause is replaced by the doubled διὰ of this: God is the source of all nature, but the end specifically of redeemed humanity; Christ is equally the Mediator—and in this capacity the Lord (xv. 24-28)—of nature and of men. The universe is of God through Christ (Heb. i. 2, John i. 3): we are for God through Christ (2 Cor. v. 18, Eph. i. 5, etc.). Col. i. 15 ff. unfolds this doctrine of the double Lordship of Christ, basing His redemptional upon His creational headship.—It is an exegetical violence to limit the second τὰ πάντα, as Grotius and Baur have done, to "the ethical new creation"; in 2 Cor. v. 18 the context gives this limitation, which in our passage it excludes. The inferior

7. Ἀλλʼ οὐκ ἐν πᾶσιν ἡ [t] γνῶσις, τινὲς δὲ τῇ [u] συνειδήσει [1] τοῦ [2] εἰδώλου [2] [v] ἕως [2] [v] ἄρτι [2] ὡς [w] εἰδωλόθυτον ἐσθίουσι, καὶ ἡ [x] συνείδησις αὐτῶν [y] ἀσθενὴς οὖσα [z] μολύνεται. 8. [a] βρῶμα δὲ ἡμᾶς οὐ [b] παρίστησι [3] τῷ Θεῷ· οὔτε γὰρ [4] ἐὰν [5] φάγωμεν [c] περισσεύομεν,[5]

t See ver. 1.
u συνηθεια, xi. 16; Jo. xviii. 39. See note below.
v See iv. 13.
w See ver. 1.
x With subjective gen., x. 29; 2 Cor. i. 12, iv. 2, v. 11; Rom. ii. 15, ix. 1; Tit. i. 15, etc.
y The adj., in this sense, h.l. (see ver. 12, and Rom. xiv. 1 for -εω). For other sense of adj., i. 25, iv. 10.
z Rev. iii. 4, xiv. 4; -υσμος, 2 Cor. vii. 1.
a See iii. 2.
b 2 Cor. iv. 14, xi. 2; 5 times in Rom.; 4 times besides in P.; also in Acts, Lk., Mt. xxvi. 53.
c xiv. 12, xv. 58; freq. in P.; also in GG. and Acts.

[1] συνηθειᾳ, ℵ*ABP 17, 46, 67, cop., Euthal., Dam. συνειδησει, DGL, etc.

[2] συνηθειᾳ εως αρτι του ειδωλου (in this order): all uncc. but ALP.

[3] παραστησει, ℵ*AB 17, 46, 67, cop. basm.

[4] Om. γαρ ℵAB, am. tol. cop. basm.
Ins. γαρ DGLP, etc.—Western and Syrian.

[5] εαν μη φαγ. υστερουμεθα . . . εαν φαγ. περισσευομεν (in this order): A*B 17*, 46, oldest vg. cop. basm.; so Tr., Al., W.H., Nestle, El., R.V. The order of T.R. is that of Western and Syrian uncc., the minn., latt. and syrr.; ℵ and A read εαν μη φαγ. περισσευομεν . . . εαν φαγ. υστερουμεθα: so Lachm. Tr. further follows B in reading περισσευομεθα for -ομεν.

reading διʼ ὅν (for οὗ: see txtl. note), "because of whom are all things," would consist with a lower doctrine of Christ's Person, representing Him as preconceived object, while with διʼ οὗ He is pre-existent medium of creation. The full Christology of the 3rd group of the Epp. is latent here. The faith which refers all things to the one God our Father as their spring, and subordinates all things to the one Lord our Redeemer, leaves no smallest spot in the universe for other deities; intelligent Christians justly inferred that the material of the idolothyta was unaffected by the hollow rites of heathen sacrifice.

§ 26. The Weak Conscience of the Old Idolater, viii. 7-13. The knowledge of the one Father and Lord upon which the Cor. Church prided itself, had not released all its members from fears respecting the idolothyta; in some the intellect outran the heart, in others it lagged behind. With the latter, through weakness of understanding or force of habit, the influence of the heathen god still attached to objects associated with his worship (7). For a man in this state of mind to partake of the consecrated flesh would be an act of compliance with heathenism; and if the example of some less scrupulous brother should lead him thus to violate his conscience and to fall into idolatry, heavy blame will lie at the door of his virtual tempter (10-12). Such blame P. declares that he will himself on no account incur (13).

Ver. 7. "But not in all is there the knowledge" (ἡ γνῶσις) which you and I claim to have (1, 10), expressed just now in the terms of the Church confession (4 ff.).—τῇ συνηθείᾳ ἕως ἄρτι τοῦ εἰδώλου, "by reason of their habituation up till now to the idol": for this dat. of defining cause, cf. Eph. ii. 1.—ἕως ἄρτι (cf. iv. 8, 11) qualifies the quasi-vbl. noun συνηθεία, actively used, which, as in 4 Macc. xiii. 21 and cl. Gr., signifies with the objective gen. (= συνηθεία πρὸς or μετά) intercourse, familiarity with; the other, passive sense is seen in xi. 16. The Western reading, συνειδήσει, preferred by some critics as the lectio ardua, gives the sense, "through relation of conscience to the idol" (Hf., Hn.).—ὡς εἰδωλόθυτον ἐσθίουσι, "as an idol-sacrifice eat (the meat in question)"—under the consciousness that it is such, with the sense haunting them that what they eat belongs to the idol and associates them with it; cf. x. 18 ff. and notes. "And their conscience, since it is weak (unable to get rid of this feeling), is soiled" (opp. of the καθαρὰ συνείδησις of 1 Tim. iii. 9, 2 Tim. i. 3). The consciousness of sharing in idol-worship is defiling to the spirit of a Christian; to taste knowingly of idolothyta, under any circumstances, thus affects converts from heathenism who have not the full faith that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; now, "whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Rom. xiv. 23).

Ver. 8. βρῶμα δέ κ.τ.λ.: "But food will not present us to God," non exhibebit nos Deo (Mr.): that on the ground of οὔτε ἐὰν μὴ[1] φάγωμεν [d] ὑστερούμεθα.[1] 9. [e] βλέπετε δὲ [e] μήπως ἡ [f] ἐξουσία ὑμῶν αὕτη [g] πρόσκομμα γένηται τοῖς [y] ἀσθενοῦσιν·[2] 10. ἐὰν γάρ τις ἴδῃ σε,[3] τὸν ἔχοντα [t] γνῶσιν, ἐν [h] εἰδωλείῳ [i] κατακείμενον, οὐχὶ ἡ [x] συνείδησις αὐτοῦ [y] ἀσθενοῦς[4] ὄντος[4] [k] οἰκοδομηθήd See i. 7; also xvi. 17, -ημα; Phil. iv. ii., -ησις.

e x. 12; Gal. v. 15; Col. ii. 8, Heb. iii. 12, xii. 25; Acts xiii. 40; Lk. xxi. 8. Cf. iii. 10, and reff.
f See vii. 37; also vi. 12.
g Rom. ix. 32 f. (Isa. viii. 14), xiv. 13, 20; 1 Pet. ii. 8; cf. -κοπτω, Rom. xiv. 21; εγκοπη, ix. 12 below.
h N.T. h.l.; 1 Esdr. ii. 9; 1 Macc. i. 47, x. 83.
i In this sense, Mk. ii. 15, xiv. 3; Lk. vii. 37. = ανακειμ.
k See ver. 1; here only ironical. See note below.

[1] εαν μη φαγ. υστερουμεθα . . . εαν φαγ. περισσευομεν (in this order): A*B 17*, 46, oldest vg. cop. basm.; so Tr., Al., W.H., Nestle, El., R.V. The order of T.R. is that of Western and Syrian uncc., the minn., latt. and syrr.; ℵ and A read εαν μη φαγ. περισσευομεν . . . εαν φαγ. υστερουμεθα: so Lachm. Tr. further follows B in reading περισσευομεθα for -ομεν.

[2] ασθενεσιν, all uncc. but L.

[3] BG, vg., Aug., Ambrst. om. σε; bracketed by Lachm. and W.H.

[4] Many Latin interpp., including vg., read cum sit infirma, as if for ασθενης ουσα.

which the verdict turns may be said to "present" one to the judge. To "commend" is συν-, not παρίστημι (see parls.); for the fut. (see txtl. note), cf. Rom. xiv. 10, 2 Cor. iv. 14, Col. i. 28.—βρώματα do not enter into our permanent being (vi. 13; see note); they will not be the criteria of the approaching Judgment.—The alternative οὔτε clauses negative the two opposite ways in which "food" might have been supposed to "present us to God": "neither if we do not eat, are we the worse off (ὑστερούμεθα: see note on i. 7); nor if we eat, are we the better off (περισσεύομεν: do we abound, exceed others)". The latter predicate is appropriate to the "strong," who deemed themselves in a superior position, on a higher ground of faith.—Ver. 8, like vv. 4-6, represents the pro in the question περὶ βρώσεως, as vv. 7, 8-13 the contra. Chap. viii. is virtually a dialogue; the double (challenging and rebutting) δὲ of vv. 8 f., with the words "your right" of ver. 9, in accordance with Paul's dialectical style (cf. Rom. iii. 1-8), compels us to read this ver., like vv. 1, 4-6, as from the mouth of the Cor., possibly from the Church Letter; "hic alter erat, vel esse poterat, Corinthiorum prætextus" (Cv.). At the word μολύνεται P. hears some of his readers interject: "The conscience of the weak brother is defiled, you say, by eating after my example. But (δέ) how so? You have taught us that God will not judge us by these trifling externals; abstinence or use of 'meats' makes no difference to our intrinsic state." This Paul admits, to set against it the caution βλέπετε δὲ μὴ κ.τ.λ., on which the rest of the paragraph hangs.

Ver. 9. "Beware, however, lest this right of yours"—sc. to eat the idolothyta, for which many of the Cor. are contending, and probably in the Church Letter (1). For ἐξουσία in this use, cf. ix. 4 ff., 12, also ἔξεστιν in vi. 12, x. 23. The Jerus. Council (Acts xv. 29), to whose decree P. was a party, had not denied in principle the lawfulness of using idolothyta; it forbade such use to the mixed Judæo-Gentile Churches within a certain area, in deference to Jewish feeling. Paul comes in effect to the same conclusion, though he advises instead of commanding. The πρόσκομμα is an obstacle thrown in the way of "the weak," over which they may stumble into a moral fall, not having the strength either to overcome their scruples or to disregard an example contrary to their conscience.

Ver. 10 enforces (γάρ) the above warning.—σὲ τὸν ἔχοντα γνῶσιν, "thee, the man that has knowledge" (see 1): the Cor. pretension to superior enlightenment, shown in vv. 2 f. to be faulty in Christian theory, now discloses its practical mischief. The behaviour of the Christian man of knowledge who "reclines (at table) in an idol's temple," is represented as a sort of bravado—a thing done to show his "knowledge," his complete freedom from superstition about the idol. This act is censured because of its effect upon the mind of others; in x. 18-22 it will be condemned on its own account. The form εἰδωλίον (or -εῖον) occurs in the Apocrypha; it follows the formation of Gr. temple names—Ἀπολλωνεῖον, etc.—οὐχὶ ἡ συνείδησις αὐτοῦ, ἀσθενοῦς ὄντος κ.τ.λ.; "will not his conscience, weak as he is, be 'edified' unto eating σεται εἰς τὸ τὰ [w] εἰδωλόθυτα ἐσθίειν; 11. καὶ[1] [l] ἀπολεῖται[1] ὁ [m] ἀσθενῶν[2] ἀδελφὸς[2] ἐπὶ[3] τῇ σῇ [t] γνώσει,[2] δι' ὃν [n] Χριστὸς [n] ἀπέθανεν. 12. οὕτω δὲ [o] ἁμαρτάνοντες [o] εἰς τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς καὶ [p] τύπτοντες αὐτῶν τὴν [x] συνείδησιν [m] ἀσθενοῦσαν, [o] εἰς Χριστὸν [o] ἁμαρτάνετε. 13. [q] διόπερ εἰ [s] βρῶμα [r] σκανδαλίζει τὸν ἀδελφόν μου, οὐ μὴ φάγω [s] κρέα εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἵνα μὴ τὸν ἀδελφόν μου[4] [r] σκανδαλίσω.

l See i. 18. m Rom. iv. 19, xiv. 1 f., 21, in figur. sense. See ver. 7. n xv. 3; 2 Cor. v. 15; Rom. v. 6 ff., vi. 8 ff., viii. 34, xiv. 9; Gal. ii. 21; 1 Th. iv. 14, v. 10; 1 Pet. iii. 18; Jo. xi. 50 ff. o See vi. 18. p N.T. h.l.; cf. 1 Kings i. 8; Prov. xxvi. 22. q x. 14. διο, see xii. 3. r Rom. xiv. 21; Mt. xv. 12, xvii. 27; Sir. ix. 5, xxiii. 8, xxxii. (xxxv.) 15. s Rom. xiv. 21, pl.

[1] απολλυται γαρ: ℵ*B 17, cop. basm., Clem.; απολλυται ουν, AP. και απολλυται: ℵcD*b 46, 67, Bas. και απολειται: DcGL, etc., vg. syrr. (late Western and Syrian).

[2] ο ασθενων εν τη ση γνωσει, ο αδελφος δι' ον κ.τ.λ. (in this order): all pre-Syrian uncc.

[3] εν, all uncc. but L.

[4] The Western texts om. the second μου.

the foods offered to idols?"—not because he is weak (as though overpowered by a stronger mind), but while he is still weak, as under the lingering belief that the idol is "something in the world" (7): "his verbis exprimitur horror infirmi, tamen edentis" (Bg.).—Thus eating unpersuaded "in his own mind" (Rom. xiv. 5), he sins (Rom. xiv. 23), and therefore "is perishing" (11). The vb. "edified"—instead of "persuaded" or the like—is used in sad irony (cf. Tert., "ædificatur ad ruinam," De Præscr. Hæretic., 3); P. probably takes up the word in this connexion from the Church Letter: the eaters of idolothyta thought their practice "edifying" to less advanced brethren—"edifying, forsooth!—to what end?"

Ver. 11. "For the weak man [whom you talk of building up!] is being destroyed through thy knowledge—the brother, on whose account Christ died!" (Rom. xiv. 15). This affirms, with terrible emphasis, the issue implied by ver. 10: "est ædificatio ruinosa" (Cv.).—ὁ ἀσθενῶν means (more than ὁ ἀσθενής) the man in a continued state of weakness.—ἐν τῇ σῇ γνώσει, "on the ground (or in the sphere) of thy knowledge"; in this atmosphere the weak faith of the other cannot live (cf. ἐν in ii. 4; Eph. iv. 16, ἐν ἀγάπῃ). His "knowledge" leaves the tempter inexcusable. "Notice the threefold darkness of the picture: there perishes, thy brother, for whom Christ died" (Bt.). Paul appeals to the strongest feelings of a Christian—brotherly love and loyalty to Christ. For the prospective δι' ὅν, cf. Rom. iv. 25; Christ's death is thus frustrated of its dear object (cf. Gal. ii. 21) by thy heartless folly!

Ver. 12. In such case, not only the weak brother sins by yielding, but the strong who tempted him; and the latter sins directly "against Christ" (for the construction, cf. vi. 18): "But sinning in this way against the brethren, and inflicting a blow on their conscience while it is weak, you sin against Christ".—τὴν συνείδησιν ἀσθενοῦσαν, not "their weak conscience" (τὴν ἀσθεν.), but "their conscience weak as it is": how base to strike the weak!—τύπτω describes as the violent wrong of the injurer, what is a μόλυσμα and πρόσκομμα (7, 9) in its effect upon the injured. A blow on the conscience shocks and deranges it.—For the bearing of such an act on Christ, see Matt. xviii. 6 ff., xxv. 40, 45; also Zech. ii. 8, etc. The principle of union with Christ, which forbids sin against oneself (vi. 15), forbids sin against one's brother.

Ver. 13 sums up the debate in the language of personal conviction: "Wherefore verily"—for this last reason above all—"if (a matter of) food (βρῶμα, indef.) is stumbling my brother, I will eat no flesh-meats for evermore, that I may not stumble my brother".—κρέα (pl. of κρέας) signifies the kinds of βρῶμα in question, including probably beside the idolothyta other animal foods which might scandalise men of narrow views, such as the vegetarians of Rom. xiv. 13-21 (see notes ad loc.).—Four times in vv. 11-13 P. repeats the word ἀδελφός, seeking to elicit the love which was needed to control Cor. knowledge (cf. 2 f.).—For "σκανδαλίζω,

IX. 1. Οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος [1]; οὐκ εἰμὶ [a] ἐλεύθερος [1]; οὐχὶ Ἰησοῦν [2] Χριστὸν [2] τὸν [b] Κύριον ἡμῶν [b] ἑώρακα [3]; οὐ τὸ [c] ἔργον μου ὑμεῖς ἐστε ἐν Κυρίῳ; 2. [d] εἰ ἄλλοις οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος, [d] ἀλλά [d] γε ὑμῖν εἰμι· ἡ γὰρ [e] σφραγὶς τῆς [4] ἐμῆς [4] [f] ἀποστολῆς ὑμεῖς ἐστε ἐν Κυρίῳ.

a ver. 19; Rom. vii. 3; Gal. iv. 22 ff.; 1 Pet. ii. 16.
b Jo. xx. 18, 25; Acts xxii. 14 f.
c iii. 13 ff., xv. 58, xvi. 10; Rom. xiv. 20; Phil. i. 22, ii. 30; 2 Tim. iv. 5; Acts xiii. 2, xiv. 26.
d Lk. xxiv. 21; cf. Phil. iii. 8. For αλλα after hypoth., see iv. 15, viii. 6; 2 Cor. xi. 6, xiii. 4; Rom. vi. 5.
e Rom. iv. 11; 2 Tim. ii. 19; Rev. v. 1, etc. -ιζομαι, 2 Cor. i. 22; Rom. xv. 28; Eph. i. 13, iv. 30; Rev. vii. 3, etc.
f Rom. i. 5; Gal. ii. 8; Acts i. 25; Deut. xxii. 7.

[1] . . . ελευθερος; . . . αποστολος; (in this order): ℵABP 17, 37, 46, vg. syr sch. cop.

[2] Ιησουν (without Χριστον), ℵAB 46, oldest vg. sah. basm.
Χριστον Ιησουν, G, Tert., Aug., Pelag.; Ιησουν Χριστον, DKLP, etc., syr sch. cop. Cf. note on ver. 4.

[3] εορακα, ℵB*DcGP; so Tisch., W.H., Nestle. See Wr., p. 108.

[4] σφραγις μου της αποστολης: ℵBP 17, 46.

to put a σκάνδαλον (cl. σκανδάληθρον, trap-stick = πρόσκομμα, 9) in another's way," cf. Rom. xiv. 21 and parls. The strong negation οὐ μή ("no fear lest": see Wr., p. 634 ff.) is further heightened by εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, "to eternity". The rendering "while the world standeth" is based on the use of αἰών (perpetuity) in such passages as i. 20, where the context narrows its meaning; in this phrase the noun has its full sense, but used rhetorically.

§ 27. Paul's Apostolic Status, ix. 1-6. The Ap. is ready to forego his right to use the idolothyta, wherever this claim hurts the susceptibilities of any brother (viii. 13). He is "free" as any man in Cor. in such respects; more than this, he is "an apostle" (ix. 1), and the Church of Cor. is witness to the fact, being itself his answer to all challengers (2 f.). If so, he has the right to look to his Churches for maintenance, and that in the ordinary comfort of married life—a claim unquestioned in the case of his colleagues in the apostleship (4-6).

Ver. 1. οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐλεύθερος; This question, arising out of the foregoing §, properly comes first. The freedom supposed is that of principle; in ver. 19 it will take a personal complexion. P. is no longer bound by Mosaic restrictions in the matters under dispute (cf. ver. 21, x. 29, Gal. ii. 4, iv. 12, v. 1); he holds the right belonging to every emancipated Christian.—Far beyond this reaches the question, οὐκ εἰμὶ ἀπόστολος; which P. answers by putting two other questions, one to his own consciousness, the other to that of his readers: "Have I not seen Jesus our Lord? Are not you my work in the Lord?"—Ἰησοῦν . . . ἑόρακα (cf. Acts vii. 55, ix. 5, 17, xxii. 8, xxvi. 15) is a unique expression with P.; it describes not a spiritual apprehension, the γνῶναι Χριστὸν of the believer, nor the ecstatic visions which he had sometimes enjoyed in a state of trance (2 Cor. xii. 1 ff.), but that actual beholding of the human and glorified Redeemer which befell him on the way to Damascus; from this dated both his faith and his mission (Acts ix. 1-32, Gal. i. 10-17). Paul seldom uses "Jesus" as the name of our Lord distinctively, always with specific ref. to the historical Person (cf. xii. 3, 1, 1 Thess. iv. 14; Eph. iv. 21; Phil. ii. 10; 2 Cor. iv. 10-14). The visible and glorious man who then appeared, declared Himself as "Jesus"; from that instant Saul knew that he had seen the crucified Jesus risen and reigning. Asking of his new-found Lord, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" he received the command out of which his commission unfolded itself. Personal knowledge of the Lord and a "word from His mouth" (Acts xxii. 14) were necessary to constitute an Apostle in the primary sense, the immediate "emissary" of Jesus (cf. Mark iii. 13, Acts i. 21 f.); in virtue of this experience, P. classes himself with "the other App." (xv. 7 ff., Gal. i. 16 f.); his right to do so was in due time acknowledged by them (Gal. ii. 6-9). The great interview, in its full import, was Paul's own secret; his Apostolic power, derived therefrom, was manifest to the whole world (2 Cor. iii. 1 ff., xii. 12), the Cor. Church supplying a conspicuous proof.

Vv. 2, 3. If not at Corinth amongst those who cried "I am of Cephas," elsewhere Paul's apostleship was denied by the Judaistic party, against whom he

3. ἡ ἐμὴ [g]ἀπολογία τοῖς ἐμὲ [h]ἀνακρίνουσιν αὕτη[1] ἐστί[1]· 4. [i]μὴ [i]οὐκ [k]ἔχομεν [k]ἐξουσίαν φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν[2]; 5. [i]μὴ [i]οὐκ [k]ἔχομεν [k]ἐξουσίαν ἀδελφὴν[3] γυναῖκα[3] [l]περιάγειν, ὡς καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ [m]ἀπό-

g 2 Cor. vii. 11; Phil. i. 7, 16; 2 Tim. iv. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 15 (with dat.); Acts xxii. 1, xxv. 16. h See ii. 14. i xi. 22; Rom. x. 18 f. k See vii. 37. l Trans., N.T. h.l.; Ezek. xxxvii. 2. Cf. Acts xiii. 11; Mt. iv. 23, etc. m In this sense, xii. 28 f., xv. 7, 9; 2 Cor. xi. 5 (?); Gal. i. 17, 19; Eph. ii. 20, iii. 5, iv. 11; 1 Th. ii. 6; 2 Pet. iii. 2; Gospp. and Acts, passim.

[1] εστιν αυτη (in this order): ℵABP 17, 37, 46.

[2] πειν, B*; or πιν, ℵ*D*G. See Wr., p. 112.

[3] Clem. Al., Hier., Aug., Hil., with the arm. vers., read γυναικας or αδελφας γυναικας, conforming the obj. to εχομεν.

had afterwards to write 2 Cor. x. ff. In this trial he counts on the Cor. standing by him: "If to others I am no apostle, at any rate (ἀλλά γε, at certe, Bz.) I am to you". He does not say "of others," as though distinguishing two fields of jurisdiction in the sense of Gal. ii. 8, rather "in the eyes of others"; cf. the dat. of viii. 6. For ἀλλά γε, cf. Plato, Gorg., 470 D., εἰ δὲ μὴ (δρῶ), ἀλλ' ἀκούω γε.—γε throws its emphasis on ὑμῖν; so P. continues: "The seal of my apostleship you are, in the Lord"; cf. Rom. iv. 11, 2 Cor. i. 22. This seal came from the hand of the Lord, affixed by the Master to His servant's work (cf. 2 Cor. iii. 1 ff.). Despite its imperfections, the Cor. Church was a shining evidence of Paul's commission; it was probably the largest Church as yet raised in his independent ministry. For ἐν Κυρίῳ, see note on iv. 15, and vii. 22.—"This"—referring to vv. 1, 2—"is my answer to those that put me on my defence": I point them to you!—ἀπολογία (see parls.) is a self-exculpation. For ἀνακρίνω, cf. notes on ii. 14 f., iv. 4.—It is Paul's ἀποστολή, not the ἐξουσία of vv. 4 ff., that is called in question; hence the vein of self-defence pervading the Epp. of this period. Granted the apostleship (and this the readers cannot deny), the right followed as a matter of course: this needed no "apology".

Vv. 4-6. The rights P. vindicates for himself and his fellow-labourers in the Gospel, are (a) the right to maintenance; (b) to marriage; (c) to release from manual labour.—(a) μὴ οὐκ ἔχομεν; "Is it that we have not?"—ironical question, as in xi. 22—"Of course we have". P. writes in pl. collegas includens (Bg.), the ἀποστολή suggesting οἱ λοιποὶ mentioned in the next ver.—ἐξουσίαν φαγεῖν καὶ πεῖν (later Gr. for πιεῖν), "right to eat and drink,"—sc. as guests of the Church: see Mark vi. 10, Luke x. 7, xxii. 30. The added καὶ πεῖν, and the illustrations of vv. 7 and 13, show that the obj. of the two vbs. is not the idolothyta, but the material provision for Christ's apostles, supplied by those they serve (11); this ἐξουσία is analogous to, not parl. with, that of viii. 9, belonging not to the ἐλεύθερος as such, but to the ἀπόστολος; cf. the Didaché, 13, "Every true prophet is worthy of his food". George Fox characteristically notes the moderation of the demand: "The Ap. said 'Have I not power to eat and to drink?' But he did not say, 'to take tithes, Easter reckonings, Midsummer dues, augmentations, and great sums of money'." ἐξουσίαν, as a verbal noun, governs the bare inf., like ἔξεστιν.—(b) Paul claims, in order to renounce, the ἐξουσίαν ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν—the "right to take about (with us) a sister as wife"—i.e., a Christian wife: brachyology for "to have a Christian sister to wife, and take her about with us".—ἀδελφὴν is obj., γυναῖκα objective complement to περιάγειν, on which the stress lies; "non ex habendo, sed ex circumducendo sumtus afferebatur ecclesiis" (Bg.). The Clementine Vg. rendering, mulierem sororem circumducendi (as though from γυν. ἀδελφ.), gives a sense at variance both with grammar and decorum, not to be justified by Luke viii. 2 f. This misinterpreted text was used in defence of the scandalous practice of priests and monks keeping as "sisters" γυναῖκες συνεισακτοί, which was condemned by the Nicene Council, and often subsequently; so Jerome (Ep. 23, ad Eustoch.), "Agapetarum pestis . . . sine nuptiis aliud nomen uxorum . . . novum concubinarum genus" (see Suicer's Thesaurus, s. vv. Ἀγαπητή, Ἀδελφή).—From the ὡς καὶ clause it appears that "the rest of the App.," generally speaking, were married, and their wives often travelled στολοι καὶ οἱ [n] ἀδελφοὶ τοῦ [n] Κυρίου καὶ [o] Κηφᾶς; 6. ἢ μόνος ἐγὼ καὶ Βαρνάβας, οὐκ [k] ἔχομεν [k] ἐξουσίαν τοῦ [1] μὴ [p] ἐργάζεσθαι;

7. Τίς [q] στρατεύεται ἰδίοις [r] ὀψωνίοις [s] ποτέ; τίς [t] φυτεύει [tu] ἀμπελῶνα καὶ ἐκ [2] τοῦ [2] καρποῦ [2] αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἐσθίει; ἢ [3] τίς [v] ποιμαίνει n Gal. i. 19; Acts i. 14; Mt. xii. 46 ff., xiii. 55; Jo. ii. 12, vii. 3, 5, 10.

o 12, iii. 22, xv. 5; Gal. i. 18, ii. 9 ff., Jo. i. 43.
p In this usage, Rom. iv. 4 f.; 1 Th. ii. 9; 2 Th. iii. 8 ff.; see iv. 12.
q 2 Cor. x. 3; 1 Tim. i. 18; 2 Tim. ii. 4; Jas. iv. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 11; Lk. iii. 14; Isa. xxix. 7.
r 2 Cor. xi. 8; Rom. vi. 23; Lk. iii. 14; 1 Esdr. iv. 56; 1 Macc. iii. 28, xiv. 32.
s In this use, Heb. i. 5, 13; cf. Eph. v. 29.
t See iii. 6; with αμπ., Deut. xx. 6.
u Mt. xx. 1 ff., xxi. 28 ff.; Lk. xiii. 6; Isa. v. 1 ff., etc.
v Vb., 1 Pet. v. 2 and Acts xx. 28 (ποιμνιον); Jude 12; Rev. ii. 27, etc., vii. 17; Jo. xxi. 16; Mt. ii. 6; Lk. xvii. 7 (with αροτριοω); 1 Ki. xxv. 16. Noun, Mt. xxvi. 31; Lk. ii. 8; Jo. x. 16; Gen. xxxii. 16.

[1] Om. του all pre-Syrian uncc.

[2] τον καρπον: all pre-Syrian uncc. εκ των καρπων, C[3], Dam.

[3] Om. η (?) BC[2]DG, latt. vg. sah. Tr., W.H., and Nestle bracket. η retained by ℵAC*KLP, cop. BDG is a suspicious group (W.H.).

with them; the "forsaking" of Luke xviii. 28-30 was not final (in the parl. Matt. xix. 28 f., Mark x. 28 ff., γυνὴ does not appear); according to tradition, John however was celibate. "The brothers of the Lord" were also orthodox Jews in this respect (on their relationship to Jesus, see Lt., Essay in Comm. on Galatians); indeed, they came near to founding a kind of Christian dynasty in Jerus. "And Cephas," separately mentioned as the most eminent instance of the married Christian missionary. The association of the ἀδελφοὶ τ. Κυρ. with the ἀπόστολοι does not prove that they were counted amongst these, or bore this title of office: while distinguished from the latter by their specific name (cf. Gal. i. 19), they are linked with them as persons of like eminence; see the position of James in Acts.—(c) The third ἐξουσία, μὴ ἐργάζεσθαι, Paul and his old comrade Barnabas had laid aside. Barn. had stripped himself of property at Jerus. in the early days (Acts iv. 36 f.); and he and P. together, in the pioneer mission of Acts xiii. f., worked their way as handicraftsmen. Now separated, they both continued this practice, which was exceptional—μόνος ἐγὼ κ. Βαρνάβας. The allusion implies wide-spread knowledge of the career of Barn., which ends for us at Acts xv. 39. Notwithstanding the παροξυσμὸς in which they parted, the two great missionaries remained in friendly alliance; cf. Paul's reff. to Mark, Barnabas' cousin, in Col. iv. 10, 2 Tim. iv. 11. For ἐργάζομαι, as denoting manual labour, see parls.; a cl. usage, like that of Eng. workmen. This third ἐξουσία was the negative side of the first (cf. 1 Thess. ii. 9, also 2 Cor. xi. 9, and ἀδάπανον θήσω of 18 below).—The three rights in fact amount to the one which Paul argues for in the sequel: he might justly have imposed his personal support, and that in the more expensive character of a married man, upon the Christian communities for which he laboured, thus sparing himself the disadvantages and hardships of manual toil.

§ 28. The Claim of Ministers to Public Maintenance, ix. 7-15*a*. Paul asserts his right to live at the charge of the Christian community, in order to show the Cor. how he has waived this prerogative (15*b*, etc.). But before doing this, he will further vindicate the right; for it was sure to be disputed, and his renunciation might be used to the disadvantage of other servants of Christ. He therefore formally establishes the claim: (a) on grounds of natural analogy (7); (b) by proof from Scripture (8-10); (c) by the intrinsic justice of the case (11); (d) by comparison with O.T. practice (13); finally (e) by ref. to the express commandment of the Lord (14). In ver. 12 he indicates, by the way, that "others" of inferior standing are making themselves chargeable on the Cor. Church.

Ver. 7 puts the question under three figures—virtual arguments from nature—drawn from the camp, the vineyard, the flock. These figures had been similarly used by our Lord: (1) in Luke xi. 21 f., xiv. 31; (2) in Matt. xx. 1 ff., xxi. 28 ff.; (3) in Luke xii. 32, John x., and xxi. 15 ff. Cf. in Paul for (1) xiv. 8, Eph. vi. 10 ff., 1 Thess. v. 8; (2) iii. 6 ff.; (3) Acts xx. 28, Eph. iv. 11. On ὀψωνίοις, see Gm.: it denotes primarily "rations" served out in lieu of pay; then military "stipends" of any kind; then "wages" generally; see parls.—ἰδίοις ὀψων., not w See iii. 3. x η και, xvi. 6 (?); 2 Cor. i. 13; Rom. ii. 15; Lk. xi. 11 f., xviii. 11. Interrog. as here, Rom. iv. 9; Lk. xii. 41. y κημωσεις, if genuine, h.l. φιμωσεις, Deut. xxv. 4; so 1 Tim. v. 18; 1 Pet. ii. 15; Mt. xxii. 12, 34; Mk. i. 25, etc. See txti. and exegetical notes. z 1 Tim. v. 18 (Deut. xxv. 4); 1 Chron. xxi. 20. a See vii. 21. With gen., N.T. h.l.; usually περι, Mt. xxii. 16, etc. b See v. 10. c See vii. 36. d Rom. iv. 18, v. 2, viii. 20; Tit. i. 2; Acts ii. 26 (Psa. xvi. 9), xxvi. 6.

[w]ποίμνην καὶ ἐκ τοῦ γάλακτος τῆς [v]ποίμνης οὐκ ἐσθίει; 8. μὴ [w]κατὰ [w]ἄνθρωπον ταῦτα λαλῶ,[1] [x]ἢ οὐχὶ[2] [x]καὶ ὁ νόμος ταῦτα λέγει[2]; 9. ἐν γὰρ τῷ Μωσέως[3] νόμῳ γέγραπται,[4] "Οὐ [y]φιμώσεις[5] βοῦν [z]ἀλοῶντα"· μὴ [a]τῶν βοῶν [a]μέλει τῷ Θεῷ, 10. ἢ δι' ἡμᾶς [b]πάντως λέγει; δι' ἡμᾶς γὰρ ἐγράφη, ὅτι [d]ἐπ' [d]ἐλπίδι[6] [c]ὀφείλει[6]

[1] λεγω, DG—characteristic Western alteration.

[2] η και ο νομος ταυτα ου λεγει; ℵABCD 46.
η ει και ο νομος ταυτα λεγει; G, arm. T.R. in KLP, etc.

[3] Μωυσεως: all uncc. but A. So passim.

[4] γεγραπται γαρ (om. rest of clause): DG, Hil., etc.—Western emendation.

[5] κημωσεις (?), B*D*G, Chr., Thdrt., Cyr. So Tisch., Tr., Al., El., Nestle, W.H. marg. See note 3 on last p.; on the other hand, κημ. is h.l., and φιμ. might easily be borrowed from Deut. φιμωσεις, ℵAB³CD^bcKLP, etc. So Lachm., W.H. txt., and R.V.

[6] οφειλει επ' ελπιδι (in this order): pre-Syrian non-Western uncc.

"at his proper pay," but "at his private (as distinguished from public) charges": cf. xi. 21, Gal. ii. 2. The use of ποτὲ to widen negative, interr. (virtually negative), and hypothetical propositions, common in cl. Greek, is infrequent in N.T.—In the third question, a partitive ἐκ with gen. replaces the acc., the image suggesting a share: "the shepherd is still remunerated in the East by a share of the milk" (Mr.); or is P. thinking of the solid food (ἐσθίει) which comes "out of the milk"? For the cognate acc., ποιμαίνει ποίμνην, cf. 1 Peter v. 2, also John x. 16.

Vv. 8-10*a*. μὴ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον κ.τ.λ.; "Am I saying these things as any man might do"—in accordance with human practice (as just seen in 7)?—κατὰ ἄνθρ., in contrast with what ὁ νόμος λέγει; cf. Gal. iii. 15 ff. This dialectic use of μή, ἤ or ἢ καί, in a train of questions, is very Pauline; ἢ καὶ recommends the second alternative; cf. Rom. iv. 9, Luke xii. 41. —"The law" is abolished as a means of obtaining salvation (Rom iii. 19 ff., etc.); it remains a revelation of truth and right (Rom. vii. 12 ff.), and P. draws from it guidance for Christian conduct; cf. xiv. 34, Rom. xiii. 8 ff., and (comprehensively) Rom. viii. 4. The ethics of the N.T. are those of the Old, enhanced by Christ (see Matt. v. 17 ff.). Paul speaks however here, somewhat distantly, of the "law of Moses" (cf. vv. 20 f., x. 2); but of "the law of Christ" in Gal. vi. 2 (cf. John i. 17, viii. 17, x. 34, xv. 25).—Οὐ φιμώσεις κ.τ.λ., "Thou shalt not muzzle a threshing ox," cited to the same effect in 1 Tim. v. 18,—οὐ with fut. reproducing the Heb. lo' with impf. of emphatic prohibition. Deut. xxv. 4, detached where it stands, belongs to a series of Mosaic commands enjoining humane treatment of animals, regarded as being in some sense a part of the sacred community: cf. Exod. xx. 10, xxiii. 12, 19, Deut. xxii. 4, 6 f., 10. Corn was threshed either by the feet of cattle (Mic. iv. 12 f.), or by a sledge driven over the threshing-floor (2 Sam xxiv. 22).—μὴ τῶν βοῶν μέλει τῷ Θεῷ κ.τ.λ.; "Is it for the oxen that God cares, or on our account, by all means, does He say (it)?" The argumentative πάντως (cf. Rom. iii. 9, Luke iv. 23), "on every ground"—slightly diff. in ver. 22, more so in v. 10: not that "God is concerned wholly (exclusively) for us" in this rule; but on every account a provision made for the beasts in man's service must hold good, à fortiori, for God's proper servants; cf. Matt. vi. 26 ff., also x. 31, xii. 12. δι' ἡμᾶς, emphatically repeated, signifies not men as against oxen, but nos evangelii ministros (Est.) in analogy to oxen; the right of Christ's ministers "to eat and drink" is safeguarded by the principle that gives the ox his provender out of the corn he treads. Paul's method in such interpretations is radically diff. from that of Philo, who says, Οὐ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀλόγων ὁ νόμος, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τῶν νοῦν κ. λόγον ἐχόντων, De Victim. offer., § 1: Philo destroys the historical sense; Paul extracts its moral principle.

Ver. 10*b*. δι' ἡμᾶς γὰρ (cf. 1 Thess.

ὁ [e] ἀροτριῶν [e] ἀροτριᾷν, καὶ ὁ [a] ἀλοῶν τῆς[1] ἐλπίδος[1] αὐτοῦ[1] [f] μετέχειν [d] ἐπ' [d] ἐλπίδι.[1] 11. εἰ ἡμεῖς ὑμῖν τὰ [g] πνευματικὰ [h] ἐσπείραμεν, [i] μέγα [i] εἰ ἡμεῖς ὑμῶν τὰ σαρκικὰ [k] θερίσομεν[2]; 12*a*. εἰ ἄλλοι τῆς [l] ἐξουσίας[3] [l] ὑμῶν[3] [f] μετέχουσιν, οὐ μᾶλλον ἡμεῖς; 12*b*. ἀλλ' οὐκ [m] ἐχρησάμεθα τῇ [l] ἐξουσίᾳ ταύτῃ· ἀλλὰ πάντα [n] στέγομεν, ἵνα μὴ [op] ἐγκο-e Lk. xvii. 7 (see note v); Deut. xxii. 10.

f x. 17 ff.; Heb. ii. 14, v. 13, vii. 13; Prov. i. 18, etc.
g In this contrast, iii. 1; Rom. vii. 14 (σαρκινος), xv. 27; cf. Eph. vi. 12, etc.
h In this sense, 2 Cor. ix. 6, 10; Gal. vi. 7 f.; Jas. iii. 18.
i 2 Cor. xi. 15; Gen. xlv. 28; Isa. xlix. 6.
k 2 Cor. ix. 6; Mt. xxv. 24, 26; Jo. iv. 36; Ps. cxxv. 5.
l With obj. gen., Rom. ix. 21; Mt. x. 1; Jo. xvii. 2; Sir. x. 4, xvii. 2.
m See vii. 21.
n xiii. 7; 1 Th. iii. 1, 5; Sir. viii. 17. Only Pauline in N.T. o N.T. h.l. -πτω, Rom. xv. 22; Gal. v. 7; 1 Th. ii. 18; 1 Pet. iii. 7; Acts xxiv. 4.
p προσκ. διδ., 2 Cor. vi. 3.

[1] επ' ελπιδι του μετεχειν: ℵ*A (εφ') BCP 17, syrr. sah. cop., Or., Eus., Cyr., Aug.; in spe fructus percipiendi, vg., Pelag.
της ελπιδος αυτου μετεχειν: DG.
T.R. a conflate (Syrian) reading, combining the Western and non-Western texts.

[2] θερισωμεν, CDGLP, above thirty minn.; metamus, latt. vg., Latt Ff.: by itacism.

[3] της υμων εξουσιας (in this order): all uncc. but KL.

ii. 20, for γὰρ in affirm. reply) κ.τ.λ.: "Yes, it was written on our account (cf. Rom. iv. 23 f.)—(to wit), that the ploughing (ox) ought to plough in hope, and the threshing (ox) in hope of partaking" (ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τοῦ μετέχειν). The explanatory ὅτι clause (cf. i. 5, 26, iv. 9 and note) restates and amplifies the previous quotation. The Ap. is not explaining how the command came to be given ("because," E.V.), but unfolding the principle that lies in it.—The right of the ox in threshing also belongs in equity to the ox at the plough; all contributors to the harvest are included, whether at an earlier or later stage.—ὀφείλει, emphatic—debet (Vg.): the hope of participation in the fruit is due to the labourer —beast or man. The moral, as applied to Christian teachers, is obvious; it embraces the successive stages of the common work (cf. iii. 9, John iv. 36).—ἀροτριᾷν (sometimes "to sow"; so El. and some others here) contains the root of the Lat. aro and older Eng. ear.

Vv. 11, 12*a* appeal to the sense of justice in the Cor.; τὸ δίκαιον δείκνυσιν τοῦ πράγματος (Thp.): cf. Gal. vi. 6.—μέγα εἰ . . .; "Is it a great thing if . . . ?" = "Is it a great thing to ask (or look for) that . . . ?" cf. 2 Cor. xi. 15; the construction is akin to that of θαυμάζω εἰ (see Gm., s.v. Εἰ, i., 4)—a kind of litotes, suggesting where one might have vigorously asserted. The repeated collocation ἡμεῖς ὑμῖν, ἡμεῖς ὑμῶν, brings out the personal nature of this claim: "We sowed for you the things of the Spirit; should not we reap from you the (needed) carnal things?"—τὰ πνευματικὰ (cf. ii. 12, xii. 1-13, Rom. viii. 2, 5 f., Gal. v. 22, etc.) include all the distinctive boons of the Christian faith; "the carnal things" embrace, besides food and drink (4), all suitable bodily "goods" (Gal. vi. 6).—The question of ver. 12*a* assumes that other Christian teachers received maintenance from the Cor. Church; the claim of Paul and his fellow-missioners was paramount (cf. iv. 15; also 2 Cor. x. 12-18, xi. 12 ff., 20, where this comparison comes up in a new form).—ὑμῶν is surely gen. of object, as in Matt. x. 1 (= ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ, Luke ix. 1), John xvii. 2,—"the claim upon you". Ev. and Ed. read the pron. as subjective gen.—the latter basing the phrase on iii. 22 f.—sc. "if others share in your domain," instead of "in dominion over you"; this rendering is sound in grammar, and has a basis in iv. 7-12, but lies outside the scope of ἐξουσία in this context. The expression "others participate" suggests a right belonging to these "others" in a lesser degree (cf. μετέχω in 10): the πατὴρ should be first honoured, then the παιδαγωγοί (iv. 15).

Ver. 12*b*. "But we did not use this right"—i.e., P. and his comrades in the Cor. mission (2 Cor. i. 19).—ἀλλὰ πάντα στέγομεν: "Nay, we put up with everything (omnia sustinemus, Vg.), lest we should cause any (kind of) hindrance to the good news about Christ".—στέγω (see parls.), syn. in later Gr. with ὑπομένω, βαστάζω, "marks the patient and enduring spirit with which the Ap. puts up with all the consequences naturally resulting from" his policy of abstinence (El.). What this involved we have partly seen in iv. 11 ff.; cf. 2 Cor. xi. 27, Acts xx. 34.—The ἐνκοπὴ he sought to obviate πήν [1] τινα [1] [p] δῶμεν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. 13. [q] οὐκ [q] οἴδατε ὅτι οἱ τὰ [r] ἱερὰ [r] ἐργαζόμενοι ἐκ [2] τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐσθίουσιν, οἱ τῷ [s] θυσιαστηρίῳ [t] προσεδρεύοντες [3] τῷ [s] θυσιαστηρίῳ [u] συμμερίζονται; 14. οὕτω καὶ ὁ Κύριος [v] διέταξε τοῖς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον [w] καταγγέλλουσιν [x] ἐκ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου [v x] ζῆν. 15*a*. ἐγὼ δὲ οὐδενὶ [4] [m] ἐχρησάμην [4] τούτων.

q See iii. 16.
r H.l. Adj., 2 Tim. iii. 15; Josh. vi. 7; 2 Macc. v. 16, etc. Vb., in this use, Jer. xxxvii. 9.
s x. 18; Rom. xi. 3 (3 Kings xix. 10); Heb. vii. 13, xiii. 10; Mt. v. 23, etc.; Rev. vi. 9, etc.
t παρεδρ., N.T. h.l.; cf. vii. 35; Prov. i. 21.
u H.l.
v With dat., xvi. 1; Tit. i. 5; Mt. xi. 1; Acts xxiii. 31, xxiv. 23. With inf., Lk. viii. 55; Acts xviii. 2, xxiv. 23. With dat. and inf., thus, h.l.
w See ii. 1.
x Rom. i. 17 and Heb. x. 31 (Hab. ii. 4); cf. Mt. iv. 4 (Deut. viii. 3).

[1] τινα εγκοπην (in this order): ℵABC 17, 46. εκκοπην, ℵD*L; Tisch. ενκοπην, BG; W.H., Nestle.

[2] τα εκ: ℵBD*G 46. Om. τα ACD^bcKLP (Alex. and Syrian).

[3] παρεδρευοντες: all uncc. but ℵ^cKL.

[4] ου κεχρημαι ουδενι: all uncc. but K.

(military term of later Gr., from ἐνκόπτω, to cut into, break up, a road, so to hinder a march) lay (a) in the reproach of venality, as old as Socrates and the Sophists, attaching to the acceptance of remuneration by a wandering teacher, which his enemies desired to fasten on Paul (1 Thess. ii. 3 ff., 2 Cor. xi. 7 ff., xii. 13 ff.); and (b) in the fact that P. would have shackled his movements by taking wages from particular Churches (19), so giving them a lien upon his ministrations. For the Hebraistic phrase ἐνκοπὴν δίδωμι (= ἐνκόπτω), cf. xiv. 7, 2 Thess. i. 8.—τοῦ Χριστοῦ is always obj. gen. after εὐαγγέλιον; see Rom. i. 2 f., also μαρτύριον τ. Χριστοῦ, i. 6 above.

Vv. 13, 14. After the personal "aside" of vv. 11 f., Paul returns to his main proof, deriving a further reason for the disputed ἐξουσία from the Temple service. "Do you not know"—you men of knowledge (cf. iii. 16)—ὅτι οἱ τὰ ἱερὰ ἐργαζόμενοι ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐσθίουσιν; "that those employed in the sacred offices eat what comes from the sacred place (the Temple)?"—"qui sacris operantur, ex sacrario edunt" (Cv.): see the rules ad hoc in Lev. vi. 8-vii. 38 and Num. xviii. 8-19. For ἐργάζομαι (of business, employment), cf. iv. 12, Acts xviii. 3, etc.—"Those that are assiduous at the altar," qui altari assident (Bz.)—i.e., the priests engaged in the higher ritual functions—are distinguished from other Temple ministers; the position of Paul and his colleagues is analogous to that of these chief dignitaries.—παρεδρεύω, to have one's seat beside; cf. εὐπάρεδρον, vii. 35. P. argues by analogy from the Jewish priest to the Christian minister in respect of the claim to maintenance; we cannot infer from this an identity of function, any more than in the previous comparison with "the threshing ox".—τ. θυσιαστηρίῳ συνμερίζονται, "have their portion with the altar," i.e., share with it in the sacrifices—"altaris esse socios in dividendo victimas" (Bz.); parts of these were consumed in the altar-fire, and parts reserved for the priests (Lev. x. 12-15). Some refer the first half of ver. 13 to Gentile and the last to Israelite practice; but "with the Ap., τὸ ἱερὸν is only the sanctuary of the God of Israel, τὸ θυσιαστήριον only the altar on which sacrifice is made to Him" (Hf.): cf. Acts xxii. 17, etc., and the Gospels passim, as to ἱερόν; x. 18, as to θυσιαστήριον; cf. x. 1-12, for the use in this Ep. of O.T. analogies.—"So also (in accordance with this precedent) did the Lord appoint for those that preach the good tidings to live of the good tidings."—ἐκ τ. εὐαγγ. in ver. 14 matches ἐκ τ. ἱεροῦ, ver. 13; τοῖς . . καταγγέλλουσιν, τοῖς . . . ἐργαζομένοις: cf. ἱερουργοῦντα τ. εὐαγγ. τ. Θεοῦ, Rom. xv. 16.—For the "ordinance" of "the Lord" (sc. Jesus), see parls.; the allusion speaks for detailed knowledge of the sayings of Jesus, on the part of writer and readers; cf. vii. 10, xi. 23 ff., and notes.—διατάσσω, act., as in vii. 17, xi. 34; mid. in xvi. 1.—ζῆν ἐκ, of source of livelihood (ex quo quod evangelium prædicant, Bz.), in cl. Gr. often ζῆν ἀπὸ (see parls.). For καταγγέλλω, see note on ii. 1.

Ver. 15*a*. "But for my part, I have used none of these things:" does Paul mean "none of the privileges" included in the above ἐξουσία? or "none of the 15*b*. Οὐκ ἔγραψα δὲ ταῦτα ἵνα οὕτω γένηται [y] ἐν ἐμοί· [z a] καλὸν γάρ μοι [a] μᾶλλον ἀποθανεῖν ἢ τὸ [b] καύχημά μου ἵνα [1] τις [1] [c] κενώσῃ.[2] 16. ἐὰν γὰρ [d] εὐαγγελίζωμαι, οὐκ ἔστι μοι [b] καύχημα· [e] ἀνάγκη γάρ μοι [e f] ἐπίκειται, [g] οὐαὶ δέ μοι [g] ἐστὶν ἐὰν μὴ [d] εὐαγγελίζωμαι.[3]

y So used, Mt. xvii. 12; Lk. xxii. 37, xxiii. 31; Jo. xiv. 30; 1 Jo. iv. 9.
z See vii. 1.
a Mk. ix. 42; Acts xx. 35; cf. Phil. i. 23.
b See v. 6.
c See i. 17.
d See i. 17, for absol. use.
e See vii. 37. Iliad, vi. 458, κρατερὴ δ' ἐπεκείσετ' ἀνάγκη.
f Heb. ix. 10; Acts xxvii. 20; Jo. xi. 35.
g Jude 11; Syn. Gospp., Rev., passim; with εστιν, N.T. h.l.; Hos. ix. 12.

[1] ουδεις, ℵ*BD* 17, sah. basm., Tert., Ambrst. ουθεις μη, A. τις (interr.), G 26. ινα τις: ℵcDbcKLP, etc., vg., Bas., Chr., Hier., Aug.

[2] κενωσει, all uncc. but K.

[3] ευαγγελισωμαι (?), BCDG, vg., Aug., Ambrst. So Tr., W.H. txt., Nestle. ευαγγελιζωμαι, ℵAK (LP, -ζομαι), etc.; Tisch., W.H. marg. The Westerns (DG, etc.) have -ισωμαι twice in this ver.

reasons" by which they have been enforced (so Hf., Hn., the former with exclusive ref. to 13 f.)? The parl. sentence of ver. 12, and the οὕτως γένηται of the next clause, are decisive for the former view. "The authority" in question included a number of rights (4 ff.), all of which P. has foregone.—ἐγὼ emphasises, in preparation for the sequel, and in distinction from the broader statement of ver. 12, etc., Paul's individual position in the matter; and the pf. κέχρημαι (replacing the historical aor. of 12) affirms a settled position; the refusal has become a rule. From this point to the end of the ch. the Ap. writes in the 1st sing., revealing his inner thoughts respecting the conduct of his own ministry.

§ 29. Paul's Renouncement of Right for the Gospel's Sake, ix. 15*b*-23. The Ap. has been insisting all this time on the right of Christ's ministers to material support from those they serve, in order that for his own part he may explicitly renounce it. This renunciation is his "boast," and his "reward"; of his office he cannot boast, nor seek reward for it, since it was imposed upon him (15-18). In this abnegation P. finds his freedom, which he uses to make himself impartially the slave of all; untrammelled by any particular ties, he is able to adapt himself to every condition and class of men, and thus to win for the Gospel larger gains (19-22). For himself, his best hope is to partake in its salvation with those he strives to save (23).

Ver. 15*b*. "Now I have not written this (4-14) in order that it should be so done (viz., provision made for 'living of the gospel') in my case." The epistolary ἔγραψα may refer either to a whole letter now completed (Rom. xv. 15), or to words just written (Wr., p. 347; cf. v. 11).—ἐν ἐμοί (the sphere of application), "in the range of my work and responsibility," not "to me" (dat. of person advantaged, as in vv. 20 ff.); cf. iv. 2, 6.—On the best-attested reading, καλὸν γάρ μοι μᾶλλον ἀποθανεῖν ἢ—τὸ καύχημά μου οὐδεὶς κενώσει, the sentence is interrupted at ἢ: "For it is well for me rather to die than"—P. breaks off, impatient of the very thought of pecuniary dependence (cf. 2 Cor. xi. 10), and instead of completing the comparison by the words "that any one should make void my boast," he exclaims vehemently, "My boast no one shall make void!" (so Al., Ed.). μᾶλλον ἢ qualifies the whole clause, not καλὸν alone. This anacoluthon, or aposiopesis, if it has no exact parl. in the N.T., is only an extreme instance of Pauline oratio variata (such as appears, e.g., in Gal. ii. 4 f. and again in ver. 6, and in Rom. v. 12-15), where an extended sentence forgets its beginning, throwing itself suddenly into a new shape; this occurred in a smaller way in vii. 37 above. Strong feeling (cf. 2 Cor. xi. 9 ff., on the same point) is apt to disorder Paul's grammar in this way. He began to say that he would rather die than be dependent on Cor. pay; he ends by saying, absolutely, he will never be so dependent. The T.R. attempts to patch the rent.—Other explanations of the older txt. are given: (a) Lachmann puts a stop after καύχ. μου—"Better for me to die than my boast; no one shall make it void!" (b) Mr. and Bt. make ἢ disjunctive, despite the μᾶλλον: "Better for me to die—or (sc. if I live) no one shall make void my boast!" (c) Ev. and El. read οὐδεὶς κενώσει as equivalent to ἵνα τις κενώσει, supposing ἵνα to be understood and the οὐ to be pleonastic—expedients for which there is a precarious grammati-

17. εἰ γὰρ [h] ἑκὼν τοῦτο πράσσω, [i] μισθὸν [i] ἔχω· εἰ δὲ [k] ἄκων, [l] οἰκονομίαν [m] πεπίστευμαι· 18. τίς οὖν μοι[1] ἐστιν[2] ὁ [i] μισθός; ἵνα [d] εὐαγγελιζόμενος [n] ἀδάπανον [o] θήσω τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ[3] Χριστοῦ,[3]

h Rom. viii. 20; Exod. xxi. 13. i See iii. 8. With ἔχω, Mt. vi. 1 ff.; cf. 2 Jo. 8. k N.T. h.l.; Job xiv. 17. l Eph. i. 10, iii. 2, 9; Col. i. 25; 1 Tim. i. 4; Lk. xvi. 2 ff.; Isa. xxii. 19, 21. Cf. iv. 1 ff. m In this sense, Gal. ii. 7; Rom. iii. 2; 1 Th. ii. 4; 1 Tim. i. 11; Tit. i. 3; Lk. xvi. 11; Jo. ii. 24. n H.l. o In this usage, Rom. iv. 17 (Gen. xvii. 5); Mt. xxii. 44 (Ps. cix. 1); Gen. xxxii. 12; Wisd. x. 21. Poetical in cl. Gr.

[1] μου, ℵ*ACK 17, 46, vg. syr^sch. sah. cop., Cyr., Hier. μοι, BD*GLP, etc., Chr., Aug. Seemingly Western.

[2] εσται μοι: D*G.

[3] Om. του Χριστου ℵABCD* 17, 46, vg. sah. cop.

cal analogy. (d) Lachmann also conjectured ἀποθανεῖν νὴ for ἀποθανεῖν ἤ, Michelsen and Baljon adding the easy insertion of ὃ before οὐδείς: "It is good for me rather to die! Yea, by my glorying (cf. xv. 31), which no one shall make void." (e) Hf., Gd., and others, in despair fall back on the T.R.

Vv. 16-18. Paul goes on to explain, by two contrasted suppositions (in actual and conceivable matter), that this is a point of honour with him. Forced as he had been into the service of the Gospel, in a manner so diff. from the other App., unless he might serve gratuitously his position would be too humiliating.

Ver. 16. The fact of his preaching supplies in itself no καύχημα: "For if I be preaching the good news (εὐαγγελίζωμαι), it is no (matter of) boasting to me; for necessity is imposed on me". For ἀνάγκη, see notes on vii. 26, 37; also Philem. 14, where it contrasts with κατὰ ἑκούσιον as with ἑκὼν here.—Ἐπίκειμαι is virtually pass. to ἐπιτίθημι (see parls.), "to lay" a task, by authority, "upon" some one: P. was, in the Apostolic ranks, a pressed man, not a volunteer,—"laid hold of" (Phil. iii. 12) against his previous will; he entered Christ's service as a captive enemy (cf. xv. 8, 2 Cor. ii. 14). While a gift of Divine mercy (vii. 25, 2 Cor. iv. 1, etc.), his commission was a determination of the Divine sovereignty (i. 1., etc.). For service rendered upon this footing there can never be any boasting; cf. Luke xvii. 10.—That all glorying in this direction was excluded, is sustained by the exclamation, "For woe is to me if I should not preach the Gospel!" ὅπου τὸ Οὐαὶ παράκειται ἐὰν μὴ ποιῇ, οὐκ ἔχει καύχημα (Or.).—ἐὰν μὴ εὐαγγελίσωμαι (contrast the pr. εὐαγγελίζωμαι, of former clause), aor. sbj., of comprehensive fut. ref., from the standpoint of the original "necessity imposed"; cf., for the construction, viii. 8, xv. 36. The interjection οὐαὶ is here a quasi-substantive, as in Rev. ix. 12. Had P. disobeyed the call of God, his course from that time onwards must have been one of condemnation and misery. To fight against "Necessity" the Greeks conceived as ruin; their Ἀνάγκη was a blind, cruel Fate, Paul's ἀνάγκη is the compulsion of Sovereign Grace.

Ver. 17 completes a chain of four explanatory γάρs (cf. i. 17-21). To make his position clearer, P. puts two further contrasted hypotheses, the former imaginary, the latter suggesting the fact: (a) "For if I am engaged on this (work) of my own free will (ἑκών), I have reward (mercedem habeo)"—sc. the supposed καύχημα of ver. 16, the right to credit his work to himself (cf. Rom. iv. 2, 4); not the future Messianic reward (so Mr. and others), for ἔχω implies attained possession (see parls.), much as ἀπέχω in Matt. vi. 2, etc. For πράσσω, see note on v. 2. (b) "But"—the contrasted matter of fact—"if against my will (ἄκων = ἀνάγκῃ, 16), with a stewardship I have been entrusted"; cf. iv. 1 f., 1 Tim. i. 12, etc.—The οἰκονόμος (see note, iv. 1), however highly placed, is a slave whose work is chosen for him and whose one merit is faithful obedience. In Paul's consciousness of stewardship there mingled submission to God, gratitude for the trust bestowed, and independence of human control (cf. 19, iv. 3).—The use of πιστεύω in pass. with personal subject and acc. of thing (imitating vbs. of double acc.), is confined to Paul in N.T.; see Wr., pp. 287, 326. To οἰκονομίαν πεπίστευμαι one tacitly adds, from the contrasted clause, καὶ μισθὸν οὐκ ἔχω: "Christ's bondman, I claim no hire for my stewardship; God's trust is enough for me".

Ver. 18. Yet, after all, Paul has his reward: "What then (οὖν, things being so) is my reward?"—ὁ μισθός, "the εἰς τὸ μὴ [p] καταχρήσασθαι τῇ [q] ἐξουσίᾳ μου ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. 19. [r] ἐλεύθερος γὰρ ὢν [r] ἐκ πάντων, πᾶσιν ἐμαυτὸν [s] ἐδούλωσα, ἵνα [t] τοὺς [t] πλείονας [u] κερδήσω· 20. καὶ ἐγενόμην τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ὡς Ἰουδαῖος, p See vii. 31.

q See vii. 37.
r N.T. h.l. With απο, Rom. vi. 18, 22, vii. 3, viii. 2, 21; commonly bare gen. in cl. Gr.
s See vii. 15.
t x. 5, xv. 6; 2 Cor. ii. 6, iv. 15, ix. 2; Phil. i. 14; Heb. vii. 23; Acts xix. 32, xxvii. 12; Lk. vii. 43; Exod. xxiii. 2.
u 1 Pet. iii. 1 and Mt. xviii. 15, of persons.

reward" proper to such a case, is simply to take no pay: "that, while I preach the good news, I may make the good news free of charge" (ἀδάπανον θήσω, gratuitum constituam, Bz.). No thought of future (deferred) pay, nor of supererogatory work beyond the strict duty of the οἰκονόμος, but only of the satisfaction felt by a generous mind in rendering unpaid service (cf. Acts xx. 33 ff.). The Ap. plays on the word μισθός—first denied, then asserted, much as on σοφία in ii. 1-8; he repudiates "reward" in the mercenary sense, to claim it in the larger ethical sense. He "boasts" that the Cor. spend nothing on him, while he spends himself on them (cf. 2 Cor. xi. 9-12, xii. 14 f.).—ἵνα replaces the inf. in apposition to μισθός, "marking the purposive result involved" (El.)—to make, as I intended, the Gospel costless.—θήσω is fut., intimating assurance of the purpose, as in Gal. ii. 4 (see Wr., p. 361).—τίθημι with objective complement, a construction of cl. Gr. poetry and later prose, which Heb. idiom demands frequently in LXX; cf. xii. 28, xv. 25.—"So that I might not use to the full (εἰς τ. μὴ καταχρήσασθαι: see vii. 31) my right in the gospel"—sc. that maintained in the former part of the ch.: a further purpose of Paul's preaching gratuitously, involved in that just stated, and bearing on himself as the ἀδάπ. θήσω bore upon the readers.—Ἐξουσία ἐν τ. εὐαγγελίῳ is "a right (involved) in (proclaiming) the good news," belonging to the εὐαγγελιζόμενος (14). P. was resolved to keep well within his rights, in handling the Gospel (cf. Matt. x. 8; also vi. 7*b*, 8*a* above). This sentiment applies to every kind of "right in the gospel" of gratuitous salvation; it reappears, with another bearing, in 2 Cor. xiii. 3-10.

Ver. 19. ἐλεύθερος γὰρ ὢν κ.τ.λ. serves further to explain, not εἰς τ. μὴ καταχρήσ. (the impropriety of a grasping use of such right is manifest), but Paul's general policy of self-abnegation (15-18). The real aim of this long discussion of ministerial ἐξουσία comes into view; the Ap. shows himself to the Cor. as an example of superior privilege held upon trust for the community, of liberty asserted with a view to self-abnegation: "For, being free from all, to all I enslaved myself, that I might gain the more".—πάντων is masc., like the antithetical πᾶσιν (cf. τ. πᾶσιν, 22); ἐλεύθερος ἐκ—a rare construction (commonly ἀπό)—implies extrication, escape from danger (cf. Luke i. 71, 2 Tim. ii. 26). In ver. 1 ἐλεύθερος signified freedom from needless and burdensome scruple, here freedom from entangling dependence. Paul freed himself from everybody, just that he might be everybody's servant; had he been bound as a salaried minister to any particular Church, his services would in that degree have been limited. For the motive of this δουλεία, cf. Gal. v. 13; and for Paul's aim, in its widest bearing, Rom. i. 14, xv. 1; also John xiii. 12 ff., Luke xxii. 24 ff.—τοὺς πλείονας, "the more"—not "the greater part" (as in x. 5; so Mr. and others), nor quam plurimos (Bg.), but "so much more" than could otherwise have been gained (cf. 2 Cor. iv. 15, Luke vii. 43; so Ed.). The expression κερδήσω is used for σώσω (22), in allusion to the charge of gain-seeking to which P. was exposed (2 Cor. xi. 12, xii. 17 f., 1 Thess. ii. 5; cf. Tit. i. 7, 11); "gain I did seek," he says, "and greedily—the gain of winning all sorts of men for Christ" (cf. Matt. iv. 19).

Vv. 20-22. This gain of his calling P. sought (1) among the Jews, and those who with them were under law (20); (2) amongst the body of the Gentiles, without law (21); (3) amongst the weak believers, who were imperilled by the inconsiderate use of liberty on the part of the stronger (22*a*). Each of these classes the Ap. saves by identifying himself with it in turn; and this plan he could only follow by keeping clear of sectional obligations (19). Ed., coupling vv. 20*b* and 21, distinguishes three points of view—"race, religion, conscience".—"I became to the Jews as a Jew," for Paul was no longer such in the common acceptation: see note on ἐλεύθερος (1), also Gal. ii. 4, iv. 12; for evidence of his Jewish conformity, see Acts xvi. 3, xviii. 18, xxi. 23 ff.; also the speeches in Acts xiii. 16 ff., xxii. 1 ff., xxvi. 2 ff.; and Rom. i. 16, ix. 1 ff., xi. 1, xv. 8, for his warm patriotism.—τοῖς ὑπὸ ἵνα Ἰουδαίους [u] κερδήσω· τοῖς [v] ὑπὸ [v] νόμον ὡς [v] ὑπὸ [v] νόμον,[1] ἵνα τοὺς [v] ὑπὸ [v] νόμον [u] κερδήσω· 21. τοῖς [w] ἀνόμοις ὡς [w] ἄνομος, μὴ ὢν [w] ἄνομος Θεῷ[2] ἀλλ' [x] ἔννομος Χριστῷ,[2] ἵνα [u] κερδήσω[3] [w] ἀνόμους·[4] 22a. ἐγενόμην τοῖς [y] ἀσθενέσιν ὡς[5] [y] ἀσθενής, ἵνα τοὺς [y] ἀσθενεῖς [u] κερδήσω· 22b. [z] τοῖς [z] πᾶσι γέγονα τὰ[6] πάντα, ἵνα [a] πάντως[7] τινὰς[7]

v Rom. vi. 14 f.; Gal. iv. 4 f., 21.
w In this exact meaning, Acts ii. 23; also Wisd. xvii. 2. -ως, Rom. ii. 12.
x Acts xix. 39; "law-abiding" in cl. Gr.
y See i. 25 and iv. 10.
z x. 17; 2 Cor. v. 10, 15; Rom. xi. 32; Eph. iv. 13; Phil. ii. 21; Mk. xiv. 64.
a See v. 10.

[1] Insert μη ων αυτος υπο νομον all uncc. but K, and many minn., latt. vg. sah. syrp., Or., Cyr., Dam., Aug.—lost through homœoteleuton (repeated υπο νομον).

[2] Θεου . . . Χριστου: all uncc. but DcKL.

[3] κερδανω, all uncc. but ℵcDKL. The same MSS., κερδησω in context.

[4] τους ανομους: all uncc. but ℵcGKL.

[5] Om. ως ℵ*AB d e vg., Or., Cyp., Amb., Ambrst.

[6] Om. τα all pre-Syrian uncc.

[7] παντας (for παντως τινας), the Westerns, including vg.: ut omnes facerem salvos.

νόμον enlarges the category τ. Ἰουδαίοις by including circumcised proselytes (see Gal. v. 1-3); and ὡς ὑπὸ νόμον defines Paul's Judaism as subjection, by way of accommodation, to legal observance, to which the ptpl. phrase (wanting in the T.R.), μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον, intimates that he is no longer bound in principle —μὴ with ptp. implying subjective standpoint ("not being in my view"), and αὐτὸς denoting on my part, of and for myself (cf. Rom. vii. 25). P.'s self-denying conformity to legal environment brought on him the reproach of "still preaching circumcision" (Gal. v. 11).—In relation to Gentiles also he takes an attitude open to misunderstanding and which he wishes to guard: "to those out-of-law (τ. ἀνόμοις) as out-of-law—though I am not out-of-law in respect of God, but in-law (ἔννομος) in respect of Christ". ἄνομος was the Jewish designation for all beyond the pale of Mosaism (see Rom. ii. 9-16, etc.): Paul became this to Gentiles (Gal. iv. 12), abandoning his natural position, in that he did not practise the law of Moses amongst them nor make it the basis or aim of his preaching to them; see Acts xiv. 15 ff., xvii. 22 ff. He was ἄνομος therefore, in the narrow Jewish sense; not so in the true religious sense —"in relation to God"; indeed P. is now more than ὑπὸ νόμον, he is ἔννομος Χριστοῦ (= ἐν νόμῳ Χριστοῦ; cf. Gal. vi. 2, Rom. iii. 27, 31, viii. 2)—non existens exlex Deo, sed inlex Christo (Est.). The Christian stands within the law as entering into its spirit and becoming one with it in nature; he is "in the law of Christ" as he is "in Christ" (cf. Gal. ii. 20, 2 Cor. v. 17). This νόμος Χριστοῦ P. expounds in Rom. xii., xiii. (esp. 10), Col. iii., Eph. iv. 20-v. 9, after John xiii. 34, Matt. v.-vii., etc. Its fulfilment is guaranteed by the fact that it is "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (Rom. viii. 1 ff.), who "dwells in" the Christian (iii. 16), operating not as an outward yoke but an implanted life.—ἵνα κερδάνω τ. ἀνόμους follows τ. ἀνόμοις ὡς ἄνομος, after the μὴ ὢν parenthesis, in the manner of the two ἵνα clauses of ver. 20 (κερδάνω and κερδήσω are the Attic and non-Attic forms of the 1st aor. sbj.). —Describing the third of his self-adaptations, P. resumes the ἐγενόμην of the first, coming home to the situation of his readers: "I became to the weak (not as weak, but actually) weak (see txtl. note), that I might gain the weak". So well did he enter into the scruples of the timid and half-enlightened (see e.g. viii. 7, 10, Rom. xiv. 1 f.), that he forgot his own strength (viii. 4, Rom. xv. 1) and felt himself "weak" with them: cf. 2 Cor. xi. 29, τίς ἀσθενεῖ, καὶ οὐκ ἀσθενῶ;

Ver. 22b sums up (in the pf. γέγονα of abiding fact replacing the historical ἐγενόμην, and with the objective σώσω for the subjective κερδήσω) the Apostle's conduct in the various relations of his ministry: "To all men I have become all things, that by all means I might save some".—On πάντως, which varies in sense according to its position and context, see ver. 10, v. 10; here it is adv. of manner to σώσω, omni quovis modo. "That in all this description of his οἰκονομία or συγκατάβασις P. sets forth no unchristian compliance with men, but

[b] σώσω. 23. τοῦτο [1] δὲ ποιῶ διὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ἵνα [c] συγκοινωνὸς αὐτοῦ γένωμαι.

24. [d] Οὐκ [d] οἴδατε ὅτι οἱ ἐν [e] σταδίῳ τρέχοντες πάντες μὲν τρέχουσιν, εἷς δὲ λαμβάνει τὸ [f] βραβεῖον; οὕτω τρέχετε ἵνα [g] καταλάβητε. 25. πᾶς δὲ ὁ [h] ἀγωνιζόμενος πάντα [i] ἐγκρατεύεται· ἐκεῖνοι μὲν οὖν

b Of human action, Rom. xi. 14; 1 Tim. iv. 16; Jas v. 15, 20; Jude 23.
c Rom. xi. 17; Phil. i. 7; Rev. i. 9. -νειν Eph. v. 11.
d See iii. 16.
e In this sense, N.T. h.l.; cf. Lk. xxiv. 13, etc. See Herod. v. 22 αγωνιζεσθαι σταδιον.
f Phil. iii. 14; -ευω, Col. ii. 18, iii. 15.
g In this sense, Rom. ix. 30; Phil. iii. 12 f.; Exod. xv. 9.
h Col. i. 29, iv. 12; 1 Tim. iv. 10, vi. 12; 2 Tim. iv. 7; Lk. xiii. 24; Jo. xviii. 36; Sir. iv. 28, etc.
i See vii. 9.

[1] παντα, all uncc. but KL, and all anc. verss. but syr. and go.

the practical wisdom of true Christian love and self-denial in the exercise of his office, this he expects will be self-evident to his readers, so well acquainted with his character (2 Cor. i. 12 ff., v. 11). This kind of wisdom is so much more manifestly the fruit in P. of experience under the discipline of the Spirit, as his temper was the more fiery and uncompromising" (Mr.); "non mentientis actus, sed compatientis affectus" (Aug.). This behaviour appeared to his enemies time-serving and duplicity (2 Cor. i. 12, iv. 2, xii. 16, Gal. i. 10).

Ver. 23. Paul's course in its chameleon-like changes is governed by a simple practical aim: "But all things I do for the gospel's sake". His one purpose is to fulfil his Gospel stewardship (17, iv. 1 ff., etc., Acts xx. 24); Phil. iii. 7-14 presents the inner side of the "one thing" he pursues. The intensity with which this end is sought accounts for the variety of means; the most resolute, in a complicated situation, becomes the most versatile of men. διὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, "on the gospel's account", with a view to spread the good news most widely and carry it into effect most completely: for διὰ of the end as a ground of action, cf. iv. 17, viii. 11, Rom. iv. 25. For himself Paul's sole ambition is "that I may be joint-partaker in it (with those I save)"—that he may win its salvation along with many others, the fruit of his ministry (cf. 1 Thess. ii. 19 f.; also John xiv. 3, xvii. 24).

§ 30. Paul's Asceticism, ix. 24-27. The last words of § 29 indicate that the writer feels his own salvation to be bound up in his mission to his fellowmen. The self-denial practised for the latter of these objects is necessary, in point of fact, for both. His example should teach the Cor. the need of stern self-discipline on their personal account, as well as in the interests of weaker brethren. From ix. 24 onwards to x. 22 P. pursues this line of warning, addressed to men who were imperilling their own souls by self-indulgence and worldly conformity. Of the danger of missing the prize of life through indiscipline P. is keenly sensible in his own case; he conveys his apprehension under the picture, so familiar to the Cor., of the Isthmian Games.

Ver. 24. Οὐκ οἴδατε . . .; cf. ver. 13, etc. οἱ ἐν σταδίῳ τρέχοντες, πάντες μὲν τρέχουσιν, εἷς δὲ κ.τ.λ.: "Those that run in the stadium, run all (of them), but one receives the prize". As much as to say, "Entering the race is not winning it; do not be satisfied with running, but make sure of winning—So run that you may secure (the prize)!" The art. is wanting with σταδίῳ, as often after prps., esp. when the noun is quasi-proper; cf. our "at court," "in church." The stadion was the race-course, always a fixed length of 600 Gr., or 606¾ Eng. ft.; hence a measure of distance, as in Matt. xiv. 24—a furlong.—For the antithesis of πάντες and εἷς, conveying the point of the warning, cf. the emphatic πάντες of x. 1-4 (see note); also vi. 12, x. 23.—οὕτως may point backward to εἷς ("run like that one": cf. 14, ii. 11), or forward to ἵνα (καταλάβ.)—a particle substituted for the regular correlative, ὥστε (cf. Acts xiv. 1, John iii. 16), where the result is an aim to be achieved; the latter connexion is more probable, since the following vv. dilate on the conditions of success.

Ver. 25. πᾶς δὲ ὁ ἀγωνιζόμενος κ.τ.λ.: "But every combatant is temperate in everything—they, to be sure, that they may win a perishable garland; but we an imperishable." The stress in the first clause lies on πᾶς, πάντα—no competitor can afford to be self-indulgent in anything; in the second on ἐκεῖνοι, ἡμεῖς—if they are so abstinent for so poor a prize, what should we be? For ten months before the contest in the Great Games, the athletes were required, under ἵνα [k] φθαρτὸν στέφανον λάβωσιν, ἡμεῖς δὲ [m] ἄφθαρτον· 26. ἐγὼ [n] τοίνυν [o] οὕτω τρέχω, [o] ὡς οὐκ [p] ἀδήλως· [o] οὕτω πυκτεύω, [o] ὡς οὐκ [q] ἀέρα [r] δέρων· 27. ἀλλ' [s] ὑπωπιάζω μου τὸ σῶμα καὶ [t] δουλαγωγῶ, [u] μήπως ἄλλοις [v] κηρύξας αὐτὸς [w] ἀδόκιμος γένωμαι.

k xv. 53 f.; Rom. i. 23; 1 Pet. i. 18, 23.
l Phil. iv. 1; 1 Th. ii. 19; 2 Tim. iv. 8; Jas. i. 12; 1 Pet. v. 4; Rev. ii. 10, iii. 11, etc.; Mt. xxvii. 29, etc. -οω, 2 Tim. ii. 5. m xv. 52; Rom. i. 23; 1 Pet. i. 4, 23, iii. 4. n H.l. in Paul; Heb. xiii. 13; Lk. xx. 25; Isa. iii. 10, v. 13. o Cf. iii. 15. p H.l.; -λος, xiv. 8; -οτης, 1 Tim. vi. 17. q xiv. 9; Eph. ii. 2; 1 Th. iv. 17; Acts xxii. 23; Rev. ix. 2, xvi. 17; Wisd. v. 11 f. r 2 Cor. xi. 20; Acts v. 40, vi. 37, xxii. 19; Mt. xxi. 35, etc. s Lk. xviii. 5; -πιον, Prov. xx. 30. t N.T. h.l.; Diodorus, and Longinus. u See viii. 9. v See i. 23. Absol., xv. 11; Rom. x. 14 f.; 1 Pet. iii. 19; similarly in Syn. Gospp. w 2 Cor. xiii. 5 ff.; Rom. i. 28; 2 Tim. iii. 8; Tit. i. 16; Heb. vi. 8.

oath, to follow a prescribed diet (ἀναγκοφαγία) and regimen (ἄσκησις): Pausanias V. 24. 9; Philostratus De Gymn., p. 4; Arrian-Epict., III. xv. 3, xxiii. 2; Xenoph. Symp. viii. 37; Horace, Ars Poet. 412 ff., "Qui studet optatam cursu contingere metam, Multa tulit fecitque puer, sudavit et alsit, Abstinuit venere et vino." ἐγκρατεύεται (see vii. 9) implies temperance in a positive degree—not mere abstinence, but vigorous control of appetite and passion; πάντα is acc. of specification. The "garland" of the victor in the Isthmian Games was of pine-leaves, at an earlier time of parsley, in the Olympian Games of wild-olive; yet these were the most coveted honours in the whole Greek world.—φθαρτὸν and ἄφθαρτον are again contrasted in xv. 53.

Vv. 26, 27. "Therefore I so run, in no uncertain fashion; so I ply my fists, not like one that beats the air." "So—as the context describes, and as you see me (cf. xv. 32)"; the Ap. feels himself, while he writes, to be straining every nerve like the racer, striking home like the trained pugilist: for this graphic οὕτως, cf. xv. 11, Gal. i. 6, 2 Thess. iii. 17; the adv. would be otiose as mere antecedent to ὡς.—τοίνυν (similarly τοίγαρ in 1 Thess. iv. 8) brings in the prompt, emphatic inference drawn from the last clause: "We are fighting for the immortal crown—I as a leader and exemplar; surely then I make no false step in the course, I strike no random blows." ἀδήλως is susceptible both of the objective sense prevailing in cl. Gr., obscure, inconspicuous (preferred by Mr. and Gd. here, as though P. meant, "not keeping out of sight, in the ruck"; cf. xiv. 8); and (preferably) of the subjective sense, unsure, without certain aim (Thuc., I. 2. 1; Plato, Symp. 181 D; Polybius)—"ut non in incertum" (Bz.); "scio quod petam et quomodo" (Bg.); πρὸς σκοπόν τινα βλέπων, οὐκ εἰκῇ καὶ μάτην (Cm.): cf. Phil. iii. 14. The image of the race suggests that of pugilism (πυκτεύω)· another exercise of the Pentathlon of the arena: the former a familiar N.T. metaphor, the latter h.l.—ὡς οὐκ ἀέρα δέρων, "ut non aerem cædens" (Bz.), "smiting something more solid than air" (οὐκ negatives ἀέρα, not δέρων),—esp. my own body (27); cf. Virgil's "verberat ictibus auras" (Æn. v. 377). P.'s are no blows of a clumsy fighter that fail to land—struck in's Blaue hinein. Bg., Hf., Ed. suppose him to be thinking of the σκιομαχία, sham-fight, practised in training or by way of prelude, without an antagonist. δέρω means to flay, then beat severely, smite; cf. our vulgar hiding.

Ver. 27. The fully-attested reading ὑπωπιάζω (from ὑπὸ and ὤψ, to hit under the eye) continues the pugilistic metaphor and suits Paul's vehemence; "contundo corpus meum" (Bz.), "lividum facio" (Cod. Claromontanus), "I beat my body black and blue": a vivid picture of the corporal discipline to which P. subjects himself in the prosecution of his work (cf. iv. 11—esp. κολαφιζόμεθα; 2 Cor. xi. 23 ff., Gal. vi. 17, 2 Tim. ii. 4). ὑποπιάζω (ὑπὸ + πιέζω; cf. 2 Cor. xi. 32, etc.)—preferred by Hf. and Hn., after Clem. Alex.—giving the milder sense, to force under, subdue, subigo (Cv.), is almost syn. with δουλαγωγῶ.

P.'s severe bodily suffering, entailed by the circumstances of his ministry, he accepts as needful for his own sanctification (cf. 2 Cor. xii. 7),—a physical castigation which tames the flesh for the uses of the spirit (cf. 1 Pet. iv. 1 f.; also, for the principle involved, Rom. viii. 13, Col. iii. 5). The practices of the Middle-Age Flagellants and similar self-torturers have been justified by this text; but Paul's discipline was not arbitrary and self-inflicted, it was dictated by his calling (12*b*, 23)—a cross laid on him by the hand of God, and borne for the Gospel's and the Church's sake (cf. Col. i. 24). In Col. ii. 23 he guards against the ascetic extravagances which this passage, perhaps even in his life-time, was used

X. 1. [a] Οὐ [a] θέλω δὲ [1] ὑμᾶς [a] ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι οἱ [b] πατέρες [b] ἡμῶν πάντες [c] ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην [c] ἦσαν καὶ πάντες [d] διὰ τῆς θαλάσσης [d] διῆλθον, 2. καὶ πάντες [e] εἰς τὸν Μωσῆν [2] [e] ἐβαπτίσαντο [3] ἐν τῇ a 2 Cor. i. 8; Rom. i. 13; 1 Th. iv. 13.

b Freq. in Acts; Jo. iv. 20, vi. 31.
c ix. 20; Gal. iv. 21, v. 18; Acts iv. 12; Jo. i. 49. d 2 Cor. i. 16; Acts ix. 32; Mt. xii. 43; Lev. xxvi. 5; elsewhere with acc. e Rom. vi. 3; Gal. iii. 27; Acts viii. 16. Cf. i. 13 and xii. 13. Mid. voice, here only; Mk. vii. 4 (?); Acts xxii. 16.

[1] γαρ, all uncc. but ℵ^cKL, all anc. verss. but syr.

[2] Μωυσην: see note on ix. 9.

[3] εβαπτισθησαν (?), ℵACDG 17, 46 (Western and Alexandrian); so Tisch., Tr. marg., W.H. marg., Nestle. εβαπτισαντο, BKLP, etc. (Neutral and Syrian); so Tr. txt., W.H. txt., El.—the more difficult reading: see note below.

to support.—This "buffeting" of his physical frame enabled P. to "lead (his body) about as a slave,"—as one might do a bullying antagonist after a sound beating. Paul's physical temperament, it appears, had stood in the way of his success as a minister of Christ; and the hindrance was providentially overcome by the terrible hardships through which he passed in pursuit of his ministry. This experience he commends to the Cor. He had felt the fear, from which the above course of rigorous self-abnegation in the interest of others has saved him, "lest haply, after preaching to others, I myself should prove reprobate" (ἀδόκιμος γένωμαι): the opp. result to that of ver. 23.—For κηρύσσω, see i. 23; the κῆρυξ at the Games summoned the competitors and announced the rules of the contest. With ἀδόκιμος, rejectaneus, cf. δοκιμάζω, iii. 13, and note; see 2 Cor. xiii. 5 ff., and other parls.—On the Gr. Games, see the Dict. of Gr. and Rom. Antiq. (Isthmia, Stadium); Hermann, Lehrbuch d. gottesdienstl. Alterthümer, § 50; also the supplementary Note on Greek Athletic Festivals in Bt.

§ 31. The Backsliding of Ancient Israel, x. 1-5. The Apostle has just confessed, in warning others, his own fear of reprobation. That this is no idle fear the history of the O.T. Church plainly proves. All the Israelite fathers were rescued from Egypt, and sealed with the ancient sacraments, and virtually partook of Christ in the wilderness; but, alas, how few of those first redeemed entered the Promised Land!

Vv. 1, 2. The phrase οὐ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν (see parls.) calls attention to something not altogether within the range of the reader's knowledge (contrast οὐκ οἴδατε; ix. 24, etc.); γὰρ attaches the paragraph, by way of enforcement, to the foregoing ἀδόκιμος. "Our fathers" is not written inadvertently to Gentile "brethren," out of P.'s "national consciousness" (Mr.); the phrase identifies the N.T. Church with "Israel" (cf. Rom. iv. 1, 11 ff., xi. 17 f., Gal. iii. 7, 29, Phil. iii. 3; also Clem. ad Cor. 4); the fate of the fathers admonishes the children (Ps. lxxviii. 8, xcv. 9, etc.; Matt. xxiii. 29 ff., Heb. iii., iv.). The point of the warning lies in the five-times repeated πάντες: "All our fathers escaped by miracle from the house of bondage; all received the tokens of the Mosaic covenant; all participated under its forms in Christ; and yet most of them perished! (5)"; cf. the πάντες μέν . . . εἷς δὲ of ix. 24, and note.—For ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην, διὰ τῆς θαλάσσης, cf. Ps. cv. 39, cvi. 11; also Wisd. x. 17, xix. 7. "The cloud" shading and guiding the Israelites from above, and "the sea" making a path for them through its midst and drowning their enemies behind them, were glorious signs to "our fathers" of God's salvation; together they formed a λοῦτρον παλινγενεσίας (Tit. iii. 5), inaugurating the national covenant life; as it trode the miraculous path between upper and nether waters, Israel was born into its Divine estate. Thus "they all received their baptism unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea," since in this act they committed themselves to the guidance of Moses, entering through him into acknowledged fellowship with God; even so the Cor. in the use of the same symbolic element had been "baptized unto Christ" (cf. Rom. vi. 3 f., Gal. iii. 27). For the parl. between Moses and Christ, see Heb. iii. Paul sees a baptism in the waters of the Exodus, as Peter in the waters of the Deluge (1 Pet. iii. 20 f.).—ἐβαπτίσαντο, mid. voice (see parls.), implies consent of the subjects—"had themselves baptised" (cf. ἀπελούσασθε, vi. 11)—aggravating their apostasy.

Vv. 3, 4. After deliverance came the question of sustenance. This was effected f See iii. 2. g See ii. 13. h Heb. ix. 10; Ps. ci. 9; Dan. i. 16 (Theod.). i Rom. ix. 33 (Isa. viii. 14); 1 Pet. ii. 8; Mt. vii. 24, xvi. 18, etc.

νεφέλῃ καὶ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, 3. καὶ πάντες τὸ[1] αὐτὸ[1] [f]βρῶμα[2] [g]πνευματικὸν[2] ἔφαγον 4*a*. καὶ πάντες τὸ[3] αὐτὸ[3] [h]πόμα[4] [g]πνευματικὸν[4] ἔπιον[4] · 4*b*. ἔπινον γὰρ ἐκ [g]πνευματικῆς ἀκολουθούσης πέτρας·

[1] το αυτο om. ℵ*, æth.; A 46 om. αυτο.

[2] πνευματικον βρωμα εφαγον (in this order): ℵ*BC²P. πνευμ. εφ. βρ.: A 17, Mcion. βρ. πνευμ. εφ.: ℵᶜDGKL, etc.; Western and Syrian.

[3] æth., Chr. om. το αυτο. A 46 om. αυτο.

[4] πνευματικον επιον πομα (in this order): all non-Western pre-Syrian uncc.

in the desert by means no less miraculous and symbolic: "and they all ate the same spiritual food, and all drank the same spiritual drink"—the manna of Exod. xvi. 13 ff., etc., and the stream drawn from the rocks of Rephidim (Exod. xvii.) and Kadesh (Num. xx.).—The epithet πνευματικὸν does not negative the materiality of the βρῶμα and πόμα, any more than the corporeality of the ripe Christian man described in ii. 15; it ascribes to these nutriments a higher virtue—such as, e.g., the bread of Christ's miracles had for intelligent partakers—a spiritual meaning and influence: for the bread, see Deut. viii. 2 f. (cf. Matt. iv. 3 f., John vi. 31 ff., Ps. lxxviii. 23 ff.); for the water, Exod. xvii. 7, Num. xx. 13, Ps. cv. 41, Isa. xxxv. 6.—In drinking from the smitten rock the Israelites "were drinking" at the same time "of a spiritual rock"—and that not supplying them once alone, but "following" them throughout their history. Ver. 4*b* explains 4*a* (γὰρ): P. justifies his calling the miraculous water "spiritual," not by saying that the rock from which it issued was a spiritual (and no material) rock, but that there was "a spiritual rock accompanying" God's people; from this they drank in spirit, while their bodies drank from the water flowing at their feet. The lesson is strictly parl. to that of Deut. viii. 3 f. respecting the manna. In truth, another rock was there beside the visible cliff of Rephidim: "Now this rock (ἡ πέτρα δέ) was the Christ!" The "meat" and "drink" are the actual desert food—"the same" for "all," but endowed for all with a "spiritual" grace; the "spiritual rock" which imparted this virtue is distinguished as "following" the people, being superior to local limitations—a rock not symbolic of Christ, but identical with Him. This identification our Lord virtually made in the words of John vii. 37. The impf. ἔπινον (4*b*), exchanged for ἔπιον (4*a*), indicates the continuous aid drawn from this "following rock".

Baur, Al., and others suppose P. to be adopting the Rabbinical legend that the water-bearing Rephidim rock journeyed onwards with the Israelites (see Bammidbar Rabba, s. 1; Eisenmenger, Entd. Judenthum, I. 312, 467, II. 876 f.). Philo allegorized this fable in application to the Logos (Leg. alleg. II. §§ 21 f.; Quod det. pot. insid. solet, § 30). This may have suggested Paul's conception, but the predicate πνευματικῆς emphatically discards the prodigy; "we must not disgrace P. by making him say that the pre-incarnate Christ followed the march of Israel in the shape of a lump of rock!" (Hf.). ὁ Χριστός—not the doctrine, nor the hope of the Christ, but Himself—assumes that Christ existed in Israelite times and was spiritually present with the O.T. Church, and that the grace attending its ordinances was mediated by Him. "The spiritual homogeneity of the two covenants"—which gives to the Apostle's warning its real cogency—"rests on the identity of the Divine Head of both. The practical consequence saute aux yeux: Christ lived already in the midst of the ancient people, and that people has perished! How can you suppose, you Christians, that you are secured from the same fate!" (Gd.).

Holsten rejects the parenthetical ἡ πέτρα δέ clause as a theological gloss; but it is necessary to explain the previous ἐκ πνευμ. ἀκολ. πέτρας, and is covered doctrinally by the δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα of viii. 6 (see note). Already Jewish theology had referred to the hypostatized "Wisdom" (see Wisd. x.), or "the Logos" (Philo passim), the protection and sustenance of ancient Israel. The O.T. saw the spiritual "rock of Israel" in Jehovah (Deut. xxxii., 2 Sam. xxiii. 3, Isa. xvii. 10, xxvi. 4, etc.), whose offices ἡ δὲ [1] πέτρα [1] [k] ἦν ὁ Χριστός. 5. ἀλλ' οὐκ [l] ἐν [m] τοῖς [m] πλείοσιν αὐτῶν [l n] εὐδόκησεν [2] ὁ [n] Θεός· [o] κατεστρώθησαν γὰρ ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ. 6. Ταῦτα δὲ [p] τύποι ἡμῶν ἐγενήθησαν, [q] εἰς [q] τὸ [q] μὴ εἶναι ἡμᾶς [r] ἐπιθυμητὰς κακῶν, καθὼς κἀκεῖνοι [s] ἐπεθύμησαν· 7. μηδὲ [t] εἰδωk ειμι in like use, Mt. xiii. 37, xxvi. 26; Jo. xv. 1; Gen. xli. 26 f.; Ex. xii. 11; Ezek. xxxvii. 11. l 2 Cor. xii. 10; Mt. iii. 17, and parls.; Jer. xiv. 12. m See ix. 19. n i. 21; Gal. i. 15; Col. i. 19; Mt. iii. 17, etc.; Lk. xii. 32. Cf. ευδοκια, Eph. i. 5, 9; Ph. ii. 13; Mt. xi. 26; Lk. ii. 14, x. 21. o Numb. xiv. 16. p In this sense, Rom. v. 14; diff. in Rom. vi. 17, etc. q 2 Cor. iv. 4; 2 Th. ii. 2; 1 Pet. iii. 7; Acts vii. 19. r N.T. h.l.; Numb. xi. 34. A cl. word. s Absol., Rom. vii. 7, xiii. 9 (Ex. xx. 17); Gal. v. 17; Ja. iv. 2. t See ver. 10.

[1] η πετρα δε: ℵBD*c—irregular order.
[2] ηυδοκησεν, AB*C. On the augment, see Wr., p. 83.

of grace, in the N.T. view of things, devolve on Christ.—The Ap. does not in so many words associate the "spiritual food" and "drink" of vv. 3 f. with the Lord's Supper, as he did the crossing of the Red Sea with Baptism; but the second analogy is suggested by the first, and by the reference to the Eucharist in vv. 15 ff. In no other place in the N. T. are the two Sacraments collocated.

Ver. 5. "But not with the greater part (of them)"—a "tragic litotes: only Joshua and Caleb reached the Promised Land" (Num. xiv. 30: Mr.). The result negatives what one expects from the antecedents; hence the strong adversative ἀλλ' οὐκ.—τοῖς πλείοσιν—"the majority" of the πάντες so highly favoured; cf. xv. 6. ηὐδόκησεν ἐν (after the LXX), Heb. chaphets b'; the ἐν resembles that of ix. 15; see Wr., p. 291.—κατεστρώθησαν γὰρ κ.τ.λ., "For they (their bodies) were laid prostrate in the wilderness," gives graphic proof, in words borrowed from the O.T. narrative, of God's displeasure; sooner or later this doom overtook nearly all the witnesses of the Exodus (cf. Heb. iii. 17). "What a spectacle for the eyes of the self-satisfied Cor.: all these bodies, full-fed with miraculous nourishment, strewing the soil of the desert!" (Gd.).

§ 32. THE MORAL CONTAGION OF IDOLATRY, x. 6-14. The fall of the Israel of the Exodus was due to the very temptations now surrounding the Cor. Church—to the allurements of idolatry and its attendant impurity (6 ff.), and to the cherishing of discontent and presumption (9 f.). Their fate may prove our salvation, if we lay it to heart; the present trial, manifestly, is nothing new; and God who appoints it will keep it within our strength, and will provide us with means of escape (11 ff.). The whole is summed up in one word, "Flee from idolatry!" (14).

Ver. 6. ταῦτα τύποι ἡμῶν ἐγενήθησαν may mean (a) "These things have been made our examples," typi nobis (Cv.)—sc. exx. for our use; (b) "In these things (acc. of specification) they proved types of us"—figuræ nostri (Vg., Bz., Mr., Bt., R.V. marg.); or (c) "As types of us they became such" (so Hf.: cf. ταῦτα . . . ἦτε, vi. 11)—a construction clashing with that of the parl. ver. 11. (a) best suits the application of ταῦτα in the sequel (cf. 1 Pet. v. 3); to make the fallen Israelites prophetic "types" of the Cor. would be to presume the ruin of the latter!—ἐγενήθησαν is pl. despite the neut. pl. subject ταῦτα, through the attraction of the predicate: so πάντα ταῦτα κακουργίαι ἦσαν in Xenophon; the incidents included are distinctly viewed. For the deterrent "example," cf. Heb. iv. 11.—With ἐπιθυμ. κακῶν cf. ἐφευρετὰς κακῶν, Rom. i. 30: the double ἐπιθυμητὰς . . . ἐπεθύμησαν recalls Num. xi. 4 (LXX); in alluding to the old "lusting" for the diet of Egypt, the Ap. hints at the attraction of the Cor. idol-feasts; but his dehortation applies to all κακά (cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 7, 1 Thess. v. 15, etc.). The general admonition is specialised in four particulars, with repeated μηδὲ—idolatry, fornication, tempting of the Lord, murmuring—based on the analogy furnished by vv. 1-5.

Ver. 7. μηδὲ εἰδωλολάτραι γίνεσθε, "And do not become idolaters": in apposition to the εἰς τὸ μὴ clause of ver. 6, the dependent sentence of purpose passing into a direct impv.; for the like conversational freedom, cf. i. 31, iv. 16, vii. 37, ix. 15, and notes. The repetition of this warning in ver. 14 shows its urgency. Even where eating of the εἰδωλόθυτα was innocent, it might be a stepping-stone to εἰδωλολατρεία.—Enforcing his appeal by ref. to the calf-worship at Sinai, the Ap. dwells on the accompaniments of this apostasy: here λολάτραι γίνεσθε καθώς τινες αὐτῶν, ὡς[1] γέγραπται, "[u] Ἐκάθισεν ὁ λαὸς φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν[2] καὶ [v] ἀνέστησαν [w] παίζειν". 8. μηδὲ [x] πορνεύωμεν, καθώς τινες αὐτῶν [x] ἐπόρνευσαν καὶ [y] ἔπεσον[3] ἐν[4] μίᾳ ἡμέρᾳ εἰκοσιτρεῖς χιλιάδες. 9. μηδὲ [z] ἐκπειράζωμεν τὸν Χριστόν,[5] καθὼς καί τινες αὐτῶν [a] ἐπείρασαν[6] καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν [b] ὄφεων ἀπώλοντο.[7] 10. μηδὲ [c] γογγύζετε,[8] καθὼς[9] καί[10] τινες αὐτῶν u Exod. xxxii. 6; intrans. passim. v In this sense, opp. to καθιζω or the like, Acts ix. 6, 34, xii. 7, etc.; Mk. ix. 27; Lk. iv. 29, v. 25, etc.; Jo. xi. 31. w N.T. h.l.; cf. Judg. xvi. 25; 2 Ki. vi. 5; Jer. xxxviii. 4. x See vi. 18. y Of persons, Rom. xi. 11, 22, xiv. 4; Heb. iv. 11; Rev. ii. 5; Lk. xxi. 24. z Lk. iv. 12 (Deut. vi. 16), x. 25; Ps. lxxvii. 18. a Exod. xvii. 2, 7; Acts v. 9, xv. 10; Heb. iii. 9; (Jo.) viii. 6. Cf. vii. 5. b Numb. xxi. 6; Mk. xvi. 18; Lk. x. 19; cf. Jo. iii. 14. c Exod. xvi. 7; Numb. xiv. 29; Mt. xx. 11; Lk. v. 30; four times in Jo.

[1] ωσπερ, ℵABD^cL, many minn.: unusual in this connexion. ως, CD*KL, etc.

[2] πειν, ℵ (πιν) B*D*G; see note on ix. 4.

[3] επεσαν: all pre-Syrian uncc. So passim; see Wr., pp. 86 f.

[4] Om. εν ℵ*BD*G (Neutral and Western). Ins. εν: Alexandrian and Syrian.

[5] τον Κυριον, ℵBCP 17, 46, 73, syr^p. mg. cop., Epiph. τον Θεον A 2, Euthal. τον Χριστον DGKL, etc., latt. vg. syr^sch. sah., Mcion. (Western and Syrian).

[6] εξεπειρασαν (?), ℵCD*GP 17, 46, 73—assimilated to previous vb. επειρασαν, ABD^cKL, etc.; so W.H. txt., Nestle, El.

[7] απωλλυντο, ℵAB: h.l. for the impf.

[8] γογγυζωμεν, ℵDG (Western)—assimilated to context.

[9] καθαπερ, ℵBP, Or., Bas.

[10] Om. και all uncc. but KL.

lay the peril of his readers who, when released from the superstition of the old religion (viii. 4), were still attracted by its feasting and gaiety: "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to sport" (following the LXX precisely). This παίζειν, as in idolatrous festivals commonly, included singing and dancing round the calf (Exod. xxxii. 18 f.); there is no need to imagine a darker meaning. It was a scene of wild, careless merriment, shocking under the circumstances and most perilous, that Moses witnessed as he descended bearing the Tables of the Law.—πεῖν, cf. ix. 4 and note.

Ver. 8. μηδὲ πορνεύωμεν: here P. comes closer to his readers, adopting the communicative 1st pl. For the prevalence of this vice at Cor. and its connexion with Cor. idolatry, see vii. 2, vi. 11, and Introd., p. 734 (cf. Num. xxv., 1 f. also Rev. ii. 14); for its existence in the Cor. Church, ch. v. above, and 2 Cor. xii. 21. Wisd. xiv. 12 affirms, of idolatry at large, ἀρχὴ πορνείας ἐπίνοια εἰδώλων; see the connexion of Rom. i. 24 with the foregoing context.—"23,000" is a curious variation from the figure given in Num. xxv. 9 for the slain of Baal-Peor, which is followed by other Jewish authorities, viz., 24,000. It is more respectful to credit the Ap. with a trifling inadvertence than to suppose, with Gd., that he makes a deliberate understatement to be within the mark. Ev. gives no evidence for his alleged "Jewish tradition" in support of the reduced estimate. Possibly, a primitive error of the copyist, substituting γ′ for δ′ (Hn.).

Vv. 9, 10. The sins condemned in vv. 7, 8 are sins of sensuality; these, of unbelief (Ed.)—which takes two forms: of presumption, daring God's judgments; or of despair, doubting His goodness. The whole wilderness history, with its crucial events of Massah and Meribah, is represented as a "trying of the Lord" in Ps. xcv. 8 ff. (cf. Num. xiv. 22), a δοκιμασία (Heb. iii. 7-12); this process culminated in the insolence of Num. xxi. 4 f., which was punished by the infliction of the "fiery serpents". The like sin, of presuming on the Divine forbearance, the Cor. would commit if they trifled with idolatry (cf. 22) and "sinned wilfully after receiving the knowledge of the truth" (Heb. x. 26; Rom. vi. 1); cf. Deut. vi. 16 (Matt. iv. 7), Ps. lxxviii. 17 ff., for this trait of the Israelite character. ἐκ-πειράζω is to try thoroughly, to the utmost—as though one would see how far God's indulgence will go. The graphic

[e]ἐγόγγυσαν καὶ ἀπώλοντο ὑπὸ τοῦ [d]ὀλοθρευτοῦ. 11. ταῦτα [1] δὲ πάντα [1] [e]τύποι [2] [f]συνέβαινον [3] ἐκείνοις, ἐγράφη δὲ [g]πρὸς [h]νουθεσίαν ἡμῶν, [i]εἰς οὓς τὰ [i]τέλη τῶν [k]αἰώνων [l]κατήντησεν.[4] 12. ὥστε ὁ [m]δοκῶν [n]ἑστάναι [o]βλεπέτω μὴ [y]πέσῃ. 13. [p]πειρασμὸς ὑμᾶς οὐκ [q]εἴληφεν [5] εἰ μὴ [r]ἀνθρώπινος· [s]πιστὸς δὲ ὁ [s]Θεός, ὃς οὐκ

d H.l.; -ευω, Heb. xi. 28 (Exod. xii. 23); -ευσις, Josh. xvii. 13.
e τυπικως, h.l.; -κος, in Plutarch.

f 1 Pet. iv. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 22; four times in Lk. and Acts; once in Mt. g In this use, vi. 5, vii. 35, xii. 7, etc. h Eph. vi. 4; Tit. iii. 10; Judith vii. 27; Wisd. xvi. 6; -ετειν, see iv. 14. i In this sense, h.l. Cf. Mt. xiii. 39; Heb. ix. 26; also Rom. x. 4; 1 Pet. i. 9. k Pl., in like sense, ii. 7; Eph. iii. 9, 11; Col. i. 26; 1 Tim. i. 17; Heb. i. 8, xi. 3. l xiv. 36; Eph. iv. 13; Ph. iii. 11; Acts xxvi. 7. In lit. sense, Acts xvi. 1, etc. m See iii. 18. n In this tense and sense, 2 Cor. i. 24; Rom. v. 2, xi. 20; 2 Tim. ii. 19. Same inf. in Acts xii. 14; Lk. xiii. 25. o See viii. 9. p Gal. iv. 14; 1 Tim. vi. 9; Heb. iii. 8 (Ps. xciv. 8); Jas. i. 2, 12; 1 Pet. i. 6; Mt. vi. 13, etc. q λαμβανω with like subject, Lk. v. 26, vii. 16; Exod. xv. 15. r See ii. 13. s See i. 9.

[1] Om. παντα AB 17, sah., Mcion., Tert., Or., Cyr., Bas. ταυτα δε παντα: CKLP, etc., vg. syrr. cop. (Alexandrian); παντα δε ταυτα: ℵDG 46, Aug. (Western).

[2] τυπικως: all uncc. but DGL, which assimilate to ver. 6.

[3] συνεβαινεν, ℵBCK, twelve minn., Mcion., Or., Bas., Cyr. συνεβαινον, ADG, etc. (Western).

[4] κατηντηκεν, ℵBD*G, Bas., Euthal., Cyr. κατηντησεν, ACD^cKL, etc.—Alexandrian and Syrian.

[5] ου (sic) καταλαβῃ: G, latt. vg. (non apprehendat), Latt. Ff.

impf., ἀπώλλυντο, "lay a-perishing," transports us to the scene of misery resulting from this experiment upon God!—ὑπὸ of agent after ἀπόλλυμι—a cl. idiom, h.l. for N.T.—elsewhere construed with dat., or ἐν and dat., of cause or ground of destruction (viii. 11, Rom. xiv. 15, etc.).—The "murmuring" also occurred repeatedly in the wilderness; but P. alludes specifically to the rebellion of Korah and its punishment—the only instance of violent death overtaking this sin (Num. xvi. 41). The ὀλοθρευτής in such supernatural chastisement is conceived as the "destroying angel" (2 Sam. xxiv. 16, Isa. xxxvii. 36), called ὁ ὀλοθρεύων in Exod. xii. 23, Heb. xi. 28 (cf. Wisd. xviii. 25); in later Jewish theology, Sammael, or the Angel of Death (Weber, Altsyn. Théologie, p. 244). The O.T. analogy suggests that P. had in view the murmurings of jealous partisans and unworthy teachers at Cor. (i. 12, iii. 6, iv. 6, 18 ff.); at this point he reverts to the impv. of 2nd. pers., γογγύζετε.—τινες (quidam), used throughout of the Israelite offenders, may mean many or few, anything short of "all" (1-4); cf. ver. 5, also ix. 22, viii. 7, Rom. iii. 3.

Ver. 11. "Now these things befel them by way of example" (τυπικῶς)—or "typically," "prefiguratively," if the other rendering of τύποι in ver. 6 be preferred ("in figura contingebant illis," Vg.); the adv. became current in the latter sense in eccl. Gr. The judgments quoted were exemplary in their nature; the story of them serves as a lesson for all time—"they were written with a view to (πρὸς) our admonition".—συνέβαινον, impf., of the train of events; ἐγράφη, aor., of the act of record summing them up. For the admonitory purpose of O.T. writers, see Isa. viii. 16, xxx. 8 ff., Hab. ii. 2 f., Deut. xxxi. 19 ff.—"Unto whom the ends of the ages have reached" (κατήντηκεν, devenerunt, Vg.)—"whom they have overtaken". καταντάω signifies reaching a mark, "arriving at" a definite point, whether the ultimate goal or not (see parls.). τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων is syn. with ἡ συντέλεια τ. αἰώνων (Matt. xiii. 40, etc.) and other eschatological expressions (cf. 1 Peter i. 20, Heb. i. 2; also Gal. iv. 4, Eph. i. 10); the pl. indicates the manifold issues culminating in the Christian Church. "World-ages" (αἰῶνες) do not simply follow each other, but proceed side by side; so in particular the age of Israel and that of the Gentiles" (Hf.); "the ends" of Jewish and Pagan history alike are disclosed in Christianity; both streams converged, under God's direction (cf. Acts xv. 15 ff., xvii. 26 ff.), upon the Gentile Churches (τέλος has the double sense of conclusion and aim). The Church is the heir of the spiritual training of mankind; cf., for the general idea, John iv. 37 f., 2 Tim. iii. 16 f., Gal. iii. 29, Eph. i. 9 ff.

Vv. 12, 13. The "examples" just set forth are full of warning (a), but with an

[t] ἐάσει[1] ὑμᾶς [u] πειρασθῆναι [v] ὑπὲρ [v] ὃ[2] δύνασθε, ἀλλὰ ποιήσει σὺν τῷ [p] πειρασμῷ καὶ τὴν [w] ἔκβασιν τοῦ δύνασθαι ὑμᾶς[3] [x] ὑπενεγκεῖν. 14. [y] διόπερ, [z] ἀγαπητοί [z] μου, [a] φεύγετε [a] ἀπὸ τῆς [b] εἰδωλολατρείας.

t With inf., Mt. xxiv. 43; Lk. iv. 41; 4 times in Acts.
u See ver. 9 above. v See iv. 6. w Heb. xiii. 7; Wisd. ii. 17, viii. 10, xi. 14. x 2 Tim. iii. 11; 1 Pet. ii. 19; Job ii. 10; Ps. liv. 12; Prov. vi. 33. y See viii. 13. z Ph. ii. 12; 2 Pet. i. 17; Mt. xii. 18 (Isa. xlii. 1). a See vi. 18. b Gal. v. 20; Col. iii. 5; 1 Pet. iv. 3; -τρης, ver. 7 above.

[1] αφησει DG—Western emendation.

[2] G and several latt. insert ου (super id quod non).

[3] Om. υμας all uncc. but ℵcDcK.

aspect of (b) encouragement besides. (a) "So then"—ὥστε with impv., as in iii. 21 (see note)—"he that thinks (ὁ δοκῶν: see note, iii. 18) that he stands, let him take heed (βλεπέτω) lest he fall!" For "such thinking, as it leads to trust in one-self, is the beginning of a perilous security" (Hf.); this vanity was precisely the danger of the Cor. (see iv. 6 ff., v. 2, etc.). For the pf. ἑστάναι, in this emphatic sense (to stand fast), see parls. A moral "fall" is apprehended, involving personal ruin (5, 8; Rom. xi. 11, 22).—(b) The example which alarms the self-confident, may give hope to the despondent; it shows that the present trials are not unprecedented: πειρασμὸς ὑμᾶς οὐκ εἴληφεν εἰ μὴ ἀνθρώπινος, "It is only human temptation that has come upon you"—such as men have been through before. Ver. 13 follows sharply on ver. 12, ἀσυνδέτως, correcting a depressing fear that would arise in some minds.—εἴληφεν (see parls.) describes a situation which "has seized" and holds one in its grasp (pf.).—ἀνθρώπινος connotes both quod hominibus solet (Cv.) and homini superabilis (Bg.), such as man can bear (R.V.), —σύμμετρος τῇ φύσει (Thd.). Some give an objective turn to the adj., reading the clause as one of further warning: "It is only trial from men that has overtaken you" (so, with variations, Chr., Est., Gr., Bg.—opponitur tentatio demoniaca). But the sequel implies a temptation measured by the strength of the tempted; moreover, as El. says, P. would have written οὔπω ἔλαβεν, rather than οὐκ εἴληφεν, if foreboding worse trial in store; nor did he conceive the actual trials of the Cor., any more than those of the Thess. or Asian Churches (1 Thess. iii. 5, Eph. vi. 10 ff.), as without diabolical elements (see 20 ff., vii. 5, 2 Cor. xi. 3, 14).—εἰ μὴ is attached to ἀνθρώπινος alone: lit. "temptation has not seized you, except a human (temptation)"—i.e., "otherwise than human".—πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεός contrasts the human and Divine; for the natural trial a supernatural Providence guarantees sufficient aid (see parls.). ὃς = ὅτι οὗτος (cf. 2 Cor. i. 18): "God is faithful in that (or so that) He etc.". Paul ascribes to God not the origination, but the control of temptation (cf. Matt. vi. 13, Luke xxii. 31 f., James i. 12 ff.): the πειρασμὸς is inevitable, lying in the conditions of human nature; God limits it, and supplies along with it the ἔκβασις.—For the ellipsis in (ὑπὲρ ὃ) δύνασθε, cf. iii. 2.—The art. in ὁ πειρασμός, τὴν ἔκβασιν, is individualising: "the temptation" and "the egress" match each other, the latter provided for the former; hence καί, "also," indivulso nexu (Bg.). Issue is a sense of ἔκβασις in later Gr.; in cl. Gr. disembarkation, then exit, escape. In τοῦ δύνασθαι ὑπενεγκεῖν (for gen. inf. of purpose, see Wr., p. 408) the subject is not expressed; as coming under God's general dealing with men, it is conceived indefinitely—"that one may be able to bear". Shut into a cul de sac, a man despairs; but let him see a door open for his exit, and he will struggle on with his load. ἔκβασις signifies getting clear away from the struggle; ὑπενεγκεῖν, holding up under it, the latter made possible by the hope of the former. How different all this from the Stoic consolation of suicide: "The door stands open"! In the Cor. "temptation" we must include both the allurements of idolatry and the persecution which its abandonment entailed.

Ver. 14 gives the final point to all that has been urged, from ver. 1 onwards: the sad fate of the Israelite fathers, the correspondence between their trials and those of the Cor. readers, the possibility of effectual resistance, and the certain relief to which the Divine fidelity is pledged—these considerations combine to enforce the appeal, Flee from idolatry; cf. vi. 18*a*, and note.—διόπερ, as in viii. 13 (see note), points with emphatic finger along the line of past history; ἀγαπητοί c 2 Cor. vi. 13; cf. Acts xvii. 22.

15. [c] Ὡς [d] φρονίμοις [e] λέγω· κρίνατε ὑμεῖς ὅ [e] φημι· 16. τὸ ποτήριον τῆς [g] εὐλογίας ὃ [h] εὐλογοῦμεν, οὐχὶ [i] κοινωνία τοῦ [1] [k] αἵματος [1] τοῦ [k] Χριστοῦ [1] ἐστιν [1]; τὸν [l] ἄρτον ὃν [m] κλῶμεν, οὐχὶ

d See iv. 10.
e See vii. 29.
f xi. 25 ff.; Mt. xxvi. 27 (cf. 39), and parls.; see also Mt. xx. 22 f.; Rev. xiv. 10, etc. For position of noun, Jo. xviii. 11; Mt. xxi. 42, etc.
g Gal. iii. 14; Jas. iii. 10; Rev. v. 12 f., vii. 12; Gen. xxviii. 4.
h Mt. xxvi. 26; Mk. xi. 10, xiv. 22; Lk. xxiv. 30. Here only of things. See also iv. 12.
i With obj. gen., Ph. iii. 10. See also i. 9, and note on construction.
k xi. 25, 27; Eph. ii. 13; Heb. ix. 12, 14; 1 Pet. i. 2; Jo. i. 7; Rev. i. 5, v. 9, vii. 14, etc.; Mt. xxvi. 28, etc.; Jo. vi. 53 ff.
l xi. 23 ff.; Acts ii. 42, 46, xx. 7, 11, xxvii. 35; Mt. xxvi. 26, etc.; Jo. vi. 35 ff., xiii. 18, xxi. 13.
m xi. 24; Acts ii. 46, etc.; Mt. xxvi. 26, etc., xiv. 19, xv. 36; Lk. xxiv. 30.

[1] κοινωνια εστιν του αιματος του Χριστου (in this order): ABP. So Tr., W.H.—diff. from parl. clause. A has εστιν after κοινωνια in second clause also.

μου (cf. iv. 14) reinforces admonition with entreaty.

§ 33. The Communion of the Lord, and of Demons, x. 15-24. A further warning the Ap. will give against dalliance with idolatry, based on Christian practice as the former was based on Israelite history. He points to the table of the Lord's Supper, and asks the Cor. to judge as men of sense whether it is possible to take of Christ's cup and loaf, and then to sit at a table where in reality one communicates with demons! What can be more revolting than such conduct? what more insulting towards the Lord?

Ver. 15. Ὡς φρονίμοις λέγω· κρίνατε ὑμεῖς ὅ φημι: "As to men of sense I speak; be yourselves the judges of what I affirm." With this prefatory appeal to the intelligence of the readers cf. the introductory phrases of Rom. vi. 19, Gal. iii. 15; the ground of admonition in this § lies entirely within the judgment of the Cor., as that of the last § did not (1). The Cor. are φρόνιμοι, intellectually clever and shrewd, not σοφοί (as some of them thought themselves to be, iii. 18); this compliment is consistent with the censure of iii. 1 ff.; see parls., also Trench Syn., § lxxv. "The new conception of the πνευματικὸς caused the word φρόνιμος to sink to a much lower level in the N.T. than it occupied in Plato or Aristotle" (Ed.). Philo disparages φρόνησις, defining it as μέση πανουργίας κ. μωρίας (Quod Deus immut., § 35); he says, σοφία μὲν γὰρ πρὸς θεραπείαν Θεοῦ, φρόνησις δὲ πρὸς ἀνθρώπινον βίον διοίκησιν (De præm. et pæn., § 14).—On φημί (again in 19), cf. vii. 29, and note. For like appeals, see Luke xii. 57, Acts iv. 19. The questions that follow, the readers will easily answer from their knowledge of religious custom and feeling.

Ver. 16. κοινωνία is the key-word of this passage (see parls.); the Lord's Supper constitutes a "communion" centring in Christ, as the Jewish festal rites centred in "the altar" (18), and as "the demons," the unseen objects of idolatrous worship, supply their basis of communion in idolatrous feasts (21 f.). Such fellowship involves (1) the ground of communion, the sacred object celebrated in common; (2) the association established amongst the celebrants, separating them from all others: "The word communion denotes the fellowship of persons with persons in one and the same object" (Ev.). These two ideas take expression in vv. 16, 17 in turn; their joint force lies behind the protest of vv. 20 ff.—Appealing to the Eucharist —or Eulogia, as it was also called—P. begins with "the cup" (cf. the order of Luke xxii. 17 ff., and Didaché ix. 2 f.), the prominent object in the sacrificial meal (21), containing, as one may say, the essence of the feast (cf. Ps. xxiii. 5). τ. εὐλογίας is attributive gen. (like "cup of salvation" in Ps. cxvi. 13; see other parls., for both words); so Cv., "destinatus ad mysticam eulogiam," and Hn. (see his note). Christ blessed this cup, making it thus for ever a "cup of blessing"; cf. the early sacramental phrases, οἱ τῆς εὐλογίας Ἰησοῦ ἄρτοι in Or. on Matt. x. 25, and τὰς εὐλογίας τ. Χριστοῦ ἐσθίειν from the Catacombs (X. Kraus, Roma sotteranea, 217), cited by Hn. On this view, ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν is no repetition of τῆς εὐλογίας, but is antithetical to it in the manner of Eph. i. 3: sc. "the cup which gives blessing, for which we give blessing to God". The prevalent interpretation of τ. ποτήρ. τ. εὐλογίας makes the phrase a rendering of kōs habb'rakah, the third cup of the Passover meal, over which a specific blessing was pronounced (often identified with that of the Eucharist); or, as Ed. thinks (referring to Luke xxii. 20), the fourth, which closed the meal and was attended with the singing of the n xi. 24 ff.; Mt. xxvi. 26; Rom. vii. 4; Ph. iii. 21; Col. i. 22; Heb. x. 10; 1 Pet. ii. 24. o Ver. 33; 2 Cor. ii. 17; Rom. v. 15, 19, xii. 5; Heb. xii. 15; Mt. xxiv. 12; Mk. vi. 2. p See ix. 22.

[1] κοινωνία τοῦ [n] σώματος τοῦ [n] Χριστοῦ ἐστιν; 17. ὅτι εἷς ἄρτος, ἓν σῶμα [o] οἱ [o] πολλοί ἐσμεν, [p] οἱ γὰρ [p] πάντες ἐκ τοῦ ἑνὸς ἄρτου

Hallel. Such a technical Hebraism would scarcely be obvious to the Cor., and the gen. so construed is artificial in point of Gr. idiom; whereas the former construction is natural, and gives a sense in keeping with the readers' experience.—τὸ ποτήριον, τὸν ἄρτον are acc. by inverse relative attraction, a constr. not unknown, though rare, in cl. Gr. (see Wr., p. 204). Hf. thinks that, with the merging of these nouns in the rel. clause, the act of blessing the cup and breaking the bread becomes the real subject of κοινωνία in each instance—as though P. wrote, "when we bless the cup, break the bread, is it not a communion, etc.?" In any case, the "communion" looks beyond the bare ποτήριον and ἄρτος to the whole sacred action, the usus poculi, etc. (Bg.), of which they form the centre. "The bread" is "blessed" equally with "the cup," but in its case the prominent symbolic act is that of breaking (see parls.), which connotes the distribution to "many" of the "one loaf." Thus "the sacramental bread came to be known as the κλασμός: so Did., § 9" (Ed.).—On the pl. εὐλογοῦμεν, κλῶμεν, Mr. observes: "Whose was it to officiate in this consecration? At this date, when the order of public worship in the Church was far from being settled, any Christian man was competent. By the time of Justin (Apol. i. 65) the function was reserved for the προεστώς, but on the understanding that he represented the community and acted in communion with it (see Ritschl, Altkath. Kirche,[2] pp. 365 f.). The pls. of our passage speak out of the consciousness of the Christian fellowship, in which it is matter of indifference who may be, in this instance or that, its administrative organ."—οὐχὶ κοινωνία τοῦ αἵματος, τοῦ σώματος, τοῦ Χριστοῦ; "Is it not a communion of (or in) the blood, the body, of Christ?" (cf., for the gen. after κοινωνία, note on i. 9)—not "a communion with the blood, etc." The stress lies on τοῦ Χριστοῦ in both questions: through the cup and loaf believers participate together in Christ, in the sacrifice of His blood offered to God (Rom. iii. 25, Eph. i. 7, Heb. ix. 11 ff., 24 ff.), and in the whole redemption wrought through His bodily life and death and resurrection. τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ carries our thoughts from the incarnation (Phil. ii. 7), through the crucifixion (Col. i. 22), on to the heavenly glory of the Redeemer (Phil. iii. 21). The cup and bread are here styled "a communion in Christ's blood and body"; in His own words (xi. 25), "the new covenant in My blood,"—a communion on the basis of the covenant established by the sacrifice of the Cross.

Ver. 17 unfolds the assertion virtually contained in the question just asked: "Seeing that (ὅτι) there is one bread, we, the many, are one body"; so Vg., "Quoniam unus panis, unum corpus multi sumus," Cv., Bz., Bg., Hf., Bt., Hn., Gd., El., R.V. marg.; cf. the mutually supporting unities of Eph. iv. 4 ff. The saying is aphoristic: One bread makes one body (Hn.)—a maxim of hospitality (equally true of "the cup") that applies to all associations cemented by a common feast. "The bread" suggests the further, kindred idea of a common nourishment sustaining an identical life, the loaf on the table symbolising the ἀληθινὸς ἄρτος of John vi., which feeds the Church in every limb (xii. 13).—"For (γὰρ of explanation) we all partake from (partitive ἐκ, cf. ix. 7) the one bread"; eating from the common loaf attests and seals the union of the participants in Christ.

Ver. 17 is parenthetical, but no interpolation as Sm. thinks; it is necessary to develop the idea of κοινωνία in ver. 16, showing how vital to the Church is the fellowship of the Lord's Table, that was being violated by attendance at idol-feasts.—The elliptical ὅτι . . . ἐσμεν is often construed as a continued dependent clause under the regimen of ὅτι: either (a) "Since we, who are many, are one bread (loaf), one body" (A.V., R.V. txt., with several ancient Verss., Est., Al., Sm.); or (b) "Since there (is) one bread, (and) we, the many, are one body" (D.W., Mr.)—these renderings making the two statements a double reason for the κοινωνία of ver. 16, instead of seeing in the εἷς ἄρτος an evidence of the ἓν σῶμα. But (a) confuses two distinct figures, and identifies unsuitably "the bread" with the Church itself. (b) escapes this error by reading into the first clause the ἐστὶν required to match ἐσμὲν in the second; but the copulative "and" is q See ix. 10. r See i. 26. s See i. 26. t 2 Cor. i. 7, viii. 23; Phm. 17; Heb. x. 33; 1 Pet. v. 1; 2 Pet. i. 4; Mt. xxiii. 30; Lk. v. 10. u See ix. 13. v See viii. 1. w See viii. 4. x Absol., Acts xiv. 13, 18 (with dat., as here); Exod. xxiii. 18. See v. 7. y See i. 23, v. 1, τ. ἐθνη. z Deut. xxxii. 17; 1 Tim. iv. 1; Acts xvii. 18; Jas. ii. 19; Rev. ix. 20, xvi. 14; Gospp. passim.

[q] μετέχομεν. 18. [r] βλέπετε τὸν Ἰσραὴλ [s] κατὰ [s] σάρκα· οὐχὶ[1] οἱ ἐσθίοντες τὰς θυσίας [t] κοινωνοὶ τοῦ [u] θυσιαστηρίου εἰσί; 19. τί οὖν [v] φημι; ὅτι [w] εἴδωλόν[2] τί ἐστιν, ἢ ὅτι [v] εἰδωλόθυτόν[2] τί ἐστιν; 20. ἀλλ' ὅτι ἃ [x] θύει[3] τὰ[4] [y] ἔθνη,[4] [z] δαιμονίοις [x] θύει[3] καὶ οὐ Θεῷ[5]·

[1] ουχ, ℵACD*G. ουχι, B and Syrians; so W.H. marg.

[2] ειδωλοθυτον . . . ειδωλον (in this order): ℵ^aBCDP 46, 73, latt. vg. sah. cop., Aug., Ambrst. ℵ*AC* om. η οτι ειδωλον τι εστιν, by homœoleuton—a circumstance tending to prove a common (Alexandrian?) ancestor. Similarly 17, 71 om. οτι ειδωλοθυτον κ.τ.λ.—a reading indicated also by Tert. and Aug.

[3] θυουσιν (twice), all uncc. but KL.

[4] Om. τα εθνη (?) BDG, Mcion., Tert. Lachm., Tisch., Al. om.; W.H. and Nestle bracket the words.

[5] και ου Θεῳ θυουσιν (in this order): ℵABCP 17, 37, 46.

artificially supplied; moreover, Mr.'s interpretation reverses the contextual relation of the ἄρτος and σῶμα, making the latter the ground of the former, whereas Paul argues that the bread assures the oneness of the body; through loaf and cup we realise our communion in Christ.

Ver. 18. "For look at Israel after the flesh: are not those that eat the sacrifice communicants of the altar?"—i.e., participation in the sacrificial feast constitutes fellowship in the sacrifice.—τὸν Ἰσραὴλ κατὰ σάρκα, in contrast with Ἰσρ. κατὰ πνεῦμα (Rom. ii. 28 f., Gal. iv. 29, vi. 16, etc.: see note on οἱ πατ. ἡμῶν, 1). The Ap. is not thinking of the priests specifically, as in ix. 13 (Hn.), nor of the people as sharing with them (Al.), but of the festal communion of Israelites as such—e.g., at the Passover, the sacrificial meal κατ' ἐξοχήν: see Lev. vii. 11-34, Deut. xii. 11-28, 1 Sam. ix. 12 ff. The altar furnishes the table at which Jehovah's guests enjoy their covenant fellowship in the gifts of His salvation. The feasters are thus κοινωνοὶ τ. θυσιαστηρίου, recognising the altar as their common altar and mutually pledging themselves to its service.

Vv. 19, 20. Paul's appeal to the meaning of the Lord's Supper is leading up to a prohibition of attendance at the idol-feasts. Against this veto the men of "knowledge" will argue that idolatry is illusion (viii. 4 ff.), its rites having no such ground in reality as belongs to Christian observances; the festival has no religious meaning to them, and does not touch their conscience (contrast viii. 7); if friendship or social feeling invites their presence, why should they not go? Paul admits the non-reality of the idol in itself; but he discerns other terrible presences behind the image—"demons" are virtually worshipped at the idol-feast, and with these the celebrants are brought into contact. "What then do I affirm (the φημὶ of 15 resumed)? that an idol-sacrifice is anything (has reality)? or that an idol is anything? (to say this would be to contradict viii. 4). No, but that (ἀλλ' ὅτι) what the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to demons, and not to God; and I would not that you should be communicants of the demons!" How could the Cor., as "men of sense, judge" of a situation like this? The riot and debauch attending heathen festivals showed that foul spirits of evil presided over them: cf. vv. 6 ff., referring to the worship of Baal-Peor, with which the allusion here made to Deut. xxxii. 17 (cf. Ps. cvi. 37 f.) is in keeping. "That the worship of heathen cults was offered quoad eventum—not indeed quoad intentionem—to devils was, consistently with their strict monotheism, the general view of later Jews" (Mr.). Heathenism P. regarded as the domain of Satan (2 Cor. iv. 4, Eph. ii. 2, vi. 12; cf. Luke iv. 6, 1 John v. 19), under whose rule the demons serve as the angels under that of God (2 Cor. xii. 7, 1 Tim. iv. 1; cf. Matt. xii. 24, xxv. 41, etc.); idolatry was, above everything, inspired by Satan. δαιμόνιον (=δαίμων, of which it is neut. adj.) was primarily synon. with θεῖον—"δαίμων is related to θεὸς as numen to persona divina" (Cr.); τὸ δαιμόνιον οὐδέν ἐστιν ἀλλ' ἢ θεὸς ἢ θεοῦ ἔργον (Arist., Rhet., ii., 23. 8); hence Socrates a (Nolo). xvi. 7; 2 Cor. xii. 20; Rom. vii. 16; 2 Th. iii. 10; 3 Jo. 13; Rev. ii. 21; freq. in Gospp.; cf. x. 1. b Rom. xi. 9; Ps. lxxvii. 20; also Mt. xv. 27; Lk. xvi. 21, xxii. 21, 30. For τρ. δαιμ, cf. Isa. lxv. 11. c Rom. x. 19 (Deut. xxxii. 21), xi. 11, 14. d See i. 25.

[a] οὐ [a] θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς [t] κοινωνοὺς τῶν [z] δαιμονίων γίνεσθαι· 21. οὐ δύνασθε [f] ποτήριον Κυρίου πίνειν καὶ [f] ποτήριον [z] δαιμονίων, οὐ δύνασθε [b] τραπέζης Κυρίου [q] μετέχειν καὶ [b] τραπέζης [z b] δαιμονίων· 22. ἢ [c] παραζηλοῦμεν τὸν Κύριον; μὴ [d] ἰσχυρότεροι αὐτοῦ ἐσμεν;

called the mysterious guiding voice within him δαιμόνιόν τι. Ed. observes a tendency, beginning with Eurip. and Plato and accentuated in the Stoics, "to use the word in a depreciatory sense"; already in Homer it often suggested the uncanny, the supernatural as an object of dread. The word was ready to hand for the LXX translators, who used it to render various Heb. epithets for heathen gods. Later Judaism, which peopled the unseen with good and evil spirits, made δαιμόνια a general term for the latter, apart from any specific refer. to idols (see, already, Tob. iii. 8, etc.); hence its prominence in the Gospels, and the origin of the word demoniac (ὁ δαιμονιζόμενος): on the whole subject, see Cr. s.v., also Everling's Paulinische Angelologie u. Dämonologie. For κοινωνοὶ τ. δαιμονίων, cf. Isa. xliv. 11, where the "fellows" of the idol signify a kind of religious guild, brought into mystic union with their god through the sacrificial meal (see Cheyne ad loc.); also Isa. lxv. 11. Ver. 20*c* is calculated to bring home to the Cor. the fearful danger of trifling with idolatry.

Vv. 21, 22. This lively apostrophe sets in the strongest light the inconsistency of Cor. Christians who conform to idolatry, the untenability of their position. "You cannot drink the Lord's cup and the cup of demons"—the two together! "You cannot partake of the Lord's table and the table of demons!" Cf. the τίς μετοχή, κοινωνία, κ.τ.λ.; of. 2 Cor. vi. 14 ff., and other parls. The nouns forming the obj. are anarthrous as being qualitative, the impossibility lying in the kind of the two cups; cf. note on ii. 5. "The Lord's cup" is that received at His direction and signifying allegiance to Him; in ver. 16, "the cup of (His) blessing."—Possibly, P. alludes here to Mal. i. 7, 12, where 'the table" signifies "the altar of Jehovah"; but the expression is borrowed without this identification. In this context table and altar are essentially distinguished; the altar supplies the table (cf. Heb. xiii. 10). "S. Coena convivium, non sacrificium; in mensa, non in altari" (Bg.). The τράπεζα includes the ποτήριον and ἄρτος of ver. 16 together. This passage gives its name of "the Lord's Table" to the Eucharist.—"Or (is it that) we provoke the Lord to jealousy?"—is this what we mean by eating at both tables? Paul includes himself in this question; such conduct is conceivable in his case, since he had no scruple against the idolothyta on their own account (see viii., ix. 1). Deut. xxxii. 21 (neighbouring the previous allusion of 20) sufficiently indicates the result of such insolence: see other O.T. parls. For this argumentative ἢ in Paul's questions, cf. vi. 9, etc., ix. 6.—If the Cor. are daring Christ's sovereign displeasure by coquetting with idolatry, they must suppose themselves "stronger than He"! As sensible and prudent men they must see the absurdity, as well as the awful peril, of such double-dealing: cf. Deut. xxxii. 6, 28 f. ἰσχυρός (i. 25) implies inherent, personal strength. Of the δύναμις τ. κυρ. Ἰησοῦ P. had given a solemn impression in ch. v. 4 f.; cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 3 f.

§ 34. Liberty and its Limits, x. 23-xi. 1. The maxim "All things are lawful" was pleaded in defence of the use of the idolothyta, as of other Cor. laxities; so the Ap. has to discuss it a second time (cf. vi. 12). In ch. vi. he bade his readers guard the application of this principle for their own sake, now for the sake of others; there in the interests of purity, here of charity (23 f.). When buying meat in the market, or when dining at an unbeliever's table, the Christian need not enquire whether the flesh offered him is sacrificial or not; but if the fact is pointedly brought to his notice, he should abstain, to avoid giving scandal (25-30). Above all such regulations stands the supreme and comprehensive rule of doing everything to God's glory (31). Let the Cor. follow Paul as he himself follows Christ, in living for the highest good of others (32-xi. 1)

Ver. 23. On πάντα ἔξεστιν κ.τ.λ., see notes to vi. 12. The form of that ver. seems to be purposely repeated here (μοι only omitted), with the effect of bringing out the altruistic as complementary to the self-regarding side of Christian ex-

23. [e] Πάντα μοι [1] [e] ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' [e] οὐ πάντα [e] συμφέρει· [e] πάντα μοι [1] [e] ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα [f] οἰκοδομεῖ· 24. μηδεὶς [g] τὸ [g] ἑαυτοῦ [h] ζητείτω, ἀλλὰ τὸ τοῦ [i] ἑτέρου ἕκαστος.[2] 25. πᾶν τὸ ἐν [k] μακέλλῳ [l] πωλούμενον ἐσθίετε, μηδὲν [m] ἀνακρίνοντες διὰ τὴν [n] συνείδησιν, 26. [o] τοῦ γὰρ [3] Κυρίου [3] ἡ γῆ καὶ τὸ [p] πλήρωμα αὐτῆς· 27. εἰ δέ [4]

e See vi. 12. f See viii. 10. g xiii. 5; Ph. ii. 4, 21; cf. Mt. xvi. 23. h Ver. 33, xiii. 5; 2 Cor. xii. 14; Ph. ii. 21; Neh. ii. 10. See i. 22. i Ph. ii. 21. ο ετερος, see iv. 6. k H.l.; see note below. l Mt. x. 29, etc.; h.l. in Epp. m See ii. 14. n See viii. 10. o Ps. xxiii. 1, xlix. 12. p In this sense, Mk. vi. 43, viii. 20.

[1] Om. μοι (supplied from vi. 12) all pre-Syrian uncc.
[2] Om. εκαστος pre-Syrian uncc. and verss.
[3] του Κυριου γαρ (in this order): all uncc. but AHKLP.
[4] Om. δε pre-Syrian uncc. and verss.

pediency. On Paul's dialectical use of the words of opponents, cf. viii. 1 ff. and notes. Closing his discussion about the sacrificial meats, P. returns to the point from which he set out in ch. viii., viz., the supremacy of love in Church life—there commended as superior to knowledge, here as supplying the guard of liberty; in both passages, it is the principle of edification.—The tacit obj. of οἰκοδομεῖ (see viii. 1, iii. 9-17) is "the Church of God" (32). Edification, in its proper meaning, is always relative to the community; P. is safe-guarding not the particular interests of "the weak brother" so much as the welfare of the Church, when he says, "Not all things edify".

Ver. 24. With μηδεὶς τ. ἑαυτοῦ κ.τ.λ. cf. xiii. 5, Rom. xiv. 7, xv. 2, Gal. vi. 2, Phil. ii. 1 ff. After ἀλλὰ understand ἕκαστος, from the previous μηδείς: cf. the ellipsis in iii. 1, 7, vii. 19 (Bm., p. 392). For ὁ ἕτερος (= ὁ πλησίον, Rom. xv. 2), wider than ὁ ἀδελφός (viii. 11; cf. 27 f.)—"the other" in contrast with oneself—see parls.; Gr. idiom prefers "the other" where we say "others".—τὸ ἑαυτοῦ, τὸ τοῦ ἑτέρου, implies some definite good—"his own, the other's interest": a N.T. h. l.; the pl. elsewhere in such connexion (cf. Matt. xxii. 21).

Vv. 25, 26. The above rule is now applied in the concrete. πᾶν τὸ ἐν μακέλλῳ πωλούμενον κ.τ.λ., "Anything that is on sale in the meat-market eat, not asking any question of conscience". μάκελλον is a term of late Gr., borrowed from Latin (macellum): possibly a local word, introduced by the colonia; for the anarthrous ἐν μακ., cf. note on ἐν σταδίῳ (ix. 24).—μηδὲν ἀνακρίνοντες διὰ συνείδησιν might mean "for conscience' sake (to avoid embarrassment of conscience) making no enquiry" (Cm., Er., Hf., El., Holsten), as though addressed to men of weak conscience—Bg. however, "propter conscientiam alienam" (referring to 29); or, "because of your (sc. strong) conscience making no enquiry"—since you are not troubled with scruples (Est., Mr., Ed.); or, "making no enquiry on the ground of conscience," the adv. phrase simply defining the kind of question deprecated (so Bz., Hn., Bt., Gd., Ev.): the last interpretation best suits the generality of the terms, and the connexion with ver. 26. For ἀνακρίνω, see ii. 14, iv. 3, ix. 3, and notes; it signifies enquiry with a view to judgment at the bar of conscience.—μηδέν, acc. of definition, as in Acts x. 20, xi. 12; Sm. baldly renders it as transitive obj., "examining nothing"—kein Fleischstück untersuchend! For μὴ in ptpl. clause, see Wr., p. 606.—The citation from Ps. xxiv. 1, recalling the argument of viii. 4 ff., quiets the buyer's conscience: consecration to an idol cannot deprive the Lord of anything that belongs to "the earth and its fulness," and which His providence supplies for His servants' need; cf. Rom. xiv. 6*b*, 14, 1 Tim. iv. 4.—πλήρωμα, in its primary sense, id quo res impletur (cf. Lt., Colossians, pp. 257 ff.); "terra si arboribus, herbis, animalibus etc., careret, esset tanquam domus supellectile et omnibus instrumentis vacua" (Cv.).

Ver. 27: a case parl. to that of vv. 25 f., attached therefore asyndetically; cf. the two clauses of ver. 16. When one buys for himself, the question arises at the shop; when he is the guest of another, it arises at the table. "If some one invites you, of the unbelievers, and you determine to go."—τῶν ἀπίστων is emphatic by position: in a non-Christian house sacrificial meat was likely to be used, and here the Christian's conduct q Mt. xxii. 3 ff.; Lk. vii. 39, xiv. 7 ff.; Jo. ii. 2; Esth. v. 12.

r See vi. 6.
s Lk. x. 8; Mk. vi.41; Acts xvi. 34; Gen. xliii. 31 f.

τις [q]καλεῖ ὑμᾶς τῶν [r]ἀπίστων[1] καὶ θέλετε πορεύεσθαι, πᾶν τὸ [s]παρατιθέμενον ὑμῖν ἐσθίετε, μηδὲν [m]ἀνακρίνοντες διὰ τὴν [n]συνείδησιν· 28. ἐὰν δέ τις ὑμῖν[2] εἴπῃ, "Τοῦτο [t]εἰδωλόθυτόν[3] ἐστι," μὴ ἐσθίετε, δι' ἐκεῖνον τὸν [u]μηνύσαντα καὶ τὴν [n]συνείδησιν, [o]τοῦ[4] γὰρ Κυρίου[4] ἡ γῆ[4] καὶ τὸ [p]πλήρωμα αὐτῆς[4]· 29. [n]συνείδησιν δὲ [v]λέγω οὐχὶ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ,[5] ἀλλὰ [l]τὴν τοῦ [l]ἑτέρου· [w]ἱνατί γὰρ ἡ

t ιεροθυτον, h.l.; see txtl. and exeg. notes. u Lk. xx. 37; Acts xxiii. 30; Jo. xi. 57; 2 Macc. iii. 7, vi. 11, xiv. 37. v In this sense, see i. 12. w Mt. ix. 4, xxvii. 46; Lk. xiii. 7; Acts iv. 25, vii. 26.

[1] Add εις δειπνον DG, latt., some codd. of vg. sah.: a characteristic Western gloss.

[2] Om. υμιν G, latt. vg.

[3] ιεροθυτον, ℵABH, sah., some latt. codd., Julian (as instanced in Cyr.[229]) also Cyr.[233]. A Biblical h.l.; see note below.

[4] Om. του γαρ Κυρ. . . . αυτης all pre-Syrian uncc. and verss. (including vg.),—repeated from ver. 26; C[3] adds it to ver. 31 instead.

[5] For εαυτου D* has the correction σεαυτου; H and some others, εμαυτου.

would be narrowly watched.—θέλετε in N.T., as in cl. Gr. (see Lidd., under βούλομαι, as against Gm. under θέλω: cf. note on xii. 11), signifies will, active purpose, not mere wish ("are disposed to go," E.V.); the invited make up their mind to go, are bent on it (P. "non valde probat," Bg.; "a hint that it would be wise to keep away," El.); the next clause discovers them there, with the viands before them. P. assumes social intercourse of Christians with heathen—not with false Christians (v. 10 f.); there can be no question, after vv. 20 ff., of attending an idol-feast or κατακεῖσθαι ἐν εἰδωλίῳ (viii. 10).—τ. παρατιθέμενον replaces τ. πωλούμενον of ver. 25; the rest is a repetition: no more need to raise the question of conscience in the one case than in the other.

Vv. 28, 29*a*. ἐὰν δὲ . . . εἴπῃ, "But if any one say to you"—a probable contingency, as εἴ τις καλεῖ κ.τ.λ. (27) was an assumed fact; see Bn. on the forms of the Condit. Sentence, §§ 242 ff.—δὲ confronts this contingency with both the situations described in vv. 25 and 27. The information, "This is sacrificial meat," might be volunteered to the Christian purchaser in the market (by the salesman, or a by-stander), or to the Christian guest at the unbeliever's table (by the host, or by a fellow-guest), the communication being prompted by civility and the wish to spare the supposed susceptibilities of the Christian, or by the desire to embarrass him; whatever its occasion or motive, it alters the situation. The genuine reading, ἱερόθυτον (slain-as-sacred, i.e., in sacrifice), takes the statement as from the mouth of unbelievers; a Jew or Christian would presumably say εἰδωλόθυτον, as above and here in T.R.: Reuss and El. suppose the informant to be "a Christian converted from heathenism" using the inoffensive term "at the table of a heathen host"; but τ. ἀπίστων suggests heathen company, and μηνύσαντα private information. "Forbear eating (μὴ ἐσθίετε, revoking the permission of 25 ff.) for the sake of him that informed (you), and for conscience' sake."—Μηνύω (see parls.), to disclose what does not appear on the surface or is imparted secretly. The informant expects the Christian to be shocked; with his συνήθεια τ. εἰδώλου (viii. 7), he looks on the flesh of the sacrifice as having acquired a religious character (it is ἱερόθυτον); by saying Τοῦτο ἱερόθυτον, he calls conscience into play—whose conscience the next clause shows.—διὰ τὸν μηνύσαντα καὶ τὴν συνείδησιν form one idea, being governed by the same prp., καὶ adding an explanation; from regard to the conscience of the μηνύσας—not his possible contempt or ill-will—the Christian should decline the offered flesh or stop eating it.—συνείδησιν δὲ λέγω, οὐ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ κ.τ.λ., "Conscience however I mean, not one's own, but that of the other". Ver. 29*a* explains the διὰ τ. συνείδησιν of ver. 28, and reconciles its instruction with that of vv. 25, 27, while it brings the matter under the governing rule laid down in vv. 23 f. By contrast with "the other," the 2nd pl. of ver. 28 becomes here 2nd sing. reflexive.

Vv. 29*b*, 30 justify, in two rhetorical questions, the Christian's deference to

[x] ἐλευθερία μου κρίνεται ὑπὸ [y] ἄλλης [a] συνειδήσεως; 30. [b] εἰ δὲ [1] ἐγὼ [z] χάριτι [a] μετέχω, [b] τί [b] βλασφημοῦμαι [c] ὑπὲρ [c] οὗ ἐγὼ [d] εὐχαριστῶ; 31. εἴτε οὖν ἐσθίετε εἴτε πίνετε, εἴτε τι ποιεῖτε, πάντα [e] εἰς [e] δόξαν Θεοῦ ποιεῖτε. 32. [f] ἀπρόσκοποι γίνεσθε [2] καὶ [2] [g] Ἰουδαίοις [2] καὶ [g] Ἕλλησι καὶ τῇ [h] ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ [h] Θεοῦ· 33. καθὼς κἀγὼ πάντα πᾶσιν [i] ἀρέσκω, μὴ [k] ζητῶν τὸ ἐμαυτοῦ [l] συμφέρον [3] ἀλλὰ τὸ [m] τῶν

x 2 Cor. iii. 17; Rom. viii. 21; Gal. ii. 5, v. 1, 13; Jas. i. 25, ii. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 16; 2 Pet. ii. 19.
y H.l. in this use; cf. Job xix. 27.
z In this sense, xv. 57; 5 times more in P.; Lk. vi. 32 ff.
a See ix. 12.
b With human obj., Rom. iii. 8, xiv. 16; Tit. iii. 2; 1 Pet. iv. 4. For interr. after ει, see xii. 17.
c For the ellipsis, cf. vii. 1, etc.
d Absol., xi. 24, xiv. 17; 1 Th. v. 18; see i. 4.
e See ii. 7.
f Ph. i. 10; Acts xxiv. 16; Sir. xxxv. (xxxii.) 21.
g In this antithesis, i. 24; Rom. i. 16, ii. 9 f., iii. 9, x. 12; Gal. iii. 28; Col. iii. 11; Acts xiv. 1, xviii. 4, xix. 10, 17, xx. 21.
h See i. 2.
i See vii. 32.
k See ver. 24.
l συμφορον, see vii. 35.
m See ver. 17.

[1] Om. δε all but a few minuscc., with Thd. and Oec.

[2] και Ιουδαιοις γινεσθε (in this order): ℵ*ABC, 17, 37, 73.

[3] συμφορον, ℵ*ABC.

the conscience of another: (a) ἵνα τί γὰρ κ.τ.λ.; "For to what purpose is my liberty judged by another conscience?" i.e. "What good end will be served by my eating under these circumstances, and exposing my freedom to the censure of an unsympathetic conscience?" cf. ii. 15, Matt. vii. 6. ἵνα τί (γένηται); ut quid? (Vg.), signifies purpose, not ground as Mr. and others take it; there is nothing to be gained by the exercise of liberty in this case. For κρίνω in adverse sense, see parls. For the previous συνείδ. τὴν τοῦ ἑτέρου (alterius), ἄλλης (alienæ) συνειδήσεως is substituted (cf. xv. 29, 2 Cor. xi. 4), indicating a distinction not merely in the persons but in the consciences severally possessed. The Ap. says here of Liberty what he says of Faith in Rom. xiv. 22: κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ.—Question (b) intimates that, instead of any benefit resulting from the assertion of liberty in face of conscientious condemnation, positive harm ensues—thanksgiving leads to blasphemy! "If I with thanks (or by grace) partake, why am I blasphemed over (that for) which I give thanks?" The τί is prospective, as in xv. 29 f. = εἰς τί or ἵνα τί; The bare χάριτι can scarcely mean here "by (the) grace (of God)"—esp. in view of εὐχαριστῶ; cf. Rom. xiv. 6 and 16 (for βλασφημοῦμαι). Men of heathen conscience, seeing the Christian give thanks knowingly over food devoted to the idol, will regard his act as one of sacrilegious indulgence and denounce it accordingly; it seems to them a revolting hypocrisy; "Quelle religion est celle-là? devaient dire les païens" (Gd.)—a grievous πρόσκομμα both to Jews and Greeks (32); cf. Rom. ii. 24.—ὑπὲρ οὗ absorbs the dem. pron. governed by the same prp.; cf. vii. 39, 2 Cor. ii. 3. The repeated emphatic ἐγὼ points to the Christian as devout on his own part, yet incurring the scandal of gross irreverence.

Vv. 31, 32 conclude the matter with two solemn, comprehensive rules, introduced by the collective οὖν (cf. Rom. v. 9, xi. 22), relating to God's glory and to man's salvation. The supreme maxim of duty, πάντα εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ ποιεῖτε, applies to all that Christians "eat or drink" (including the idolothyta),—indeed to whatever they "do"; cf. Rom. xiv. 20 ff., Col. iii. 17.—A second general rule emerges from the discussion: "Offenceless prove yourselves, both to Jews and to Greeks and to the church of God". ἀπρόσκοποι here act., as in Sir. xxxv. 21, not causing to stumble; elsewhere pass. in sense. For γίνεσθε, see note on vii. 23. The three classes named make up Paul's world of men: "Jews" and "Greeks" embrace all outside the Church (i. 22, ix. 20 f.); Christian believers alone form "the Church of God" (cf. i. 2, and note; also Gal. vi. 16). This text and xii. 28 afford the first ex. in P. of the comprehensive use of ἐκκλησία, as transcending local ref. "The church of God" is bound up with His glory (31); its sacredness supplies a new deterrent from self-indulgence. It contains "the weak" who are liable to injury (viii. 9, ix. 22).

Ver. 33, xi. 1. Paul's personal example played a large part in his argument (ix.); it is fitting he should refer to it in summing up. The negative ἀπρόσκοποι γίνεσθε, in 2nd person, now becomes the positive ἐγὼ πάντα πᾶσιν ἀρέσκω in the 1st: "As I also in all things please all." ἀρέσκω is to comply with, accom-

a See iv. 16. m πολλῶν, ἵνα σωθῶσι· XI. 1. [a] μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε, καθὼς κἀγὼ b Vv. 17, 22; Rom. xv. 11; Lk. xvi. 8; -νος, iv. 5. Χριστοῦ.
c In this tense, 2 Tim. i. 4. 2. [b] Ἐπαινῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί,[1] ὅτι πάντα μου [c] μέμνησθε, καὶ Cf. iv. 17. μνημονευω common in this sense.

[1] Om. αδελφοι ℵABCP, 46, 73, sah. cop.—a Western addition.

modate oneself to, not give enjoyment to (cf. Rom. xv. 1, 3)—no need to speak of a "conative present," resembling ζητῶ ἀρέσκειν. Paul's universal compliance is qualified by its purpose, ἵνα σωθῶσιν, in the light of which the verbal contradiction with Gal. i. 10, 1 Thess. ii. 4, is removed; there is nothing in his power that P. will not do for any man, to help his salvation (cf. ix. 22*b*).—Between the ἀρέσκω and its purpose lies the μὴ ζητῶν clause, in which the Ap. professes for himself the rule commended to the Cor. in ver. 27. The "self-advantage" which P. sets aside, touches his highest welfare (cf. Rom. ix. 3); P. sacrificed what seemed to be his spiritual as well as material gain—spending, e.g., weary hours in tent-making that might have been given to pious study—to secure spiritual gain for others; thus "losing himself," he "found himself unto life eternal." "The many," in contrast with the single self; cf. ver. 17, Rom. v. 15 ff. —Through his own pattern P. points the readers to that of his Master and theirs: "Show yourselves (γίνεσθε, see 32, vii. 23) imitators of me, as I also (am) of Christ". P. does not point his readers backward to the historical model ("of Jesus," or "Jesus Christ," as in Eph. iv. 21), but upward to the actual "Christ," whose existence is evermore devoted to God (Rom. vi. 10 f.) and to men His brethren (Rom. viii. 34 f., i. 30), "in" whom the Cor. believers "are" (i. 2, 30). Paul's imitatio Christi turns on the great acts of Christ's redeeming work (Eph. v. 2, Phil. ii. 5-11), rather than on the incidents of His earthly course.

Division IV. Disorders in Worship and Church Life, xi.-xiv. The Ap. returns to the internal affairs of the Church, which occupied him in Div. I., dealing however not as at the outset with the relations of the Cor. Church to its ministry, but with the mutual relations and behaviour of its members within the society. The questions arising under this head are bound up with the moral and social problems of Divs. II. and III., and several leading topics of former chaps. reappear in a new connexion—e.g., the Christian relationship of the sexes (common to v., vi., and xi.), the Lord's Supper (x. and xi.), the superiority of Love to Knowledge (viii. and xiii.). The matters treated in these chaps. are well defined: (1) the unveiling of the head by women in public worship, xi. 2-16; (2) profanation of the Lord's Table, 17-34; (3) the exercise of spiritual gifts, xii. 1-11 and xiv.—.a subject which leads the Ap. into two digressions: (a) on the corporate nature of the Church, xii. 12-31; (b) on the supremacy of love, xiii. As in the earlier parts of the letter, the train of thought is objectively dictated; the matters taken up arise from the faulty state of the Cor. Church, and were supplied to the writer partly, as in chh. vii.-x., by the Church Letter, and partly by information conveyed in other ways (see xi. 18, and Introd., chap. ii.), which indicated the existence of disorders and scandals within the community of the gravity of which it was unaware.

§ 35. The Woman's Veil, xi. 2-6. P. is glad to believe that the Church at Cor. is loyal to his instructions (2); he interrupts his censures by a word of praise. This commendation, however, he proceeds to qualify. First, in respect of a matter whose underlying principles his readers had not grasped: he hears that some women speak in Church-meetings, and that bareheaded! For a woman to discard the veil means to cast off masculine authority, which is a fixed part of the Divine order, like man's subordination to Christ (3 f.). She who so acts disgraces her own head, and only needs to go a step further to rank herself with the degraded of her sex (5 f.).

Ver. 2. The praise here given is so little suggested by the context, and to little accords with the tone of the Ep., esp. with what was said in the like connexion in iv. 16 f., that one conjectures the Ap. to be quoting professions made in the Letter from Cor. rather than writing simply out of his own mind: "Now I praise you that [as you say] 'in all things you remember me, and hold fast the in-καθὼς [d] παρέδωκα ὑμῖν τὰς [e] παραδόσεις κατέχετε. 3. [f] θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς [f] εἰδέναι ὅτι παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἡ κεφαλὴ ὁ [1] Χριστός ἐστι, κεφαλὴ δὲ [g] γυναικὸς ὁ [g] ἀνήρ, κεφαλὴ δὲ [h] Χριστοῦ [2] ὁ [h] Θεός. 4. πᾶς ἀνὴρ [i] προσευχόμενος ἢ [k] προφητεύων, [l] κατὰ [l] κεφαλῆς ἔχων, [m] κα-d In this sense, ver. 23, xv. 3; Lk. i. 2; Acts xvi. 4.

e Gal. i. 14; Col. ii. 8; 2 Th. ii. 15, iii. 6; Mt. xv. 2, etc.
f Col. ii. 1; cf. x. 1 above.
g For the contrast, vii. 3 ff.; Rom. vii. 2; Eph. v. 22; Col. iii. 18 f.; 1 Tim. ii. 12-15; 1 Pet. iii. 1; Mk. x. 2 ff.
h i. 24, iii. 23, xv. 24-28, 57; 2 Cor. i. 19, iv. 6, v. 18 f.; Eph. i. 17, 20, iii. 21; Ph. ii. 5-11; Col. i. 15, 19; 1 Tim. ii. 5; Tit. iii. 6; Heb. i., iii. 6, etc.; 1 Pet. iv. 11; Jo. i. 1 f., xvii. 3 f., etc.; 1 Jo. iv. 9 f., etc.
i Absol., xiv. 14 f.; Eph. vi. 18; 1 Th. v. 17; 1 Tim. ii. 8, etc.
k xiii. 9, xiv. 1 ff.; Acts ii. 17 f., etc.; Mt. vii. 22; Lk. i. 67.
l Esth. vi. 12.
m See i. 27.

[1] Om. ο B*D*G; so W.H. marg.

[2] του Χριστου, ℵABD, 17, 37, 46, Clem. CGKLP om. του. See note below.

structions as I delivered them to you'". For such adoption by P. of the words of his readers, see notes on viii. 1 ff. Self-esteem characterised this Church (iv. 8 ff., v. 2); the declaration was sincere, and contained a measure of truth; P. accepts it for what it is worth.—δέ, introducing the new topic, marks also the connexion between vv. 1 and 2: "I bid you imitate me—but I am glad to know (from your letter) that you do".—πάντα, acc. of definition (not obj.), as in ix. 25, x. 33; the vb. regularly governs a gen. in N.T.: μέμνησθε, like memini, a pf. pres.—"you have been kept in remembrance of me".—παρά-δοσις, a "giving-over" (without the associations of our tradition), applies to historical fact, teaching, or rules of practice delivered, through whatever means, to the keeping of others: for reference to fact and usage, see ver. 23; to fact and doctrine, xv. 1; to the three combined, as here, 2 Thess. ii. 15; for its currency in Jewish Schools, Matt. xv. 2 ff., etc.—κατέχετε, as in xv. 2 = κρατεῖτε, 2 Thess. ii. 15. καθὼς κ.τ.λ. implies maintenance in form as well as substance, observance of the τύπος διδαχῆς (Rom. vi. 17).

Ver. 3. θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι (= οὐ θέλω κ.τ.λ. of x. 1; see note): "But I would have you know"—the previous commendation throws into relief the coming censure. The indecorum in question offends against a foundation principle, viz., that of subordination under the Divine government; this the Cor., with all their knowledge, cannot "know," or they would not have allowed their women to throw off the ἐξουσία ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς (10). The violated principle is thus stated: "Of every man the Christ is the head, while the man is head of woman, and God is head of Christ". As to the wording of this sentence: παντὸς ἀνδρὸς bears emphasis in the 1st clause asserting, like the parl. 2nd clause, a universal truth which holds of the man (vir) as such; the predicate of the 1st clause is distinguished by the def. art.,—"Christ is the (proper, essential) head," etc. (cf. ἡ εἰρήνη, Eph. ii. 14, and see Bm., pp. 124 f.); ὁ Χριστός, in 1st and 3rd clauses, means "the Christ" in the wide scope of His offices (cf. x. 4, xii. 12, xv. 22); for anarthrous κεφαλὴ γυναικός, cf. note on ii. 5. That Christ is "every man's" true head is an application of the revealed truth that He is the "one Lord" of created nature (viii. 6; Col. i. 15 f.), combined with the palpable fact that the ἀνήρ has no (intervening) lord in creation (cf. 9); he stands forth in worship, amidst his family, with no visible superior, holding headship direct from his Maker, and brought by his manhood into direct responsibility to Him "through whom are all things". Ed., following Cm. and Mr. (not Hn.), limits this manly subordination to the Christian order of life; "the man is head of the woman in virtue of the marriage union, Christ of the man in virtue of union with Him through faith": but faith is common to the sexes, on this footing οὐκ ἔνι ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ (Gal. iii. 28); on the other hand, in Pauline theology, the law of marriage and the social order are grounded in Christ. Paul's argument has no force unless the parl. assertions rest on a common basis. The question is one that touches the fundamental proprieties of life (8-15); and the three headships enumerated belong to the hierarchy of nature.—"The Christ" of the 3rd clause is "the Christ" of the 1st, without distinction made of natures or states; He who is "every man's head," the Lord of nature, presents the pattern of loyalty in His perfect obedience to the Father (xv. 28, Gal. iv. 4; Heb. v. 5, 8, etc.); cf. iii. 22 f., where ταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ· 5. πᾶσα δὲ γυνὴ [l] προσευχομένη ἢ [k] προφητεύουσα [n] ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ, [m] καταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν ἑαυτῆς,[1] [o] ἓν γάρ ἐστι καὶ τὸ [o] αὐτὸ τῇ [p] ἐξυρημένῃ· 6. εἰ γὰρ οὐ [q] κατακαλύπτεται γυνή, καὶ [r] κειράσθω· εἰ δὲ [s] αἰσχρὸν γυναικὶ τὸ [r] κείρασθαι ἢ [p] ξυρᾶσθαι, [q] κατακαλυπτέσθω.

n N.T. h.l.; Lev. xiii. 45.
o xii. 11.
p Acts xxi. 24; Numb. vi. 9.
q N.T. h.l.; Gen. xxxviii. 15, etc.
r Acts viii. 32, xviii. 18; 2 Ki. xiv. 26.
s xiv. 35; Eph. v. 12; Tit. i. 11; Gen. xli. 3, etc.

[1] αυτης (?) all uncc. but BDcK, in conformity with ver. 4. W.H. place εαυτης in marg. The reading αυτης has the appearance of a harmonistic emendation.

with the same δέ . . . δὲ a chain of subordinate possession is drawn out, corresponding to this subordination of rule. Submission in office, whether of woman to man or Christ to God, consists with equality of nature.

Vv. 4, 5: the high doctrine just asserted applied to the matter of feminine attire. Since man qua man has no head but Christ, before whom they worship in common, while woman has man to own for her head, he must not and she must be veiled. The regulation is not limited to those of either sex who "pray or prophesy"; but such activity called attention to the apparel, and doubtless it was amongst the more demonstrative women that the impropriety occurred; in the excitement of public speaking the shawl might unconsciously be thrown back. προσευχόμενος κ.τ.λ., "when he (she) prays or prophesies,"—in the act of so doing.—κατὰ κεφαλῆς ἔχων, "wearing down from the head (a veil": κάλυμμα understood), the practice being for the woman in going out of the house to throw the upper fold or lappet of her robe over her head so as to cover the brow: see Peplos in the Dict. of Antiq. ἀκατακαλ. τ. κεφαλῇ, "with the head uncovered," dat. of manner, as χάριτι in x. 30.—Is it the literal or figurative "head" that is meant as obj. to καταισχύνει? Ver. 3 requires the latter sense, while the sequel suggests the former; Al. and Ed. think both are intended at once. Hf. is probably right in abiding by the reading ἑαυτῆς (see txtl. note); he supposes that the Ap. purposely broke off the parallelism at the end of ver. 5, thus sharpening his reproof: the man who wears a veil "puts to shame his head"—i.e. Christ, whose lordship he represents (7); the woman who discards it "puts to shame her own head"—the dishonour done to the dominant sex falls upon herself. That the shame comes home to her is shown by the supporting sentence: ἓν γάρ ἐστιν καὶ τὸ αὐτό (cf. iii. 8) τῇ ἐξυρημένῃ, "for she is one and the same thing with her that is shaven" (Mr., Ev., Bt., Ed., El.); "It is one and the same thing," etc. (E.V.), would require τῷ ἐξυρῆσθαι. Amongst Greeks only the hetæræ, so numerous in Cor., went about unveiled; slave-women wore the shaven head—also a punishment of the adulteress (see Wetstein in loc., and cf. Num. v. 18); with these the Christian woman who emancipates herself from becoming restraints of dress, is in effect identified. To shave the head is to carry out thoroughly its unveiling, to remove nature's as well as fashion's covering (15).

Ver. 6, with a second γάρ, presses the above identity; the Ap. bids the woman who discards the veil carry her defiance a step further: "For if a woman is not veiled, let her also crop (her head); but if it is a disgrace for a woman to crop (it) or to keep (it) shaven, let her retain the veil" (καλυπτέσθω, pr. impv., continuous). P. uses the modus tollens of the hypothetical syllogism: "If a woman prefers a bare head, she should remove her hair; womanly feeling forbids the latter, then it should forbid the former, for the like shame attaches to both." The argument appeals to Gr. and Eastern sentiment; "physical barefacedness led to the inference of moral, in a city like Corinth" (Ev.). κειράσθω and κείρασθαι, aor. mid., denote a single act on the woman's part, "to cut off her locks"; ξυρᾶσθαι, pres. mid.,—a shaven condition; the single art. comprises the infs. in one view.—Paul's directions do not agree precisely with current practice. Jewish men covered their heads at prayers with the Tallith (cf. the allusion of 2 Cor. iii. 14 ff.)—this custom, retained probably by some Jews at Christian meetings (4), P. corrects without censure; women were both veiled and kept behind a screen. Amongst the Greeks,

7. Ἀνὴρ μὲν γὰρ οὐκ [t] ὀφείλει [q] κατακαλύπτεσθαι τὴν κεφαλήν, [u] εἰκὼν καὶ [v] δόξα [v] Θεοῦ [w] ὑπάρχων, γυνὴ [1] δὲ [v] δόξα ἀνδρός ἐστιν· 8. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικός, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ ἐξ ἀνδρός· 9. καὶ γὰρ οὐκ [x] ἐκτίσθη ἀνὴρ διὰ τὴν γυναῖκα, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ διὰ τὸν ἄνδρα·

t See vii. 36.
u Gen. i. 26 f.; cf. xv. 49; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Rom. i. 23, viii. 29; Col. i. 15, iii. 10.
v Cf. 2 Cor. iv. 6; Ph. i. 11; Heb. i. 3; Jo. i. 14, xvii. 22; Ps. xviii. 1.
w See vii. 26.
x Rom. i. 25; Col. i. 16, iii. 10; 1 Tim. iv. 11; Mt. xix. 4; Mk. xiii. 19.

[1] η γυνη δε: ℵ^c ABD*G.

both sexes worshipped with uncovered head, although women covered their heads at other times (see Hermann, Gottesdienstl. Alterthümer, § 36, 18 f.; Plato, Phædo, 89B, C), while Roman men and women alike covered their heads during religious rites (Servius ad Æn., iii., 407). The usage here prescribed seems to be an adaptation of Gr. custom to Christian conceptions. With us the diff. of sex is more strongly marked in the general attire than with the ancients; but the draped head has still its appropriateness, and the distinction laid down in this passage has been universally observed.—The woman is recognised by the side of the man as "praying" and "prophesying" (see note on xii. 10); there is no ground in the text for limiting the ref. in her case to the exercise of these gifts in domestic and private circles (thus Hf., Bt., and some others); on the contradiction with xiv. 34, see note ad loc. Under the Old Covenant women were at times signally endued with supernatural powers, and the prophetess occasionally played a leading public part (e.g. Deborah and Huldah); in the Christian dispensation, from Acts i. 14 onwards, they receive a more equal share in the powers of the Spirit (see Acts ii. 17 f., Gal. iii. 28). But in the point of ἐξουσία there lies an ineffaceable distinction.

§ 36. MAN AND WOMAN IN THE LORD, xi. 7-16. The Ap. has insisted on the woman's retaining the veil in token of the Divine order pervading the universe, which Christ exhibits in His subordination to the Father. But he has some further observations to make on the relative position of the sexes. In the first place, he bases what he has said of the headship of man on the story of creation, exhibiting man as the direct reflexion of God, woman as derived and auxiliary (7-9); in this connexion the ref. to "the angels" must be understood (10). At the same time, man and woman are necessary each to the other and derive alike from God (11 f.). Having thus grounded the matter upon Christian principle, P. appeals in confirmation to natural feeling (13-15), and finally to the unbroken custom of the Church (16).

Ver. 7. ἀνὴρ (not ὁ ἀνὴρ) μὲν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.: "For man indeed (being man) ought not to have his head veiled" (καλύπτεσθαι, pr. inf. of custom), in contrast with woman who ought (5, 10)—this is as wrong on his part as it is right on hers; οὐκ negatives the whole sentence, as in ver. 1. ὀφείλει, like δεῖ (19), denotes moral or rational necessity, the former vb. in a more personal, the latter in a more abstract way. For him to veil his head would be to veil the "image and glory of God"; Christ, the image of God, became ἄνθρωπος as ἀνήρ.—ὑπάρχων (see parls.), "being constituted" so. To accompany εἰκών, P. substitutes for the ὁμοίωσις (d'muth) of Gen. the more expressive δόξα—by which the LXX renders the synonymous t'munah of Ps. xvii. 15—God's "glory" being His likeness in visible splendour; cf. Heb. i. 3. P. conceives Gen. i. 26 to apply to Adam as ἀνὴρ primarily, although in ver. 27 it stands, "God created man in His own image . . . male and female created He them".—ἡ γυνὴ δὲ κ.τ.λ. presents a shortened antithesis to the μὲν clause; logically completed it reads, "But the woman (ought to have her head veiled, for she) is the glory of the man"—δόξα ἀνδρός—not of the race (ἀνθρώπου), but of the stronger sex. Paul omits εἰκών, which does not hold here; she is not man's reflexion, but his counterpart—not "like to like, but like in difference," wedded as "perfect music unto noble words"; she partakes, through him, in the εἰκὼν Θεοῦ (Gen. i. 27). That which in our common nature is most admirable —faith, purity, beauty—man sees more excellently and proportionately shown in hers. It follows that he who degrades a woman sullies his manhood, and is the worst enemy of his race; the respect shown to women is the measure and safeguard of human dignity.

10. διὰ τοῦτο [y] ὀφείλει ἡ γυνὴ [y] ἐξουσίαν [z] ἔχειν [z] ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, διὰ τοὺς [a] ἀγγέλους. 11. [b] πλὴν οὔτε ἀνὴρ [1] χωρὶς γυναικός,[1] οὔτε γυνὴ [1] χωρὶς ἀνδρὸς [1] ἐν Κυρίῳ· 12. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ γυνὴ ἐκ τοῦ ἀνδρός, οὕτω καὶ ὁ ἀνὴρ διὰ τῆς γυναικός· τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ

y Cf. vii. 37; see note below.
z Rev. xiv. 14. ἐπι in like connection, Jo. xx. 7; Rev. i. 20, vii. 3, etc., xii. 1, etc. 31; Mk. xiii. 27; Lk. xvi. 22.
a In pl. abs., with art., xiii. 1; Heb. i. 4 ff.; Mt. xiii. 49, xxv. passim; Lam. iii. 3.
b Eph. v. 33; Ph. i. 18, iii. 16, iv. 14; Rev. ii. 25; Mt., Lk.,

[1] γυνη χωρις ανδρος . . . ανηρ χωρις γυναικος (in this order): all uncc. but DbKL, all anc. verss. but syrr. and vg.

Vv. 8, 9 add two more to the chain of for's extending from ver. 6: a double reason for asserting that woman is man's glory appears in the revelation of the origin of mankind made by Scripture (Gen. ii. 18-25: the second narrative of Creation, J of the critics), where Eve is represented as framed from a rib taken out of Adam's body to be his "help-mate". Woman originates from (ἐστὶν ἐκ), and was created for (because of, ἐκτίσθη διά) man, not vice versa.—"ἐκτίσθη differs from ἐστὶν as purpose from fact," (Ed.).—καὶ γάρ, "For also" (9)—the second statement goes to explain the first: Man was there already; and Woman was fashioned out of him for his need. Whether the story of the extracted rib is read as poetry or prosaic fact, the relationship set forth is the same.

Ver. 10 is the counterstatement to ver. 7*a*, undeveloped there: "For this reason the woman is bound to wear authority upon her head"—sc., the reason made out in vv. 7*b*-9, that her nature is derived and auxiliary. The ἐξουσία (= σημεῖον ἐξουσίας) that she "has (wears)," is that to which she submits, with the veil "upon her head" for its symbol; cf. xii. 23, where τιμή = σημεῖον τιμῆς. So the soldier under the Queen's colours might be said to "have authority over his head". Ev. quotes Shakesp., Macb., iii., 4, "Present him eminence both with eye and tongue," as a parl. expression for the authority of another pictured in one-self.—διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους suggests, by way of after-thought, a supplementary motive for the decent veil, which the Ap. merely hints, leaving a crux for his interpreters. In iv. 9 he adduced the "angels" as interested spectators of the conduct of Christ's servants, and in vi. 3 he spoke of certain of them as to be judged by the saints (see notes); in manifold ways these exalted beings are associated with God's earthly kingdom (see Luke ii. 13, xii. 8, xv. 10, Acts i. 10, etc.; Heb. i. 14, xii. 22 f.; Rev. passim); in accordance with Jewish belief, they appear as agents of the Lawgiving in Gal. iii. 19 (Acts vii. 53), and in Heb. i. 7 are identified with the forces of nature. The same line of thought connects the angels here with the maintenance of the laws and limits imposed at Creation (cf. Job. xxxviii. 7), reverence for which P. expresses in his own style by this allusion; see Hn., Ed., and Gd. in loc. With this general view the interpretation is consistent which regards the angels as present in Divine worship and offended by irreverence and misconduct (see 1 Tim. v. 21), as (possibly) edified too by good behaviour (see Eph. iii. 10); cf. the ancient words of the Liturgy, "Therefore with Angels and Archangels, etc." A familiar thought with the Ff.; thus Cm. ad loc., "Open the eyes of faith, and thou shalt behold a multitude of angels; if the air is filled with angels, much more the Church"; and Thp., τοῖς ἀγγέλοις αἰδουμένη. Similarly Hooker, "The house of prayer is a Court beautified with the presence of Celestial powers; there we stand, we sing, we sound forth hymns to God, having His angels intermingled as our associates; with reference hereunto the Ap. doth require so great care to be taken of decency for the Angels' sake" (Eccl. Pol., v. 25. 2). P. cannot mean evil angels subject to sensual temptation, as many, after Tert., have read the passage, basing it on a precarious interpretation of Gen. vi. 4 (see Everling, Die paul. Angelologie u.s.w., pp. 32 ff.)—an explanation far-fetched and grossly improbable. Others have seen in these ἄγγελοι pious men, prophets, Church-officers, even match-makers! Others have proposed emendations of the text, substituting διὰ τοὺς ἀγελαίους or τὰς ἀγέλας, or διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας (during the preaching!). Baur, Sm., and others would delete the troublesome words as a primitive gloss.

Vv. 11, 12. πλὴν κ.τ.λ. modifies and guards the foregoing; this conj. lies

Θεοῦ. 13. ἐν[1] [c]ὑμῖν [c]αὐτοῖς[1] [c]κρίνατε· [d]πρέπον ἐστὶ γυναῖκα [e]ἀκατακάλυπτον τῷ Θεῷ προσεύχεσθαι; 14. ἢ[2] οὐδὲ αὐτὴ[3] ἡ [e]φύσις[3] διδάσκει ὑμᾶς ὅτι ἀνὴρ μὲν ἐὰν [f]κομᾷ, [g]ἀτιμία αὐτῷ ἐστι· 15. γυνὴ δὲ ἐὰν [f]κομᾷ, δόξα αὐτῇ ἐστιν; ὅτι ἡ [h]κόμη [i]ἀντὶ

c Cf. Lk. xii. 57. κρινατε, x. 15; Acts iv. 19; Jo. vii. 24.
d Mt. iii. 15 1 Macc. xii. 11. -πει, Eph. v. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 10; Tit. ii. 1; Heb. ii. 10, vii. 26; Ps. lxiv. 1.
e Rom. i. 26, ii. 14, 27, xi. 24; Gal. ii. 15, iv. 8; Eph. ii. 3.
f H.l. in Bib. Gr.
g xv. 43; Rom. i. 26, etc. -μος see iv. 10. -αζω, see Rom. i. 24, etc.
h N.T. h.l.: Numb. vi. 5.
i Lk: xi. 11; Jas. iv. 15.

[1] D latt. vg., Ambrst., Pelag. (Western) read υμεις αυτοι for εν υμιν αυτοις.

[2] Om. η all uncc. but DcKL.

[3] η φυσις αυτη (in this order): pre-Syrian uncc.

between δὲ and ἀλλὰ in its force—but besides, howbeit. What has been said in vv. 3-10 must not be overpressed: woman is subordinate, not inferior; the sexes are alike, and inseparably necessary to the Christian order (11); and if man is the fountain, woman is the channel of the race's life (12). οὔτε γυνὴ . . . οὔτε ἀνὴρ κ.τ.λ.: "Neither is there woman apart from man, nor man apart from woman in the Lord." Here Tennyson is the best commentator: "Either sex alone is half itself . . . each fulfils defect in each, and always thought in thought, purpose in purpose, will in will, they grow . . . the two-celled heart beating, with one full stroke, life". ἐν Κυρίῳ (cf. vii. 39, etc.), i.e. under the rule of Christ, where woman's rights are realised as nowhere in heathenism (cf. Gal. iii. 28, Eph. v. 28; also the wording of vii. 3 f. above). For the contrast of ἐκ and διά, see viii. 6; "the woman has an equivalent in the Divine order of nature, that as man is the initial cause of being to the woman, so woman is the instrumental cause of being to the man" (Ev.). But the ἀνὴρ is only a relative source; God is absolute Father—τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ (cf. viii. 6, i. 30 and note, Rom. xi. 36). To Him man and woman owe one reverence.

Ver. 13. There is a constitutional feeling which supports the above inference in favour of the woman's veil; it was implied already in the καταισχύνει and αἰσχρὸν of vv. 5 f., and is now explicitly stated: "Amongst yourselves (inter rather than intra vos ipsos) judge ye; is it seemly for a woman unveiled to be engaged in prayer (pr. inf.) to God?"—an appeal to social sentiment (cf. Rom. ii. 15, μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων), recalling the κρίνατε ὑμεῖς of x. 15. πρέπον (neut. ptp.: see parls.), as distinguished from ὀφείλω or δεῖ (7, 19), denotes befittingness, suitability to nature or character. τῷ Θεῷ lends solemnity to προσεύχεσθαι.

Vv. 14, 15. The question οὐδὲ ἡ φύσις αὐτὴ κ.τ.λ.; summons personal instinct to the aid of social sentiment: "Does not even nature of herself teach you that, etc.?" For ἡ φύσις, see Rom. ii. 14; in this connexion it points to man's moral constitution rather than to external regulations; Hf. and El. however, taking φύσις in the latter sense, reverse the order of thought in vv. 13 f., seeing in the former ver. individual instinct (they render ἐν ἑαυτοῖς within yourselves), and in this ver. social rule.—Hf. and Hn., by a strained constr. of διδάσκει, render ὅτι "because," and draw the obj. of "teach" from ver. 13, seeing in ὅτι κ.τ.λ. the ground of the affirmative answer tacitly given to both questions: "Does not nature of herself teach (this)? (Yes), for if a man have long hair, etc." The common rendering is preferable; the teaching of nature is expressed in a double sentence, which gathers the con sensus gentium on the subject: "that in a man's case, if he wear long hair (vir quidem si comam nutriat, Vg.), it is a dishonour to him; but in a woman's, if she wear long hair, it is a glory to her". ἀνήρ, γυνὴ stand in conspicuous antithesis preceding the conj.: what is discreditable in the one is delightful in the other. Homer's warriors, it is true, wore long hair (καρηκομοῶντες Ἀχαιοί), a fashion retained at Sparta; but the Athenian youth cropped his head at 18, and it was a mark of foppery or effeminacy (a legal ἀτιμία), except for the aristocratic Knights, to let the hair afterwards grow long. This feeling prevailed in ancient as it does in modern manners (cf. the case of Absalom). In the rule of the Nazirites natural instinct was set aside by an exceptional religious vocation. The woman's κόμη is not merely k Heb. i. 12 (Ps. ci. 26); Exod. xxii. 27; Job xxvi. 6; Ps. ciii. 6.

l See iii. 18.
m N.T. h.l.; Ezek. iii. 7. -κια, Lk. xxii. 24. -κειν, Prov. x. 12.
n See viii. 7.
o See i. 2; full expression, N.T. h.l. in pl. For pl. ἐκκλ., see vii. 17.
p See vii. 10.
q See ver. 2.

[k] περιβολαίου δέδοται [1] αὐτῇ.[1] 16. εἰ δέ τις [l] δοκεῖ [m] φιλόνεικος εἶναι, ἡμεῖς τοιαύτην [n] συνήθειαν οὐκ ἔχομεν οὐδὲ αἱ [o] ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ [o] Θεοῦ.

17. Τοῦτο δὲ [p] παραγγέλλων [2] οὐκ [q] ἐπαινῶ,[2] ὅτι οὐκ εἰς τὸ παραγγελλω ουκ επαινων: AC*G, 17, 46, 67, vg. syrsch. So Lachm., Tr., Al., W.H. marg. Both verbs in -ων: D*gr., 137; both in -ω: B. See note below.

[1] αυτῃ δεδοται: CHP, 37, 46. Om. αυτῃ DG (Western). T.R., as in ℵAB, etc.

[2] παραγγελλων ουκ επαινω: ℵC³DᶜGKLP, etc.; some latt. cop. So Tisch., W.H. txt., R.V., El., Nestle. External evidence fairly balanced.

no ἀτιμία, but a positive δόξα; herself the δόξα ἀνδρός, her beauty has in this its crown and ensign. And this "glory" is grounded upon her humility: "because her hair to serve as a hood (ἀντὶ περιβολαίου) has been given her"—not as a substitute for head-dress (this would be to stultify Paul's contention), but in the nature of a covering, thus to match the veil (en guise de voile, Gd.); cf. χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος, John i. 16; ἀντὶ κασιγνήτου ξεῖνος . . . τέτευκται, Odyss. viii. 456. δέδοται (pf. pass.) connotes a permanent boon (see 2 Cor. viii. 1, 1 John iii. 1, etc.). περιβόλαιον (from περιβάλλω), a wrapper, mantle, is here exceptionally used of head-gear.

Ver. 16 closes the discussion sharply, with its appeal to established Christian rule. If, after all that the Ap. has advanced in maintenance of the modest distinction between the sexes, any one is still minded to debate, he must be put down by authority—that of P. himself and his colleagues (ἡμεῖς), supported by universal Christendom; cf. xiv. 33, 37 ff.—δοκεῖ φιλόνεικος εἶναι, not "seems," but "thinks (presumes; see parls.) to be contentious"; εἴ τις takes ind. of the case supposed (as in x. 27), and too likely in quarrelsome Cor. φιλόνεικος, not amans victoriæ (Est.) as if from νική, but avidus litium (from νεῖκος),—a disputer for disputation's sake.—ἡμεῖς, in contrast with αἱ ἐκκλησίαι, means not "I and those like-minded" (Mr.), but "I and my fellow-ministers" or "I and the Apostles generally" (cf. iv. 6-13, xv. 11, 2 Cor. i. 19, iv. 13, etc.).—τοιαύτην συνήθειαν, the custom described in vv. 4 f. above, which gave rise to the whole discussion; not, as many understand it, the custom of being contentious (a temper, surely, rather than a custom): no one could think of the App. (ἡμεῖς) indulging such a habit! The advocates of feminine emancipation may have supposed that P., the champion of liberty, was himself on their side, and that the rejection of the veil was in vogue elsewhere; he denies both. For συνήθεια, Lat. con-suetudo, see viii. 7; for αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. 2, iv. 17, the pl. conveying the idea of unanimity amongst many. Those who explain "such a custom" as that of "being contentious," usually link this ver. with vv. 17 ff. It is true that the σχίσματα of the sequel, like the ἔριδες of i. 11, tended to φιλονεικία; in truth the disputatiousness of the Cor. ran into everything—a woman's shawl, or the merits of the Arch-apostles!

§ 37. THE CHURCH MEETING FOR THE WORSE, xi. 17-22. The Cor. Church had written self-complacently, expecting the Apostle's commendation upon its report (2). In reply P. has just pointed out one serious irregularity, which might indeed be put down to ignorance (3, 16). No such excuse is possible in regard to the disorders he has now to speak of, which are reported to him on evidence that he cannot discredit (18)—viz., the divisions apparent in the Church meetings (19), and the gross selfishness and sensuality displayed at the common meals (20 ff.). Such behaviour he certainly cannot praise (17, 22).

Ver. 17. If the T.R. be correct, τοῦτο (repeated in 22*b*) points to the instruction about to be given respecting the Lord's Supper: "Moreover (δέ), in giving you this charge I do not praise (you), seeing that, etc.": so Cm. and Gr. Ff., Er., Est., Bg., Hf., Hn., Sm. In vv. 3 ff. P. rectified an error, now he must censure a glaring fault; "le ton devient celui du blâme positif" (Gd.); vv. 3 and 17 both detract, in different degrees, from the "praise" of ver. 2. τοῦτο παραγγέλλων has to wait long for its explanation; P. lingers over his preliminary rehearsal of

[r] κρεῖττον[1] ἀλλ' εἰς τὸ [s] ἧττον[1] [t] συνέρχεσθε. 18. [u] πρῶτον [uv] μὲν [v] γάρ, [t] συνερχομένων ὑμῶν ἐν τῇ[2] ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἀκούω [w] σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῖν [x] ὑπάρχειν, καὶ [y] μέρος [y] τι πιστεύω· 19. [z] δεῖ γὰρ καὶ [a] αἱρέσεις ἐν ὑμῖν εἶναι, ἵνα[3] οἱ [b] δόκιμοι [c] φανεροὶ [c] γένωνται ἐν ὑμῖν. 20. [td] συνερχομένων οὖν ὑμῶν [d] ἐπὶ τὸ [d] αὐτό, οὐκ ἔστι [e] Κυριακὸν [f] δεῖπ-

r See vii. 9.
s N.T. h.l.; Isa. xxiii. 8. Adv. in 2 Cor. xii. 15; cf. vi. 7 above.
t Vv. 33 f., xiv. 23, 26; Acts i. 6, etc.; Mk. iii. 20, etc.
u Rom. i. 8, iii. 2; Heb. vii. 2; Jas. iii. 17; without μεν, xii. 28; xv. 46, etc.
v v. 3; 2 Cor. ix. 1, xi. 4; Rom. ii. 25, iii. 2; Heb. vii. 18, xii. 10; Acts xxviii. 22.
w See i. 10.
x See vii. 26.
y Bibl., h.l.; Thuc. iv. 30; Xen., Eq., i. 12, etc.
z See viii. 2.
a Gal. v. 20; 2 Pet. ii. 1; five times (sing.) in Acts.
b 2 Cor. x. 18, xiii. 7; Rom. xiv. 18, xvi. 10; 2 Tim. ii. 15; Jas. i. 12. αδοκ., ix. 27.
c See iii. 13.
d xiv. 23; with ειμι, vii. 5.
e Rev. i. 10. See note below.
f Jo. xiii. 2, 4; Rev. xix. 9, 17; Lk. xiv. 12 ff.

[1] κρεισσον . . . ησσον: all pre-Syrian uncc.

[2] Om. τη all uncc. and many minn.

[3] ινα και (?): BD*, 37, 71, vg. sah., Ambrst. So Treg., Lachm.; W.H., Nestle bracket και.

the founding of the Lord's Supper, and the "charge" is held in suspense; its gist becomes evident in vv. 20 f. Neither the feminine indecorum censured in the last § (to which τοῦτο is referred by Mr., Bt., Gd., El., etc.), nor the contentiousness glanced at in ver. 16 (by which Ev. and Ed. explain it), has been, strictly speaking, matter of a charge; moreover, the backward ref. of τοῦτο involves the awkwardness of associating ἐπαινῶ and its introductory ptp. with disconnected objects; these interpretations better fit the other reading, παραγγέλλω . . . ἐπαινῶν. With certain specific and solemn injunctions respecting the Eucharist in view, P. says, "I do not praise (you), in that not for the better but for the worse you come together".—ὅτι, with the like broad sense as in i. 5, ix. 10, gives at once the content and ground of dispraise. The general profitlessness of the Church assemblies reached its climax in the desecration of the Lord's Supper, their hallowing bond (x. 16 f.).

Ver. 18. The severe reproach, εἰς τὸ ἧσσον συνέρχεσθε, is justified by vv. 18-22, which lead round to the intended παραγγελία.—πρῶτον μὲν requires an ἔπειτα δέ, that is not forthcoming (cf. Rom. i. 8): the complement appears to lie in xii.-xiv.—viz., the abuse of spiritual gifts, a further and prominent ground of disapproval (Mr., Hn., El.). Bt. and Ed. find the antithesis in τὰ λοιπά, ver. 34*b.* Hf. renders πρῶτον "chiefly," dispensing with any complement, but μὲν supposes a mental δέ. Ver. 20 gives no contrasted ground of censure, it stands upon the same ground.—συνερχομένων ὑμῶν ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ (not τῇ ἐκκλ., in the Church): "as often as you come together in assembly"—ptp. pr. of repeated occurrence; the σχίσματα in Church meetings were chronic. For ἀκούω σχίσματα, see i. 10 f.; the pr. "I am hearing" suggests (in contrast with ἐδηλώθη above) continued information from various quarters (cf. v. 1, ἀκούεται): hence the qualifying μέρος τι (acc. of definition) πιστεύω, wanting in ch. i.; P. does not "believe" everything reported to him, but so much as is stated he does credit.—ὑπάρχειν (see parls.) implies not the bare fact, but a characteristic fact, a proprium of this Church—"have their place (are there) amongst you": cf. Acts xxviii. 18.

Ver. 19. Paul is prepared to believe what he thus hears; these divisions were inevitable: "For indeed parties must needs exist among you".—δεῖ affirms a necessity lying in the moral conditions of the case (see note on ὀφείλω, 7).—αἵρεσις (see parls., and note on i. 11; from αἱρέομαι, to choose) is more specific than σχίσμα, implying mental tendency —in philosophy a school, Richtung, then a sect or party formed on a basis of opinion: see Cr., s.v.; also Trench, Syn. § 4; "Heresy is theoretical schism, schism practical heresy". These words designate, as yet, parties within the Church; in Tit. iii. 10, 2 Peter ii. 1, they verge toward their ecclesiastical use. —Now there is a true purpose of God fulfilled in these unhappy divisions; they serve to sift the loyal from the disloyal. "in order that also the approved may become manifest among you". These αἱρέσεις are a magnet attracting unsound and unsettled minds, and leaving genuine believers to stand out "approved" by their constancy; see 2 Thess. ii. 11 f., where the same thought is differently νον φαγεῖν· 21. ἕκαστος γὰρ τὸ ἴδιον [f] δεῖπνον [g] προλαμβάνει [1] ἐν [2] τῷ φαγεῖν, καὶ [h] ὃς μὲν [i] πεινᾷ [h] ὃς δὲ [k] μεθύει· 22. [l] μὴ γὰρ οἰκίας [l] οὐκ ἔχετε εἰς τὸ ἐσθίειν καὶ πίνειν; [m] ἢ τῆς [n] ἐκκλησίας τοῦ [n] Θεοῦ [o] καταφρονεῖτε, καὶ [p] καταισχύνετε τοὺς [q] μὴ [q] ἔχοντας; τί ὑμῖν [3] εἴπω [3]; [r] ἐπαινέσω [4] ὑμᾶς; ἐν τούτῳ οὐκ [r] ἐπαινῶ.

g Gal. vi. 1 (in diff. sense); Mk. xiv. 8; Wisd. xvii. 16. h xii. 8, 28; 2 Cor. ii. 16; Rom. ix. 21, xiv. 2, 5; 2 Tim. ii. 20; Jude 22; once in Acts, nine times in Syn. GG. i See iv. 11. k 1 Th. v. 7; Acts ii. 15; Mt. xxiv. 49; Jo. ii. 10. l See ix. 4. m For η in double interrogg., cf. i. 13, ix. 8, 10 x. 19, xiv. 36. n See i. 2. o Rom. ii. 4; 1 Tim. iv. 12, vi. 2; Heb. xii. 2; 2 Pet. ii. 10; thrice in GG. p See i. 27. q Lk. iii. 11, xxii. 36. r See ver. 2.

[1] προσλαμβανει, A, some 20 minn. προ and προς often confused in comp. vbs.
[2] επι τῳ φαγειν: DG, vg. (ad manducandum).
[3] ειπω υμιν (in this order): all uncc. but KL.
[4] επαινω, BG, vg., Latt. Ff. For position of the interrog., see note below.

applied; also Rom. v. 4, ἡ ὑπομονὴ κατεργάζεται δοκιμήν, 1 Peter i. 7; also Tert., De Præscr. Hæret., 4, "ut fides habendo tentationem habeat etiam probationem". For δόκιμος, accepted on proof, see parls., esp. ix. 27; those approved with God thus "become manifest" to men; "l'effet est de manifester au grand jour les membres de l'église sérieux et de bon aloi" (Gd.). "Dominus talibus experimentis probat constantiam suorum. Pulchra consolatio!" (Cv.).

Vv. 20, 21 resume with emphasis the circumstantial clause of ver. 18 and draw out, by οὖν, the disastrous issue of the σχίσματα: they produce a visible separation at the common meal of the Church, destroying the reality of the Lord's Supper. Ch. i. 12, iii. 3 f., iv. 6, showed that the Cor. divisions were of a partisan character, and i. 19 that intellectual differences entered into them (cf. viii. 1-7); but distinctions of wealth contributed to the same effect. The two latter influences conspired, the richer and more cultivated Cor. Christians leaning to a self-indulgence which they justified on the ground of enlightenment; the αἱρέσεις sloped down toward κραιπάλη καὶ μέθη.—ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, "to the same (spot)".—οὐκ ἔστιν κ.τ.λ. can hardly mean, "it is not to eat the Lord's Supper" (so Al. and others)—for the Cor. intended this, but by unworthy behaviour (26 f.) neutralised their purpose: P. says either "it (sc. your feast) is not an eating of the Lord's Supper" (A.V., Bz., Est., D.W., Bt., Hn., El., Gd.: "ce n'est pas là manger, etc."); or, "it is not (possible) to eat the Lord's Supper" (R.V., Bg., Mr., Hf., Ed., Ev.)—such eating is out of the question. Ver. 21 bears out the last interpretation, since it describes a state of things not merely nullifying but repugnant to any true κυριακὸν δεῖπνον; οὐκ ἔστιν carries this strong sense, negativing the idea as well as fact, in Heb. ix. 5, and often in cl. Gr.—The adj. κυριακὸν (=τοῦ Κυρίου) stands in emphatic contrast with ἴδιον, the termination -κὸς signifying kind or nature: "It is impossible to eat a supper of the Lord, for each man is in haste to get (προλαμβάνει—præoccupat, Bz.) his own supper when he eats,"—or "during the meal" (Ev.; ἐν τῷ φαγεῖν, in edendo, Bz.; not ad manducandum, as in Vg.). Instead of waiting for one another (33), the Cor., as they entered the assembly-room bringing their provisions, sat down at once to consume each his own supply, like private diners at a restaurant; προ- suggests, in view of ver. 22, that the rich even hurried to do this, so as to avoid sharing with slaves and low people at a common dish (22).—The κυρ. δεῖπνον was a kind of club-supper, with which the evening meeting of the Church commenced (18*a*, 20*a*), taking place at least once a week on the Lord's Day (cf. Acts xx. 7 ff.). This Church-supper, afterwards called the Agapé (see Dict. of Christian Antiq. s.v.; also Ed. ad loc.) was analogous to the συσσίτια and ἔρανοι held by the guilds and friendly societies then rife amongst the Greeks. Originating as a kind of enlarged family meal in the Church of Jerus. (Acts ii. 46), the practice of the common supper accorded so well with social custom that it was universal amongst Christians in the first century (see Weizsäcker's Apost. Age, vol. ii., pp. 279-286). Gradually the Eucharist was separated from the Agapé for greater decorum, and the latter degenerated and became ex-

23. Ἐγὼ γὰρ [s] παρέλαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, ὃ καὶ [t] παρέδωκα ὑμῖν, ὅτι ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ᾗ [u] παρεδίδοτο [1] [v] ἔλαβεν [v] ἄρτον, 24. καὶ [w] εὐχαριστήσας [x] ἔκλασε καὶ εἶπε, "Λάβετε,[2] φάγετε[2]· τοῦτό μου [y] ἐστὶ τὸ σῶμα [z] τὸ [z] ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν κλώμενον[3]· τοῦτο ποιεῖτε

s In this sense, xv. 1, 3: seven times besides in P. t See ver. 2.
u Of persons, v. 5; 12 times besides in P.; in this connexion, Mt. x. 21, xvii. 22, xxvi. 2, 45 ff., etc.
v Mt. xiv. 19, xv. 26, 36, xvi. 5, 7, xxvi. 26; Lk. vi. 4; Jo. xxi. 13; Acts xxvii. 35.
w See i. 4.
x See x. 16.
y See x. 4.
z The ellipsis (without κλωμ.), h.l.

[1] παρεδιδετο, all uncc. but B³LP. See Bm., p. 47.

[2] Om. λαβετε, φαγετε (from Mt. xxvi. 26) all uncc. but C³KLP.

[3] Om. κλωμενον ℵ*ABC*, 17, 67, Cyr.
Add κλωμενον ℵᶜC³Dᵇ,ᶜGKLP, latt. syrr.; θρυπτομενον, D*; διδομενον (Lk.), sah. cop. vg., Cyp. The three ptps. are various attempts to fill up a seeming ellipsis.

tinct; here they are one, as in the Last Supper itself. The table was provisioned at Cor. not from a general fund (as was usual in the ἔρανοι or collegia), but by each guest bringing his contribution in kind, a practice not uncommon in private parties, which had the disadvantage of accentuating social differences. While the poor brought little or nothing to the feast and might be ashamed to show his fare, the rich man exhibited a loaded basket out of which he could feed to repletion. All κοινωνία was destroyed; such vulgarity would have disgraced a heathen guild-feast. The Lord, the common Host, was forgotten at His table. ὃς μὲν πεινᾷ—sc. the poor man, whose small store was insufficient, or who arriving late (for his time was not his own) found the table cleared (cf. προλαμβάνει). ὃς δὲ μεθύει, "but another is drunk!" or in the lighter sense suggested by πεινᾷ, plus satis bibit (Gr., Hn.), "drinks to the full" (cf. John ii. 10); the scene of sensual greed and pride might well culminate in drunkenness. Of all imaginable schisms the most shocking: hunger and intoxication side by side, at what is supposed to be the Table of the Lord! This is indeed "meeting for the worse".—For the demonstr. use of the rel. pron. with μὲν and δέ, see Wr., p. 130.

Ver. 22. μὴ γὰρ οἰκίας οὐκ ἔχετε κ.τ.λ.; "For is it that you have not houses to eat and drink in?" See ver. 34, and note. The γὰρ brings in an ironical excuse: "For I suppose you act thus because you are houseless, and must satisfy your appetite at church!" cf. πῶς γάρ; Acts viii. 31.—If this voracity cannot be excused by a physical need which the offenders had no other means of supplying—if, that is to say, their action is deliberate—they must intend to pour scorn on the Church and to insult their humbler brethren: "Or do you despise the church of God, and cast shame on those that are without means?" For ἡ ἐκκλησία τοῦ Θεοῦ, an expression of awful dignity, see i. 2, x. 32. τοὺς μὴ ἔχοντας, "the have-nots" (cf. 2 Cor. viii. 12)—οἱ ἔχοντες in cl. Gr. signifies "the men of property"; μή (of the point of view) rather than οὐ (of the fact), for the poor with their beggarly rations are shamed by the full-fed on this very account. What could show coarser contempt for the Church assembly?—P. shows a fine self-restraint in the litotes of the last sentence: τί εἴπω ὑμῖν; κ.τ.λ.: "What am I to say to you? Should I praise (you)? In this matter I praise you not". ἐπαινέσω, deliberative aor. sbj., like εἴπω, for the question refers not to the future, but to the situation depicted (see Wr., p. 356). ἐν τούτῳ has great point and emphasis when attached to the following οὐκ ἐπαινῶ (so R.V. marg., after early Verss., Bz., Est., Mr., Hn., Gd., Bt., El., Ed.); thus also ἐπαινέσω better matches εἴπω, and the last clause prepares for the important ἐγὼ δὲ παρέλαβον of the ensuing ver.

§ 38. UNWORTHY PARTICIPANTS OF THE LORD'S BREAD AND CUP, xi. 23-34. The behaviour of the wealthier Cor. at the Church Supper is scandalous in itself; viewed in the light of the institution and meaning of the Eucharistic ordinance, their culpability is extreme (23-27). The sense of this should set the readers on self-examination (28 f.). The sickness and mortality rife amongst them are a sign of the Lord's displeasure in this very matter, and a loud call to amendment (30-32). Two practical directions are finally given: that the members of the

[a] εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν [b] ἀνάμνησιν". 25. [c] ὡσαύτως καὶ τὸ [d] ποτήριον μετὰ τὸ [c] δειπνῆσαι, λέγων, "Τοῦτο τὸ [d] ποτήριον ἡ [f] καινὴ [f] διαθήκη ἐστὶν [g] ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ [1] [g] αἵματι [1]· τοῦτο ποιεῖτε, [h] ὁσάκις ἂν [2] πίνητε,

a For εις with vbl. noun, cf. Mk. i. 4, xiv. 9. 1 Th. iv. 17 and Mt. viii. 34 are Hebraistic. b Lk. xxii. 19; Heb. x. 3; Lev. xxiv. 7. c Lk. xxii. 20; Rom. viii. 26; Mt. xxi. 30; Lk. xx. 31; Prov. xxvii. 15. d See x. 16. e Lk. xxii. 20, xvii. 8; Rev. iii. 20; Prov. xxiii. 1; Tob. viii. 1. f 2 Cor. iii. 6; Heb. viii. 8 (Jer. xxxviii. 31), ix. 15. g Heb. ix. 22, 25; x. 19; 1 Jo. v. 6; Zech. ix. 11. h Rev. xi. 6.

[1] αιματι μου (Lk.): ACP, 17, 37, 46. [2] εαν, ℵBC, 17. See Wr., p. 390.

Church should wait until all are gathered before commencing supper; and that where hunger forbids delay, food should first be taken at home (33 f.).

Vv. 23, 24. Amongst the things the Ap. had "delivered" to his readers, that they professed to be "holding fast" (2), was the story of the Last Supper of the Lord Jesus, which the Church perpetuates in its communion-feast.—ἐγώ, antithetical to ὑμῖν: I the imparter, you the receivers, of these solemn facts.—ἀπὸ neither excludes, nor suggests (cf. i. 30, xiv. 36, etc.) as παρὰ might have done (Gal. i. 12, 1 Thess. ii. 13), independent impartation to P.; "it marks the whence of the communication, in a wide and general sense" (El.); the Ap. vouches for it that what he related came authentically from the Lord. Παραλαμβάνω denotes "receiving a deposit or trust" (Ed.). "The Lord Jesus," see i. 8.—The allusion to "the night in which He was betrayed" (graphic impf., "while the betrayal went on"), is no mere note of time; it throws into relief the fidelity of Jesus in the covenant (25) thus made with His people, and enhances the holy pathos of the recollection; behind the Saviour lurks the Traitor. Incidentally, it shows how detailed and matter-of-fact was the account of the Passion given to Paul's converts. For the irreg. impf., παρεδίδετο, see Wr., p. 95, note 3.—ἔλαβεν ἄρτον, "took a loaf" (ein Brod: cf. the εἷς ἄρτος of x. 17)—one of the flat and brittle unleavened cakes of the Passover Table.—καὶ εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασεν κ.τ.λ., "and after pronouncing the blessing, broke it and said, etc." This εὐχαριστία was apparently the blessing inaugurating the meal, which was followed by the symbolic bread-breaking, whereas "the cup" was administered μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι (25); cf. Luke xxii. 17 ff. (see notes ad loc. in vol. i.), whose account is nearly the same as Paul's, differing in some important particulars from that of Matt. and Mark. Luke, however, introduces a preparatory cup of renunciation on the part of Jesus, "prolusio cœnæ" (Bg.). The fractio panis, the sign of the commencement of a household or social meal (Luke xxiv. 30; Acts ii. 42), is prominent in each narrative; this act supplied another name for the Sacrament.—Regarding the words pronounced over the broken loaf, we bear in mind (1) that Jesus said of the bread "This is my body," Himself sitting there in His visible person, when the identification of substance could not occur to any one; (2) that the parl. saying concerning "the cup" expounds by the word "covenant" (covenant in my blood, in Luke and P.; my blood of the covenant, in Matt. and Mark) the connexion of symbol and thing symbolised, linking the cup and blood, and by analogy the loaf and body, as one not by confusion of substance but by correspondence of relation: what the blood effects, the cup sets forth and seals. The bread, standing for the body, "is the body" representatively; broken for Christ's disciples, it serves materially in the Supper the part which His slain body is about to serve spiritually "for the life of the world". Our Lord thus puts into an acted parable the doctrine taught by figurative speech in John vi. 48 ff. "ἐστὶν is here the copula of symbolic being; otherwise the identity of subject and predicate would form a conception equally impossible to Speaker and hearers" (Mr.).—τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν (κλώμενον an early gloss), "that is for you"—in all its relations subsisting for men; for our advantage He wore the σῶμα σαρκός (2 Cor. viii. 9, Phil. ii. 7, Heb. ii. 14 ff., etc.).—The τοῦτο ποιεῖτε clause is peculiar to Luke and Paul: their witness is good evidence that the words are ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου (23). The sacrificial sense put on ποιεῖτε by many "Catholic" exegetes (as though syn. with the Homeric ῥέζειν, and 'asah of Exod. xxix. 39, etc.) is without lexical warrant, and "plane præter mentem Scripturæ" as the R.C. Estius honestly says; see also El. ad loc.—εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν (cf. ὑμετέραν, εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν [h]ἀνάμνησιν". 26. [h]ὁσάκις γὰρ ἂν[1] ἐσθίητε τὸν [i]ἄρτον τοῦτον καὶ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο[2] πίνητε, τὸν [i]θάνατον τοῦ [i]Κυρίου [k]καταγγέλλετε, [l]ἄχρις [l]οὗ ἂν[3] ἔλθῃ. 27. ὥστε ὃς ἂν ἐσθίῃ τὸν ἄρτον τοῦτον[2] ἢ πίνῃ τὸ [m]ποτήριον τοῦ [m]Κυρίου[4] [n]ἀναξίως,[4] [o]ἔνοχος

i Rom. v. 10, vi. 3, 5; Phil. iii. 10; cf. viii. 11, xv. 3; 2 Cor. v. 15; Rom. v. 6 ff., vi. 10, etc.

k See ii. 1. l xv. 25; Rom. xi. 25; Gal. iii. 19, etc. m x. 21. n N.T. h.l.; 2 Macc. xiv. 22. -ιος, see vi. 2. o Heb. ii. 15; Jas. ii. 10 (same constr.; also in Isa. liv. 17); Mk. iii. 29, xiv. 64. With dat., Mt. v. 21 f.; Deut. xix. 10.

[1] εαν, ℵBC, 17. See Wr., p. 390.

[2] Om. τουτο and τοῦτον all pre-Syrian codd.

[3] Om. αν all pre-Syrian uncc., and many minn.

[4] αναξιως του Κυριου, ℵDcL, above 20 minn., and seemingly Or. in one place.

xv. 31) ἀνάμνησιν, in mei memoriam (Cv.); Ed. reads it "My commemoration" in contrast to that of Moses (x. 2), making τ. ἐμὴν correspond to καινὴν of ver. 25.

Ver. 25. ὡσαύτως καὶ τὸ ποτήριον: "In the same fashion also (He gave) the cup". The two ritual actions correspond, and form one covenant.—μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι (as in Luke)—"postquam cœnaverunt" (Cv.), or better "cœnatum est" (Rom. Liturgy)—is studiously added to "emphasise the distinction between the Lord's Supper and an ordinary evening meal; cf. vv. 20 f.—The eating of the bread originally formed part of the common meal (consider Matt. xxvi. 26, Mark xiv. 22, ἐσθιόντων αὐτῶν), and may still have so continued, but the cup was certainly afterwards" (El.)—a solemn close to the κυριακὸν δεῖπνον.—"This cup is (see note 24: ἐστὶν wanting in Luke) the new covenant, in my blood"; cf. notes on x. 16 f. for τὸ ποτ., and the relation of διαθήκη to κοινωνία. The cup, given by the Lord's hand and tasted by each disciple in turn, is a virtual covenant for all concerned; in His blood it becomes so (ἐν τ. αἷμ. is made by its position a further predicate, not a mere adjunct of διαθ.: cf. Rom. iii. 25), since that is the ground on which God grants and man accepts the covenant. For διαθήκη, see Cr., s.v.; this term, in distinction from συνθήκη, indicates the initiative of God as Disposer in the great agreement. For P.'s interpretation of ἐν τ. αἵματι, see Rom. iii. 23 ff., Eph. i. 7, ii. 13 ff., Col. i. 20; also parls. in Ep. to Heb., Rev. i. 5, 1 John i. 7, 1 Pet. i. 18 f. For "new covenant," see parls.: καινός, new in nature, contents, as securing complete forgiveness and spiritual renovation (Jer. xxxi. 31 ff., etc.).—"This do . . . for the commemoration of Me": see ver. 24*b*; τοῦτο includes, beside the act, the accompanying words, without which the ἀνάμνησις is imperfect. ὁσάκις ἐὰν (late Gr. for ἄν) πίνητε: "so many times as (quotiescunque) you drink (it)"—the cup of the context; not "so often as you drink" (Hf.), sc. at any table where Christians meet. Our Lord prescribed no set times; P. assumes that celebration will be frequent, for he directs that, however frequent, it must be guided by the Lord's instructions, so as to keep the remembrance of Him unimpaired.

Ver. 26. Familiarity helped to blunt in the Cor. their reverence for the Eucharist; hence the repeated ὁσάκις ἐάν: "for so many times as you eat this bread and drink the cup, you are proclaiming the Lord's death, until He come". γὰρ has its proper explicative force: Christ bade His disciples thus perpetually commemorate Him (24 f.: ποιεῖτε, "go on to do"—sustained action), "for it is thus that you publish His death, and in this form the testimony will continue till He comes again." καταγγέλλετε (see parls.), on this view ind., is the active expression of ἀνάμνησις: "Christus de beneficio mortis suae nos admonet, et nos coram hominibus id recognovimus" (Cv.). The ordinance is a verbum visibile, a "preaching" of the entire Church in silent ministry: "Christi sanguis scripturarum omnium sacramento ac testimonio effusus prædicatur" (Cyprian, quoted by Ed.). ἄχρι οὗ ἔλθῃ states the terminus ad quem given in the words of Jesus at the Table, Luke xxii. 18, Matt. xxvi. 29. The rite looks forward as well as backward; a rehearsal of the Passion Supper, a foretaste of the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. Paul thus "associates with the καταγγέλλειν of the celebrants the fear and trembling that belong to the Maranatha of xvi. 22" (Mr.). The pathos and the glory of the Table of the Lord were alike lost on the Corinthians.

ἔσται τοῦ [p] σώματος καὶ[1] [p] αἵματος τοῦ [p] Κυρίου. 28. [q] δοκιμαζέτω δὲ [r] ἄνθρωπος[2] ἑαυτόν,[2] καὶ [s] οὕτως ἐκ τοῦ ἄρτου ἐσθιέτω καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ποτηρίου πινέτω· 29. ὁ γὰρ ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων ἀναξίως,[3] [t] κρίμα ἑαυτῷ ἐσθίει καὶ πίνει, μὴ [u] διακρίνων τὸ [p] σῶμα τοῦ[4] Κυρίου.[4] p See x. 16. q See iii. 13. r See iv. 1. s In this sense, xiv. 25; Rom. v. 12, xi. 26; Acts vii. 8, xvii. 33, xxviii. 14. t 8 times besides in P.; 1 Pet. iv. 17; 2 Pet. ii. 3; Jude 4; Acts xxiv. 25; thrice in Rev., six times in GG. u Acts xv. 9; Jas. ii. 4; Job. xii. 11. Cf. iv. 7.

[1] του αιματος: all uncc., above 40 minn., and many Ff.

[2] εαυτον ανθρωπος (in this order): CDGP.

[3] Om. αναξιως ℵ*ABC*, 17, sah.,—a Western popular gloss; current in Ff.

[4] Om. του Κυριου ℵ*ABC*, 17, 67, am.* fu.*.

Ver. 27 draws the practical consequence of vv. 20-26, stating the judgement upon Cor. behaviour at the Supper that a right estimate of the covenant-cup and bread demands: "So then, whoever eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord unworthily, will be held guilty (ἔνοχος ἔσται; reus tenetur, Bz.; rather, tenebitur) of the body and blood of the Lord"; it is this that he ignores or insults; cf. ver. 29. On ὥστε with ind., see note to iii. 7. What "unworthily" means is patent from vv. 20 ff.—The or, for and, between ἐσθίῃ and πίνῃ supplies the single text adducible for the R.C. practice of lay communion in one kind: "non leve argumentum," says Est., "non enim sic loqueretur Ap., si non sentiret unam speciem sine altera sumi posse". But and appeared in just the same connexion in ver. 26, and reappears in vv. 28 f.; "or" replaces "and" when one is thinking of the parl. acts distinctly, and the same communicant might behave unworthily in either act, esp. as the breaking of the bread and taking of the cup at this time came in probably at the beginning and end respectively of the Church Supper, and were separated by an interval of time; see notes on εὐχαριστήσας and μετὰ τ. δειπν. (24 f.). ἔνοχος (from ἐν-έχω, to hold in some liability) acquires in late Gr., like αἴτιος, a gen. of person against whom offence is committed; see Ed. in loc. To outrage the emblem is to outrage its original—as if one should mock at the Queen's picture or at his country's flag. Except ἔλθῃ, the vbs. throughout this passage are pr. in tense, relating to habit.

Ver. 28. "But (in contrast with the guilt described, and in order to escape it) let a man put himself to proof, and so from the bread let him eat and from the cup let him drink." ἄνθρωπος, replacing ὃς ἄν (27), is qualitative, "containing the ideas of infirmity and responsibility" (Gd.); cf. iii. 4, x. 13. On δοκιμάζω, see iii. 13, and parls.; it signifies not judicial examination (ἀνακρίνω, iv. 3, etc.), nor discriminative estimate (διακρίνω, 31), but self-probing (probet se ipsum, Vg.; not exploret se, Bz.) with a view to fit partaking; any serious attempt at this would make the scene of vv. 20 ff. impossible: the impv. is pr., enjoining a practice; the communicant must test himself habitually by the great realities with which he is confronted, asking himself, e.g., whether he "discerns the Lord's body" (29).—καὶ οὕτως: scarcely sic demum (Bg.), but hoc cum animo; cf. Phil. iv. 1. ἐκ . . . ἐσθιέτω, ἐκ . . . πινέτω—a solemn fulness of expression, in keeping with the temper of mind required; the prp. implies participation with others (cf. ix. 7, 13, x. 17).

Ver. 29. Participation in the bread and cup is itself a δοκιμασία: "For he that eats and drinks, a judgment for himself (sentence on himself) he eats and drinks". The single art. of ὁ ἐσθίων καὶ πίνων, combining the acts, negatives the R.C. inference from the ἢ of ver. 27 (see note). Contact with Christ in this ordinance probes each man to the depths (cf. John iii. 18 f., ix. 39); it is true of the Lord's verbum visibile, as of His verbum audibile, that he who receives it ἔχει τὸν κρίνοντα αὐτόν (John xii. 48). His attitude toward the Lord at His table revealed with shocking evidence the spiritual condition of many a Cor. Christian—his carnality and blindness as one "not distinguishing the body".—The two senses given by interpreters to διακρίνω are, as Hn. says, somewhat blended here ("Beruht jedes Urtheilen auf *Ent*scheiden und *Unter*scheiden"), as in dijudicans (Vg.): one "discerns (judges clearly and rightly of) the (Lord's) body" in the sacrament. and therein "discriminates"

30. διὰ τοῦτο ἐν ὑμῖν πολλοὶ [v] ἀσθενεῖς καὶ [w] ἄρρωστοι, καὶ [x] κοιμῶνται [y] ἱκανοί· 31. εἰ γὰρ[1] ἑαυτοὺς [u] διεκρίνομεν, οὐκ ἂν [a] ἐκρινόμεθα· 32. [a] κρινόμενοι δέ, ὑπὸ Κυρίου[2] [z] παιδευόμεθα, ἵνα μὴ σὺν τῷ κόσμῳ [a] κατακριθῶμεν. 33. ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου, [b] συνερχόμενοι εἰς τὸ

v 2 Cor. x. 10; Mt. xxv. 43; Lk. x. 9; Acts iv. 9 v. 15 f.
w Mt. xiv. 14; Mk. vi. 5, 13, xvi. 18; Mal. i. 8; Sir. vii. 35. -τειν, 2 Kings xii. 15; -τημα, Sir. x. 10; -τια, Ps. xl. 3.
x See vii. 39.
y Acts xii. 12, xiv. 21, xix. 19; Lk. vii. 11, viii. 32.
z 2 Cor. vi. 9; Tit. ii. 12; Heb. xii. 6; Rev. iii. 19; Prov. iii. 11.
a Rom. ii. 1 (cf. xiv. 23); also 2 Pet. ii. 6; Rom. iii. 6; Acts xvii. 31; Jo. iii. 17.
b See ver. 18.

[1] δε, ℵ*ABDG, 17, 46, latt. vg.
γαρ, Cℵ cCKLP, sah. cop., Bas., Cyr.; Alexandrian and Syrian.

[2] του Κυριου: ℵBC, 17, 37. Om. του ADGKLP, etc. (Western and Syrian).

the rite from all other eating and drinking—precisely what the Cor. failed to do (20 ff.). They did not descry the signified in the sign, the Incarnate and Crucified in His memorial loaf and cup, and their Supper became a mere vulgar matter of meat and drink. This ordinance exposed them for what they were—σαρκικοί (iii. 3).—τὸ σῶμα (cf. 24 ff.)—a reverent aposiopesis, resembling ἡ ἡμέρα in iii. 13 (see note); the explanation of some Lutherans, that τὸ σῶμα means "the substance" underlying the material element, is foreign to the context and to Apostolic times. On "the serious doctrinal question" as to what the unfaithful receive in the sacrament, see El. ad loc. Distinguish κρίμα (unhappily rendered "damnation" in A.V.), a judicial sentence of any kind, from κατάκριμα, the final condemnation of the sinner (32; Rom. v. 16).

Ver. 30. In evidence of the "judgment" which profanation of the Lord's Table entails, the Ap. points to the sad fact that "amongst you many are sick and weakly, and not a few are sleeping".—ἀσθενεῖς applies to maladies of any kind, ἄρρωστοι to cases of debility and continued ill-health—ægroti et valetudinarii (Bz.). The added κοιμῶνται (the Christian syn. for ἀποθνήσκουσιν) shows that P. is speaking not figuratively of low spiritual conditions, but literally of physical inflictions which he knows to be their consequence (διὰ τοῦτο). We must be careful not to generalise from this single instance (see John ix. 3). The mere coincidence of such afflictions with the desecration of the Eucharist could not have justified P. in making this statement; he must have been conscious of some specific revelation to this effect. For ἱκανοί (a sufficient number—something like our "plenty of you"), see parls.; "something less than πολλοί, though sufficiently numerous to arouse serious attention" (El.). The "sleepers" had died in the Lord, or this term would not have been used of them; it does not appear that this visitation had singled out the profaners of the Sacrament; the community is suffering, for widely-spread offence. Both in the removal and infliction of physical evil, the inauguration of the New Covenant, as of the Old, was marked by displays of supernatural power.

Vv. 31, 32. Such chastisements may be averted; when they come, it is for our salvation: "If however we discerned (or discriminated: dijudicaremus, Vg.) ourselves, we should not be judged".—διακρίνω is taken up from ver. 29 (see note); it is distinguished from κρίνω, which in turn is contrasted with κατακρίνω (32).—τῷ κόσμῳ in the sequel explains the bearing of διακρίνω here: it expresses a discriminating judgment, by which the Christian rightly appreciates his own status and calling, and realises his distinctive character, even as the διακρίνων of ver. 29 realises the diff. between the κυριακὸν δεῖπνον and a common δεῖπνον. The alliterative play on κρίνω and its compounds is untranslatable; cf. ii. 13 ff., iv. 3 ff. For the form of hypothesis, see ii. 8; for the pers. of ἑαυτοὺς, vi. 7.—κρινόμενοι δὲ assumes, from ver. 30, as a fact the consequence hypothetically denied in the last sentence: "But under judgment as we are, we are being chastised by the Lord, in order that we may not with the world be condemned" (κατακριθῶμεν, judged-against, to our ruin). Thus hope is extracted from a sorrowful situation; cf. Heb. xii. 6 f., Rev. iii. 19; νουθεσίας μᾶλλόν ἐστιν ἢ καταδίκης τὸ γινόμενον (Cm.). On παιδεύω, to treat as a boy, see Trench, Syn., § 32. Plato describes παιδεία as δύναμις θεραπευτικὴ τῇ ψυχῇ; cf. the proverb, παθήματα μαθήματα. Ch. v. 5 is the φαγεῖν, ἀλλήλους [c]ἐκδέχεσθε· 34. εἰ δέ[1] τις [d]πεινᾷ, [e]ἐν [e]οἴκῳ ἐσθιέτω· ἵνα μὴ εἰς [b]κρίμα [b]συνέρχησθε. τὰ δὲ λοιπά, [f]ὡς [f]ἂν ἔλθω, [g]διατάξομαι.[2] c xvi. 11; Acts xvii. 16; Jas. v. 7; Heb. x. 13, xi. 10.

d See iv. 11.
e xiv. 35; Mk. ii. 1; Deut. xi. 19 f.
f Rom. xv. 24; Phil. ii. 23; cf. xii. 2 below.
g See vii. 17.

[1] Om. δε pre-Syrian uncc., latt. vg. cop.

[2] διαταξωμαι, ADG, 37.

extreme case of such "chastening" unto salvation; cf. Ps. cxix. 67, etc.—κρινόμενα (pr.), a disciplinary proceeding; κατακριθῶμεν (aor.), a definitive pronouncement; cf. Acts xvii. 31, etc. P. associates himself, by 1st pers. pl., with the readers, sharing his Churches' troubles (2 Cor. xi. 28 f.).

Vv. 33, 34*a*. The "charge" (17) proceeds from inward to outward, from self-examination (28) to mutual accommodation respecting the Lord's Supper. Religious decorum depends on two conditions,—a becoming spirit associated with fitting external arrangements, such as good sense and reverence dictate: "And so, my brothers, when you meet for the meal, wait for one another".—ἀδελφοί μου adds a touch of affection to what has been severely said.—συνερχόμενοι carries us back to vv. 17, 20; the same train of admonition throughout.—τὸ φαγεῖν embraces the entire Church Supper; see notes on vv. 20 f.; the order ἀλλήλους ἐκδέχεσθε (invicem expectate, Vg.) forbids the hasty and schismatic τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον προλαβεῖν (21); no one must begin supper till the Church is gathered, so that all may commence together and share alike. To wait for others presumes waiting to feast with them.—ἐκδέχομαι never means excipio (receive: so Hf., and a few others), but always exspecto in the N.T.; with the former sense in cl. Gr., it signifies to receive (a person) from some particular quarter.—Some might object that hunger is pressing, and they cannot wait; to these Paul says, "If any one is hungry, let him eat at home"—staying his appetite before he comes to the meeting; cf. vv. 21, 22*a*. The Church Supper is for good-fellowship, not for bodily need; to eat there like a famished man, absorbed in one's food—if nothing worse happen—is to exclude Christian and religious thoughts.—ἐν οἴκῳ, not ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ (18: note the absence of the art.).—"Coming together εἰς κρίμα" (for a judgment) defines the "coming together εἰς ἧσσον" of ver. 17 in terms of vv. 29-32. συνέρχησθε, pr. sbj., of the stated meetings, as in ver. 18, etc. This warning (ἵνα μή) closes the παραγγελία introduced in ver. 17. For a clear and impartial account of the various doctrines of the Lord's Supper connected with this passage, see Bt., pp. 206 ff.

Ver. 34*b*. τὰ λοιπά, an etcetera appended to the charge—"other matters," probably of detail connected with the Church Supper and the κοινωνία. Ed. takes this as the antithesis to the πρῶτον μὲν of ver. 18 (see note), and supposes λοιπὰ to refer to other different matters, of which P. would postpone discussion till his arrival—addressing himself notwithstanding to one of the principal of these λοιπὰ in xii. 1 ff.—ὡς ἂν ἔλθω, "according as I may come": the Ap. is uncertain when and under what circumstances he may next visit Cor. (cf. xvi. 5-9); his intention to set matters in order is subject to this contingency.—διατάξομαι (see parls.) refers, presumably, to points of external order, such as those just dealt with. Romanists (see Est.) justify by this text their alleged unwritten apostolic traditions respecting the Eucharist: fasting communion, e.g., is placed amongst the unspecified λοιπά.

§ 39. The Various Charisms of the One Spirit, xii. 1-11. In treating of the questions of Church order discussed in this Div. of the Ep., the Ap. penetrates from the outward and visible to that which is innermost and divinest in the Christian Society: (1) the question of the woman's veil, a matter of social decorum; (2) the observance of the Lord's Supper, a matter of Church communion; and now (3) the operation of the Spirit of God in the Church, wherein lies the very mystery of its life. The words διαιρέσεις in ver. 4 and πάντα ταῦτα in ver. 11 give the clue to Paul's intent in this §. Many Cor. took a low and half superstitious view of the Holy Spirit's influence, seeing in such charisms as the "tongues"—phenomena analogous to, though far surpassing, pagan manifestations (2)—the proper evidence of His working, while they underrated endowments of a less striking but more vital and serviceable

XII. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῶν [a] πνευματικῶν, ἀδελφοί, [b] οὐ [b] θέλω ὑμᾶς [b] ἀγνοεῖν. 2. οἴδατε ὅτι [1] ἔθνη ἦτε, πρὸς τὰ [c] εἴδωλα τὰ [d] ἄφωνα, ὡς [e] ἂν ἤγεσθε, [f] ἀπαγόμενοι· 3. διὸ [g] γνωρίζω ὑμῖν ὅτι οὐδεὶς [h] ἐν [h] πνεύματι Θεοῦ λαλῶν λέγει [i] ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦν,[2] καὶ οὐδεὶς δύναται a See x. 3 f.

b See x. 1.
c See viii. 4.
d xiv. 10; 2 Pet. ii. 16; Acts viii. 32 (Isa. liii. 7).
e With impf. in rel. clause, Mk. vi. 56; Acts ii. 45, iv. 35; Gen. ii. 19.
f In trans. use, Mt. xxvi. 57, etc.; Lk. xxi. 12; Acts xii. 19, xxiii. 17, xxiv. 7.
g xv. 1; 2 Cor. viii. 1; Rom. ix. 22 f., xvi. 26; Gal. i. 11; 11 times in Eph., Col., Phil.; 2 Pet. i. 16; 4 times in Lk. and Acts; Jo. xv. 15, xvii. 26.
h Eph. vi. 18; Rev. i. 10; Jude 20; Mt. xxii. 43; Lk. ii. 27, iv. 1; Mic. iii. 8.
i xvi. 22; Rom. ix. 1; Gal. i. f.; Acts xxiii. 14.

[1] οτι οτε (?): all uncc. but Ggr.Kmg.; K*, a few minn., and Ff., read οτε alone. W.H. conjecture οτι οτε to be a primitive error for οτι ποτε (?); cf. Eph. ii. 11, and the use of ποτε in Rom. xi. 30; Col. i. 21; 1 Pet. ii. 10. The confusion of π with τι is a common scribe's error; and in the old continuous writing (οτιποτε), it is likely enough that the copyist's eye, in some primitive MS., skipped the π, esp. as no immediate countersense resulted to warn him of the oversight.

[2] Ιησους, ℵABC, 17*, 46*, cop. syrr. (seemingly), Euthal. Ιησου, F, 17, vg. (anathema Jesu), Ath., Hil. Ιησουν, DGKLP, sah.,—Western and Syrian. See note below.

nature (31, xiii. 8, 13, xiv. 12). For the moment, Paul's object is twofold: first, to lay down a general criterion of the presence of Christ's Spirit (3), and then to show the wide manifoldness of His working in the community of believers (4-11).

Ver. 1. For the heading of the new topic, which runs on to the end of ch. xiv., see note on vii. 1. τῶν πνευματικῶν is neut.—"concerning spiritual things (gifts, powers)," as in xiv. 1 (cf. πνευμάτων, 12) and viii. 1; not "spiritual persons" (xiv. 37, ii. 15), as Hf. and some others would have it: not the status of the persons spiritually endowed, but the operations of the Spirit who endows them are in question. "δὲ is transitional, with a shade of antithesis to τὰ λοιπὰ . . . διατάξομαι: 'Whatever subject I postpone, I must not delay to explain the nature of spiritual gifts'" (Ed.). On οὐ θέλω ἀγνοεῖν, cf. note to x. 1: the Ap. has something to explain not quite obvious and highly important.

Ver. 2. On the critical reading, οἴδατε ὅτι ὅτε ἔθνη ἦτε . . . ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε ἀπαγόμενοι, there are two plausible constructions: (a) that of Bg., Bm. (pp. 383 f.), Ed., who regard ὡς as a resumption of the ὅτι, after the parenthetical ὅτε clause, and thus translate: "You know that, when you were Gentiles,—how you were always led to those voiceless idols, being carried away". There are two reasons against this construction —(1) the improbability of ὅτι being forgotten after so short an interruption; (2) the inversion of the proper relation between ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε and ἀπαγόμενοι, the former of which is naturally construed as subordinate and adverbial to the latter, the "leading to idols" supplying the condition under which the "carrying off" took place. (b) We are driven back upon the alternative construction, adopted by Est., Mr., Hn., Ev., Bt., Gd., El. (see his note, and Krüger's Sprachl., § 354 b, Anm. 1 f., for similar instances), who regard ἀπαγόμενοι as chief predicate after ὅτι, and complete the ptp. by ἦτε, which is mentally taken up from the interposed temporal clause: "You know that, when you were Gentiles, to those voiceless idols, however you might be led, (you were) carried away". Since οἶδα with ptpl. complement occurs but once besides in N.T. (2 Cor. xii. 2, and there with acc. ptp., not nom. as here), the confusion between the ptpl. construction and the ὅτι construction after οἶδα, by which Mr. accounts for the grammatical irregularity, is not very probable. The emendation of W.H. (see txtl. note) is most tempting, in view of Eph. ii. 11; it wholly obviates the difficulty of grammar: "You know that once (ὅτι ποτέ) you were Gentiles, carried off to those dumb idols, howsoever you might be led".—The Cor., now belonging to the λαὸς Θεοῦ, distinguish themselves from the ἔθνη (see v. 1, x. 20); to be "led away to the (worship of the) idols" is the characteristic of Gentiles (viii. 7). ἀπάγω implies force rather than charm in the ἀπάγων; P. is not thinking of any earlier truth from which the heathen were enticed, but of the overwhelming current by which they were "carried off" (abreptos, Bz.), cf. 2 Cor. iv. 4, 2 εἰπεῖν Κύριον[1] Ἰησοῦν[1] εἰ μὴ [h] ἐν [h] Πνεύματι Ἁγίῳ. 4. [k] διαιρέσεις δὲ [l] χαρισμάτων εἰσί, τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα· 5. καὶ [k] διαιρέσεις [m] διακονιῶν εἰσί, καὶ ὁ αὐτὸς Κύριος· 6. καὶ [k] διαιρέσεις [n] ἐνεργημάτων εἰσίν, ὁ δὲ[2] αὐτός[2] ἐστι[3] Θεὸς ὁ [o] ἐνεργῶν [p] τὰ [pq] πάντα [q] ἐν [q] πᾶσιν.

k N.T. h.l.; 1 Chron. xxvi. 1; 2 Chron. viii. 14; Ezra vi. 18; -ρειν, ver. 11.
l See i. 7. Pl. only in this ch., Rom. xi. 29, xii. 6. m Pl. h.l.; xvi. 15, 2 Cor. passim, eight times more in P.; Heb. i. 14; Rev. ii. 19; 8 times in Acts; also Lk. x. 40. n H.l. o 2 Cor. i. 6, iv. 12; Rom. vii. 5; Gal. ii. 8, iii. 5, v. 6; 8 times more in P.; also Jas. v. 16; Mt. xiv. 2; Mk. vi. 14. p See viii. 6.
q xv. 28; Eph. i. 23; Col. iii. 11.

[1] Κυριος Ιησους: ℵABC, 17, 46, 67, 73, vg. syr[sch].
Κυριον Ιησουν: DGKLP, etc. See note below.

[2] και ο αυτος (?): BC, 37, 46; W.H. txt. ο δε αυτος: ℵAKLP, vg. syrr. ο αυτος δε: DG.

[3] Om. εστι ℵ*ACDGP, vg. Add after αυτος ℵcKL, etc.; after ενεργων, B.

Tim. ii. 26, Matt. xii. 29. With this agrees the qualifying ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε (not ἀνήγεσθε, as Hf. and Hn. read; this gives an irrelevant sense—"led up," "led in sacrifice"), indicating the uncertainty and caprice of the directing powers—"pro nutu ducentium" (Est.). For the right sort of ἄγεσθαι, see Rom. viii. 14, Gal. v. 18.—On the εἴδωλα, cf. viii. 4; the voicelessness of the idol is part of its nothingness (cf. Ps. cxv. 4-7, etc.); the Pagans were led by no intelligent, conscious guidance, but by an occult power behind the idol (x. 19 ff.).

Ver. 3. Their old experience of the spells of heathenism had not prepared the Cor. to understand the workings of God's Spirit and the notes of His presence. On this subject they had asked (1), and P. now gives instruction: "Wherefore I inform you". They knew how men could be "carried away" by supernatural influences; they wanted a criterion for distinguishing those truly Divine. The test P. supplies is that of loyalty to Jesus Christ. "No one speaking in the Spirit of God says ΑΝΑΘΕΜΑ ΙΗΣΟΥΣ, and no one can say ΚΥΡΙΟΣ ΙΗΣΟΥΣ except in the Holy Spirit." Jesus is anathema, Jesus is Lord, are the battle-cries of the spirits of error and of truth contending at Cor. The second watchword is obvious, its inclusiveness is the point of interest; it certificates all true Christians, with whatever διαιρέσεις χαρισμάτων (4 ff.), as possessors of the Holy Spirit, since He inspires the confession of their Master's name which makes them such (see i. 2, Rom. x. 9, Phil. ii. 11, etc.). Not a mystical "tongue," but the clear intelligent confession "Jesus is Lord" marks out the genuine πνευματικός; cf. the parl. cry Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ, of Gal. iv. 6. "He shall glorify Me," said Jesus (John xvi. 14) of the coming Spirit: this is the infallible proof of His indwelling.—But who were those who might say at Cor., "Jesus is anathema"? Faciebant gentes, says Bg., sed magis Judæi. Ἀνάθεμα (see parls.) is Hebraistic in Biblical use, denoting that which is cherem, vowed to God for destruction as under His curse, like Achan in Joshua's camp. So the High Priest and the Jewish people treated Jesus (John xi. 49 f., Gal. iii. 13), using perhaps these very words of execration (cf. Heb. vi. 6), which Saul of Tarsus himself had doubtless uttered in blaspheming the Nazarene (1 Tim. i. 13); this cry, so apt to Jewish lips, resounded in the Synagogue in response to apostolic preaching. Christian assemblies, in the midst of their praises of the Lord Jesus, would sometimes be startled by a fierce Jew screaming out like a man possessed, "Jesus is anathema!"—for unbelievers on some occasions had access to Christian meetings (xiv. 24). Such frenzied shouts, heard in moments of devotion, affected susceptible natures as with the presence of an unearthly power; hence the contrast which Paul draws. This watchword of hostile Jews would be taken up by the Gentile mobs which they roused against the Nazarenes; see Acts xiii. 45, xviii. 6, where βλασφημοῦντες may well include λέγοντες Ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦς. Gd., ad loc., and W. F. Slater (Faith and Life of the Early Church, pp. 348 f.) suppose both cries to originate in the Church; they ascribe the anathema to heretics resembling Cerinthus and the Ophites, who separated Jesus from Christ (cf. 1 John ii. 18 ff., iv. 1-6); but this identification is foreign to the situation and context, and is surely an anachronism.—The distinction between λαλέω and λέγω is well

7. ἑκάστῳ δὲ δίδοται ἡ [r] φανέρωσις τοῦ Πνεύματος πρὸς τὸ [s] συμφέρον· 8. [t] ᾧ μὲν γὰρ διὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος δίδοται [u] λόγος [u v] σοφίας, [t] ἄλλῳ δὲ [u] λόγος [u v] γνώσεως, κατὰ τὸ [w] αὐτὸ [w] Πνεῦμα· 9. [t] ἑτέρῳ δὲ [1] πίστις ἐν

r 2 Cor. iv. 2; -οω, see iv. 5.
s Ptp., 2 Cor. xii. 1; Heb. xii. 10; Acts xx. 20; see also vi. 12 and vii. 35.
t For normal use of ος μεν, see xi. 21. ος μεν . . . αλλος δε, Mt. xiii. 4 f.; Mk. iv. 4. αλλος . . . ετερος, Mt. xvi. 14; Heb. xi. 35 f.; cf. Gal. i. 6. ετερος, see iii. 4. αλλος . . . αλλος, xv. 39, 41; Jo. iv. 37.
u See i. 5; λογ. σοφ., ii. 13.
v Rom. xi. 33; Col. ii. 3; Eccl. i. 16, 18, ii. 26. σοφια, i. 17; γνωσις, i. 5.
w ver. 11, 2 Cor. iv. 13, xii. 18. ἐν. πν., vv. 13 f.; Eph. ii. 18, iv. 4.

[1] Om. δε ℵ*BDG, 67, vg. syr[sch]. A, with the Syrian codd., inserts.

exemplified here: λαλεῖν ἐν is "to speak in the element and sphere of, under the influence of" the Holy Spirit.

Vv. 4-6. "But," while the Spirit prompts in all Christians the simultaneous confession Jesus is Lord, this unity of faith bears multiform fruit in "distributions of grace-gifts, services, workings". These are not separate classes of πνευματικά, but varied designations of the πνευματικὰ collectively—a trinity of blessing associating its possessors in turn with the Spirit, the Lord, and God the fountain of all. What is a χάρισμα (see i. 7) in respect of its quality and ground, is a διακονία in view of its usefulness (see 21-25), and an ἐνέργημα in virtue of the power operative therein. The identity of the first and second of the syns. rests on that of "the Lord" and "the Spirit" (cf. 2 Cor. iii. 17 f.), and that of the second and third upon the relation of Christ to the Father (see John v. 17 ff., xiv. 8-14). For the Trinitarian structure of the passage, cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 13, Eph. iv. 4 ff.—Κύριος and διακονία are correlative; all Church-ministry is directed by "the Lord" and rendered primarily to Him (iv. 1, vii. 12, viii. 6, Rom. xii. 11, xiv. 4-9, Matt. xxv. 40, etc.). διακονία embraces every "work of ministration" (Eph. iv. 12): gradually the term narrowed to official and esp. bodily ministrations, to the duties of the διάκονος (Phil. i. 1, etc.); see xvi. 15, and cf. Rom. xv. 31 with xi. 13 for the twofold use.—ἐνέργημα (effectus, rather than operatio, Vg.)—the result of ἐνεργέω; this favourite Pauline vb. signifies an effective, and with ἐν an immanent activity.—τὰ πάντα covers the whole sphere in which spiritual charisms operate: cf. Eph. iv. 6. Ver. 11 refers the same πάντα ἐνεργεῖν to "the Spirit," who is God indwelling; Power, in its largest, ultimate sense, "belongeth unto God" (cf. Eph. i. 11, etc., Phil. ii. 13)—"the same God, who works . . . in all" (Rom. iii. 29 f.), knowing no respect of persons and operative in the doings of every Christian man; cf. i. 30*a*, and note.—διαιρέσεις appears to be act., dividings, distributings, rather than pass., differences, varieties; see ver. 11. The pl. points to the constantly repeated dealings out of the Spirit's store of gifts to the members of Christ's body.

Ver. 7. ἑκάστῳ δὲ κ.τ.λ.—distributive in contrast with the collective τ. πᾶσιν of ver. 6; cf. Eph. iv. 6 f., and the emphatic ἕκαστος of iii. 5-13: "But to each there is being given the manifestation of the Spirit with a view to profiting"; cf. Eph. iv. 7-16, where the δωρεὰ τ. Χριστοῦ is similarly portioned out amongst the members of Christ, for manifold and reciprocal service to His body. The thought of mutual benefit, there amply expressed, is here slightly indicated by πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον (ad utilitatem, Vg.): see vi. 12, x. 23, 33, on this word.—δίδοται, datur (not datum est), indicates continuous bestowment; so in vv. 8 ff.: these charisms, blossoming out in rich, changeful variety, disclose the potencies of the Spirit ever dwelling in the Church.—φανέρωσις (opp. of κρύψις) governs τ. Πνεύματος in obj. gen.: to each is granted some personal gift in which he shows forth the Spirit by whose inspiration he calls Jesus Lord (3); for the constr., cf. 2 Cor., iv. 2. For the general idea, Matt. v. 14 ff., Luke xii. 1 f., 1 Peter ii. 9.

Vv. 8-10 exhibit by way of example (γάρ) nine chief manifestations in which the Holy Spirit was displayed: word of wisdom, word of knowledge, faith, healings, powers, prophecy, discernings of spirits, kinds of tongues, interpreting of tongues. The fourth and fifth are specially marked as χαρίσματα and ἐνεργήματα respectively; the first is said to be given "through," the second "according to," the third and fourth "in the same" (or "the one) Spirit," whose operation in the whole is collectively reaffirmed in ver. 12. In distinguishing the recipients, P. begins with τῷ [w] αὐτῷ [w] Πνεύματι, [t] ἄλλῳ δὲ [1] χαρίσματα [x] ἰαμάτων ἐν τῷ [w] αὐτῷ [1] [w] Πνεύματι, 10. [t] ἄλλῳ δὲ [n] ἐνεργήματα [y] δυνάμεων, [t] ἄλλῳ δὲ [2] [z] προφητεία, [t] ἄλλῳ δὲ [2] [a] διακρίσεις πνευμάτων· [t] ἑτέρῳ [3] δὲ [3] [b] γένη x vv. 28, 30; Jer. xl. 6. -σις, Acts iv. 22; -αομαι, freq. in GG. and Acts. y Pl. in this sense, vv. 28 f.; 2 Cor. xii. 12; Gal. iii. 5 (virtually); 2 Th. ii. 9; Heb. ii. 4, vi. 5; Acts ii. 22, viii. 13, xix. 11; GG. passim. z xiii. 2, 8, xiv. 6, 22; Rom. xii. 6; 1 Th. v. 20; 1 Tim. i. 18, iv. 14; Rev. i. 3, etc.; Mt. xiii. 14. -ευω, see xi. 4; -της, ver. 28. a Rom. xiv. 1; Heb. v. 14; Job xxxvii. 16. -νειν, see vi. 5. b γεν. γλ., ver. 28; xiv. 10; Mt. xiii. 47, xvii. 21; Gen. i. 11, etc.

[1] ἑνι, AB, 17, 67, latt. vg. So crit. edd.
αυτῳ, ℵDGKLP (Western and Syrian): harmonistic correction.

[2] BDG om. δε twice, after αλλῳ.

[3] Om. δε (after ετερῳ) ℵ*BDGP, latt. vg.
Add δε ACKL, syrr. cop.—Alexandrian and Syrian; cf. ver. 9.

the colourless ᾧ μέν (for the rel. pr. in this use, cf. xi. 21); but in continuation ἄλλῳ δέ (to another) is varied with ἑτέρῳ (to some one else); the latter seems to mark a more specific, qualitative difference: cf. the interchange in xv. 39 ff., also in 2 Cor. xi. 4, and ἕτερος in xiv. 21, Rom. vii. 23; ἕτερος moreover dispenses with the contrastive δέ, as conveying its own antithesis (Hn. however, against Mr., takes the prons. to be used indifferently). Accordingly, the third (faith) and eighth (tongues) in the chain of gifts indicate points of transition, in the writer's thought, from one sort of endowment to another; and the nine thus fall into three divisions, of two, five, and two members respectively, with λόγος, πίστις, γλῶσσαι for their titles, the first of which exhibits the Πνεῦμα working through the νοῦς, the second in distinction from the νοῦς, and the third in supersession of the νοῦς: for this basis of discrimination, cf. xiv. 14-20; also xiii. 8, where the like threefold distinction appears in another order. The above arrangement is that of Mr.; Ed. gives a more elaborate and somewhat diff. analysis.—(a) λόγος σοφίας and γνώσεως were the charisms most abounding at Cor.: see i. 5, and the relevant notes on i. 17, 30, ii. 1, . "Wisdom" is the larger acquisition,—the truth of God wrought into the man; "knowledge" is that truth intellectually apprehended and objectified: see Ed. ad loc., who says, "The παρέκβασις of σοφία is mysticism, of γνώσεως is rationalism". Expressed in λόγος, both gifts serve the Church πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον (7); they are the qualifications of pastor and teacher respectively. "The Spirit" is the channel (διά) conveying Wisdom; "the same Spirit" is the standard (κατά) regulating Knowledge.—(b) πίστις impresses its character on the whole second series: standing alone, with emphasis, it implies an energy and demonstrativeness of faith (cf. πᾶσα πίστις, xiii. 2), ein Glaubensheroismus (Mr.): ἰάματα and δυνάμεις are operations of such faith in the material sphere, by way of miracle; προφητεία and διάκρισις πνευμάτων, in the purely spiritual sphere, by way of revelation. Faith however may be exhibited in conspicuous degree apart from these particular demonstrations (cf. Matt. xvii. 20, xxi. 21, Mark xvi. 17 f.). The first two of the five are imparted "in (i.e., grounded upon, exercised in the sphere of) the same (the one) Spirit"; what is said of these is understood of the other three (cf. ἐν in ver. 3): "in the same Spirit" dwell the endowments of a fruitful understanding and of a potent faith; "in the one Spirit"—in His power and bestowment alone—all "gifts of healings" lie (cf. Mark iii. 28 ff.). The ἰάματα (acts of healing; see parls.) are χαρίσματα by eminence—gracious acts (cf. Luke vii. 21, ἐχαρίσατο): the δυνάμεις (powers; see parls.) display strength rather than grace, e.g., in the sentence of v. 5 above, or that contemplated in 2 Cor. xiii. 2 ff., 10; they are "acts of energy".—Προφητεία, as an edifying gift of speech, is akin to the λόγος graces of (a); it is contrasted with γλῶσσαι (c) in xiv., as being an intelligent exercise. But prophecy, while employing the νοῦς, has a deeper seat; it is no branch of σοφία or γνῶσις as though coming by rational insight, but an ἀποκάλυψις of hidden things of God realised through a peculiar clearness and intensity of faith (2 Cor. iv. 13 f.; Heb. xi. 1, 13; Luke x. 21 f., etc.), and is in line therefore with the miraculous powers preceding; hence "the prophet" is regularly distinguished from "the teacher".—"Discernment of spirits" is the counterpart and safeguard of "prophesying,"

[b][e] γλωσσῶν, [c] ἄλλῳ δὲ [d] ἑρμηνεία [e] γλωσσῶν· 11. πάντα δὲ ταῦτα [e] ἐνεργεῖ τὸ [e] ἓν καὶ τὸ [e] αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα, [f] διαιροῦν [g] ἰδίᾳ ἑκάστῳ καθὼς [h] βούλεται.

12. [i] Καθάπερ γὰρ τὸ σῶμα ἕν ἐστι καὶ [k] μέλη ἔχει [1] πολλά,[1] c In this sense, vv. 28, 30, xiii., xiv. passim; Acts ii. 3 f., 11, x. 46, xix. 6; Mk. xvi. 17. d xiv. 26; Sir. prologue, xlvii. 17. -ευτης, xiv. 28; -ευω, Heb. vii. 2. e See xi. 5. ἐν πν., and αυτ., see ver. 9. f Lk. xv. 12; Josh. xviii. 5. -σις, ver. 4 above. g N.T. h.l.; 2 Macc. iv. 34. h Of God, Heb. vi. 17; Jas. i. 18; 2 Pet. iii. 9; 1 Kings ii. 25. -ημα, Rom. ix. 19. i See x. 10. k See vi. 15.

[1] πολλα εχει (in this order): non-Western and pre-Syrian uncc.

demanding the like super-rational penetration; the true critic may not have originative faculty, but his mind moves in the same region with that of the originator and tracks his steps. διακρίσεις, pl., for this gift had many and various occasions of exercise: see parls., also for διακρίνω, vi. 5, etc.; as to the power itself and the need for its exercise, cf. 1 Thess. v. 20 ff., 2 Thess. ii. 2, 9 ff., 1 John ii. 18 ff., iv. 1-6, Matt. xxiv. 11 f. P. exhibits this διάκρισις admirably in ver. 3 above; it displays itself in Acts xiii. 8 ff., along with the ἐνέργημα δυνάμεως; cf. Acts v. 1-11.—(c) The "kinds of tongues," with their attendant "interpretation," constitute the third order of specific charisms; in this exercise the intelligence of the speaker is suspended. The γλῶσσαι, ranked first by the Cor. because of their sensational character, P. enumerates last in regard of "profiting" (7); ch. xiv. will justify this relative depreciation. The "tongues" of this Ep. cannot have signified the power to speak strange languages in missionary preaching, as many have inferred from the terms used in the account of the manifestation of the Day of Pentecost; see notes on Acts ii. 4-11. γένη implies that this ecstatic phenomenon was far from uniform; the "new tongues" of Mark xvi. 17, together with the indications of ch. xiii. 1 and xiv. of this Ep., point to the breaking out of an exalted and mystical utterance differing from all recognised human speech; this utterance varied at diff. times and places in its mode and attendant conditions, and in the impression it produced on the hearers; it is regularly spoken of in the pl. The necessity of ἑρμηνεία for the extraction of any benefit to the Church from the Tongues will be shown in ch. xiv.; sometimes the possessor of the Tongue became interpreter also (xiv. 13). On the γλῶσσαι generally, see Ed., ad loc.; also Hn.

Ver. 11 sums up the last par. (4-10), impressing on the Cor. with redoubled emphasis the variety in unity of the "gifts," and vindicating the sanctity of each: "But all these things worketh the one and the same Spirit" (cf. 9). In the qualifying clause, "dividing separately (seorsim) as He wills," διαίρουν takes up the διαιρέσεις of vv. 4-6; ἑκάστῳ is resumed from ver. 7; ἰδίᾳ adds the thought that the Spirit deals with each recipient by himself, individually and appropriately (cf. vii. 7, iii. 8, xv. 23); while καθὼς βούλεται signifies that He acts in the distribution upon His choice and judgment, where lies the hidden reason for the giving or withholding of each particular gift.—For βούλομαι, see parls.; and for its difference from ἐθέλω, cf. ver. 18; also iv. 19, 21, and parls. Eurip., Hippol., 1329 f., supplies a good example of the distinction, οὐδεὶς ἀπαντᾶν βούλεται προθυμίᾳ τῇ τοῦ θέλοντος, ἀλλ' ἀφιστάμεθ' ἀεί: "None of us likes to cross the purpose of one that is bent on anything, but we always stand aside". No predicate could more strongly imply personality than does βούλεται.

§ 40. THE ONE BODY, OF MANY MEMBERS, xii. 12-20. The manifold graces, ministries, workings (4 ff.), that proceed from the action of the Holy Spirit in the Christian community, stand not only in common dependence upon Him (§ 39), but are mutually bound to each other. The Church of Christ is "the body" for the Spirit of God; and these operations are its correlated functional activities (12 f.). Differentiation is of the essence of bodily life. The unity of the Church is not that of inorganic nature,—a monotonous aggregation of similars, as in a pool of water or a heap of stones; it is the oneness of a living organism, no member of which exercises the same faculty as another. Without "many members," contrasted as foot with hand or sight with smell (14-17), there would be no body at all, but only a single monstrous limb (19). In God's creative plan, it is the integration and πάντα δὲ τὰ [k] μέλη τοῦ σώματος τοῦ [1] ἑνὸς [1] πολλὰ ὄντα ἕν ἐστι σῶμα, οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστός· 13. καὶ γὰρ ἐν [m] ἑνὶ [m] Πνεύματι ἡμεῖς πάντες [n] εἰς [m] ἓν [m] σῶμα [mn] ἐβαπτίσθημεν, εἴτε [o] Ἰουδαῖοι εἴτε [o] Ἕλληνες, εἴτε [p] δοῦλοι εἴτε [p] ἐλεύθεροι, καὶ πάντες [q] εἰς [2] ἓν Πνεῦμα [3] [q] ἐποτίσθημεν.[4] 14. καὶ γὰρ τὸ σῶμα οὐκ ἐστὶν ἓν [k] μέλος

l Mt. iii. 11; Acts i. 5, xi. 16.
m See vv. 9, 11; ἐν πν., ἐν σωμ., Eph. iv. 4.
n See x. 2.
o See x. 32.
p Eph. vi. 18 (with ειτε); Gal. iii. 28; Col. iii. 11; Rev. vi. 15, xiii. 16, xix. 18. ειτε . . . ειτε, see iii. 22.
q See iii. 2. For acc. with pass. (without εις), 2 Th. ii. 15; Heb. vi. 9; Rev. xvi. 9; Mk. x. 38; Lk. xii. 47.

[1] Om. του ενος all uncc. but ℵcD, Hil., Ambrst. (ex uno corpore).

[2] Om. εις all uncc. but DcKL.

[3] εις εν πομα: a number of minn., with Macarius and (virtually) Clem. Al.

[4] εφωτισθημεν, L, and several minn.; A, εσμεν.

reciprocity of a multitude of distinct organs that makes up the physical and the social frame (18 ff.).

Ver. 12. "The one Spirit," the leading thought of § 39, suggests the similitude of "the body" for the Church (called in ch. iii. the tillage, building, temple of God), since this is the seat of His multifarious energies. In the Eph. and Col. Epp. τὸ σῶμα becomes a fixed title for the Christian community, setting forth its relation both to the inhabiting Spirit and to the sovereign Head; as yet it remains a plastic figure. Aristotle had applied this image to the State, the body politic; and the idea was a Gr. commonplace. The Ap. is still insisting on the breadth of the Holy Spirit's working, as against Cor. partisanship and predilection for miraculous endowments; hence the reiterated ἓν and πολλά, also the emphatic πάντα of the second clause: "but all the members of the body, many as they are (πολλὰ ὄντα), are one body". In applying the comparison, Paul writes not as one expects, οὕτως ἡ ἐκκλησία or οὕτως ἡμεῖς, but with heightened solemnity οὕτως καὶ ὁ Χριστός, "so also is the Christ!" "Christ stands by metonomy for the community united through Him and grounded in Him" (Hn.). This substitution shows how realistic was P.'s conception of believers as subsisting "in Christ," and raises the idea of Church-unity to its highest point; "all the members are instinct with one personality" (Ed.): cf. Gal. ii. 20, 2 Cor. xiii. 3, 5, for this identification in the case of the individual Christian. The later representation of Christ and the Church as Head and Body is implicit in this phrase. For Χριστὸς with art., cf. i. 12, x. 4, etc.; also Eph. v. 23 ff.

Ver. 13. καὶ γὰρ ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι κ.τ.λ.: "For indeed in one Spirit we all into one body were baptized—whether Jews or Greeks, whether bondmen or freemen—and we all of one Spirit were made to drink,"—were drenched (Ev.). An appeal to experience (cf. Gal. iii. 2 ff., iv. 6; also Acts xix. 2-6): at their baptism the Cor. believers, differing in race and rank, were consciously made one; one Spirit flooded their souls with the love and joy of a common faith in Christ.—For βαπτίζω ἐν and εἰς, see parls.: ἐν defines the element and ruling influence of the baptism, εἰς the relationship to which it introduces. P. refers to actual Christian baptism, the essence of which lay in the regenerating influence of the Holy Spirit (John iii. 5 ff., Tit. iii. 5 f.); baptism represents the entire process of personal salvation which it seals and attests (Eph. i. 13, Gal. iii. 26 ff., Rom. vi. 2 ff.), as the Queen's coronation imports her whole investiture with royalty. That Jews and Greeks, slaves and freemen, had received at the outset an identical Spirit, shows that they were intended to form a single body, and that this body was designed to have a wide variety of members (11 f.).—ἐποτίσθημεν (see parls.) has been referred by Cm., Aug., Cv., Est., and latterly by Hn., to the ποτήριον of the Lord's Supper (x. 16, xi. 25), as though καὶ coupled the two consecutive Sacraments (cf. x. 2 f., and notes); but the tense, parl. to ἐβαπτίσθημεν (otherwise in x. 16, etc.), points to a past event, not a repeated act; and it is "the blood of Christ," not the Holy Spirit, that fills (symbolically) the Eucharistic cup. The two aors. describe the same primary experience under opposite figures (the former of which is acted in baptism), as an outward affusion and an inward absorption; the Cor. were at once immersed in (cf. συνετάφημεν, Rom. vi. 4) and saturated with the Spirit; the ἀλλὰ πολλά· 15. ἐὰν εἴπῃ ὁ πούς, "ʳὍτι οὐκ εἰμὶ χείρ, οὐκ ʳεἰμὶ ʳἐκ τοῦ σώματος," οὐ ˢπαρὰ τοῦτο οὐκ ʳἔστιν ʳἐκ τοῦ σώματος[1]· 16. καὶ ἐὰν εἴπῃ τὸ οὖς, "ʳὍτι οὐκ εἰμὶ ὁ ὀφθαλμός, οὐκ ʳεἰμὶ ʳἐκ τοῦ σώματος," οὐ ˢπαρὰ τοῦτο οὐκ ʳἔστιν ʳἐκ τοῦ σώματος[1]· 17. ᵗεἰ ὅλον τὸ σῶμα ὀφθαλμός, ᵗποῦ ἡ ᵘἀκοή; ᵗεἰ ὅλον ᵘἀκοή, ᵗποῦ ἡ ᵛὄσφρησις; 18. ʷνυνὶ[2] ʷδὲ ὁ Θεὸς ˣἔθετο τὰ ᵏμέλη, ʸἓν ʸἕκαστον αὐτῶν, ἐν τῷ σώματι ᶻκαθὼς ᶻἠθέλησεν.

r Of things h.l. in N.T. Of persons, see i. 30; partitive as here, Mt. xxvi. 73; Acts xxi. 8, etc.; Obad. 11.
s N.T. h.l., in this sense; cf. Gr., Lidd. s.v. I. 6; syn. with δια, Philo, I. 263.
t που, see i. 20. Interrog. after ει, iv. 7, x. 30, xv. 12, 32; 8 times more in P.; etc.
u 2 Pet. ii. 8. For other uses, see Rom. x. 16 f.; Gal. iii. 2, etc.
v H.l.
w Logical, vii. 14, xiii. 13, xiv. 6, xv. 20, etc.
x ver. 28; Rom. iv. 17; 1 Th. v. 9; 1 Tim. i. 12, ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 11; Heb. i. 2; Acts xx. 28; Gen. xvii. 5.
y Six times more in P.; freq. in Lk. and Acts; Rev. xxi. 21.
z Of God, xv. 38; without καθως, iv. 19; Rom. ix. 18, 22; Col. i. 27; 1 Tim. ii. 4; 1 Pet. iii. 10; Jas. iv. 15; Mt. xxvi. 39. Cf. θελημα Θε., i. 1 and parls.

[1] Pointed interrog. by Tr., as in T.R.; affirm. by other crit. edd. See note below.
[2] νυν (?) ABDG. So Tr., W.H. txt., R.V., El., Nestle. νυνι, ℵCD^bc^KLP. So Tisch., W.H. marg.

second figure supplements the first: cf. Rom. v. 5, Tit. iii. 5, 6.—ποτίζω, which takes double acc. (iii. 2), retains that of the thing in the passive.

Ver. 14 recalls, under the analogy of the σῶμα, the reason given in ver. 12 for the diversity of spiritual powers displayed in the Church: it is not "one member," but "many" that constitute the "body". This thesis the rest of the § illustrates.

Vv. 15, 16 represent with lively fancy the foot and ear in turn—organs of activity and intelligence—as disclaiming their part in the body, because they have not the powers of the hand and eye: an image of jealous or discouraged Cor. Christians, emulous of the shining gifts of their fellows. In each case it is the lowlier but kindred organ that desponds, pars de parte quam simillima loquens (Bg.): cf. ver. 21. — οὐκ εἰμὶ ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, "I am not of the body"—not a mere partitive expression; it signifies dependence (pendens ab: cf. Gal. iii. 10, Tit. i. 10, etc.; Wr., p. 461), hence derived status or character.—Paul contradicts, in identical terms, the self-disparagement of the two chagrined members: οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο κ.τ.λ. must be read as a statement—"it is not therefore not of the body" (R.V., Bg., Mr., Hn., Hf., Ed., El., Bt., Sm.); not a question (A.V., Cv., Bz., Est., D.W., Al., Gd.), which would require μὴ instead of οὐ—"Is it for this reason not of the body?" For παρὰ with acc. of reason (along of this), see parls.: "in accordance with this," viz., the disclaimer just made (so Mr., Hn., Hf., Ev., El., Er.—deplorans sortem suam). The foot or ear does not sever itself from the body by distinguishing itself from hand or eye; its pettish argument (ἐὰν εἴπῃ κ.τ.λ.) leaves it where it was. Gd., Ed., and others, less aptly refer τοῦτο not to the saying of the foot, etc., but to the fact that it is not hand, etc. For double οὐ, cf. 2 Thess. iii. 9.

Ver. 17 expostulates in the vein of vv. 15 f. with those who exalt one order of gifts (either as possessing it themselves or envying it in their neighbours) to the contempt of others; the despised function is as needful as the admired to make up the body: "If all the body (were) eye, where the hearing? if all (were) hearing, where the smelling?" The senses are set in order of dignity; the ear wishes to be the eye (16), but then its indispensable service of hearing would be undischarged; so the nose might desire promotion to the rank of an ear, leaving the body impotent to smell. The discontent of the lower members and the scornfulness of the higher are alike signs of a selfish individualism, indifferent to the welfare of the body ecclesiastic.—ἦν (cf. ver. 9) is understood here.—Ἡ ὄσφρησις is "the sense of smell"—not odor, but odoratus (Vg.).

Ver. 18. "But now (argumentative νῦν, 'as things are': see v. 11) God has appointed the members, each single one of them, in the body as He willed." It is God's will that has ranged the physical organs—and by analogy the members of the Church—in their several places and offices (cf. i. 1, iii. 5). Dissatisfaction with one's particular charism, or contempt for that of another, is disloyalty towards Him and distrust of His wisdom. This is Paul's ultima ratio: ὦ ἄνθρωπε, σὺ τίς εἶ κ.τ.λ.; Rom. ix. 20.—

19. εἰ δὲ ἦν τὰ[1] πάντα ἓν [k] μέλος, [l] ποῦ τὸ σῶμα; 20. [m] νῦν[2] [m] δὲ πολλὰ μὲν[3] [k] μέλη, ἓν δὲ σῶμα.

21. Οὐ δύναται δὲ[4] ὀφθαλμὸς[4] εἰπεῖν τῇ χειρί, "[a] Χρείαν σου οὐκ [a] ἔχω·" ἢ πάλιν ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῖς ποσί, "[a] Χρείαν ὑμῶν οὐκ [a] ἔχω·" 22. ἀλλὰ [b] πολλῷ [b] μᾶλλον τὰ [c] δοκοῦντα [d] μέλη τοῦ [d] σώματος a Eph. iv. 28; 1 Th. i. 8, iv. 9, 12, v. 1; Heb. v. 12, x. 36; thrice in Rev.; Acts ii. 45, iv. 35; freq. in GG.

b 2 Cor. iii. 9, 11; Rom. v. 9 ff.; Phil. i. 23, ii. 12; Mt. vi. 30; Mk. x. 48; Lk. xviii. 39.
c In first sense, 2 Cor. x. 9; Gal. ii. 2, 6, 9; Mt. xvii. 25, etc. For second, see iii. 18.
d See vv. 12 ff., vi. 15.

[1] Om. τα (?) BG, 17; Lach., Tr., W.H. bracket.

[2] νυνι, GP; see ver. 18.

[3] Om. μεν (?) BD, 73, Aug. So W.H. txt.; Lachm., Tr. brackets.

[4] ο οφθαλμος: all uncc. but K, and many minuscc.
Om. δε ACGP, 17, 37, syr^sch. cop. (Alex. and late Western); ℵBDKL, vg. retain.

For τίθημι in mid. voice, cf. ver. 28 and other parls.; the tense refers the Divine appointment constituting the body to past time generally—"has set" rather than "set". The prefixed ἓν singles out the individual for the Divine regard, distributed by ἕκαστον; each limb by itself has its part assigned by God.—ἠθέλησεν signifies determining will, as βούλεται (11, note) discriminating choice.

Vv. 19, 20 rehearse the doctrine of vv. 12-14, now vividly illustrated by vv. 15 ff., viz., that a manifold variety of organs is indispensable for the existence of the Church. First the principle is suggested by a rhetorical question, in the strain of ver. 17: "But if all were one member, where (were) the body?" Secondly, it is affirmed, with grave conclusiveness: "But as the case stands (νῦν δέ)—Many members, yet one body".—Πολλὰ μέλη, ἓν δὲ σῶμα sums up the whole exposition in a concise epigram, which was perhaps already proverbial (cf. ix. 24).—ἐστὶν hardly needs to be supplied. Cf., for the thought, x. 17, and notes on vv. 12, 14 above.

§ 41. The Mutual Dependence of the Body's Members, xii. 21-31*a*. Multiformity, it has been shown, is of the essence of organic life. But the variously endowed members, being needful to the body, are consequently necessary to each other—those that seem "weaker" sometimes the more so (21 f.), while the less honoured have a dignity of their own; thus all the members cherish mutual respect and fellow-feeling (23-26). This holds good of the Church, with its numerous grades of personal calling and endowment (27 f.). No one charism belongs to all Christians (29 f.). There is choice and purpose in God's distributive appointments, which leave, moreover, room for man's personal effort. We should desire the best of His gifts (31).

Ver. 21 personifies again the physical members, in the fashion of vv. 15 f.: there the inferior disparaged itself as though it were no part of the body at all; here the superior disparages its fellow, affecting independence. "The eye (might wish to say but) cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee! or the head in turn to the feet, I have no need of you!" The eye and head are imagined looking superciliously on their companions; in vv. 15 f. the ear and foot play the part of discontented rivals.—οὐ δύναται—a moral and practical impossibility (cf. x. 21): at every turn the eye wants the hand, or the head calls on the foot, in order to reach its ends; the keen eye and scheming head of the paralytic—what a picture of impotence! The famous Roman fable of the Belly and the Members is recalled by the Apostle's apologue. There is no such thing in the physical, nor in the social, fabric as independence.—πάλιν (cf. iii. 20, 2 Cor. x. 7, Rom. xv. 10), vicissim (Hn.), rather than iterum (Vg.) or rursum (Bz.), adduces another instance of the same kind as the former.

Vv. 22-24*a*. "On the contrary" (ἀλλά), instead of the more powerful and dignified (23) bodily parts dispensing with the humbler (21), it is "much more" the case that these latter—"the weaker" or "less honourable as they may seem to be" (τὰ δοκοῦντα . . . ἀσθενέστερα ὑπάρχειν)—"are necessary" in themselves (22), and treated with "more abundant honour" in our care of the body. By πολλῷ μᾶλλον (cf. Plato, Phædo, 80 E, ἀλλὰ πολλῷ μᾶλλον), multo potius

[e] ἀσθενέστερα [f] ὑπάρχειν [g] ἀναγκαῖά ἐστι· 23. καὶ ἃ [e] δοκοῦμεν [h] ἀτιμότερα εἶναι τοῦ σώματος, τούτοις [i] τιμὴν [k] περισσοτέραν [l] περι-τίθεμεν· καὶ τὰ [m] ἀσχήμονα ἡμῶν [n] εὐσχημοσύνην [k] περισσοτέραν ἔχει, 24. τὰ δὲ [n] εὐσχήμονα ἡμῶν οὐ [a] χρείαν [a] ἔχει· ἀλλ᾽ ὁ Θεὸς [o] συνεκέρασεν τὸ σῶμα, τῷ [p] ὑστερουμένῳ[1] [k] περισσοτέραν δοὺς [i] τιμήν, 25. ἵνα μὴ ᾖ [q] σχίσμα[2] ἐν τῷ σώματι, ἀλλὰ τὸ αὐτὸ [r] ὑπὲρ ἀλλήλων [r] μεριμνῶσι τὰ [d] μέλη· 26. καὶ [s] εἴτε[3] πάσχει ἓν μέλος,

e See i. 27.
f See vii. 26.
g 2 Cor. ix. 5; Ph. i. 24, ii. 25: Tit. iii. 14; Heb. viii. 3; Acts x. 24, xiii. 46.
h See iv. 10.
i Esth. i. 20. For τιμη., Rom. ix. 21, xii. 10, xiii. 7; 1 Th. iv. 4; 1 Tim. v. 17, vi. 1; 2 Tim. ii. 20 f.; 1 Pet. iii. 7.
k Compar., xv. 10; 2 Cor. ii. 7, x. 8; Heb. vi. 17, vii. 15; 9 times in GG.
l In this sense, Mt. xxvii. 28, Mk. xv. 17; cf. Mt. xxi. 33, xxvii. 48; Ruth iii. 3. -σις, 1 Pet. iii. 3.
m N.T. h.l.; Deut. xxiv. 1; cf. συνη, Rom. i. 27; Rev. xvi. 15, vii. 36.
n N.T. h.l.; in Plato, Xen. -ων, see vii. 35; -ονως, xiv. 40.
o Heb. iv. 2.
p See i. 7.
q See i. 10.
r See vii. 32. With υπερ, N.T. h.l.; Ps. xxxvii. 18.
s See iii. 22.

[1] υστερουντι, ℵᶜDGKL, etc.—Western and Syrian.

[2] σχισματα, ℵ*DGL, above 30 minuscc.—Western. So Tisch.[8], Treg. marg.; other edd. σχισμα: cf. i. 10, xi. 18.

[3] ειτι (?) BG, some latt. vg. (et si quid), Ambrst. (Western). So Lachm., Treg. Favoured by its dissidence from the parl. ειτε. A omits altogether.

(Bz.) or a fortiori (Ev.), the position of ver. 21 is more than negatived; the inferior members are not merely shielded from contempt, but guarded with exceptional respect. By the "weaker" and "ignobler" parts P. cannot mean the hands or feet spoken of in ver. 21, for these are strong and usually uncovered (see περιτίθεμεν, 23); but members in appearance quite subordinate and actually feeble—viz., the more delicate vital organs. Amongst these the ἀσχήμονα signify definitely τὰ αἰδοῖα, quæ inhonesta sunt (Vg.); cf. Rev. xvi. 15, τὴν ἀσχημοσύνην.—The ἀσθενέστερα and ἀτιμότερα, the "comparatively weak" and "feeble" (comparativus molliens, Bg.), are wide categories applicable to the same members from diff. points of view. Weakness, in the case, e.g., of the heart, is compensated by needfulness; ignobility, as in the viscera, by careful tendance shown in ample clothing—"we put about them (clothe them with) a more abundant honour" (for the use of τιμή, cf. ἐξουσία in xi. 10). The unseemliness (indecency) attaching to certain organs, always guarded from sight, "brings with it (ἔχει, cf. Heb. x. 35) a more abundant seemliness". Against most commentt. (Gd., e.g., thinks only of "les soins de la toilette"!), Ed. maintains that εὐσχημοσύνη (23) has a moral sense, looking beyond the honour of apparel; "the greater comeliness relates rather to function". Is any office more responsible than that of parenthood, anything more sacred than the mother's womb and mother's breast? (cf. Luke xi. 27; also Heb. xiii. 4).—τὰ δὲ εὐσχήμονα κ.τ.λ.: "But our seemly parts"—head and face, e.g. (the human face divine)—"have no need," their distinction being conspicuous; see xi. 7*a*, where this visible, but also moral, εὐσχημοσύνη is raised to its highest grade. From this text Bg. inferred the impiety of patches!—On ὑπάρχειν, see note to xi. 7; δοκέω has in vv. 22 f. its two meanings—non-personal and personal—of seem and suppose; like methinks and I think, Germ., dünken and denken.

Vv. 24*b*, 25. "But God compounded (συν-εκέρασεν, mixed together; Vg. contemperavit) the body." The assertion of God's workmanship in the structure of the physical organs (cf. 18) was necessary, when many thinkers affirmed the evil of matter and regarded physical appetites as degrading (cf. 1 Tim. iv. 3, Col. ii. 23; also vi. 13, 18 ff. above). This accounts for the adversative ἀλλά—"Nay but": P. tacitly contradicts those who saw nothing but ἀτιμία and ἀσχημοσύνη in vital bodily functions. For ὁ Θεὸς συνεκέρασεν, cf. Ps. cxxxix. 13-16 (where the womb is "God's laboratory," Delitzsch), Eccl. xi. 5, Job x. 8-11. Ed. reads the assertion as directed against philosophy; "where Aristotle says 'nature,' P. says 'God'".—τῷ ὑστερουμένῳ περισσοτέραν δοὺς τιμήν, "to the part which suffers lack (opus habenti, Cv.: cf. note, i. 7) having assigned more abundant honour"; so that the human instinct respecting the ignobler organs of the body (ver. 23) is the reflex of a Divine ordinance: cf. xi. 14 f., to the like effect.—"That there may not be division (σχίσμα:

[t] συμπάσχει πάντα τὰ μέλη· [s] εἴτε [u] δοξάζεται ἓν [1] μέλος, [v] συγχαίρει πάντα τὰ μέλη. 27. ὑμεῖς δέ ἐστε [w] σῶμα [w] Χριστοῦ, καὶ [d] μέλη [x] ἐκ [x] μέρους [2]· 28. καὶ [y] οὓς μὲν [z] ἔθετο ὁ [z] Θεὸς ἐν τῇ [a] ἐκκλησίᾳ [b] πρῶτον [c] ἀποστόλους, [b] δεύτερον [d] προφήτας, [b] τρίτον [e] διδασκάλους, [b] ἔπειτα [f] δυνάμεις, [b] εἶτα [3] [g] χαρίσματα [g] ἰαμάτων, t Rom. viii. 17.

u With human obj., 2 Cor. iii. 10; Rom. viii. 30, xi. 13; Rev. xviii. 7; Lk. iv. 15. Cf. vi. 20; h.l. of body.
v xiii. 6; Ph. ii. 17 f.; Lk. i. 58, xv. 6, 9.
w Eph. iv. 12, v. 30. Cf. vv. 12 ff.; Rom. xii. 4 f.
x xiii. 9 f., 12; 1 Kings xxiii. 26. απο μερ., Rom. xi. 25, etc.; μερος τι, xi. 18.
y See ver. 8.
z See ver. 18.
a See i. 2. Earliest instance of η εκκλ. absol., in supra-local sense; cf. Eph. i. 22, etc.; Col. i. 18, etc.; Mt. xvi. 18, xviii. 17.
b πρ. . . δευτ., Heb. x. 9; Mt. xxi. 28, 30, xxii. 25 f. (τριτος), 38; Lk. xix. 16, 18; Rev. iv. 7 (τριτ.), etc.; δευτ. . . . τριτ., Lk. xii. 38. πρωτ. . . . επειτα or ειτα (ειτεν), xv. 46; 1 Th. iv. 16 f.; 1 Tim. iii. 10; Heb. vii. 2; Jas. iii. 17; Mk. iv. 28.
c Pl., see iv. 9.
d Pl., thus, xiv. 29, 32; Eph. ii. 20, iii. 5, iv. 11; Acts xi. 27, xiii. 1, xv. 32.
e Pl., in this sense, Eph. iv. 11 (with αποστ., προφ.); 2 Tim. iv. 3; Heb. v. 12; Jas. iii. 1; Acts xiii. 1 (with προφ.).
f See ver. 10.
g See ver. 9.

[1] Om. εν ℵ*AB, Thdrt. So the crit. edd.

[2] μελους, D*, latt. vg. (membra de membro), syrp., and many Ff. (ουκ ειπεν μελη εκ μελων, αλλα μελη πολλα εκ μελους ενος· μελος γαρ η κεφαλη του ολου σωματος: Severian, in Catena). A characteristic Western variant.

[3] επειτα, all uncc. but KL. DG, Hil., Amb. omit.

see parls.) in the body"—the manifestation of the jealousy or scorn depicted in vv. 16 and 21, which have their counterpart at present in the Cor. Church (i. 10 ff., iv. 6, etc.).—The opposite state of things (ἀλλά), so desirable in the spiritual organism, is realised by Divine art in the natural: "God tempered the body together" in this way, "that . . . the members might have the same solicitude for one another". The physical members are obliged, by the structure of the frame, to care for one another; the hand is as anxious to guard the eye or the stomach, to help the mouth or the foot, as to serve itself; the eye is watchman for every other organ; each feels its own usefulness and cherishes its fellows; all "have the same care," since they have the same interest—that of "the one body". This societas membrorum makes the physical order both a parable of and a basis for the spiritual. For τὸ αὐτό, cf. i. 10, 2 Cor. xiii. 11, Phil. ii. 2, etc.—μεριμνῶσιν (see esp. vii. 32 ff., for this shade of meaning) is in pr. sbj., of habitual feeling; in pl., despite neut. subject, since the μέλη have been individually personified (15 f., 21).

Ver. 26 illustrates the unselfish solicitude of the bodily organs; the nervous connexion makes it a veritable συμπάθεια (συμπάσχει). Plato applies the same analogy to the State in a striking passage in his Politicus, 462C; see also Cm., ad loc.—δοξάζεται (glorificatur, Cv.; not gloriatur, Vg.) goes beyond nervous sympathy; "δόξα is more than εὐεξία" (Ed.): for δοξάζω, applied to the body, cf. xv. 40 ff., Phil. iii. 21. Cm. says finely, "When the head is crowned, the whole man feels itself glorified; when the mouth speaks, the eyes laugh and are filled with gladness".

Ver. 27. The figure of the body, developed from ver. 14 to 26 with deliberation and completeness, is now applied in detail to the Church, where the same solidarity of manifold parts and powers obtains (4 ff.): "Now you are (ὑμεῖς δέ ἐστε) a body of (in relation to) Christ, and members severally"—scarcely "the body of Christ" specifically (El.), as if P. might have written τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ (as in Eph. iv. 12, etc.); this has not yet become the recognised title of the Church (see note on 12 above); nor is the anarthrous σῶμα to be read distributively, as though the Cor. Church were thought of as one amongst many σώματα. P. is interpreting his parable: the Cor. are, in their relation to Christ, what the body is to the man.—Χριστοῦ is anarthrous by correlation (cf. note on Θεοῦ σοφίαν, ii. 7).—ἐκ μέρους signifies the partial by contrast, not as in xiii. 9 with the perfect, but with the whole (body)—particulatim (Bz.): ἐκ of the point of view—"from (and so according to) the part (allotted to each)"; see ver. 11; cf. also μερίζομαι in vii. 17, etc.; similarly, ἐκ μέτρου in John iii. 34, ἐξ ἰσότητος in 2 Cor. viii. 13.

Ver. 28 expounds the μέλη ἐκ μέρους.—οὓς μὲν (cf. 8 ff.) should be followed by οὓς δέ; but πρῶτον intervening suggests δεύτερον, τρίτον in the sequel—"instead of a mere enumeration P. prefers an ar-

[h]ἀντιλήψεις, [i]κυβερνήσεις, [k]γένη [k]γλωσσῶν· 29. μὴ πάντες [c]ἀπόστολοι; μὴ πάντες [d]προφῆται; μὴ πάντες [e]διδάσκαλοι; μὴ πάντες [f]δυνάμεις; 30. μὴ πάντες [g]χαρίσματα ἔχουσιν [g]ἰαμάτων; μὴ πάντες [k]γλώσσαις [k]λαλοῦσι; μὴ πάντες [l]διερμηνεύουσι; 31*a*. [m]ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ [g]χαρίσματα τὰ [n]κρείττονα.[9]

h N.T. h.l.; Ps. xxi. 20; Sir. xi. 12; 2 Macc. viii. 19. -λαμβανεσθαι, Acts xx. 35.
i N.T. h.l.; Prov. i. 5, xi. 14, xxiv. 6. -της, Acts xxvii. 11; Rev. xviii. 17.
k See ver. 10; xiii. 1.
l xiv. 5, 13, 27; Acts ix. 36; Lk. xxiv. 27; 2 Macc. i. 36; -της, xiv. 28.
m In this sense, xiv. 1, 39; Sir. li. 18; -της, see xiv. 12.
n μειζονα, xiii. 13, xiv. 5; Jas. iv. 6; Mt. xxiii. 17, 19.

[9] μειζονα, ℵABC, 17, 37, 67, cod. am. (of vg.), many Gr. Ff. κρειττονα (DG, κρεισσονα) is Western and Syrian.

rangement in order of rank" (Wr., pp. 710 f.); and this mode of distinction in turn gives place to ἔπειτα, at the point where with δυνάμεις abstract categories (as in 8 ff.) are substituted for the concrete—a striking instance of P.'s mobility of style; the last three of the series are appended asyndetically.—The nine functions of vv. 8 ff. are replaced by eight, which may be thus classified: (1) three teaching orders, (2) two kinds of miraculous, and (3) two of administrative functions, with (4) the one notable ecstatic gift. Three are identical in each list —viz., δυνάμεις, χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων, and γένη γλωσσῶν, taking much the same position in both enumerations (see the earlier notes). The apostles, prophets, teachers (ranged in order of the importance, rather than the affinity of their powers) exercise amongst them the word of wisdom, prophecy, and word of knowledge—"the Apostles" possessing a rich measure of many gifts; these three will be expanded into the five of Eph. iv. 11. The ἑρμηνία γλωσσῶν (10), omitted at this point, appears in the sequel (30); and the διάκρισις πνευμάτων (10) is tacitly understood as the companion of προφητεία, while the πίστις of ver. 9 pervades other charisms. Nothing is really wanting here that belonged to the χαρίσματα of § 39, while ἀντιλήμψεις and κυβερνήσεις—"helpings, governings"—enrich that previous catalogue; "helpings" stands in apt connexion with "healings". The two added offices became the special functions of the διάκονος and ἐπίσκοπος of a somewhat later time (Phil. i. 1; cf. Rom. xii. 7 f.).—No trace as yet appears of definite Church organisation at Cor.; but the charisms here introduced were necessary to the equipment of the Christian Society, and the appointment of officers charged with their systematic exercise was only a question of time (see Introd., chap. i., p. 732; ii. 2. 4). A sort of unofficial ἀντίλημψις and κυβέρνησις is assigned to Stephanas and his family in xvi. 15 f. These vbl. nouns, from ἀντιλαμβάνομαι and κυβερνάω, mean by etymology taking hold of (to help) and steering, piloting, respectively. The figurative use of the latter is rare outside of poetry; so κυβέρνησις πολίων in Pindar, Pyth., x., 112, and in the newly discovered Bacchylides, xiii., 152. "Government" of the Church implies a share of the "word of wisdom" and "knowledge" (8); see 1 Tim. v. 17, 2 Tim. ii. 2, Tit. i. 9.—For ἔθετο ὁ Θεός, cf. ver. 18: "God appointed (set for Himself) in the church"—meaning the entire Christian Society, with all its "apostles" and the rest. The earliest N.T. example of ἐκκλησία in its ecumenical sense; see however Matt. xvi. 18, and note on i. 2 above.

Vv. 29, 30. In this string of rhetorical questions P. recapitulates once more the charisms, in the terms of ver. 28. He adds now to the γλώσσαις λαλεῖν its complementary διερμηνεύειν (see 10, and xiv. 13, etc.: διὰ in this vb. imports translation); and omits ἀντιλήμψεις and κυβερνήσεις, for these functions had not taken articulate shape at Cor.: the eight are thus reduced to seven. The stress of these interrogations rests on the seven times repeated all; let prophet, teacher, healer, and the rest, fulfil each contentedly his μέρος in the commonwealth of grace, without trenching upon or envying the prerogative of another; "non omnia possumus omnes": Thus by fit division of labour the efficiency of the whole body of Christ will be secured and all Church functions duly discharged.—δυνάμεις may be nom. (Bg., Hf., Hn., Al., Bt., Gd., El.), in the vein of the foregoing questions—"are all powers?" (cf. xv. 24, Rom. viii. 38, etc., for the personification—applied elsewhere, however, to supernatural Powers); but

31*b*. Καὶ ἔτι [o]καθ᾽ [o]ὑπερβολὴν [p]ὁδὸν ὑμῖν δείκνυμι. XIII. 1. ἐὰν ταῖς [b a]γλώσσαις τῶν [a]ἀνθρώπων [b]λαλῶ καὶ τῶν [a c]ἀγγέλων ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, [d]γέγονα [e]χαλκὸς [f]ἠχῶν ἢ [g]κύμβαλον [h]ἀλαλάζον·

o 2 Cor. i. 8, iv. 17; Rom. vii. 13; Gal. i. 13.
p See iv. 17.
a See iv. 9.
b xii. 30, xiv. passim; Mk. xvi. 17; Acts ii. 4 ff., x. 46, xix. 6 (και προφητ.).
c Acts vii. 38, viii. 26, xii. 8, xxiii. 9, xxvii. 23 f.; Rev. v. 2, 11, etc.; Mt. i. 20, etc., xxviii. 5 ff., etc.; Lk. i. 13, ii. 9 ff.; Zech. i. 13 f., etc.
d ver. 11; 2 Cor. xii. 11.
e Mk. vi. 8; Rev. xviii. 12; Gen. iv. 22.
f N.T. h.l.; Jer. xxvii. 42; ηχος, Acts ii. 2; Lk. xxi. 25.
g N.T. h.l.; 1 Chron. xiii. 8, etc.; Ps. cl. 5.
h Mk. v. 38; Josh. vi. 20.

these "powers" are in vv. 28 and 8 ff. so decidedly separated from the teaching and associated with the healing gifts, that δυνάμεις appears to look forward, and to be obj. (prospectively) to ἔχουσιν along with χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων: "do all possess powers? all grace-gifts of healings?" (so Bz., Mr., Ed.). For δύναμιν ἔχω, see Rev. iii. 8; also Luke ix. 1, Acts i. 8, Matt. xiv. 2.

Ver. 31*a* corrects the inference which an indolent nature or weak judgment might draw from vv. 29 f., supposing that God's sovereign ordination supersedes man's effort. Our striving has a part to play, along with God's bestowment, in spiritual acquisitions; hence the contrastive δέ. "But (for all that) be zealous after the greater gifts." A man must not, e.g., be content to "speak with tongues" when he might "prophesy" (xiv. 1 ff.), nor to work miracles when beside that he might teach in the "word of wisdom".—ζηλόω (see parls.) implies in its good sense an ardent, in its bad sense (xiii. 4) an emulous pursuit. The greater (μείζονα) gifts are those intrinsically greater, or more beneficial (xiv. 5)—conditions usually coincident.

§ 42. THE WAY TO CHRISTIAN EMINENCE, xii. 31*b*-xiii. 3. Carefully and luminously Paul has set forth the manifoldness of the Holy Spirit's gifts that contribute to common life of the Church. All are necessary, all honourable in their proper use; all are of God's ordination. Some of the charisms are, however, more desirable than others. But if these "greater gifts" be sought in selfish emulation (as the ζηλοῦτε of ver. 31*a*, taken by itself, might suggest), their true purpose and blessing will be missed; gifts of grace (χαρίσματα) are not for men actuated by the ζῆλος of party spirit and ambition (cf. 4 f., iii. 3; 2 Cor. xii. 20, Gal. v. 20). While encouraging the Cor. to seek larger spiritual powers, the Ap. must "besides point out" the "way" to this end (31*b*), the way to escape the perils besetting their progress (4 ff.) and to win the goal of the Christian life (8-13). Love is the path to power in the Church; all loveless abilities, endowments, sacrifices are, from the Christian point of view, simply good for nothing (1-3).

Ver. 31*b*. Καὶ ἔτι κ.τ.λ. (cf. ἔτι τε καί, Luke xiv. 26)—"And besides"—adds to the exhortation just given (31*a*) an indication of the way to carry it out; the ζῆλος which aims at the μείζονα χαρίσματα must be that of ἀγάπη. This clause introduces and properly belongs to ch. xiii. (W.H.). καθ᾽ ὑπερβολήν (see parls.) is superlative, not compar.; P. is not pointing out "a more excellent way" than that of seeking and using the charisms of ch. xii. (with such a meaning he should have written Ἔτι δέ: cf. Luke xxiv. 41, etc.), but "a super-excellent way" (une voie souverainement excellente, Gd.) to win them (cf. viii. 1 b, 1 Jo. iv. 7). Δείκνυμι is "to point out" as with the finger.

Ver. 1. This way will be described in vv. 4-7, but first its necessity must be proved: this is shown by the five parl. hypotheses of vv. 1 ff., — respecting tongues, prophecy, knowledge, and devotion of goods or of person. The first supposition takes up the charism last mentioned (xii. 30) and most valued at Cor.: ἐὰν τ. γλώσσαις . . . λαλῶ, ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω (form of probable hypothesis—too prob. at Cor.), "If with the tongues of men I be speaking, and of angels, but am without love,"—in that case, "I have become a sounding brass or a clanging cymbal"—I have gained by this admired endowment the power of making so much senseless noise (cf. xiv. 6-11, 23, 27 f.). With love in the speaker, his γλωσσολαλία would be kept within the bounds of edification (xiv. 6, 12-19, 27), and would possess a tone and pathos far different from that described. —"Tongues of men" does not signify foreign languages (so Or., Hf., Al., Thiersch), such as are supposed to have been spoken on the Day of Pentecost (see note on xii. 10); they are, in this whole context, ecstatic and inarticulate forms of speech, such as "men" do sometimes exercise: "tongues of angels" (καὶ

2. καὶ[1] ἐὰν[1] ἔχω [i] προφητείαν καὶ εἰδῶ τὰ [k] μυστήρια πάντα καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν [k1] γνῶσιν, καὶ[1] ἐὰν[1] [m] ἔχω πᾶσαν τὴν [m] πίστιν ὥστε [n] ὄρη [no] μεθιστάνειν,[2] ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, [p] οὐδέν[3] εἰμι· 3. καὶ[1] ἐὰν[1] [q] ψωμίσω πάντα τὰ [r] ὑπάρχοντά μου, καὶ[1] ἐὰν[1] [s] παραδῶ τὸ σῶμά μου ἵνα [t] καυθήσωμαι,[4] ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, οὐδὲν[3] [u] ὠφελοῦμαι.

i See xii. 10.
k See iv. 1. μυστ. and γνωσ., Rom. xi. 25; Eph. i. 9, iii. 3 f., vi. 19; Col. ii. 2; Mt. xiii. 11.

l See i. 5. m Rom. xiv. 22; 1 Tim. i. 19; Acts xiv. 9; Jas. ii. 1, 18; Mt. xvii. 20, xxi. 21; Mk. iv. 40, xi. 22. n Isa. liv. 10. o Col. i. 13; Lk. xvi. 4; Acts xiii. 22, xix. 26. p See vii. 19. q Rom. xii. 20 (Prov. xxv. 21); Numb. xi. 4, 18, etc.; -ιον, Jo. xiii. 26 ff. r Heb. x. 34; Acts iv. 32; thrice in Mt.; 8 times in Lk. s Cf. Acts xv. 26. For like sense, 2 Cor. iv. 11; Rom. iv. 25, and parls.; Dan. iii. 28. t καυχησ., see i. 29. u Mk. v. 26; Mt. xvi. 26; Prov. x. 2. Cf. xiv. 6, and parls.

[1] Of the 4 instances of και εαν (T.R.), καν is given in (1) by AC, 17; in (2) by AB, 17; in (3) by ABC, 17; in (4) by AC. Al., W.H. read καν (?) throughout; Tisch., El., Nestle adhere to και εαν; Lachm. and Tr. vary. After εαν, και εαν is more likely: see vii. 28, xii. 15 f.; Mk. iii. 24 f.; Lk. xvii. 3 f. Nowhere else is καν well attested in such connexion.

[2] μεθισταναι (?), ℵBDG, 17. So Lachm., Tr., Tisch., El., Nestle. μεθιστανειν, ACKL, etc. (? Alexandrian and Syrian),—the rarer form; but -ανω forms of ιστημι and compounds are not infrequent in P. See Wr., pp. 94, 106.

[3] ουθεν (1): all non-Western uncc., accepted by crit. edd.; so Stephens (1550). ουθεν (2): ℵA, 17. Tisch. adopts this in both. See Wr., p. 48.

[4] καυχησωμαι, ℵAB, 17, cop. sah., Hier. (ob similitudinem verbi, qua apud Græcos "ardeam" et "glorier" una litteræ parte distinguitur, apud nostros error inolevit. Sed et apud Græcos exemplaria sunt diversa). Lachm., R.V. marg., and W.H. adopt this reading, against other edd. See Note of the last-named, vol. ii., pp. 116 f., where Clem. Rom., Clem. Al., Or., are claimed on this side. καυθησομαι, DGL (-ωμαι, CK), latt. vg. syr^utr., and the bulk of Ff.—suspiciously like a Western emendation. See note below.

of the climax: "aye, and of angels!") describes this mystic utterance at its highest (cf. λαλεῖ Θεῷ, xiv. 2)—a mode of expression above this world. Possibly P. associated the supernatural γλῶσσαι, by which he was himself distinguished (xiv. 18), with the ἄρρητα ῥήματα heard by him "in paradise" (2 Cor. xii. 4); cf. the "song" (Rev. xiv. 2 f.) which only "those redeemed out of the earth" understand. The Rabbis held Hebrew to be the language of the angels.—χαλκὸς denotes any instrument of brass; κύμβαλον, the particular loud and shrill instrument which the sound of the "tongues" resembled.

Ver. 2. Prophecy in its widest range, and faith at its utmost stretch—in those lacking love, both amount to "nothing!" (ἐὰν) εἰδῶ τὰ μυστήρια πάντα κ.τ.λ., "If I know all the mysteries (of revelation) and all the knowledge (relating thereto)," explains καὶ ἐὰν ἔχω προφητείαν by stating the source, or resources, from which "prophecy" is drawn: πᾶσαν τ. γνῶσιν (attached somewhat awkwardly to εἰδῶ), combined with τ. μυστ., posits a mental grasp of the contents of revelation added to the supernatural insight which discovers them (see notes on λόγος γνώσεως and προφητεία, xii. 8 ff.), as e.g. in the case of Isaiah. Hn. supplies ἔχω, instead of the nearer εἰδῶ, before τ. γνῶσιν (cf. viii. 1, 10), reading "if I have all knowledge" as a second, distinct assumption following on "if I know all mysteries," on account of the incongruity of Prophecy and Knowledge; but the point of P.'s extreme supposition lies in this unusual combination—the intellect of a philosopher joined to the inspiration of a seer.—For μυστήρια, see note on ii. 1.—πίστιν (see note on xii. 9) ὥστε μεθιστάνειν ὄρη—an allusion to the hyperbolical sayings of Jesus ad rem (Matt. xvii. 20, xxi. 21; see notes in vol. i.); in the pr. (continuous) inf.—"to remove mountain after mountain" (Ed.). Whatever God may be pleased to accomplish through such a man (cf. iii. 9), he is personally worthless. On the form οὐθέν, see Wr., p. 48; for the thought, cf. iii. 18, 2 Cor. xii. 11, Gal. vi. 3.

Ver. 3. The suppositions of these three vv. cover three principal forms of activity in the Church—the spheres, viz., of supernatural manifestation, of spiritual influence, of material aid (3); loveless men who show conspicuous power in these several respects, in the first inv For both, cf. 2 Cor. vi. 6; Rom. ii. 4; Gal. v. 22. μακροθ., 1 Th. v. 14; Heb. vi. 15; Jas. v. 7 f.; Mt. xviii. 26, 29; Lk. xviii. 7; Prov. xix. 11. -μια, 10 times in P.; 4 in other Epp.; -μως, Acts xxvi. 3. w H.l. in Gr. x In this sense, Acts vii. 9, xvii. 5; Jas. iv. 2. Diff. in xii. 31, etc.; diff. again in Gal. iv. 17 f. y H.l. See note below. z See iv. 6. a See vii. 36. b See x. 24. c Acts xvii. 16. -σμος, Acts xv. 39; Heb. x. 24. d In this sense (act.), Rom. iv. 6, 8 (Ps. xxxi. 2); 2 Cor. v. 19; diff. in iv. 1, ver. 11 below. e Five times in Rom.; Jo. xviii. 23; 3 Jo. 11. f xvi. 17; 2 Cor. vii. 13; Acts xv. 31; Lk. i. 14; Mt. xviii. 13; Prov. xxiv. 19. g See xii. 26. h In this sense, 16 times more in P.; Heb. x. 26; Jas. v. 19; 1 Pet. i. 22; 2 Pet. i. 12, ii. 2; Jo. passim. i See ix. 12. k With acc., Rom. viii. 24; 2 Tim. ii. 10 (παντα); Heb. x. 32, xii. 2 f.; Jas. i. 12; Wisd. xvi. 22.

4. Ἡ ἀγάπη [v] μακροθυμεῖ, [vw] χρηστεύεται· ἡ ἀγάπη οὐ [x] ζηλοῖ, ἡ ἀγάπη [1] οὐ [y] περπερεύεται· οὐ [z] φυσιοῦται, 5. οὐκ [a] ἀσχημονεῖ· οὐ [b] ζητεῖ [b] τὰ [2] [b] ἑαυτῆς, οὐ [c] παροξύνεται· οὐ [d] λογίζεται [e] τὸ [e] κακόν, 6. οὐ [f] χαίρει [f] ἐπὶ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ [g] συγχαίρει δὲ [h] τῇ [h] ἀληθείᾳ· 7. πάντα [i] στέγει, πάντα πιστεύει· πάντα ἐλπίζει, πάντα [k] ὑπομένει.

[1] Om. η αγαπη (?) B, 17, and a few other minn., f. vg. cop., and a number of Ff. So W.H., Tr.,; Nestle brackets. Tisch. reads η αγαπη thrice, but attaches the second to χρηστ., and the third to ζηλοι.

[2] το μη εαυτης: B, Clem. The best codd. may contain a vicious reading.

stance are sound signifying nothing; in the second, they are nothing; in the third, they gain nothing. Those who make sacrifices to benefit others without love, must have some hidden selfish recompense that they count upon; but they will cheat themselves.—ἐὰν ψωμίσω κ.τ.λ., "If I should dole out all my property". The vb. (derived from ψωμός—ψωμίον, John xiii. 26 ff.—a bit or crumb) takes acc. of person in Rom. xii. 20 (LXX), here of thing—both regular: "Si distribuero in cibos pauperum" (Vg.), "Si insumam alendis egenis" (Bz.).—The sacrifice of property rises to its climax in that of bodily life: cf. Job ii. 4 f., Dan. iii. 28, Gal. ii. 20, etc.; John x. 11, xv. 13.—But in either case, ex hypothesi, the devotion is vitiated by its motive—ἵνα καυχήσωμαι, "that I may make a boast" (cf. Matt. vi. 1 ff.); it is prompted by ambition, not love. So the self-immolator forfeits the end he seeks; his glorifying becomes κενοδοξία (Gal. v. 26, Phil. ii. 3; cf. John v. 44). οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦμαι signifies loss of final benefit (cf. Gal. v. 2, Rom. ii. 25, Luke ix. 25). This entire train of supposition P. puts in the 1st pers., so avoiding the appearance of censure: cf., for the usus loquendi, xiv. 14-19, viii. 13, ix. 26 f.—καυθήσωμαι is a grammatical monstrum,—a reading that cannot well be explained except as a corruption of καυχήσωμαι; it was favoured by the thought of the Christian martyrdoms, and perhaps by the influence of Dan. iii. 28. Hn., Gd., Ed., El., amongst critical comment., are in favour of the T.R., which is supported by the story, told in Josephus (B.J., vii. 8. 7), of a Buddhist fakir who about this time immolated himself by fire at Athens.

§ 43. The Qualities of Christian Love, xiii. 4-13. The previous vv. have justified the καθ' ὑπερβολὴν of xii. 31. The loftiest human faculties of man are seen to be frustrate without love; by its aid alone are they brought to their proper excellence and just use. But this "way" of Christian attainment has still to be "described," and the promise of xii. 31*b* fulfilled. So while vv. 1-3 have proved the necessity, the rest of the chap. shows the nature and working of the indispensable ἀγάπη. The Cor. may see in this description the mirror of what they ought to be and are not; they will learn how childish are the superiorities on which they plume themselves. (a) The behaviour of Love is delineated in fifteen exquisite aphorisms (4-7); (b) its permanence, in contrast with the transitory and partial character of the prized χαρίσματα (8-13).

Vv. 4-7. In vv. 1-3 Paul's utterance began to rise with the elevation of his theme into the Hebraic rhythm (observe the recurrent ἀγάπην δὲ μὴ ἔχω, and the repeated οὐδέν) which marks his more impassioned passages (see e.g., Rom. viii. 31 ff., Eph. i. 8 ff.; on a smaller scale, iii. 22 f. above). Here this rhythm dominates the structure of his sentences: they run in seven couplets, arranged as one (affirm.), four (neg.), and two (aff.) verse-lines, with the subject (ἡ ἀγάπη) repeated at the head of the 2nd line. The ver. which closes the middle, longer movement becomes a triplet, making a pause in the chant by the antithetical

8. ἡ ἀγάπη οὐδέποτε [l]ἐκπίπτει[1]· [m]εἴτε δὲ[2] [m]προφητεῖαι,[3] [n]καταργηθήσονται[2]· [m]εἴτε [o]γλῶσσαι, [p]παύσονται· [m]εἴτε [q]γνῶ-

l πιπτει, of things, Lk. xvi. 17; 1 Kings iii. 19. Cf. Rom. ix. 6; Acts xii. 7· Jas. i. 11 Of persons, see x. 8. m Rom. xii. 6. For ειτε, ειτε, see iii. 22. προφητ., see xii. 10. n See i. 28. o See xii. 10. p In this sense, Acts xx. 1; Exod. ix. 33 f. q See i. 5.

[1] πιπτει, ℵABC, 17, 67. εκπιπτει, Western and Syrian.

[2] Om. δε C*D*GKP, latt. vg. cop. Tr. brackets. Required to effect transition from η αγαπη; easily dropped by copyist after ειτε.

[3] προφητεια, καταργηθησεται (?): B A (-εια, -σονται). So W.H. marg.

repetition of the second clause. The par. then reads as follows:—

"Love suffers long, shows kindness.
Love envies not, makes no self-display;
Is not puffed up, behaves not unseemly;
Seeks not her advantage, is not embittered;
Imputes not evil, rejoices not at wrong.
but shares in the joy of the truth.
All things she tolerates, all things she believes;
All things she hopes for, all things she endures."

The first line supples the general theme, defining the two fundamental excellencies of Love—her patience towards evil, and kindly activity in good. In the negative movement, the first half-lines set forth Love's attitude—free from jealousy, arrogance (cf. iv. 6*b*), avarice, grudge-bearing; while the second member in each case sets forth her temper—modest, refined in feeling, placable, having her joy in goodness. The third movement reverts to the opening note, on which it descants.—For the individual words: μακροθυμέω is to be long-tempered (longanimis est, Er.)—a characteristic of God (Rom. ii. 4, etc.)—patient towards injurious or provoking persons; this includes οὐ παροξύνεται, οὐ λογίζεται τὸ κακόν, πάντα στέγει; whereas ὑπομένει, closing the list, signifies patience in respect of adverse and afflictive circumstances; the two unite in Col. i. 11: see Trench, Syn., § liii.—χρηστεύεται—a vb. perhaps of Paul's coining—plays the part of a χρηστός (benignus), one who renders gracious, well-disposed service to others (Trench, Syn., § lxiii): P. associates μακροθυμία and χρηστότης repeatedly (see parls.).—οὐ ζηλοῖ qualifies the ζηλοῦτε of xii. 31: directed towards right objects, ζῆλος is laudable ambition; directed towards persons, it is base envy; desire for excellencies manifest in others should stimulate not ill-will but admiring love.—The vb. περπερεύεται (parl. in form to χρηστεύεται) occurs only in Marc. Anton., v., 5 besides, where it is rendered ostentare se (the Vg. perperam se agit rests on mistaken resemblance)· to show oneself off: πέρπερος, used by Polybius and Epictetus, signifies braggart, boastful (see Gm., s.v.), its sense here.—He who is envious (ζηλ.) of superiority in others is commonly ostentatious (περπ.) of superiority assumed in himself, and arrogant (φυσ.) towards inferiors. Such φυσιοῦσθαι is a mark of bad taste—a moral indecency, from which Love is clear (οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ: see parls.); she has the instinct for the seemly; Love imparts a delicacy of feeling beyond the rules of politeness.—The absence of pride is the burden of the two former of the negative couplets, the absence of greed of the two latter. For οὐ ζητεῖ κ.τ.λ., cf. parls.; 2 Cor. xii. 13 ff. supplies a fine illustration in the writer. Selfishness generates the irritability denied concerning Love in οὐ παροξύνεται; intent on one's own advantage, one is incessantly angered to find the world at cross purposes with him. Except Heb. x. 24, the only other N.T. parls. (Acts xv. 39, xvii. 16) ascribe to P. himself the παροξυσμὸς which he now condemns; as in the case of ζῆλος (see iii. 3), there is a bad and a good exasperation; anger may be holy, though commonly a sin. To "rejoice at iniquity," when seeing it in others, is a sign of deep debasement (Rom. i. 32); Love, on the contrary, finds her joy in the joy of "the Truth" (personified: cf. Rom. vii. 22, Ps. lxxxv. 10 f., 3 John 8, 12)—she rejoices in the progress and vindication of the Gospel, which is "the truth" of God (cf. Phil. i. 7, Col. i. 3-6; 3 John 4): ἀδικία and ἀλήθεια are similarly contrasted in 2 Thess. ii. 10, 12.—The four πάντα clauses form a chiasmus: the first and fourth relating to the bearing of ill, the second and third to expectation of good in others; the first pair belong to the present, the last to the future. For στέγει, see parls.; Bz. and a few others render the clause "omnia tegit," in accordance with the radical sense of the vb.; but suffert (Vg.) is its Pauline, and also prevalent cl. sense.—Πίστις appears σις, [u] καταργηθήσεται· 9. [r] ἐκ [r] μέρους γὰρ γινώσκομεν καὶ [r] ἐκ [r] μέρους [s] προφητεύομεν· 10. ὅταν δὲ ἔλθῃ [t] τὸ [t] τέλειον, τότε[1] τὸ [r] ἐκ [r] μέρους [u] καταργηθήσεται. 11. ὅτε ἤμην [u] νήπιος, ὡς [u] νήπιος ἐλάλουν,[2] ὡς [u] νήπιος [v] ἐφρόνουν,[2] ὡς [u] νήπιος [w] ἐλογιζόμην[2]· ὅτε δὲ[3] [x] γέγονα [y] ἀνήρ, [u] κατήργηκα τὰ τοῦ [u] νηπίου. 12. [z] βλέπομεν

r Cf. xii. 27.
s See xi. 4.
t H.l. For the adj., see ii. 6; of things, Rom. xii. 2; Heb. ix. 11; Jas. i. 4, 17, 25; 1 Jo. iv. 18.
u See iii. 1.
v Abs., N.T. h.l.; Isa. xliv. 18.
w In this sense, 8 times more in P.; Heb. xi. 19; 1 Pet. v. 12; Jo. xi. 50. Abs., here only.
x See ver. 1.
y In contrast with νηπιος, cf. xiv. 20; Gal. iv. 1-5; Eph. iv. 13.
z 2 Cor. x. 7, xii. 6; Rom. vii. 23, viii. 24 f.; Heb. ii. 9, iii. 19; Jas. ii. 22; Acts i. 9, ix. 8; Mt. vi. 4, vii. 3, xiii. 13, etc., xv. 31; Lk. x. 23 f., etc.

[1] Om. τοτε all uncc. but DcKL.

[2] ελαλουν ως νηπιος, εφρονουν ως νηπ., ελογιζομην ως νηπ. (in this order): ℵAB, 17. All crit. edd.

[3] Om. δε ℵABD*, 67. Here δε weakens the antithesis. Cf. note 8 above.

to bear in Gal. v. 22 the meaning of faith in men belonging to πιστεύει here. Hope animates and is nourished by endurance: ὑπομένει (sustinet, not patitur), the active patience of the stout-hearted soldier; see Trench, Syn., § liii., and N.T. parls.

Ver. 8. Love, that bears, also outwears everything: "Love never faileth". That πίπτει denotes "falling" in the sense of cessation, dropping out of existence (cf. x. 8, Luke xvi. 17), not moral failure (as in x. 12, etc.), is manifest from the parl. clauses and from ver. 13. The charisms of chh. xii. and xiv. are bestowed on the way and serve the wayfaring Church, they cease each of them at a determined point; but the Way of Love leads indefinitely beyond them; οὐ διασφάλλεται, ἀλλ' ἀεὶ μένει βεβαία καὶ ἀκίνητος (Thd.). — "Prophesyings, tongues, and knowledge"—faculties inspired, ecstatic, intellectual—are the three typical forms of Christian expression. The abolition of Prophecies and Knowledge is explained in vv. 9 ff. as the superseding of the partial by the perfect; they "will be done away" by a completer realisation of the objects they seek,—viz., by intuition into the now hidden things of God and of man (xiv. 24 f.), and by adequate comprehension of the things revealed (see note on 12). Of the Tongues it is simply said that "they will stop" (παύσονται), having like other miracles a temporary significance (cf. xiv. 22); not giving place to any higher development of the like kind, they lapse and terminate (desinent, Bg.).

Vv. 9, 10: reasons why Prophecy and Knowledge must be abolished. Though amongst the μείζονα (xii. 31) and rich in edification (xiv. 6), these charisms are partial in scope, and therefore temporary: the fragmentary gives place to the complete.—ἐκ μέρους (see note, xii. 27, and parls.): coming of a part, our knowledge and prophesying are limited by the limiting conditions of their origin. For the conscious imperfection of Prophecy, cf. 1 Peter i. 10 f.; this text has some bearing on the much-discussed "inerrancy" of Scripture.—ὅταν δὲ ἔλθῃ τὸ τέλειον, τὸ ἐκ μέρους καταργηθήσεται, "But when there comes the perfect (full-grown, mature; see note on ii. 6), the 'in part' will be abolished": cf. Eph. iv. 13 f., where τέλειος is contrasted with νήπιος as here; also Phil. iii. 11 ff. This τελείωσις is brought about at the παρουσία—it "comes" with the Lord from heaven (xv. 47; cf. 1 Thess. i. 10, and i. 7 above); that of Eph. iv. is some what earlier.

Ver. 11 illustrates the abolition of the partial by the perfect through the transition from the child to the man—in speech (ἐλάλουν), in disposition and aim (ἐφρόνουν), and in mental activity (ἐλογιζόμην). These three points of diff. can hardly be identified with the γλῶσσαι, προφητεία, and γνῶσις respectively; though "spake as a babe" may allude to the childish fondness of the Cor. for γλωσσολαλία (cf. xiv. 18 ff.), and "to reason" is the distinction of γνῶσις. On the later-Gr. mid. form ἤμην, see Wr., pp. 95 f.—ὅταν with sbj. is the when of future contingency, ὅτε with ind. the when of past or present fact.—ὅτε γέγονα ἀνὴρ κατήργηκα κ.τ.λ.: "now that (ex quo) I have become a man (vir factus sum: cf. ἀνὴρ τέλειος in Eph. iv. 12), I have abolished the things of the child". Such is the κατάργησις which Prophecy and Knowledge (Scripture and Theology), as at present known, must undergo through the approaching "revelation" (i. 7). "Non dicit, Quum abolevi puerilia, factus γὰρ [1] [a] ἄρτι δι' [b] ἐσόπτρου ἐν [c] αἰνίγματι, [a] τότε δὲ [d] πρόσωπον [d] πρὸς [d] πρόσωπον· [a] ἄρτι γινώσκω [e] ἐκ [e] μέρους, [a] τότε δὲ [e] ἐπιγνώσομαι καθὼς καὶ [e] ἐπεγνώσθην. 13. [f] νυνὶ [f] δὲ μένει πίστις, ἐλπίς, ἀγάπη, τὰ τρία ταῦτα· [g] μείζων δὲ τούτων ἡ ἀγάπη.

a See iv. 13 αρτι . . . τοτε, 2 Th. ii. 7 f. b Jas. i. 23; Wisd. vii 26; Sir. xii. 11. See note below. c N.T. h.l.; Numb. xii. 8; Sir. xxxix. 3. d N.T. h.l.; Gen. xxxii. 30. Cf. 2 Jo. 12; 3 Jo. 14; Numb. xii. 8; also 2 Cor. iii. 18. e xiv. 37, xvi. 18; 8 times more in P.; 2 Pet. ii. 21; many times in Syn. GG. and Acts. For the antith., cf. viii. 2 f.; Gal. iv. 9. f See xii. 18 g See xii. 31. For compar. with παντων, xv. 19; Mt. xiii. 32; Lk. ix. 46.

[1] DG, latt. vg., Latt. Ff. om. γαρ.

sum vir. Hiems non affert ver; sed ver pellit hiemem: sic est in anima et ecclesia" (Bg.).—γέγονα and κατήργηκα, in pf. of abiding result; for καταργέω, cf. i. 28 and parls.

Ver. 12 figures in another way the contrast between the present partial and the coming perfect Christian state, in respect particularly of knowledge: it is the diff. between discernment by broken reflexion and by immediate intuition. "For we see now through a mirror, in (the fashion of) a riddle; but then face to face."—βλέπω, as distinguished from ὁράω, points to the fact and manner of seeing rather than the object seen (see parls.). On ἄρτι, see note to iv. 11; it fastens on the immediate present.—δι' ἐσόπτρου, "by means of a mirror": ancient mirrors made of burnished metal —a specialty of Cor.—were poor reflectors; the art of silvering glass was discovered in the 13th century.—ἔσοπτρον = κάτοπτρον (2 Cor. iii. 18), or ἔνοπτρον (cl. Gr.); not διόπτρα, speculare, the semi-transparent window of talc (the lapis specularis of the ancients), as some have explained the term. Cf. Philo, De Decal., § 21, "As by a mirror, the reason discerns images of God acting and making the world and administering the universe"; also Plato's celebrated representation (Repub., vii., 514) of the world of sense as a train of shadows imaging the real. Mr., Hf., Gd., Al., El. adopt the local sense of διά, "through a mirror," in allusion to the appearance of the imaged object as behind the reflector: but it is the dimness, not the displacement, of the image that P. is thinking of. —Such a sight of the Divine realities, in blurred reflexions, presents them ἐν αἰνίγματι, enigmatically—"in (the shape of) a riddle" rather than a full intelligible view. Divine revelation opens up fresh mysteries; advanced knowledge raises vaster problems. With our defective earthly powers, this is inevitable.—πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον, Heb. panîm 'el-panîm (see parls.), with a reminiscence of Num. xii. 8, στόμα κατὰ στόμα . . . καὶ οὐ δι' αἰνιγμάτων (referring to the converse of God with Moses): the "face" to which ours will be turned, is God's. God is the tacit obj. of ver. 12*b*, which interprets the above figure: "Now I know (γινώσκω, a learner's knowledge: see i. 21, etc.; contrast οἶδα, 2 above and ii. 11) partially; but then I shall know-well (ἐπιγνώσομαι), as also I was well-known". God has formed a perfect apprehension of the believing soul (viii. 3); He possesses an immediate, full, and interested discernment of its conditions (Rom. viii. 27, etc.); its future knowledge will match, in some sense, His present knowledge of it, the searching effect of which it has realised (Gal. iv. 9, etc.).

Ver. 13. νυνὶ δὲ μένει κ.τ.λ.—final conclusion of the matter, μένει being antithetical to πίπτει κ.τ.λ. of the foregoing: "But as it is (nunc autem), there abides faith, hope, love—these three!" they stay; the others pass (8 ff.). Faith and Hope are elements of the perfect and permanent state; new objects of trust and desire will come into sight in the widening visions of the life eternal. But Love, both now and then, surpasses its companions, being the character of God (viii. 3, 1 John iv. 8, 16); in Love is the fruition of Faith's efforts (Gal. v. 6) and Hope's anticipations; it alone gives worth to every human power (1-3). The popular interpretation, since Cm., has read νυνὶ as temporal instead of logical, identifying it with the ἄρτι of ver. 12, as though the Ap. meant that for the present Faith and Hope "abide" with Love, but Love alone "abides" for ever. But P. puts the three on the same footing in respect of enduringness—"these three" in comparison with the other three of ver. 8—pointedly adding Faith and Hope to share and support the "abiding" of Love; "love is greater among these," not more lasting.—For μείζων with partitive gen., cf. Matt. xxiii. 11, and see Wr., p. 303. For the pregnant, absolute μένει, cf. iii. 14, 1 John ii. 6, 2 John 2.

a Rom. ix. 30, xii. 13, xiv. 19; Ph. iii. 12, 14; 1 Th. v. 15; Isa. li. 1; Sir. xxvii. 8.

XIV. 1. [a]Διώκετε τὴν ἀγάπην· [b]ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ [c]πνευματικά, μᾶλλον δὲ ἵνα [d]προφητεύητε. 2. ὁ γὰρ [e]λαλῶν [e]γλώσσῃ, οὐκ [f]ἀνθρώποις λαλεῖ ἀλλὰ τῷ[1] [f]Θεῷ· οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἀκούει, [g]πνεύματι δὲ λαλεῖ [h]μυστήρια· 3. ὁ δὲ [d]προφητεύων, [f]ἀνθρώποις λαλεῖ

b See xii. 31. c See xii. 1. d See xi. 4. e See xiii. 1. f See i. 25. g vv. 14 f.; Acts xvii. 16. h See ii. 7.

[1] Om. τῷ the pre-Syrian uncc.

§ 44. The Gifts of Tongues and of Prophecy, xiv. 1-6. The digression upon ἡ ἀγάπη has not diverted us from the subject of this Div.; Love has shown the way (xii. 31*b*) in which all τὰ πνευματικά (xii. 1, xiv. 1) are to be sought, the animating principle and ulterior aim that should govern their exercise. But the principle of Love supplies, further, a criterion by which the charisms are to be relatively estimated—their use in edification (3 ff., 12, 19, 26). Thus P. at length answers the question addressed to him from Cor. as to the worth of the several "spiritual powers," and in particular as to the relative value of Tongues and Prophesying. He has led up to this answer by his exposition of the general Christian truths bearing upon the matter—viz. the office of the Holy Spirit as the distributor of God's gifts (xii. 3-11), the organic nature of the Church (12-31), and the sovereignty of love in the Christian life (xiii.).

Ver. 1. "Pursue love"—follow intently this καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδόν (xii. 31*b:* see note): διώκω (see parls.: pr. impr.) signifies to prosecute to its goal (xiii. 13) a course on which one has entered. ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ πνευματικά, "but (continue to) covet the spiritual (gifts)": P. resumes xii. 31 (see note, also on xii. 1). Love is exalted in the interest of the charisms, not to their disparagement; it is not to be pursued by forgetting everything else, but opens the true way to everything else: "Sectamini charitatem, affectate spiritualia" (Cv.).—"But rather (in preference to other gifts) that you may prophesy": this is chief amongst "the greater charisms" of xii. 31. Perhaps the Cor. had asked specifically which of the two, Tongues or Prophecy, was to be preferred. ἵνα προφητεύητε (cf. θέλω . . . μᾶλλον ἵνα, 5) differs from τὸ προφητεύειν by making the object distinctly an aim: in striving after the charisms, Prophecy is to be set highest and to control the rest. For the use of ἵνα, cf. note on i. 10, also Bm., pp. 235 ff.

Vv. 2, 3. The reason for preferring Prophecy, on the principles laid down, is that one's fellows receive no benefit from the Tongues: except God, "no one hears" the latter—i.e. hears understandingly (cf. Eph. i. 13, iv. 29, etc.). There was sound enough in the glossolalia (xiii. 1), but no sense (23). πνεύματι δὲ λαλεῖ κ.τ.λ., "but in spirit he is speaking mysteries"; δὲ points a contrast to the οὐδεὶς . . . ἀκούει: there is something worth hearing—deep things muttered by those quivering lips, that should be rationally spoken. For μυστήριον, see note on ii. 7, and Cr. s.v.: mystery in Scripture is the correlate of revelation; here it stops short of disclosure, tantalizing the Church, which hears and hears not. πνεύματι, dat. of manner or instr.,—"with the spirit," but without the "understanding" (νοῦς: 14 ff.; cf. note to xii. 8).—"But he who prophesies does speak to men—edification and exhortation and comfort." παράκλησις and παραμυθία are distinct from οἰκοδομή: prophetic speech serves for (a) "the further upbuilding of the Christian life, (b) the stimulation of the Christian will, (c) the strengthening of the Christian spirit" (Hf.). παραμυθία has ref. to sorrow or fear (see parls.); παράκλησις (far commoner) to duty; οἰκοδομή, in the widest sense, to knowledge and character and the progress of the Church: this last stands alone in the sequel.

Ver. 4. "He that speaks with a tongue edifies himself, but he that prophesies edifies a church (assembly)"—not one but many persons, not himself but a whole community. The impression made on the γλωσσολαλῶν by his utterance, since it was delivered in a rapture and without clear conception (12 ff.), must have been vague; but it powerfully confirmed his faith, since it left an abiding sense of possession by the Spirit of God (cf. 2 Cor. xii. 1-10). Our deepest feelings frequently enter the mind below the surface consciousness.

Ver. 5. Notwithstanding the above drawback, the Tongues are a real and desirable charism; the better is preferred

[l] οἰκοδομὴν καὶ [k] παράκλησιν καὶ [l] παραμυθίαν. 4. ὁ [e] λαλῶν [e] γλώσσῃ ἑαυτὸν [m] οἰκοδομεῖ, ὁ δὲ [d] προφητεύων [n] ἐκκλησίαν [m] οἰκοδομεῖ. 5. θέλω δὲ πάντας ὑμᾶς [e] λαλεῖν [e] γλώσσαις, μᾶλλον δὲ ἵνα [d] προφητεύητε· [o] μείζων γὰρ [1] ὁ [d] προφητεύων ἢ ὁ [e] λαλῶν [e] γλώσσαις, [p] ἐκτὸς [p] εἰ μὴ [q] διερμηνεύῃ, ἵνα ἡ ἐκκλησία [l] οἰκοδομὴν λάβῃ. 6. [r] νῦνι [2] [r] δέ, ἀδελφοί, ἐὰν ἔλθω πρὸς ὑμᾶς [e] γλώσσαις [e] λαλῶν, [s] τί ὑμᾶς ὠφελήσω, ἐὰν μὴ ὑμῖν λαλήσω ἢ [3] ἐν [t] ἀποκαλύψει ἢ ἐν [u] γνώσει, ἢ ἐν [v w] προφητείᾳ ἢ ἐν [4] [w] διδαχῇ;

i vv. 12, 26; 2 Cor. x. 8, xii. 19. xiii. 10; Rom. xiv. 19, xv. 2; Eph. iv. 12, 16, 29. see ver. 4, -μεω.
k Freq. in P.; thrice in Heb.; 6 times in Lk., Acts.
l N.T. h.l.; Wisd. xix. 12. -ιον, Phil. ii. 1; -ευσθαι, 1 Th. ii. 11. m See viii. 1. n Naruse, anarthrous, see xi. 18. o See xii. 31. p xv. 2; 1 Tim. v. 19. For εκτος, cf. vi. 18. q See xii. 30. r See xii. 18. s Mt. xvi. 26; Mk. viii. 36; also xiii. 3; Rom. ii. 25; Gal. v. 2. Cf. xv. 32; Rom. iii. 1; Jas. ii. 14. t See i. 7. Abs., ver. 26; Gal. ii. 2; Eph. i. 17, iii. 3. u See i. 5. v See xii. 10. w ver. 26; cf. xii. 29. διδαχη., Rom. vi. 17, xvi. 17; 2 Tim. iv. 2; Tit. i. 9; Heb. vi. 2, xiii. 9; 2 Jo. 9, 10; thrice in Rev.; 4 times in Acts; 11 in GG.

[1] δε, ℵABP, cop. γαρ, DGKL, etc., latt. vg. syrr. (Western and Syrian).
[2] νυν all pre-Syrian uncc. Cf. xii. 18.
[3] Om. η (first) ℵ, 17, 67, cop.
[4] Om. εν (last) ℵDgr.Ggr So Tisch.; Tr. brackets.

to the good: "Yet I would have you all speak with tongues,—but rather that you might prophesy." μᾶλλον ἵνα προφητεύητε is repeated from ver. 1: what the Ap. bids his readers prefer, he prefers for them—not to the exclusion of the Tongues, for the two gifts might be held at once (6, 18), but as looking beyond them.—θέλω ἵνα occurs several times in the Gospels without any marked telic force (Matt. vii. 12, Mark vi. 25, ix. 30, John xvii. 24), but only here in P.; its substitution for the inf. (λαλεῖν) of the coordinate clause is significant.—"Moreover he who prophesies is greater than he who speaks with tongues"—attached by the part. δὲ where one expected γάρ (T.R.); P. is not justifying his own preference just stated, but giving a further reason why the Cor. should covet Prophecy more than Tongues: the main reason lies in the eminent usefulness of this charism (2-4); besides that (δέ), its possessor is a "greater" person (μείζων: cf. xii. 31) "than the speaker with tongues—except in the case that he interprets (his ecstatic utterance), that the Church may get edification". The power to interpret superadded to the glossolalia (see 13, 26 ff., xii. 10) puts the mystic speaker on a level with the prophet: first "uttering mysteries" (2) and then making them plain to his hearers, he accomplishes in two acts what the prophet does in one. ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ is a Pauline pleonasm (see parls.), consisting of ἐκτὸς εἰ (except if) and εἰ μή (unless) run together; "with this exception,—unless he interpret" (Wr., p. 756). For εἰ with sbj., in distinction from ἐάν, see Wr., p. 368; it "represents that the event will decide the point" (El.). To supply τις with διερμην., supposing another interpreter meant, is ungrammatical; the identity of speaker and interpreter is the essential point. He interprets with the express intention that the Church may be edified (ἵνα . . . οἰκοδομὴν λάβῃ).

Ver. 6. What the Ap. has said touching the criterion of edification, he applies to his own approaching visit (iv. 18 ff., xvi. 5 ff.): "But at the present time, brothers,"—νῦν δέ, temporal, as in v. 11, etc.; not logical, as in vii. 14, xiii. 13, etc. (see Hf., against most interpreters). It is the situation at Cor. which gives point to this ref.: what help could the Ap. bring to his readers in their troubled state, if he were to offer them nothing but confused mutterings and ravings? (cf. 7-11)—an appeal to common sense.—The hypotheses are parl. (expressing by ἐὰν actual possibility, cf. 18; not mere conceivability) — the second the negative of the first: "if I should come to you speaking with tongues, wherein shall I profit you—if I do not speak in (the way of) revelation or knowledge, or prophesying or teaching?" In the four ἢ clauses, the second pair matches the first: revelation comes through the prophet, knowledge through the teacher (cf. xii. 8, 10, 28, etc.). For ἔρχομαι with ptp. of the character or capacity in which one comes—"a (mere) speaker with tongues," unable to interpret (see 5)

7. [x]Ὅμως τὰ [y]ἄψυχα [z]φωνὴν [z]διδόντα, [a]εἴτε [b]αὐλὸς [a]εἴτε [c]κιθάρα, ἐὰν [d]διαστολὴν τοῖς [e]φθόγγοις μὴ [z]δῷ, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τὸ [f]αὐλούμενον ἢ τὸ [f]κιθαριζόμενον; 8. καὶ γὰρ ἐὰν [g]ἄδηλον [z]φωνὴν[1] [h]σάλπιγξ[1] [z]δῷ, τίς [i]παρασκευάσεται εἰς πόλεμον; 9. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς διὰ τῆς γλώσσης ἐὰν μὴ [k]εὔσημον λόγον [z]δῶτε, πῶς γνωσθήσεται τὸ λαλούμενον; ἔσεσθε γὰρ εἰς [l]ἀέρα λαλοῦντες.

x Gal. iii. 15; Jo. xii. 42; 2 Macc. xv. 5.
y N.T. h.l.; Wisd. xiii. 17, xiv. 29.
z Mt. xxiv. 29; Isa. xiii. 10. ηχω διδουσα θορυβον, Eurip., Hec., 1093.
a See iii. 22.
b N.T. h.l.; -λητης, Mt. ix. 23.
c Rev. i. 8, xiv. 2, xv. 2; Gen. iv. 21, etc.
d Rom. iii. 22, x. 12; Exod. viii. 23.
e Rom. x. 18 (Ps. xviii. 4); Wisd. xix. 18.
f Mt. xi. 17, αυλ.; κιθαρ, Rev. xiv. 2; Isa. xxiii. 16.
g Lk. xi. 44. See ix. 26.
h Mt. xxiv. 31; Rev. i. 10, viii. 13; Exod. xix. 16, 19. See xv. 52.
i 2 Cor. ix. 2 f.; Acts x. 10; Jer. xii. 5. k N.T. h.l.; Ps. lxxx. 3. See note below.
l See ix. 26.

[1] σαλπιγξ φωνην, ℵAP. So Tisch., W.H. txt., Nestle. φων. σαλπ.: BDGKL. So Tr., Al., W.H. marg., El.

—cf. Acts xix. 18, Matt. xi. 18 f., Mark i. 39, Luke xiii. 7.

§ 45. Utterance Useless without Clear Sense, xiv. 7-13. P. has just asked what the Cor. would think of him, if in their present need he came exhibiting his power as a speaker with Tongues, but without a word of prophetic inspiration or wise teaching to offer. Such speech would be a mockery to the hearers. This holds good of sound universally, when considered as a means of communication—in the case, e.g., of lifeless instruments, the flute and lyre with their modulated notes, or the military trumpet with its varied signals (7 f.); so with articulate speech, in its numberless dialects. To the instructed ear every syllable carries a meaning; to the foreigner it is gibberish (10 f.). Just as useless are the Tongues in the Church without interpretation (9, 12 f.).

Ver. 7. Ὅμως τὰ ἄψυχα, "Quin et inanima" (Cv.); as in Gal. iii. 15, the part. emphasises the word immediately following, not φωνὴν διδόντα ("though giving sound") in contrast to ἐὰν διαστολὴν . . . μὴ δῷ (so however Wr., Gm., Mr., Sm.: "yet unless they give a distinction, etc."). The argument is a minori ad majus, from dead instruments to living speech: "Yet even in the case of lifeless things (τὰ ἄψυχα, generic art.) when they give sound, unless they give a distinction in their notes" (so Hf., Ed., Gd., El.).—φθόγγος denotes a measured, harmon ous sound, whether of voice (Rom. x. 18) or instrument; see Plato, Tim. 80.—διαστολὴ is referred by Lidd., and by Ev. ad loc., to the pause between notes; by most others (after Plato, Phileb., 17C; cf. Oec. ad loc.) to the interval (= διάστημα) or distinction of pitch; possibly (so Cv., El.) it includes both in untechnical fashion—whatever in fact distinguishes the φθόγγοι.—πῶς γνωσθήσεται κ.τ.λ.; "How will that which is being piped or harped be discerned?"—how will the air be made out, if the notes run confusedly into one another? The double art., τὸ αὐλ. . . . τὸ κιθαρ., separates the two sorts of music. This comparison used applies to inarticulate γλωσσολαλία, not to foreign languages.

Ver. 8. To the pipe and harp, adornments of peace, P. adds for further illustration (καὶ γάρ) the warlike trumpet. This ruder instrument furnishes a stronger example: varied signals can be given by its simple note, provided there is an understanding between trumpeter and hearers; "unius tubæ cantus alius ad alia vocat milites" (Bg.). Without such agreement, or with a wavering, indistinct sound, the loudest blast utters nothing to purpose: "For if the trumpet also gives an uncertain voice, who will prepare for battle?" How disastrous, at the critical moment, to doubt whether the trumpet sounds Advance or Retreat!

Ver. 9 enforces the twofold illustration of vv. 7 f.: "So also in your case (οὕτως καὶ ὑμεῖς), if through the tongue you do not give a word of clear signification (εὔσημον λόγον), how will that which is spoken be discerned?"—εὔ-σημος (from εὖ and σῆμα, a sign) implies a meaning in the word, and a meaning good to make out; cf. Sophocles, Antig., 1004, 1021.—πῶς γνωσθήσεται κ.τ.λ.; is an echo from ver. 7; and "the tongue" (διὰ τῆς γλώσσης: cf. iii. 5, vi. 4, vii. 17), as the means of living speech, is thrust before the ἐὰν in emphatic contrast to "the lifeless" pipe, etc. P. does not therefore refer in this sentence (as Est., Gd., Ed. would have it) to the supernatural Tongue

10. τοσαῦτα, [m] εἰ [m] τύχοι, [n] γένη φωνῶν ἐστιν [1] ἐν κόσμῳ καὶ οὐδὲν αὐτῶν [2] [o] ἄφωνον· 11. ἐὰν οὖν μὴ εἰδῶ [3] τὴν [p] δύναμιν τῆς φωνῆς, ἔσομαι τῷ λαλοῦντι [q] βάρβαρος, καὶ ὁ λαλῶν [r] ἐν [4] ἐμοὶ [q] βάρβαρος· 12. οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἐπεὶ [s] ζηλωταί ἐστε [t] πνευμάτων, πρὸς τὴν

m xv. 37 only, in N.T.; cf. xvi. 6, τυχον.
n See xii. 10.
o H.l. in this sense; cf. xii. 2.
p N.T. h.l. in this sense; Numb. vi. 21; Plat., Crat., 394B, etc.
q Rom. i. 14; Col. iii. 11; Acts xxviii. 2, 4.
r Cf. vi. 2; Rom. xi. 25 (?). See Wr., p. 481.
s Gal. i. 14; Tit. ii. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 13; four times in Lk. and Acts; cf. -οω, xii. 36.
t Pl., see xii. 10.

[1] ειcιν: all uncc. but KL. [2] Om. αυτων all pre-Syrian uncc.
[3] ιδω, by itacism, AD*L, 17, 46. G, γινωσκω.
[4] Om. εν DG, 67, latt. vg. syrutr. cop.

(elsewhere, moreover, expressed by the anarthrous γλῶσσα: otherwise here), for it is precisely his objection to this charism that it gives an ἄσημον instead of a εὔσημον λόγον (16, 19, 23); he means to say: "As inanimate instruments by due modulation, and by the fixed meaning attached to their notes, become expressive, so it is in a higher degree with the human tongue; its vocables convey a meaning just in so far as they are ordered, articulate, and conformed to usage". Now this is what the Cor. Glossolalia was not: "for you will be (otherwise) speaking into the air"—the issue of uninterpreted Tongue-speaking (cf. 2, 17, etc.).—εἰς ἀέρα λαλεῖν, a proverbial expression (cf. ix. 26) for ineffectual speech, like our "talking to the wind"; in Philo, ἀερομυθεῖν.

Ver. 10. Speaking of vocal utterance, the Ap. is reminded of the multitude of human dialects; this suggests a further proof of his contention, that there must be a settled and well-observed connexion between sound and sense. "Ever so many kinds of voices, it may chance, exist in the world."—On εἰ τύχοι (if it should hap = τυχόν, xvi. 6), which removes all known limit from the τοσαῦτα, see note of El. For the anarthrous ἐν κόσμῳ, cf. 2 Cor. v. 19; "in the world"—a sphere so wide.—καὶ οὐδὲν (sc. τῶν γενῶν) ἄφωνον, "and none (of them) voiceless": not tautologous, but asserting for every "kind of voice" the real nature of a voice, viz., that it means something to somebody; "nullum genus vocum vocis expers" (Est.); "aucune langue n'est une non-langue"; the Greeks love these paradoxical expressions—cf. βίος ἀβίωτος, χάρις ἄχαρις (Gd., Hn.). The Vg. and Bz. miss the point in rendering, "nihil est mutum".

Ver. 11. "If then I know not the meaning of the voice" (τὴν δύναμιν τῆς φωνῆς, vim or virtutem vocis)—for every voice has a meaning (10*b*); on this very possible hypothesis, "I shall be a barbarian to the speaker, and the speaker a barbarian in relation to me" (ἐν ἐμοί, cf. Matt. xxi. 42, and perhaps ii. 6 above), or "in my ear". By this illustration of the futility of the uninterpreted Tongues, Paul implicitly distinguishes them from natural foreign languages; there is a μετάβασις εἰς ἄλλο γένος in the comparison, just as in the previous comparison with harp and trumpet; one does not compare things identical. The second figure goes beyond the first; since the foreign speech, like the mysterious γλῶσσαι (2), may hide a precious meaning, and is the more provoking on that account, as the repeated βάρβαρος intimates.

Ver. 12. οὕτως καὶ ὑμεῖς is parl. to ver. 9; but the application is now turned into an exhortation. P. leaves the last comparison to speak for itself, and hastens to enforce his lesson: "So also with yourselves; since you are coveters of spirits (ζηλωταί ἐστε πνευμάτων), seek that you may abound (in them) with a view to the edifying of the church"—or "for the edifying of the church seek (them), that you may abound (therein)". The latter rendering, preferred by Cv., Mr., Al., Hf., Sm., is truer to the order of the words, and reproduces the emphasis of πρὸς τὴν οἰκοδομ. τῆς ἐκκλ. ζητεῖτε has its object supplied beforehand in the previous clause, and ἵνα (περισσεύητε) bears its ordinary sense as conj. of purpose. Spiritual powers are indeed to be sought (cf. 1, xii. 31), provided that they be sought for the religious profiting of others, with a view to abound in service to the Church. The ἵνα clause is thus parl. to πρὸς τ. οἰκοδομήν (cf. vii. 35, 2 Tim. iii. 16); cf. John x. 10, and other parls. for περισσεύω.—ζηλωταί, zealots, enthusiasts after spirits (Ev.),—used perhaps with a touch of irony (Hn.). The Cor. have already the eagerness that P. commends in ver. 1;

[u] οἰκοδομὴν τῆς ἐκκλησίας ζητεῖτε, ἵνα [v] περισσεύητε· 13. διόπερ[1] ὁ [w] λαλῶν [w] γλώσσῃ [x] προσευχέσθω [x] ἵνα [y] διερμηνεύῃ.

14. Ἐὰν γὰρ[2] προσεύχωμαι γλώσσῃ, τὸ [z] πνεῦμά μου προσεύχεται ὁ δὲ νοῦς μου [a] ἄκαρπός ἐστι. 15. [b] τί [b] οὖν [b] ἐστι; προσεύξομαι[3] τῷ [c] πνεύματι, προσεύξομαι[3] δὲ καὶ[4] τῷ [d] νοΐ· [e] ψαλῶ τῷ [c] πνεύματι, u See ver. 3. v See viii. 8. w See xiii. 1. x ινα, Phil. i. 9; Col. i. 9, iv. 3; 2 Th. i. 11, iii. 1; Mt. xxiv. 20; Mk. xiv. 35; οπως, Acts viii. 15. y See xii. 30. z See ii. 11. a Eph. v. 11; Tit. iii. 14; 2 Pet. i. 8; Jude 12; Mt. xiii. 22; Jer. ii. 6; Wisd. xv. 4. b Ver. 26; Acts xxi. 22. c See ii. 11. Instrum. dat., ver. 2; Rom. viii. 13; Gal. iii. 3, v. 16, 25; 1 Pet. iii. 18, iv. 6. d Rom. vii. 25. e Rom. xv. 9 (Ps. xvii. 49); Eph. v. 19; Jas. v. 13; Pss. passim.

[1] διο, all uncc. but ℵcKL.

[2] Om. γαρ (?) BG, 17, sah. Hence Lachm. and W.H. bracket.

[3] προσευξωμαι (twice), ADGP, 46; ℵ, -ωμαι, -ομαι.

[4] Om. και GKP, latt. vg. sah.—Western variant.

but it is not prompted by the best motives, nor directed to the most useful end: this word was common amongst Greeks as describing the ardent votaries of a school or party, or those jealous for the honour of some particular master (cf. Gal. i. 14).—πνεύματα differs somewhat from τὰ πνευματικά (1), signifying not "the (proper) spiritual" powers, but unseen forces generally (see xii. 10, διακρίσεις πνευμάτων, 1 John iv. 1, and the warning of xii. 3; cf. the notes); "the Cor. sought supernatural endowments, no matter what their nature might be" (Ed.)—at any rate, they thought too little of the true source and use of the charisms, but too much and too emulously of their outward impression and prestige (see πνευμάτων, 32).—Everling (Die paul. Angel. u. Dämonologie, pp. 40 ff.) infers from this passage, along with Rev. xxii. 6, the conception of a number of Divine "spirits" that may possess men; but he overpresses the turn of a single phrase, in contradiction to the context, which knows only "the one and the self-same Spirit" as from God (xii. 11).

Ver. 13. "Wherefore (since thus only can the γλώσσαις λαλῶν edify the church) let him who speaks with a tongue pray that he may interpret": cf. ver. 5. It appears that the speaker with Tongues in some instances could recall, on recovery, what he had uttered in his trance-ecstasy, so as to render it into rational speech. The three vbs. are pr., regulating current procedure.—The ἵνα clause, after προσευχέσθω, gives the purport of the prayer, as in Phil. i. 9; cf. i. 10 above, xvi. 12; Luke ix. 40, etc. Mr., El., and others, prefer to borrow γλώσσῃ from the next ver., and render thus: "Let him that speaks (with a tongue) pray (therewith), in order that he may interpret"; but this strains the construction, and γλώσσῃ appears to be added in ver. 14 just because the vb. προσεύχομαι had not been so understood before.

§ 46. THE ΝΟΥΣ THE NEEDED ALLY OF THE ΠΝΕΥΜΑ, xiv. 14-20. In § 44 the Ap. has insisted on edification as the end and mark of God's gifts to His Church, and in § 45 on intelligibility as a condition necessary thereto. Now the faculty of intelligence is the νοῦς; and we are thus brought to see that for a profitable conduct of worship, and for a sane and sound Church life (14, 17 ff., 23), the understanding must be in exercise: it is a vehicle indispensable (14 f.) to the energies of the spirit. On this point P. is at one with the men of Gnosis at Cor.; he discountenances all assumptions made in the name of "the Spirit" that offend against sober judgment (20). This passage, in a sense, counterbalances i. 18-ii. 5; it shows how far the Ap. is from approving a blind fanaticism or irrational mysticism, when he exalts the Gospel at the expense of "the wisdom of the world".

Ver. 14. The Tongue has been marked out as an inferior charism, because it does not edify others; it is less desirable also because it does not turn to account the man's own intelligence: "If I pray with a tongue, my spirit prays, but my understanding (νοῦς) is unfruitful". The introductory γάρ (see txtl. note) seems hardly needed; if genuine, it attaches this ver. to ver. 13, as giving a further reason why the γλωσσολαλῶν should desire to interpret—viz., that his own mind may partake fruitfully in his prayers. In any case, the consideration here

[c] ψαλῶ δὲ[1] καὶ τῷ [d] νοΐ. 16. ἐπεὶ ἐὰν εὐλογήσῃς[2] τῷ[3] [e] πνεύματι, ὁ [g] ἀναπληρῶν τὸν [h] τόπον τοῦ [i] ἰδιώτου πῶς [k] ἐρεῖ [k] τὸ [k] ἀμὴν [l] ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ [m] εὐχαριστίᾳ, [n] ἐπειδὴ τί λέγεις οὐκ οἶδε; 17. σὺ μὲν γὰρ [o] καλῶς [p] εὐχαριστεῖς, ἀλλ᾽ [q] ὁ [q] ἕτερος[4] οὐκ [r] οἰκοδομεῖται. 18. [p] εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου,[5] πάντων ὑμῶν [s] γλώσσαις[6] [s] λαλῶν[7].

f See x. 6. g Precisely thus, Bibl. h.l. See xvi. 17. Found in Joseph. and Philo. h N.T. h.l. in this sense, Sir. xii. 12; cf. Lk. xiv. 9 f. i Ver. 23 f.; 2 Cor. xi. 6; Acts iv. 13; Prov. vi. 8. See note below. k 2 Cor. i. 20; λεγ. αμην, Rev. v. 14, etc. l 2 Cor. xii. 21; Heb. viii. 1; Acts xi. 19. m 12 times in P.; Acts xxiv. 3; Rev. iv. 9, vii. 12; -τος, Col. iii. 15; -τεω, passim in P. n See i. 21. o See vii. 37. p See i. 4, and m above. Absol., see xi. 24 q See iv. 6. r See viii. 1. s See xiii. 1.

[1] Om. δε (?) BG, 46. Lachm. om.; Tr. and W.H. bracket.

[2] ευλογης, all uncc. but GKL.

[3] εν πνευματι (?): ℵcBDP, 73, cop. sah. W.H. bracket.

πνευματι (?), ℵ*AG, 17, latt. vg. syrr. So Tisch., Tr., W.H. txt., R.V., Nestle. τῳ πνευματι: KL, etc., Chr., Thdrt.—as in ver. 15.

[4] εταιρος, G, syr^sch.—an obvious itacism; see Mt. xi. 16.

[5] Om. μου all pre-Syrian witnesses.

[6] γλωσσῃ (?), ℵADG, 17, latt. vg. So Lachm., Tr., Tisch., W.H. marg., Nestle —perhaps borrowed from vv. 13 and 19 (? Western).

γλωσσαις (?), BKLP, etc., cop. syrr. So W.H. txt.

[7] λαλω, all uncc. but KL. The ptp. a grammatical emendation.

brought in opens a new point of view. "The fruit of the speaker is found in the profit of the hearer" (Thd.).—"The νοῦς is here, as distinguished from the πνεῦμα, the reflective and so-called discursive faculty, pars intellectiva, the human πνεῦμα quatenus cogitat et intelligit" (El.): see Beck's Bibl. Psychology, or Laidlaw's Bib. Doctrine of Man, s.vv.; and cf. notes on i. 10, ii. 16 above; also on Rom. vii. 23, 25. Religious feelings and activities—prayer in chief (Phil. iii. 3, Rom. i. 9, etc.)—take their rise in the spirit; normally, they pass upward into conception and expression through the intellect.

Ver. 15. It is the part of nous to share in and aid the exercises of pneuma: "What is (the case) then? I will pray with the spirit; but I will also pray with the understanding: I will sing with the spirit; but I will also sing with the understanding".—τί οὖν ἐστιν; "How then stands the matter?" (Quid ergo est? Vg.): one of the lively phrases of Greek dialogue; it "calls attention, with some little alacrity, to the upshot of what has just been said" (El.).—ψάλλω denoted, first, playing on strings, then singing to such accompaniment; Eph. v. 19 distinguishes this vb. from ᾄδω. Ed. thinks that instrumentation is implied; unless forbidden, Gr. Christians would be sure to grace their songs with music. Through its LXX use, esp. in the title Ψαλμοί, t'hillîm (Heb.), the word came to signify the singing of praise to God; but the connexion indicates a larger ref. than to the singing of the O.T. Psalms; it included the "improvised psalms which were sung in the Glossolalia, and could only be made intelligible by interpretation" (Mr.). Ecstatic utterance commonly falls into a kind of chant or rhapsody, without articulate words.

Ver. 16. "Since if thou bless (God) in spirit": πνευματι, anarthrous—"in spirit" only without understanding; cf. ἐὰν προσεύχ. γλώσσῃ, ver. 14.—Εὐλογέω (cf. x. 16, Matt. xiv. 19) is used elliptically, of praise to God, like εὐχαριστέω (17, xi. 24); it bears ref. to the form, as εὐχ. to the matter of thanksgiving; possibly P. alludes to the solemn act of praise at the Eucharist, this ellipsis being peculiar to blessing at meals.—ἐπεί (cf. v. 10, vii. 14) has its "usual causal and retrospective force, introducing the alternative" (El.; so quandoquidem, Bz.; alioqui, Cv.).—ὁ ἀναπληρῶν τὸν τόπον τοῦ ἰδιώτου, πῶς ἐρεῖ κ.τ.λ.; "he who fills the position of the unlearned, how will he say the Amen at thy thanksgiving?" P. does not here speak of ὁ ἰδιώτης simply (cf. 24), as meaning one unversed in Christianity; nor can this word, at so early a date, signify the lay Christian specifically (as the Ff. mostly read it); the man supposed "holds the place of one unversed" in the matter in question

19. ἀλλ' [t]ἐν [t]ἐκκλησίᾳ [u]θέλω πέντε λόγους διὰ [1] τοῦ [d]νοός [1] μου λαλῆσαι, ἵνα καὶ ἄλλους [v]κατηχήσω, [u]ἢ [w]μυρίους λόγους ἐν γλώσσῃ. 20. ἀδελφοί, μὴ [x]παιδία γίνεσθε ταῖς [y]φρεσίν· ἀλλὰ [z]κακίᾳ τῇ [a b]νηπιάζετε, ταῖς δὲ [y]φρεσὶ [b]τέλειοι γίνεσθε.

t See xi. 18; also ver. 4 above.
u θελω η (malo), N.T. h.l.; 2 Macc. xiv. 42. "A common formula" in cl. Gr., Wr., p. 302. Cf. Lk. xv. 7, xvii. 2; Mt. xviii. 9. Numb. xxii. 6; Tob. iii. 6, etc., LXX.
v Rom. ii. 18; Gal. vi. 6; Lk. i. 4; Acts xviii. 25, xxi. 21, 24.
w See iv. 15.
x In like sense, Mt. xi. 16. See νηπιος, iii. 6, xiii. 11.
y N.T. h.l. Prov xviii. 2.
z See v. 8.
a H.l.; see xiii. 11; in Homer, νηπιαχεύω.
b See ii. 6; for the contrast, iii. 1.

[1] τῳ νοι μου: all uncc. but KL. Cf. ver. 15.

being an ἰδιώτης γλώσσῃ (cf. 2 Cor. xi. 6): Thd. rightly paraphrases by ἀμύητος, uninitiated. In cl. Gr., ἰδιώτης means a private person in distinction from the State and its officers, then a layman as distinguished from the expert or professional man. The ptp. ἀναπληρῶν, filling up (see parls.), represents the ἰδιώτης as a necessary complement of the γλωσσολαλῶν (xii. 30). Hn. and others insist on the literal (local) sense of τόπος, as equivalent to ἕδρα not τάξις, supposing that the ἰδιῶται occupied a separate part of the assembly room; but this is surely to pre-date later usage.—The united "Amen" seals the thanksgiving pronounced by a single voice, making it the act of the Church—"the Amen," since this was the familiar formula taken over from Synagogue worship; cf. 2 Cor. i. 18 ff. On its ecclesiastical use, see El. ad loc., and Dict. of Christian Antiq. s.v.—ἐπειδὴ τί λέγεις οὐκ οἶδεν = the οὐδεὶς ἀκούει of ver. 2. El. observes, "From this ver. it would seem to follow that at least some portions of early Christian worship were extempore". indeed, it is plain that extempore utterance prevailed in the Cor. Church (cf. 14 f.).

Ver. 17. "For thou indeed givest thanks well"—admirably, finely (καλῶς: cf. Luke xx. 39, James ii. 19): words légèrement ironiques (Gd.).—εὐχαριστεῖς = εὐλογεῖς (16: see note, also on i. 4).—ὁ ἕτερος, i.e., the ἰδιώτης of ver. 16 signifies, as in iv. 6, x. 29; the pron. a distinct or even opposite person. P. estimates the devotions of the Church by a spiritually utilitarian standard; the abstractly beautiful is subordinated to the practically edifying: the like test is applied to a diff. matter in x. 23, 33.

Vv. 18, 19. Again (cf. 6, iv. 6, ix.) the Ap. uses himself for an instance in point. Even at Cor., where this charism was abundant, no one "speaks with tongues" (mark the pl. γλώσσαις) so largely as P. does on occasion; far from thinking lightly of the gift, he "thanks God" that he excels in it. 2 Cor. v. 13 and xii. 1-4 show that P. was rich in ecstatic experiences; cf. Gal. ii. 2, Acts ix. 12, xvi. 9, xxii. 17, xxvii. 23 f., etc.—The omission of ὅτι after εὐχαριστῶ is exceptional, but scarcely irregular; it belongs to conversational liveliness, and occurs occasionally after a number of the verba declarandi in cl. Gr.: cf. note on δοκῶ κ.τ.λ., iv. 9; and see Wr., p. 683. The Vg., omitting μᾶλλον, reads omnium vestrum lingua loquor, making P. thank God that he could speak in every tongue used at Cor.; Jerome, in his Notes, refers the μᾶλλον to the other App., as though P. exulted in being a better linguist than any of the Twelve!—ἀλλὰ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ κ.τ.λ.: "but in church-assembly (cf. note on ver. 4) I would (rather) utter five words with my understanding, that I might indeed instruct others, than ten thousand words in a tongue!"—ἀλλὰ contradicts the seeming implication of ver. 18—"but for all that": one might have supposed that P. would make much of a power in which he excels; on the contrary, he puts it aside and prefers to use every-day speech, as being the more serviceable; cf. for the sentiment, ix. 19-23, 2 Cor. i. 24, iv. 5, 12, 15, xi. 7, xiii. 9, 1 Thess. ii. 6 ff. With his Tongue P. might speak in solitude, "to himself and to God" (2, 28, 2 Cor. v. 13); amongst his brethren, his one thought is, how best to help and benefit them.—For νοῦς in contrast with πνεῦμα, see note on ver. 14; for its declension, cf. i. 10.—κατηχέω (see parls.) differs from διδάσκω as it connotes, usually at least, oral impartation ("ut alios voce instituam," Bz.), including here prophecy or doctrine (6). On θέλω . . . ἤ, dispensing with μᾶλλον, see parls.; malim . . . quam, Bz. For the rhetorical μυρίους, cf. iv. 15.

Ver. 20. P. has argued the superiority of intelligible speech, as a man of practical sense; he finally appeals to the good sense of his readers: "Brethren, be not

21. Ἐν τῷ νόμῳ γέγραπται, "Ὅτι ἐν [c]ἑτερογλώσσοις[1] καὶ ἐν [d]χείλεσιν [e]ἑτέροις[2] λαλήσω τῷ λαῷ τούτῳ, [f]καὶ οὐδ' [f]οὕτως [g]εἰσακούσονταί μου, λέγει Κύριος". 22. ὥστε αἱ [h]γλῶσσαι [i]εἰς [i]σημεῖόν εἰσιν οὐ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ [k]τοῖς [k]ἀπίστοις· ἡ δὲ

c Isa. xxviii. 11 f.; Ps. cxiii.[?] (Aquila). d Rom. iii. 13; Heb. xiii. 15; 1 Pet. iii. 10; Mt. xv. 8 (Isa. xxix. 13). e Cf. Acts ii. 4; Exod. xxx. 9. For gen. ετερων, cf. 2 Cor. viii. 8. f See xi. 28. g Heb. v. 7; Mt. vi. 7; Lk. i. 13; Acts x. 31; Deut. i. 43. h See xii. 10. i In like sense, Rom. iv. 11; Rev. xii. 1, 3, xv. 1; Mt. xxiv. 30; Lk. ii. 12, 34. εις σημ., Gen. ix. 13; Isa. xix. 20, lv. 13; Ezek. xx. 12. k See vi. 6.

[1] ετεραις γλωσσαις: G latt. vg. (in aliis linguis et labiis aliis) and Latt. Ff.

[2] ετερων: ℵAB, 17, 67, 73. So crit. edd.

children in mind" (see parls.)—"in judgment" (Ed.), "the reasoning power on its reflective and discriminating side" (El.); φρένες differs from νοῦς much as φρόνιμος from σοφός (see notes to iv. 10, x. 15). Emulation and love of display were betraying this Church into a childishness the very opposite of that broad intelligence and enlightenment on which it plumed itself (i. 5, iv. 10, viii. 1, x. 15, etc.). "It is characteristic of the child to prefer the amusing to the useful, the shining to the solid" (Gd.). This is a keen reproof, softened, however, by the kindly ἀδελφοί ("suavem vim habet," Bg.).—γίνεσθε, "be in effect," "show yourselves"; cf. xi. 1, etc. "In malice, however, be babes (act the babe); but in mind show yourselves full-grown (men)".—For the force of the ending in νηπι-άζω, cf. πυρρ-άζω, to redden, Matt. xvi. 2; the vb. is based on νήπιος, a kind of superlative to παιδίον—"be (not boyish, but actually) childish" (Ed.), or "infantile, in malice". For the antithesis of τέλειος (= ἀνήρ) and νήπιος, see ii. 6, xiii. 9 ff., and parls. For κακία, cf. note on v. 8: P. desiderates the affection of the little child (see Eph. iv. 32 f., for the qualities opp. to κακία), as Jesus (in Matt. xviii. 1 ff.) its simplicity and humbleness. Gd. excellently paraphrases this ver.: "Si vous voulez être des enfants, à la bonne heure, pourvu que ce soit quant à la malice; mais, quant à l'intelligence, avancez de plus en plus vers la maturité complète".

§ 47. The Strange Tongues an Occasion of Unbelief, xiv. 21-25. The Ap. has striven to wean the Cor. from their childish admiration of the Tongues by showing how unedifying they are in comparison with Prophecy. The Scripture quoted to confirm his argument (21) ascribes to this kind of manifestation a punitive character. Through an alien voice the Lord speaks to those refusing to hear, by way of "sign to the unbelieving" (22). These abnormal utterances neither instruct the Church nor convert the world. The unconverted see in them the symptoms of madness (23). Prophecy has an effect far different; it searches every heart, and compels the most prejudiced to acknowledge the presence of God in the Christian assembly (24 f.).

Ver. 21. This O.T. citation is adduced not by way of Scriptural proof, but in solemn asseveration of what P. has intimated, to his readers' surprise, respecting the inferiority of the Glossolalia; cf. the manner of quotation in i. 19, ii. 9, iii. 19. The passage of Isaiah reveals a principle applying to all such modes of speech on God's part. The title ὁ νόμος Jewish usage extended to Scripture at large; see Rom. iii. 19, John x. 34. P. shows here his independence of the LXX: the first clause, ὅτι . . . τούτῳ, follows the Heb., only turning the prophet's third person ("He will speak") into the first, thus appropriating the words to God (λέγει Κύριος); Origen's Hexapla and Aquila's Gr. Version run in almost the same terms (El.). Paul's second clause, καὶ οὐδ' οὕτως εἰσακούσονταί μου, is based on the latter clause of ver. 12 (translated precisely in the LXX, καὶ οὐκ ἠθέλησαν ἀκούειν), but with a new turn of meaning drawn from the general context: he omits as irrelevant the former part of ver. 12. The original is therefore condensed, and somewhat adapted. Hf. and Ed. discuss at length the Pauline application of Isaiah's thought. According to the true interpretation of Isa. xxviii. 9 ff. (see Cheyne, Delitzsch, or Dillmann ad loc.), the drunken Israelites are mocking in their cups the teaching of God through His prophet, as though it were only fit for an infant school; in anger therefore He threatens to give His lessons through l See xii. 10. m See xi. 20. n Rom. xvi. 23; Acts v. 11, xv. 22. o See ver. 16. p Acts xii. 15, xxvi. 24 f.; Jo. x. 20; Jer. xxxvi. 26; Wisd. xiv. 28. q See xi. 5. r Eph. v. 11, 13; five times in Pastt.: Jo. iii. 20, viii. 46, xvi. 8, etc.; -γμος, 2 Tim. iii. 16. s See ii. 14.

[l] προφητεία οὐ [k] τοῖς [k] ἀπίστοις, ἀλλὰ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν. 23. ἐὰν οὖν [m] συνέλθῃ[1] [n] ἡ [n] ἐκκλησία [n] ὅλη [m] ἐπὶ τὸ [m] αὐτὸ καὶ πάντες [h] γλώσσαις[2] [h] λαλῶσιν,[2] εἰσέλθωσι δὲ [o] ἰδιῶται ἢ [k] ἄπιστοι, οὐκ ἐροῦσιν ὅτι [p] μαίνεσθε; 24. ἐὰν δὲ πάντες [q] προφητεύωσιν, εἰσέλθῃ δέ τις [k] ἄπιστος ἢ [o] ἰδιώτης, [r] ἐλέγχεται ὑπὸ πάντων, [s] ἀνακρίνεται

[1] ελθῃ: BG^gr. συν easily lost in foregoing ουν.

[2] λαλωσιν γλωσσαις (in this order): all uncc. but DKL. G has λαλησωσιν. D puts παντες last.

the lips of foreign conquerors (11), in whose speech the despisers of the mild, plain teaching of His servants (12) shall painfully spell out their ruin. The ὅτι (kī) is part of the citation: "For in men of alien tongue and in lips of aliens I will speak to this people; and not even thus will they hearken to me, saith the Lord". God spoke to Israel through the strange Assyrian tongue in retribution, not to confirm their faith but to consummate their unbelief. The Glossolalia may serve a similar melancholy purpose in the Church. This analogy does not support, any more than that of vv. 10 f. (see notes), the notion that the Tongues of Corinth were foreign languages.—εἰσακούω, to hear with attention, effect, shares the meaning of ὑπακούω (obedio) in the LXX and in cl. Gr.

Ver. 22. The real point of the above citation from Isaiah comes out in ὥστε αἱ γλῶσσαι εἰς σημεῖόν κ.τ.λ., "And so the tongues are for a sign not to the believing, but to the unbelievers"—sc. to "those who will not hear," who having rejected other modes of instruction find their unbelief confirmed, and even justified (23*b*), by this phenomenon. This interpretation (cf. Matt. xvi. 4; and for εἰς σημεῖον in the judicial sense, Is. viii. 18) is dictated by the logical connexion of vv. 21, 22, which forbids the thought of a convincing and saving sign, read into this passage by Cm. and many others. P. desires to quench rather than stimulate the Cor. ardour for Tongues.—ἡ δὲ προφητεία κ.τ.λ., "while prophecy on the other hand" (δέ) serves the opposite purpose—it "(is for a sign) not to the unbelievers, but to the believing". οἱ πιστεύοντες implies the act continued into a habit (cf. i. 21); οἱ ἄπιστοι, the determinate character. For ὥστε with ind., see note on iii. 7.

Ver. 23 shows the disastrous impression which the exercise of the Tongues, carried to its full extent, must make upon men outside—a result that follows (οὖν) from the aforesaid intention of the gift (22): "If then the entire Church should assemble together and all should be speaking with tongues, but there should enter uninstructed persons or unbelievers, will they not say that you are mad!" If the Tongues are, as many Cor. think, the highest manifestation of the Spirit, then to have the whole Church simultaneously so speaking would be the ne plus ultra of spiritual power; but, in fact, the Church would then resemble nothing so much as a congregation of lunatics! A reductio ad absurdum for the fanatical coveters of Tongues.—The ἰδιῶται (here unqualified: otherwise in 16; cf. note) are persons unacquainted with Christianity (altogether uninitiated) and receiving their first impression of it in this way, whereas the ἄπιστοι are rejectors of the faith. The impression made upon either party will be the same. The effect here imagined is altogether diff. from that of the Day of Pentecost, when the "other tongues" spoke intelligibly to those religiously susceptible amongst non-believers (Acts ii. 11 ff.). The imputation of madness from men of the world P. earnestly deprecates (Acts xxvi. 24 f.).—Ed. renders ἰδιῶται "separatists"—unattached Christians; but this interpretation wants lexical support, and is out of keeping with ver. 16: did any such class of Christians then exist?

Vv. 24, 25. How diff. (δέ) and how blessed the result, "if all should be prophesying and there should enter some unbeliever or stranger to Christianity (ἰδιώτης: see previous note), he is convicted by all, he is searched by all, the secret things of his heart become manifest; and so he will fall on his face and worship God, reporting that verily God is among you!" This brings out two further notes of eminence in the charism of ὑπὸ πάντων· 25. καὶ[1] οὕτω[1] [t] τὰ [t] κρυπτὰ τῆς [t] καρδίας αὐτοῦ [u] φανερὰ [u] γίνεται· καὶ [v] οὕτω [w] πεσὼν [w] ἐπὶ [w] πρόσωπον [x] προσκυνήσει τῷ Θεῷ, [y] ἀπαγγέλλων ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς[1] [z] ὄντως[2] ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστι.

26. [a] Τί [a] οὖν ἐστιν, ἀδελφοί; ὅταν [b] συνέρχησθε, ἕκαστος ὑμῶν[3] [c] ψαλμὸν ἔχει, [d] διδαχὴν ἔχει, [e] γλῶσσαν[4] ἔχει, [d] ἀποκάλυψιν[4] ἔχει, t See iv. 5. With καρδ., 1 Pet. iii. 4 u See xi. 19.

v See xi. 28; ver. 21 above.
w Mt. xvii. 6, xxvi. 39; Lk. v. 12, xvii. 16; Rev. xi. 16; Numb. xvi. 4, xx. 6.
x H.l. in P., with Acts xxiv. 11. Freq. in GG. and Rev.
y 1 Th. i. 9; Heb. ii. 12; 1 Jo. i. 2 f.; GG. and Acts, passim; Gen. xiv. 13.
z Gal. iii. 21; four times in 1 Tim.; four in GG.
a See ver. 15.
b See xi. 18.
c Eph. v. 19; Col. iii. 16; Isa. lxvi. 20. βιβλ. ψ., Lk. xx. 42, xxiv. 44; Acts i. 20, xiii. 33. Cf. ver. 15.
d See ver. 6.
e See xii. 10. Cf. ερμηνευτης, ver. 28.

[1] Om. και ουτω all pre-Syrian witnesses, including vg.

[2] οντως ο Θεος (in this order): all pre-Syrian uncc. Om. ο ℵ*D*G: so Tisch., but not other edd.: probably a Western error: the ο easily lost between ς and θ in uncial script.

[3] Om. υμων ℵ*AB, 17, cop. So crit. edd. Obvious grammatical addition.

[4] αποκαλυψιν . . . γλωσσαν (in this order): all uncc. but L. K and many minn. om. γλωσσ. εχει, a few copies om. αποκαλ. εχει, by homœoteleuton.

Prophecy when compared with Tongues: (1) The former edifies the Church (3 ff.); (2) it employs a man's rational powers (14-19); (3) it can be exercised safely by the whole Church, and (4) to the conversion of sinners. That "all" should "prophesy" is a part of the Messianic ideal, the earnest of which was given in the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost: see Num. xi. 23-29, Joel ii. 28, Acts. ii. 4, 15 ff.; the speaking of Pentecost Peter identifies with prophesying, whereas P. emphatically distinguishes the Cor. Glossolalia therefrom. Prophecy is an inspired utterance proceeding from a supernatural intuition, which penetrates "the things of the man," "the secrets of his heart," no less than "the things of God" (ii. 10 ff.): the light of heart-searching knowledge and speech, proceeding from every believer, is concentrated on the unconverted man as he enters the assembly. His conscience is probed on all sides; he is pierced and overwhelmed with the sense of his sin (cf. John iv. 29, also i. 48, viii. 9, Acts viii. 18 ff., xxiv. 25). This form of Prophecy abides in the Church, as the normal instrument for "convicting the world of sin" (John xvi. 8 ff.); it belongs potentially to "all" Christians, and is in fact the reaction of the Spirit of Christ in them upon the unregenerate (cf. John xx. 22 f.); ἐλέγχεται is the precise word of John xvi. 8.—Ἀνακρίνω (see ii. 14 and parls.) denotes not to judge, but to put on trial, to sift judicially. God alone, through Christ, is the judge of "the heart's secrets" (iv. 5, Rom. ii. 16); but the God-taught word of man throws a searching light into these recesses. In ver. 24 the ἄπιστος precedes the ἰδιώτης (cf. 23), since in his case the arresting effect of Prophecy is the more signal.—προσκυνήσει and ὄντως ὁ Θεὸς κ.τ.λ. are a reminiscence of Is. xlv. 14, following the Heb. txt. rather than the LXX (cf. note on 21).—ἀπ-αγγέλλων, "taking word away," reporting, proclaiming abroad (cf. parls.), thus diffusing the impression he has received (cf. John iv. 29).—ὄντως (revera, Cv.), really, in very deed—contradicts denials of God's working in Christianity, such as the ἄπιστος himself formerly had made.—πεσών (aor. ptp., of an act leading up to that of principal vb. and forming part of the same movement) indicates the prostration of a soul suddenly overpowered by the Divine presence. To convince men that "God is in the midst of her" is the true success of the Church.

§ 48. Self-Control in Religious Exercises, xiv. 26-33. The enquiry of the Cor. as to whether Tongues or Prophecy is the charism more to be coveted is now disposed of. P. supplements his answer by giving in the two last paragraphs of this chap. certain directions of a more general bearing relative to the conduct of Church meetings, which arise from the whole teaching of chh. xi.-xiv.: see the Introd. to Div. iv.

Ver. 26. τί οὖν ἐστίν (cf. 15), ἀδελφοί; "How then stands the case, brothers?" οὖν is widely resumptive, taking in the whole state of the Cor. Church as now reviewed, with esp. ref. to its abundance of charisms, amongst which Tongues and Prophecy are conspicuous; edifica- ἑρμηνείαν[1] ἔχει· πάντα [f] πρὸς [f g] οἰκοδομὴν γενέσθω.[2] 27. [h] εἴτε γλώσσῃ τις λαλεῖ, [i] κατὰ δύο ἢ [k] τὸ [k] πλεῖστον τρεῖς καὶ [l] ἀνὰ [l] μέρος, καὶ εἷς [m] διερμηνευέτω· 28. ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ᾖ [n] διερμηνευτής,[3] f Ver. 12. For προς, Jo. xi. 3; 1 Pet. iv. 12.

g See ver. 3.
h Single, h.l.; completed by προφ. δε, in oratio variata.
i Distrib. with numb., Mk. vi. 40; cf. ver. 31. So ανα, Lk. ix. 3, x. 1; John ii. 6.
k The phrase, h.l.; πλειστος, Mt. xi. 20, xxi. 8; Mk. iv. 1.
l H.l.; ανα μερος ᾳδειν, Polyb. iv. 20. 10. Diff. from εκ μερους, xiii. 9; and απο μερους, Rom. xi. 25 m See xii. 30.
n H.l. See txtl. note.

[1] DG, διερμην[ε]ιαν; ADL, -ιαν for -ειαν, a common itacism.

[2] γινεσθω: all uncc., and all but a few minn.

[3] ερμηνευτης: B, with DG (which prefix ο). So Lachm., Tr., W.H. marg. διερμηνευτης: ℵAD^b,c KL, etc., Chr., Euthal., etc.; "vox apud antiquos Græcos non usitata" (Tisch.).

tion must once more be insisted on as the true aim of them all.—ὅταν συνέρχησθε, "whensoever you assemble" (cf. xi. 18 ff.): here pr.; the aor. of ver. 23 referred to particular occasions.—"Each has a psalm (to sing)—a teaching, a revelation (to impart)—a tongue, an interpretation (to give)." The succession of the objects of ἔχει perhaps reflects the order commonly pursued in the Church meetings. For ἕκαστος, cf. i. 12, etc.: every Cor. Christian has his faculty; there is no lack of gifts for utterance or readiness to use them; cf. i. 5, also iv. 6 ff. This exuberance made the difficulty; all wanted to speak at once—women as well as men (34); ἔχει, in promptu habet (Mr.)—"iteratum, eleganter exprimit divisam donorum copiam" (Bg.). The ψαλμὸς might be an original song (though not chanted unintelligibly, ἐν γλώσσῃ—the latter is enumerated distinctly: see note on ψαλῶ, 15), or an O.T. Psalm Christianly interpreted (see parls.); similarly Philo, De Vita Cont., § 10, describing the Therapeutæ, ὁ ἀναστὰς ὑμῶν ὕμνον ᾄδει εἰς τ. Θεόν, ἢ καινὸν αὐτὸς πεποιηκώς, ἢ ἀρχαῖόν τινα τῶν πάλαι ποιητῶν. For N.T. psalms, see Luke i., ii., Rev. iv. 11, v. 9 f., 12 f., xv. 3 f.—διδαχὴ and ἀποκάλυψις (see 6 above; xii. 28 f.), the two leading forms of Christian edification. Beside the γλῶσσα is set the complementary ἑρμηνία, by which it is utilised for the Church: cf. xii. 10, 30; and vv. 1-19 passim.—πάντα πρὸς τὴν οἰκοδομὴν γινέσθω (pr. impv.), "Let everything be carried on with a view to edification".

Vv. 27, 28. The maxim πρὸς τ. οἰκοδομὴν κ.τ.λ. is applied to Tongues and Prophecy, as the two main competing gifts: "Whether any one speaks with a tongue (let them speak: sc. λαλείτωσαν) to the number of two (κατὰ δύο), or at the most three" (at one meeting)—"fiat per binos, aut ad plurimum ternos" (Bz.).—καὶ ἀνὰ μέρος, "and in turn," idque vicissim (Cv.)—not all confusedly speaking at once. Ed. ingeniously renders the κατὰ and ἀνὰ clauses "by two or at most three together, and in turns" (antiphonally), as though the Tongues could be combined in a duet—"the beginning of Church music and antiphonal singing amongst Christians": but this does not comport with the ecstatic nature of the Glossolalia; moreover, the sense thus given to the second clause would be properly expressed by ἐν μέρει, not ἀνὰ μέρος (Hn.).—"And let one person interpret": whether one of the γλωσσολαλοῦντες (13), or some one else present (ἄλλος, xii. 10); the use of several interpreters at the same meeting might occasion delay or confusion. "If however there be no interpreter (present), let him (the speaker with the Tongue) keep silence in the Church, but let him talk to himself and to God": unless his utterance can be translated, he must refrain in public, and be content to enjoy his charism in solitude and in secret converse with God (cf. 2 ff.); the instruction to "speak in his heart, noiselessly" (so Cm., Est., Hf.) would be contrary to λαλεῖν, and indeed to the nature of a tongue. "ᾖ for cl. παρῇ, sit for adsit; cf. Luke v. 17; Iliad ix. 688" (Ed.).

Vv. 29, 30. προφῆται δὲ δύο ἢ τρεῖς κ.τ.λ.: "But in the case of prophets, let two or three speak, and let the others discern" (dijudicent, Vg.). In form this sentence varies from the parl. clause respecting the Tongues (27); see Wr., p. 709, on the frequency of oratio variata in P., due to his vivacity and conversational freedom; the anarthrous προφῆται is quasi-hypothetical, in contrast with γλώσσῃ τις λαλεῖ—not "the prophets," but "supposing they (the speakers) be prophets, let them speak, etc." The o Rom. xvi. 25; six times in Lk. and Acts. For change of subject, see Wr., p. 787.

[o] σιγάτω [p] ἐν [p] ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἑαυτῷ δὲ λαλείτω καὶ τῷ Θεῷ. 29. [q] προφῆται δὲ δύο ἢ τρεῖς λαλείτωσαν, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι [1] [r] διακρινέτωσαν· 30. ἐὰν δὲ ἄλλῳ [s] ἀποκαλυφθῇ καθημένῳ, ὁ πρῶτος [o] σιγάτω· 31. δύνασθε γὰρ [t] καθ' [t] ἕνα πάντες [u] προφητεύειν, ἵνα πάντες [v] μανθάνωσι καὶ πάντες [w] παρακαλῶνται· 32. καὶ [x] πνεύματα [2] [q x] προφητῶν

p See xi. 18.
q See xii. 29.
r See vi. 5. s See ii. 10. t See ver. 27. For καθ' ενα, add Eph. v. 33; Jo. xxi. 25; καθ' εις, Rom. xii. 5; Mk. xiv. 19; Jo. viii. 9. u See xi. 5. v Absol., Col. i. 7; 1 Tim. ii. 11; 2 Tim. iii. 7; Mt. xi. 29; Jo. vi. 45. w Frequent throughout P.; in Acts rarely; in GG., only Lk. iii. 18 with this sense. x Rev. xxii. 6. πνευματα, see xii. 10.

[1] Om. οι αλλοι D*GL—an example of Western license.

[2] πνευμα, DG, 67, latt. (not vg.), syr^sch., Epiph., Latt. Ff.

number to prophesy at any meeting is limited to "two or three," like that of the Tongue-speakers; the condition ἀνὰ μέρος (27) is self-evident, where edification is consciously intended (3, etc.). "The others" are the other prophets present, who were competent to speak (31); these silent prophets may employ themselves in the necessary "discernment of spirits" (see xii. 10)—διακρινέτωσαν, acting as critics of the revelations given through their brethren. The powers of προφητεία and διάκρισις appear to have been frequently combined, like those of artist and art-critic. It is noticed that in the Didachê a contrary instruction to this (and to 1 Thess. v. 20 f.) is given: πάντα προφήτην λαλοῦντα ἐν πνεύματι οὐ πειράσετε οὐδὲ διακρινεῖτε.—The above regulation implies pre-arrangement amongst the speakers; but this must not hinder the free movement of the Spirit; if a communication be made ex tempore to a silent prophet, the speaker should give way to him: "But if anything be revealed to another seated" (the prophesier stood, as in Synagogue reading and exhortation: Luke iv. 1, Acts xiii. 16), "let the first be silent". σιγάτω does not command (as σιγησάτω might) an instant cessation; "some token would probably be given, by motion or gesture, that an ἀποκάλυψις had been vouchsafed to another of the προφῆται; this would be a sign to the speaker to close his address, and to let the newly illumined succeed to him" (El.). Even inspired prophets might speak too long and require to be stopped!

Ver. 31. By economy of time, every one who has the prophetic gift may exercise it in turn; so the Church will enjoy, in variety of exhortation, the full benefit of the powers of the Spirit conferred on all its members: "For you can (in this way) all prophesy one by one (καθ' ἕνα: singulatim, Cv.), in order that all may learn and all may be encouraged". Stress lies on the repeated πάντες (cf. xii. 12 f.): let every prophet get his turn, and every hearer will receive benefit (cf. 26*b*); even if the Church members were all prophets, as Paul imagined in ver. 24, and thinks desirable (1-5), by due arrangement, and self-suppression on the part of the eloquent, all might be heard.

Ver. 32. The maxim πνεύματα προφητῶν προφήταις ὑποτάσσεται, is coupled by καὶ to ver. 31 under the regimen of γάρ; it gives the subjective, as ver. 31 the main objective, reason why the prophets should submit to regulation. "How can I prophesy to order?" one of them might ask; "how restrain the Spirit's course in me?" The Ap. replies: "(for) also the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets"; this Divine gift is put under the control and responsibility of the possessor's will, that it may be exercised with discretion and brotherly love, for its appointed ends. An unruly prophet is therefore no genuine prophet; he lacks one of the necessary marks of the Holy Spirit's indwelling (see 33, 37). This kind of subjection could hardly be ascribed to the ecstatic Glossolalia. On the pl. πνεύματα, signifying manifold forms or distributions (xii. 4, 11) of the Spirit's power, see note on xii. 10.—ὑποτάσσεται is the pr. of a general truth: "a Gnomic Present" (Bn., § 12); cf. iii. 13, 2 Cor. ix. 7.

Ver. 33. The apophthegm of ver. 32 exemplifies the universal principle of order in God's works; cf. the deduction drawn in xi. 3. God's gift of the Spirit submits itself to the receiver's will, through whose direction its exercise is brought into regulated and edifying use: "For God is not (a God) of disorder (or seditionis, Cv.), but of peace". To suppose that God inspires His prophets

[q] προφήταις [y] ὑποτάσσεται· 33. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν [z] ἀκαταστασίας ὁ [a] Θεὸς ἀλλ' [a] εἰρήνης, ὡς ἐν [b] πάσαις ταῖς [b] ἐκκλησίαις [c] τῶν [c] ἁγίων.[1]

34.[2] Αἱ γυναῖκες ὑμῶν[3] ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις [e] σιγάτωσαν· οὐ γὰρ [d] ἐπιτέτραπται[4] αὐταῖς λαλεῖν ἀλλὰ [y] ὑποτάσσεσθαι,[5] καθὼς καὶ

y xv. 27 f., xvi. 16. 15 times besides in P.; thrice in Lk. (πνευματα υποτασσ., x. 20); four exx. in Heb.; one in Jas.; six in 1 Pet. Prov. xxi. 8; Tob. iv. 13. -τος, Jas. i. 8.
z 2 Cor. vi. 5, xii. 20; Lk. xxi. 9; Jas. iii. 16;
a 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Rom. xv. 33, xvi. 20; Phil. iv. 9; 1 Th. v. 23; Heb. xiii. 20; 2 Th. iii. 16 (ὁ κυρ. τ. ειρ.).
b See vii. 17.
c See vi. 1.
d Impers. pass., Acts xxvi. 1, xxviii. 16. See also xvi. 7; 1 Tim. ii. 12, Acts xxi. 39.

[1] ℵ by its punctuation distinctly attaches ως . . . αγιων to ver. 33. So Chr. and Ff.; so also the crit. edd., exc. Tisch., Weiss, W.H. marg. See note below.

[2] DG and several Latin authorities read vv. 34, 35 after 40.

[3] Om. υμων ℵAB, 17, vg. cop., Or., Mcion., Cyp.

[4] επιτρεπεται, all uncc. but KL.

[5] υποτασσεσθωσαν: ℵAB, 17, 73, syr[sch]. cop. basm., Mcion. υποτασσεσθαι: DGKL, latt. vg.—a Western emendation.

to speak two or three at a time, to make a tumult in the Church and refuse control, would be to suppose Him the author of confusion, of chaos instead of cosmos. —ἀκαταστασία (see parls.) is a word of the LXX and later Gr., denoting civil disorder or mutiny; it recalls the σχίσματα and ἔριδες of i. 10 f., xi. 18 f., to which emulation in the display of spiritual powers seems to have contributed.—"As it is in all the Churches of the saints": in evidence of the "peace" which God confers on human society, P. can point to the conduct of Church meetings in all other Christian communities—a feature proper to "assemblies of the saints". Here is a final and solemn reason why the prophets of Cor. should practise self-control and mutual deference: cf. xi. 16; also i. 2*b*, and note; xvi. 1.—On the connexion of the ὡς clause, see Ed. or El. W.H. attach it to ver. 31, regarding vv. 32, 33*a* as a parenthesis; but this breaks the continuity of vv. 31, 32; nor does it appear that "all the churches" had the superabundance of prophets that necessitated the restrictions imposed in vv. 29-31. Other leading editors (Tisch., Mr., Hn., Hf., Bt., Gd.) link this qualification to the following context; but it comes in clumsily before the impv. of ver. 34, and the repetition of ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις is particularly awkward. On the other hand, the ref. to the example of the other Churches appropriately concludes the Apostle's appeals on the weighty subject, of universal interest, which has occupied him throughout this chapter.

§ 49. Final Instructions on Church Order, xiv. 34-40. In vv. 34 ff. P. returns to the matter which he first touched upon in reproving the disorderly Church life at Cor., viz., the irregular behaviour of certain Christian women (xi. 2-16): there it was their dress, now it is their tongue that he briefly reproves. Vv. 37 f., glancing over the injunctions of Div. IV. at large, commend their recognition as a test of the high pretensions to spiritual insight made at Cor. Ver. 39 recapitulates Paul's deliverance on the vexed question of Tongues versus Prophecy. Ver. 40 adds the final maxim of propriety and order,—a rule of administration as comprehensive and important as the πάντα πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν of ver. 26.

Ver. 34. Αἱ γυναῖκες ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις σιγάτωσαν: "Let women (Gr. generic art.) keep silence in the church assemblies, for it is not allowed them to speak"; cf. 1 Tim. ii. 12, where the "speaking" of this passage is defined as "teaching, or using authority over a man". The contradiction between this veto and the language of xi. 5, which assumes that women "pray" and "prophesy" in gatherings of Christians and forbids their doing so "with uncovered head," is relieved by supposing (a) that in xi. 5 P. refers to private gatherings (so Cv., Bg., Mr., Bt., Ev., El.), or means specifically at home (Hf.), while here speaking ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ is forbidden (35); but there is nothing in ch. xi. to indicate this distinction, which ex hyp. is vital to the matter; moreover, at this early date, the distinction between public and private Christian meetings—in church or house—was very imperfectly developed. Or (b), the instances admitted in xi. 5 were exceptional, "où la femme se sentirait

ὁ νόμος λέγει· 35.[1] εἰ δέ τι μαθεῖν[2] θέλουσιν, [e]ἐν [e]οἴκῳ τοὺς ἰδίους ἄνδρας [f]ἐπερωτάτωσαν· [g]αἰσχρὸν γάρ ἐστι γυναιξὶν[3] [h]ἐν [h]ἐκκλησίᾳ[4] λαλεῖν.[4] 36. ἢ ἀφ' ὑμῶν ὁ [i]λόγος τοῦ [i]Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθεν; ἢ [k]εἰς ὑμᾶς μόνους [k]κατήντησεν; 37. εἴ τις [l]δοκεῖ [m]προφήτης εἶναι ἢ [n]πνευματικός, [o]ἐπιγινωσκέτω ἃ γράφω ὑμῖν, [o]ὅτι τοῦ[5]

e See xi. 34. f Rom. x. 20 (Isa. lxv. 1); in GG. freq. g See xi. 6. h See xi. 18. i 2 Cor. ii. 17, iv. 2; Rom. ix. 6; Phil. i. 14; Col. i. 25; 1 Th. ii. 13; 1 Tim. iv. 5; 2 Tim. ii. 9; Tit. ii. 5; occasional in other Epp.; freq. in Syn. GG. and Acts. k See x. 11. l See iii. 18. m See xii. 28; sing. thus, Acts xxi. 10; Tit. i. 12 (?). n See ii. 15. o 2 Cor. i. 14, xiii. 5; Acts iii. 10, iv. 13. For vb., see xiii. 12.

[1] DG and several Latin authorities read vv. 34, 35 after 40.

[2] μαθειν: ℵ[c]BDGKL, etc. So all edd. except W.H., who put μανθανειν (?) in txt., following ℵ*A[2], 17, and a few other minn. with Greg.[Nyss.], and μαθ. in marg.

[3] γυναικι: ℵAB, 17, 73, vg., cop. basm.

[4] λαλειν εν εκκλησιᾳ (in this order): ℵAB, 17. GL, and a few others, εν εκκλησιαις (cf. ver. 34).

[5] Om. του all but a few minn.; cf. vii. 19.

pressée de donner essor à un élan extraordinaire de l'Esprit" (Gd.): but πᾶσα γυνή (xi. 5) suggests frequent occurrence. (c) Hn. supposes participation in the ecstatic manifestations forbidden, as though γλώσσῃ were understood with λαλεῖν. (d) Ed. thinks the tacit permission of xi. 5 here withdrawn, on maturer consideration. But (e), in view of the words that follow, "but let them be subject" and "if they want to learn" (contrasted with λαλεῖν by δέ), and on comparison with the more explicit language of 1 Tim. ii. 12, in view moreover of the principle affirmed in ch. xi. 3 ff., it appears probable that P. is thinking of Church-teaching and authoritative direction as a rôle unfit for women.—ὑποτασσέσθωσαν is the keynote of Paul's doctrine on the subject (cf. also Eph. v. 22 ff., etc.). This command cannot fairly be set aside as a temporary regulation due to the state of ancient society. If the Ap. was right, there is a ὑποτάσσεσθαι which lies in the nature of the sexes and the plan of creation; but this must be understood with the recollection of what Christian subjection is (see Gal. v. 13*b*, Eph. v. 22 ff.; also note on xi. 3 above).—What "the law says" was evidently in Paul's mind when he grounded his doctrine in ch. xi. on the O.T. story of the creation of Man and Woman. For Jewish sentiment in the matter, see Wetstein ad loc., Vitringa, Synag., p. 724; Schöttgen, Hor., p. 658. For Gr. feeling, cf. Soph., Ajax, 293, γυναιξὶ κόσμον ἡ σιγὴ φέρει (Ed.); for Early Church rule, Const. Apost., iii. 6, Conc. Carthag., iv. 99 (quoted by El.).

Ver. 35. εἰ δέ τι θέλουσιν μανθάνειν: "But if they want to learn something" —if this is the motive that prompts them to speak. This plea furnishes an excuse, consistent with the submission enjoined, for women raising their voices in the Church meetings; but even so P. deprecates the liberty. As between μανθάνειν and μαθεῖν after θέλω and the like, El. thus distinguishes: "when attention is directed to the procedure of the action specified, the pr. is commonly used; when simply to the action itself, the aor." —In bidding the Cor. women of enquiring minds to "ask at home of their own husbands," P. is laying down a general rule, not disposing of all cases that might arise; since the impv. of ver. 35 admits of exceptions, so may that of ver. 34: the utterances of Pentecost (Acts ii. 4) proceeded from "all," both men and women (cf. 18 f.); there is also the notable instance of Philip's "four daughters which did prophesy" (Acts. xxi. 9). At Cor. there was a disposition to put men and women on an equal footing in public speaking and Church leadership; this is stigmatized as αἰσχρὸν (turpe, inhonestum; cf. xi. 6, 13 ff.); it shocks moral feeling. For ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ, see xi. 18.

Ver. 36. The Ap. adds the authority of Christian usage to that of natural instinct (cf. the connexion of xi. 14 and 16), in a tone of indignant protest: "Or (is it) from you (that) the word of God went out? or to you only did it reach?" —i.e., "Neque primi, neque soli estis Christiani" (Est.). The Cor. acted without thinking of any but themselves, as though they were the one Church in the world, or might set the fashion to all the rest (see note on i. 2*b*; also 33 above, and xi. 16). For the self-sufficiency of this [p] Κυρίου εἰσὶν[1] [p] ἐντολαί[1]· 38. εἰ δέ τις [q] ἀγνοεῖ, [q] ἀγνοείτω.[2] 39. Ὥστε, ἀδελφοί,[3] [r] ζηλοῦτε τὸ [s] προφητεύειν, καὶ τὸ [t] λαλεῖν[4] [t] γλώσσαις[5] [u] μὴ [u] κωλύετε.[5] 40. πάντα[6] [v] εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ [w] τάξιν γινέσθω.

p Lk. i. 6. εντ. Θ., see vii. 19. Cf. also ix. 14, vii. 40, ii. 16.
q 2 Cor. vi. 9 (pass.); Rom. ii. 4, vi. 3, vii. 1, x. 3; Gal. i. 22 (pass.); 1 Tim. i. 13. See also x. 1. Six times in N.T. besides (see esp. 2 Pet. ii. 12). Sir. v. 15.
r See xii. 31.
s See xi. 5.
t See xiii. 1.
u Mt. xix. 14, etc. For κωλ. in P., Rom. i. 13; 1 Th. ii. 16; 1 Tim. iv. 3.
v Rom. xiii. 13; 1 Th. iv. 12; -μων, see xii. 24; -οσυνη, xii. 23.
w Col. ii. 5; Lk. i. 8; Heb. v. 6, etc.; Job xxxviii. 12. Contrast ατακτος, -ως, 1 Th. v. 14; 2 Th. iii. 6, 11. Cf. xv. 23.

[1] εστιν εντολη: ℵAB, 17, cop., Aug. (ℵc, εντ. εστ.). D*G, 14, Or., Hil., Ambrst., εστιν simply (Western); so Tisch. εισιν εντολαι: Syrian emendation.

[2] αγνοειται (?): ℵ*A*D*G, Or., latt. vg., Amb., Ambrst., Hil.; so Lachm., Tr. marg., Tisch., W.H. txt., R.V. marg., Nestle. Possibly a Western corruption. αγνοειτω (?): ℵcA²BDbc, etc.; retained by Tr. txt., R.V. txt., W.H. marg. See note below.

[3] αδελφοι μου: ℵAB*, 67, syrr. cop. Om. μου Western and Syrian.

[4] εν γλωσσαις: BD*G, cop., Tr. marg.

[5] το λαλειν μη κωλυετε γλωσσαις (in this order): ℵABP, 17, 73—conformed by Western and Syrian edd. to usual order.

[6] παντα δε: all uncc. but KL.

church, cf. iv. 6 ff., v. 2. On καταντάω εἰς, see x. 11.—ἢ links this ver. with the foregoing, "Or (if what I have said is not sufficient), etc."

Vv. 37, 38. ἃ γράφω ὑμῖν, in the apodosis, includes, beside the last particular (34 ff.), the other instructions of this Ep.; προφήτης and πνευματικὸς in the protasis recall esp. the directions of chh. xii.-xiv.: cf. xi. 4, xii. 1, xiv. 1.—δοκεῖ, as in iii. 18 (see note), is putat, sibi videtur (not videtur alone, Vg.), denoting self-estimation. The term πνευματικὸς includes every one endowed with a special gift of the Spirit; cf. the pl. πνεύματα, ver. 12. Hf. and Hn. think however that the disjunctive ἢ narrows the ref. of "spiritual," by contrast with "prophet," to the sense of "speaker with tongues"; but this is a needless inference from the part.; the Ap. means "a prophet, or a man of the Spirit (in any sense)". The adj. πνευματικός (in masc.: see parls.) refers not to spiritual powers (τὰ πνευματικά, xii. 1, etc.), but to spiritual character (=ὁ κατὰ πνεῦμα, ἐν πνεύματι, Rom. viii.), which gives insight in matters of revelation (cf. John vii. 17, viii. 31 f.). While the true "prophet," having a kindred inspiration (cf. 29), will "know well of the things" the Ap. "writes, that they are a commandment of the Lord" (Κυρίου ἐστὶν ἐντολή, "are what the Lord commands"; cf. ii. 10-16, vii. 40, and notes, 2 Cor. xiii. 3), this ability belongs to "the spiritual" generally, who "judge all things" (ii. 15); being "of God," they hear His voice in others (cf. John viii. 42 f., etc.; 1 John ii. 20, iv. 6). The "Lord" is Christ, the Head of the Church, who "gives commandment to His Apostles" (cf. vii. 10, 25, xi. 23, xii. 3, etc.; Matt. xxviii. 20, etc.).—For ἐπι-γινωσκέτω, cf. xiii. 12—"judicet atque agnoscat" (Est.); the pr. impv. asks for a continued acknowledgment of Christ's authority in His Apostle.—"But if any one is ignorant (of this), he is ignored" (ἀγνοεῖται)—a retribution in kind. The professor of Divine knowledge who does not discern Paul's inspiration, proves his ignorance; his character as "prophet" or "spiritual" is not recognised, since he does not recognise the Apostle's character; cf. Matt. x. 14 f., 41, John xiii. 20, for this criterion as laid down by Christ; the Ap. John assumes it in 1 iv. 6.—ἀγοεῖται, is pr. in tense, ignoratur (not ignorabitur, Vg.), affirming an actual rejection—sc. by the Lord, who says to such despisers of His servants, "I know you not" (cf. viii. 3; 2 Tim. ii. 19; John v. 42, etc.); but by His Apostle too, who cannot acknowledge for fellow-servants men who repudiate the Lord's authority in him (cf. 3 John 9 f.). Christ foretold that He would have to disown "many who had prophesied" in His name (Matt. vii. 22 f.). If ἀγνοείτω be read (still preferred by Mr., Bt., Ev., Gd., with R.V. txt.), the impv. is permissive, as in vii. 15: "sibi suæque ignorantiæ relinquen-

XV. 1. [a]Γνωρίζω δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοί, τὸ [b]εὐαγγέλιον ὃ [b]εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν, [m]ὃ [m]καὶ [c]παρελάβετε, [d]ἐν [m]ᾧ [m]καὶ [d]ἑστήκατε, 2. δι᾽ οὗ καὶ [e]σώζεσθε· τίνι λόγῳ [b]εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν, εἰ [f]κατέχετε, [g]ἐκτὸς a See xii. 3. b See i. 17. In this constr., 2 Cor. xi. 7; Lk. i. 19, ii. 10; Acts xiii. 32. c See xi. 23. d Rom. v. 2; Col. iv. 12; Jo. viii. 44; cf. 2 Cor. i. 24. e Pr., see i. 18; also, beside ptpl. use, Heb. v. 7, vii. 25; 1 Pet. iii. 21, iv. 18; Jude 23; Acts xxvii. 20. f See xi. 2. g See xiv. 5.

dos esse censeo" (Est.)—a counsel of despair; contrast 2 Tim. ii. 24 ff.

Vv. 39, 40 restate the advice of ver. 1 in the light of the subsequent discussion, moderating the Church's zeal for demonstrative charisms by insisting on the seemliness and good order which had been violated by their unrestrained exercise (26-33). "And so, my brothers, covet to prophesy": ζηλοῦτε, cf. xii. 31; τὸ προφητεύειν replaces by the regular inf. the telic ἵνα προφητεύητε of ver. 1 (see note).—καὶ τὸ λαλεῖν μὴ κωλύετε γλώσσαις, "and the speaking with tongues do not hinder"; this is to be allowed in the Church, but not encouraged like Prophecy, of course with the proviso that the Tongue has its interpreter (13, 28). For ὥστε with impv., see iv. 5, etc.—πάντα δὲ γινέσθω: "But let all things be carried on, etc.": the δὲ attaches this caution specially to ver. 39; zeal for Prophecy and permission of Glossolalia must be guarded by the observance at all points of decorum and discipline.—εὐσχημόνως (see parls., and note on vii. 35), honeste (Vg.) or decenter; North. Eng. mensefully (cf. Eph. iv. 1, v. 4, and 33 above)—a sort of "ethical enhancement of the more mechanical κατὰ τάξιν" (El.). On the latter expression, opp. of ἀτάκτως, cf. 2 Thess. iii. 6 f., also xi. 34*b* above: the Cor. would interpret it by P.'s previous instructions—his παραδόσεις, ἐντολαί, ὁδοὶ ἐν Χριστῷ—and those given in this Ep.—εὐσχημόνως demands a right Christian taste and deportment, κατὰ τάξιν a strict Christian method and rule of procedure.

Division V.: The Resurrection of the Body, Chap. xv. Some members of the Cor. Church denied the resurrection of the dead (12), compelling the Ap. to enter on a systematic defence and exposition of this Christian doctrine. The question was not raised in the Church Letter; nor does Paul indicate the source of his information; the opinion of the τινὲς was openly expressed, and was doubtless matter of common report (cf. v. 1). Their position was incompatible with Christianity; it contravened, inferentially, the whole verity and saving worth of the Gospel (1 f., 13-19). Such scepticism nullified the faith and hope of the Church (11) as effectually as the party-divisions destroyed its love. While standing apart from the practical and personal questions upon which the Ep. turns (and accordingly reserved to the last), this doctrinal controversy has two important points of connexion with them, lying (1) in the differences of opinion prevalent at Cor. (cf. 12, λέγουσιν ἐν ὑμῖν τινες, with ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες, i. 10), and (2) in the laxity of moral sentiment associated with Cor. unbelief (cf. 32 ff. with v. 2, vi. 8 f., viii. 10, x. 14, 21 f., xi. 21, 29 ff.). This latter trait identifies the doubters of the Resurrection with the men who justified antinomian tendencies by the assumption of superior "knowledge" (see notes on vi. 12 and viii. 1, etc.); affecting "the wisdom of this world," they cherished the rooted prejudice of Greek culture, against the idea of a bodily redemption (see Introd., p. 732). To men of this way of thinking the Resurrection was a folly even more than the Cross; some of those who had overcome the latter offence, still stumbled at the former. Unbelief in the Resurrection was sure to be excited wherever the Gospel spread amongst educated Greeks; the Ap. feels that he must grapple boldly with this difficulty at its first appearance in the Church; he puts forth his full strength to conquer it and to commend the truth that was impugned to the intelligent Corinthians.—Sceptics as they are in regard to the general doctrine, the τινὲς do not question the personal resurrection of Jesus Christ (a circumstance of great apologetic value); the Apostle's refutation starts from the assumption of this cardinal fact. They will not admit the recovery of the body as a part of the Christian salvation; they reject it as a principle, and a law of the kingdom of God. It was probably held that Christ's rising from the dead was a unique, symbolical occurrence, bringing about for believers in Him a redemption wholly spiritual, a literal and full deliverance from the

[g] εἰ μὴ [h] εἰκῇ ἐπιστεύσατε; 3. [k] παρέδωκα γὰρ ὑμῖν [l] ἐν [l] πρώτοις, [m] ὃ [m] καὶ [o] παρέλαβον, ὅτι [n] Χριστὸς [n] ἀπέθανεν [o] ὑπὲρ τῶν [o] ἁμαρτιῶν

h Rom. xiii. 4; Gal. iii. 4, iv. 11; Col. ii. 18; Prov. xxviii. 25. i See iii. 5. k See xi. 2. l N.T. h.l.; Gen. xxxiii. 2. m Rom. ix. 24; Gal. ii. 10; 2 Th. i. 11; 1 Pet. ii. 8, iii. 21. n See viii. 11. o Gal. i. 4; Heb., 4 times; Ezek. xlv. 22. Cf. περι αμαρτ., Rom. viii. 3, etc flesh and the world of matter.—Paul's argument is in two parts: (A) vv. 1-34, concerning the certainty; (B) vv. 35-57, concerning the nature of the Resurrection. To establish its certainty (A), P. begins by (a) rehearsing the historical evidence of Christ's bodily resurrection, which had been preached by himself ἐν πρώτοις and so received by the readers (1-11); (b) he shows that to deny the resurrection of the dead is to deny Christ's resurrection, and so to declare the Gospel witness false and its salvation illusive (12-19); and further, (c) that the risen Christ is the first-fruit of a great harvest, whose ingathering is essential to the fulfilment of the kingdom of God (20-28); (d) he closes this part of the case by pointing to the practical results of faith or unbelief in a future resurrection (29-34). (B) The nature of the resurrection body is (a) illustrated by the difference between the seed and the perfect plant; also by the endless variety of material forms, instanced in animal organisms and in the heavenly bodies, which helps us to understand how there may be a future body of a higher order than the present human frame (35-43). (b) This difference between the σῶμα πνευματικὸν and the σῶμα ψυχικὸν being premised, it is argued that our investiture with the former is as necessary a consequence of our relation to Christ as our investiture with the latter is a consequence of our relation to Adam (44-49). (c) Only by this transformation, by the victory over death and sin thus achieved, can the promise of God in Scripture be fulfilled, His redeeming purpose effected, and the work of His servants made secure (51-58).—This is the earliest Christian doctrinal essay; in method and argumentative character it is akin to the Ep. to the Romans. Hn. ably defends its integrity against the attempts of Clemen and the Dutch School to make out interpolations and contradictions.

§ 50. The Facts concerning Christ's Resurrection, xv. 1-11. The doubt which the Ap. combats strikes at the fundamental, probative fact of his Gospel. He must therefore go back to the beginning, and reassert the "first things" he had taught at Cor. (1-4); to establish the resurrection of Jesus Christ is logically to destroy the theorem, "There is no resurrection of the dead" (12). Six successive appearances of the Risen One are enumerated—the first made to Kephas, and the last to Paul himself—(5-9); the list is not intended as exhaustive, but includes the names most prominent in the Church, the witnesses whose testimony would be best known and most accessible. The Ap. dwells on the astonishing mercy that was in this way vouchsafed to himself (9 f.), insisting finally on the unbroken agreement of the Apostolic preaching and of the Church's faith in regard to this supremely important event (11).

Vv. 1, 2. "Now I give you to know, brothers" (cf. xii. 3, for γνωρίζω): Paul writes, with a touch of blame, as though informing the Cor. of what the staple of his message had been, that on which their whole Christianity is built (cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 5, Rom. vi. 3)—viz., "the good news which," on the one hand, "I proclaimed to you (for cognate noun and vb., emphasising the benefit of the news, cf. ix. 18, etc.), which also," on the other hand, "you received; in which also you stand fast (cf. i. 6, xi. 2), through which also you are being saved". Ver. 11 similarly contrasts the correspondent part of proclaimers and receivers in attesting the saving facts (cf. xi. 23). The three relative clauses describe the inception, continuance, and progressive benefits of the faith of this Church.—σώζεσθε affirms a present, continuous salvation (cf. Rom. viii. 24, Eph. ii. 8); but "salvation," with Paul, always looks on to the future (see Rom. v. 9, 1 Thess. v. 8 ff.).—The connection of τίνι λόγῳ εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν; is difficult to seize. The two interpretations of the R.V., txt. and marg. (also A.V.), are those commonly adapted: (a) making the τίνι λόγῳ dependent on γνωρίζω, as appositive to τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κ.τ.λ., "I make known the good news . . . with what word I preached, etc." (so Bg., Hn., Ed.); (b) prefixing the clause, with an inversion of the normal order, to the hypothetical εἰ κατέχετε, which states the condition of σώζεσθε, "(you are saved), if you hold fast by what word I preached (it) to you" (Bz., Mr., Ev., ἡμῶν [p] κατὰ τὰς [p] γραφάς· 4. καὶ ὅτι [q] ἐτάφη, καὶ ὅτι [r] ἐγήγερται τῇ [s] τρίτῃ [1] [s] ἡμέρᾳ,[1] [p] κατὰ τὰς [p] γραφάς· 5. καὶ ὅτι [t] ὤφθη [u] Κηφᾷ, p Jas. ii. 8. γραφαι, Rom. i. 2, xv. 4; 2 Pet. iii. 16; 14 exx. in GG. and Acts. Scrr. relevant in (1): Ps. xxi., Isa. liii., Zech. xiii. 7, Dan. ix. 24, etc.; in (2), Ps. xv. 10, Isa. xxv. 7 f., liii. 9 f., Hos. vi. 2; Jonah i. 17 (see Mt. xii. 40), etc. q Rom. vi. 4 (συνεταφημεν); Mt. viii. 21 f.; Lk. xvi. 22; Acts ii. 29, v. 6, 9 f.; Gen. xxiii. 4. r Vv. 13 ff.; see vi. 14. For pf. pass., outside this ch.; 2 Tim. ii. 8; Mk. vi. 14. s Mt. xii. 40, xvii. 23, xx. 19, xxvi. 61, xxvii. 40, 63; Lk. xiii. 32, xxiv. 7, 21, 46; John ii. 19 f. t In this tense, 1 Tim. iii. 16; Rev. xi. 19, xii. 1, 3; freq. in Acts; Mt. xvii. 3; Lk. i. 11, xxii. 43, xxiv. 34. Cf. ix. 1. u See ix. 5.

[1] τῃ ημερᾳ τῃ τριτῃ: ℵABD, 17, 37.

Gd., Bt., El., Sm., Wr., Bm.). There are convincing objections to both views, advanced by Mr. and El. against (a), and by Ed. and Hn. against (b): beside the harsh inversion it requires, (b) leaves the interrog. τίνι (the instances of τίς for ὅς, with ἔχω, adduced in Bm.'s Grammar are not really parl.), and the substitution of λόγος for εὐαγγέλιον, unexplained. Preferring therefore construction (a), one feels that at this distance the τίνι λόγῳ clause practically detaches itself from γνωρίζω (Hf.); the Ap. restates τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ὃ εὐηγγελισάμην ὑμῖν in the altered shape of a challenge to the memory and faith of his readers—an interrogation prompted by the misgiving expressed directly afterwards in εἰ κατέχετε: "In what word (I ask) did I preach (it) to you?—(you will remember) if you are holding (it) fast!—unless you believed idly!" The λόγος is "the word of the gospel" (Acts xv. 7; cf. Eph. i. 13, Col. i. 5), "the story of the cross," etc. (i. 17), as told by P.—quo sermone (Bz.); not qua ratione (Vg.); nor quo pacto (Er., Cv.). Can it be that the Cor. have let this slip? or did they believe it εἰκῇ—not frustra, in vain (so Vg., and most others, as in Gal. iii. 4), but in the common cl. sense of εἰκῇ, temere (cf. Rom. xiii. 4, Col. ii. 18), heedlessly, at random, without serious apprehension, without realising the facts involved. The self-contradiction of the τινὲς (12) shows levity of belief. For ἐκτὸς εἰ μή, see xiv. 5.

Vv. 3, 4 answer the question put in ver. 2, reinforming the readers: "For I delivered to you amongst the first things, that which I also received".—καὶ emphasises the identity of the παραδοθὲν and παραλημφθέν, involved in the character of a "faithful steward" (iv. 1 f., cf. John xvii. 8, etc.). How these matters had been received—whether by direct revelation (Gal. i. 12) or through other contributory channels (cf. note on xi. 23 above)—is irrelevant.—ἐν πρώτοις, in primis, in chief (cf. 1 Tim. i. 15 f.). The things thus delivered are "that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He has been raised on the third day according to the Scriptures". Amongst the three πρῶτα, the first and third are πρώτιστα (cf. 2 Cor. v. 14 f., Rom. iv. 25, 1 Thess. iv. 14, etc.); the second is the link between them, signalising at once the completeness of the death and the reality of the resurrection (cf. Rom. vi. 4, x. 7): ὅτι ἐτάφη καὶ ὅτι ἐγήγερται is a more vivid and circumstantial expression for ὅτι ἐγήγερται ἐκ νεκρῶν (12, etc.).—The two chiefest facts P. and the other Apostolic preachers (11) were accustomed to verify, both separately and jointly, from the Old Testament, κατὰ τὰς γραφάς (Acts xiii. 32 ff., xvii. 3, xxvi. 22 f., Rom. i. 2 ff.), after the manner of Jesus (Luke xxii. 37, xxiv. 25 ff., John iii. 14). But it was the facts that opened their eyes to the meaning of the Scriptures concerned (cf. John ii. 22, xx. 9). The death and burial are affirmed in the aor. as historical events; the resurrection is put with emphasis into the pf. tense, as an abiding power (cf. 14, 17, 20) = ἐγερθεὶς . . . οὐκέτι ἀποθνήσκει (Rom. vi. 9; cf. Heb. vii. 25).—"For our sins," see parls.—"pro peccatis nostris abolendis" (Bg.). "P. could not have said ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν if Christ's death were only an example of self-denial, not because ὑπὲρ must be rendered 'instead of' (in loco), but because the ref. to sin involves with ὑπὲρ the notion of expiation" (Ed.); cf. the excellent note of Mr.; see the exposition of the relation of Christ's death to man's sin in 2 Cor. v. 18 ff., Rom. iii. 23 ff., v. 6-11, Gal. iii. 10 ff., with notes in this Comm. ad locc.; also ver. 56 below, and note. The definition on the third day indicates that "in His case restoration to life ensued, instead of the corruption of the corpse that sets in otherwise after this interval" (Hf.). Jesus appears to have seen a Scriptural necessity in the "third day" (Luke xxiv. 46).

Ver. 5. καὶ ὅτι ὤφθη Κηφᾷ, εἶτα τοῖς δώδεκα: so much of the evidence P.

εἶτα [1] [v] τοῖς [v] δώδεκα [2]· 6. ἔπειτα [t] ὤφθη [w] ἐπάνω πεντακοσίοις ἀδελφοῖς [x] ἐφάπαξ, ἐξ ὧν [y] οἱ [y] πλείους [3] [z] μένουσιν [a] ἕως [a] ἄρτι, τινὲς δὲ καὶ [4] [b] ἐκοιμήθησαν· 7. ἔπειτα [5] [t] ὤφθη Ἰακώβῳ, εἶτα [6] τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πᾶσιν· 8. [c] ἔσχατον δὲ [c] πάντων, [d] ὡσπερεὶ τῷ v Acts vi. 2; above twenty times in GG.; cf. Rev. xxi. 14.

w Mk. xiv. 5. See Wr., p. 313.
x Rom. vi. 10; Heb. vii. 27, ix. 12, x. 10. See note below.
y See ix. 19.
z In this sense, Phil. i. 25; John xxi. 22 f.
a See iv. 13.
b See vii. 39.
c Adv., Mk. xii. 22 (with παντων); Num. xxxi. 2. For adj., see ver. 26.
d Bibl. h.l. See note below.

[1] επειτα (?), ℵA, 17, 37, 46. So Tisch., Tr., and W.H. marg. ειτα, BD^cKLP. μετα ταυτα: D*G.

[2] ενδεκα, DG, latt. vg., and Latt. Ff.,—a characteristic Western emendation.

[3] πλειονες, pre-Syrian uncc.

[4] Om. και pre-Syrian uncc. and verss.

[5] ειτα, D, Cyr.

[6] επειτα (?), ℵ*AGK, 17, 46. So Tisch., Lachm., Tr., W.H. marg. ειτα, ℵ^cBDLP, etc. Cf. note 2.

states as having been formally delivered to the Cor. along with the facts attested; for these two clauses are under the regimen of παρέδωκα (ver. 3). The manifold testimony was detailed with more or less fulness at diff. times; but P. seems always to have related imprimis the witness of Kephas and the Twelve, beside the revelation to himself (8). The Lord's manifestation to Peter (on the form Kephas, see i. 12) preceded that given to the body of the Apostles (Luke xxiv. 34). Peter's evidence, as the witness of Pentecost and ἀπόστολος τ. περιτομῆς, was of palmary importance, ἀξιόχρεων εἰς μαρτυρίαν (Thd.), esp. in view of the consensus to be asserted in ver. 11 (cf. i. 12).—ὤφθη with dat., appeared (pass. aor., in reflexive sense: see Bm., pp. 52, 187), is used of exceptional, supernatural appearances (see parls.). "The twelve," the college of the App., without exact regard to number: actually ten, wanting Judas Iscariot, and Thomas absent on the first meeting. Luke speaks on this occasion of "the eleven (the Western reading here) and those with them," xxiv. 33; Paul cites the official witnesses.

Ver. 6 carries forward ὤφθη into a new sentence, independent of παρέδωκα . . . ὅτι: the four remaining manifestations P. recites without indicating whether or not they formed a part of his original communication.—ἔπειτα (cf. 23, 46, xii. 28) ὤφθη κ.τ.λ.: "After t at (deinde) He appeared to above (ἐπάνω, cf. Mark xiv. 5) five hundred brethren once for all" (semel, Bz.). Nowhere else has ἐφάπαξ the meaning simul, at once (so Vg., and most interpreters, in violation of usage). This was the culminating manifestation of the risen Jesus, made at the general gathering to which His brethren were invited by Him in a body, as it is related in Matt. xxviii. 7, 10, Mark xvi. 7; the appearance to "the eleven" described in Matt. xxviii. 16 ff. is recorded as the sequel to this summons, and implies the presence of a larger assembly (see esp. the words οἱ δὲ ἐδίστασαν in ver. 17), such as P. alludes to; the great charge of Matt. xxviii. 18 ff., closing the First Gospel, corresponds by its importance to this ἐφάπαξ.—P. writes a quarter of a century after the event; the followers of Jesus were mostly young in age for "the majority" (οἱ πλείονες) to have been still alive. On ἕως ἄρτι, see iv. 13.

Ver. 7. "After that, He appeared to James"—sc. James, the brother of the Lord, as elsewhere in P. (Gal. i. 19, ii. 9, 12), included in the ἀδελφοὶ τ. Κυρίου of ix. 5 above (see note); associated with P. in Acts xv. 13, xxi. 18 (see notes). The manifestation to James—only mentioned here—the chief of our Lord's formerly unbelieving brothers (John vii. 5), explains the presence of "His brothers" amongst the 120 disciples at Jerus. (Acts i. 14) and James' subsequent leadership in the mother Church. His high position at the time of writing accounts for his citation in this place. Paul made acquaintance with James as well as Peter on his first visit to the Jerus. Church (Gal. i. 18 f.). The well-known story about the meeting of Jesus with James told by Jerome (De viris illustr., 2) implies an earlier date for this than Paul's narrative admits of, since ἔπειτα signifies succession in time; succession of rank cannot be intended.—"After that, to all the

[e] ἐκτρώματι, [t] ὤφθη κἀμοί· 9. ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι ὁ [f] ἐλάχιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων, ὃς οὐκ εἰμὶ [g] ἱκανὸς καλεῖσθαι ἀπόστολος, διότι [h] ἐδίωξα τὴν [i] ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ [i] Θεοῦ· 10. [k] χάριτι δὲ [k] Θεοῦ εἰμι ὅ εἰμι, καὶ ἡ [l] χάρις αὐτοῦ ἡ[1] [l] εἰς ἐμὲ οὐ [m] κενὴ[2] [m] ἐγενήθη, ἀλλὰ [n] περισσότερον πάντων [o] ἐκοπίασα· οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλ' ἡ [k] χάρις τοῦ [k] Θεοῦ ἡ[3] σὺν

e N.T. h.l.; Job iii. 16; Eccl. vi. 3.
f Of persons, Mt. v. 19, xxv. 40, 45. Cf. Eph. iii. 8; see also iv. 3, vi. 2, above.
g 2 Cor. iii. 5; 2 Tim. ii. 2 and Mt. iii. 11 (with inf.); Ex. iv. 10.
h Gal. i. 13, 23, iv. 29; Phil. iii. 6; Acts ix. 4 f., xxii. 4, 7 f., xxvi. 11, 14 f.; Rev. xii. 13; Mt. v. 10 ff., etc.
i See i. 2.
k See i. 4.
l 1 Pet. i. 10; cf. 2 Cor. ix. 8; Rom. v. 15.
m 1 Th. ii. 1, iii. 5 (εις κενον). For κενος, see ver. 14.
n Adv., Mk. vii. 36; Heb. vi. 17, vii. 15. For comp. adj., see xii. 23.
o Rom. xvi. 6, 12; Ph. ii. 16; Acts xx. 35; Mt. vi. 28; Psa. cxxvi. 1. For κοπος, see iii. 8.

[1] Om. η DG, latt. verss. and Ff.—gratia ejus in me.

[2] πτωχη ουκ εγενηθη: DG (γεγονεν), some latt., Amb., Ambrst. (pauper, egena).

[3] Om. η ℵ*BD*G, latt. vg. So crit. edd., exc. W.H. marg. Cf. note 1.

apostles": in this formal enumeration, ἀπόστολοις bears its strictest sense, and could hardly include James (see Acts i. 13 f.; he is not certainly so styled in Gal. i. 19). Paul was, presumably, aware of the absence of Thomas on the occasion of ver. 5, and his consequent scepticism (John xx. 24 ff.); he therefore says distinctly that all participated in this latter sight, which coincides in point of time with Acts i. 6-12, not John xx. 26. The witness of the First App. to the resurrection was complete and unqualified.

Ver. 8. ἔσχατον δὲ πάντων, ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι: "But last of all, as it were to the abortion (a creature so unfit and so repulsive), He appeared also to me".—ἔσχατον (adv.) πάντων marks the conclusion of a long series; cf. iv. 9, also Mark xii. 22.—ὡσπερεί, a frequent cl. conjunction, "nonnihil mitigat—ut si [or quasi]: docet non debere hoc nimium premi. . . . Articulus vim habet (τῷ ἐκτρώματι). Quod inter liberos est abortus, inquit, id ego sum in apostolis. . . . Ut abortus non est dignus humano nomine, sic apostolus negat se dignum apostoli appellatione" (Bg.; similarly Est., Mr., Al., Ed., Sm.); ἔκτρωμα need not be pressed beyond this figurative and descriptive meaning. However, Cv., Gr., Bt., Gd., and many find in the phrase an indication of the suddenness and violence of Paul's birth into Christ; Hn. and El. see pictured in it, more appropriately, the unripe birth of one who was changed at a stroke from the persecutor into the Apostle, instead of maturing normally for his work,—"P. describes himself thus in contrast with those who, when Jesus appeared to them, were already brothers or apostles, already born as God's children into the life of faith in Christ" (Hf.). Sm. aptly suggests that τὸ ἔκτρωμα was one of the insulting epithets flung at Paul by the Judaists; in their eyes he was a wirklich Missgeburt. He adopts the title—"the abortion, as they call me"—and gives it a deeper meaning. His low stature may have suggested the taunt: cf. 2 Cor. x. 10, and Acta Pauli et Theclae, 3. An abortion is a living, genuine offspring.

Ver. 9. ὁ ἐλάχιστος corresponds to ἔσχατον πάντων (8); "the least" properly comes "last": cf. Eph. iii. 8, which enhances this expression; also 1 Tim. i. 15.—ὃς οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς καλεῖσθαι κ.τ.λ., "who am not fit to bear the name of apostle".—ἱκανὸς (lit. reaching up to, hinreichend), as distinguished from ἄξιον (worthy: xvi. 4), denotes adequacy, competence for office or work (cf. 2 Cor. iii. 5); the words are interchangeable "where the capacity to act consists in a certain moral condition of mind and heart" (Ed.: cf. Matt. iii. 11, and John i. 27).—διότι (propterea quod, Bz.) ἐδίωξα κ.τ.λ., "because I persecuted the Church of God"—a remorse which never left the Ap. (cf. Gal. i. 13, 1 Tim. i. 13 ff., Acts xxvi. 9 ff.); the prominence of this fact in Luke's narrative is a sign of Paul's hand. The Church of Jerus., whatever opposition to himself might proceed from it, was always to Paul "the church of God" (Gal. i. 13, 22): on this phrase, see note to i. 2. For καλέομαι, in this sense, cf. Rom. ix. 25 f., Heb. ii. 11. This ver. explains how P. is "the abortion" among the App.; in respect of his dwarfishness, and the unripeness of his birth into Apostleship.

Ver. 10. "God's grace," which makes Paul what he is (see ix. 1 f.: the double εἰμὶ is firmly assertive—"I am what I verily am"), is the favour, utterly undeserved, that summoned Saul of Tarsus ἐμοί. 11. [p] εἴτε οὖν[1] ἐγὼ [p] εἴτε ἐκεῖνοι, οὕτω [q] κηρύσσομεν καὶ οὕτως [r] ἐπιστεύσατε.

12. Εἰ δὲ [su] Χριστὸς [s] κηρύσσεται ὅτι [t] ἐκ [t] νεκρῶν [tu] ἐγήγερται, [v] πῶς λέγουσί τινες[2] ἐν ὑμῖν[2] ὅτι [w] ἀνάστασις [w] νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν;

p See iii. 22. q See i. 23. r See iii. 5 (ver. 2 above). s See i. 23. t Mt. xvii. 9, xiv. 2, etc. (απο τ. νεκρ.); Mk. vi. 14; Lk. ix. 7; Jo. ii. 22, xii. 1, 9, 17, xxi. 14; Acts iii. 15, iv. 10, xiii. 30; 1 Pet. i. 21; Heb. xi. 19; 8 exx. in Rom.; 7 in P. elsewhere. u See ver. 4. v Rom. vi. 2; Gal. ii. 14, iv. 9. w Rom. i. 4; in Acts five times; Heb. vi. 2; 1 Pet. i. 3; Mt. xxii. 31; Lk. xx. 35.

[1] Om. η ℵ*BD*G, latt. vg. So crit. edd., exc. W.H. marg. Cf. note 1 (p. 921).
[2] εν υμιν τινες: ℵABP, 17.

from the foremost rank of the persecutors to the foremost rank amongst the servants of the Lord Jesus: cf. 1 Tim. i. 14, Eph. iii. 8, ii. 7, Gal. i. 13 ff. The grace of Apostleship implies the antecedent grace of forgiveness and adoption.—καὶ ἡ χάρις αὐτοῦ ἡ εἰς ἐμὲ κ.τ.λ., "and His grace that was extended (or went out) unto me, has not proved vain": cf. the emphatic ἐμοὶ of Eph. iii. 8; the repeated art. marks me as the signal object of this grace; for χάρις εἰς, cf. 1 Peter i. 10.—κενή (cf. 14) means not void of result (that is ματαία, 17), but void of reality: Paul's Apostleship was no titular office, no mere benevolence towards an unworthy man; the favour brought with it a labour quite as extraordinary—"nay, but (ἀλλ') more abundantly than they all did I labour".—κοπιάω connotes exertion, painful or exhausting toil; see note on κόπος, iii. 8. So that, if last and least at the outset, and conspicuously unfit for Apostleship, in execution P. took the premier place: see 2 Cor. x. 13-18, xi. 23, xii. 11 ff., Rom. xv. 15-21.—αὐτῶν πάντων, presumably, more than all the rest together: by his single labours P. had extended the kingdom of Christ over a region wider than all the Twelve had traversed up to this date.—From the depth of Paul's self-abasement a new pride is ready to spring, which is corrected instantly by the words, οὐκ ἐγὼ δέ, ἀλλ' ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ σὺν ἐμοί: "not I, however, but the grace of God (working) with me"—this really wrought the work; I was its instrument. See iii. 7 ff., xii. 6, Phil. ii. 12 f., Eph. iii. 20, Col. i. 29; and for the turn of expression, Gal. ii. 20.

Ver. 11 breaks off the comparison between himself and the other App., into which Paul was being drawn, to sum up the statement of fact and evidence concerning Christ's resurrection: "Whether then it were I (8 f.) or they (Kephas, the Twelve, the first disciples, James: 5 ff.), so we proclaim (3 f.), and so you believed (2)". For εἴτε, εἴτε, giving alternatives indifferent from the point of view assumed, cf. iii. 22, x. 31, etc.—οὕτως is emphatic: in the essential matters of vv. 1-4 and the crucial point of the resurrection of Jesus, there is not the least variation in the authoritative testimony; Peter, James, Paul—Jerusalem, Antioch, Corinth—are in perfect accord, preaching, believing, with one mind and one mouth, that the crucified Jesus rose from the dead.—On κηρύσσω, see note to i. 23.—This closes the case on the ground of testimony.

§ 51. If Christ is not Risen? xv. 12-19. Paul has intrenched his own position; he advances to demolish that of his opponents. His negative demonstration, taking the form of a destructive hypothetical syllogism, has two branches: he deduces (a), in vv. 13-15, from the (supposed) non-existence of the fact of resurrection, the falsity of the faith (κενὴ ἡ πίστις) accorded to it, and of the witnesses attesting it; (b), in vv. 17-19, from the non-existence of the fact, the unreality of the effects derived from it (ματαία ἡ πίστις). Are the sceptics at Cor. prepared to affirm that the App. are liars? and that the new life and hopes of their fellow-Christians are an illusion? In arguing these two points, P. presses on the impugners twice over (13, 16), that their general denial logically and in principle excludes Christ's resurrection.

Ver. 12. δὲ contrasts with the affirmation of all Christians (11) the contradictory dogma of τινὲς ἐν ὑμῖν. For their sake P. made the rehearsal of vv. 1 ff. "But if Christ is preached, (to wit) that He is raised from the dead"—not "it is preached that Christ, etc.": the preaching of Christ is the preaching of His resurrection; ἐγηγερμένος and ἐσταυρωμένος (see i. 23 f., ii. 2) are, both of them, predicates inseparable from Χριστός (cf. Rom. iv. 24 f., viii. 34, x. 9, 2 Cor. v. 15;

13. εἰ[1] δὲ [w]ἀνάστασις [w]νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν,[1] οὐδὲ [u]Χριστὸς [u]ἐγήγερται· 14. εἰ δὲ [u]Χριστὸς οὐκ [u]ἐγήγερται, [x]κενὸν ἄρα[2] τὸ [y]κήρυγμα ἡμῶν, [x]κενὴ δὲ[3] καὶ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν[4]· 15. [z]εὑρισκόμεθα δὲ καὶ [a]ψευδομάρτυρες τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι [b]ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν [bc]κατὰ τοῦ [c]Θεοῦ ὅτι [d]ἤγειρε τὸν Χριστόν, ὃν οὐκ [d]ἤγειρεν εἴπερ[5] ἄρα [d]νεκροὶ οὐκ [d]ἐγεί-x See ver 10; also ver. 58; Eph. v. 6; Col. ii. 8; Jas. ii. 20; Acts iv. 25.

y See i. 21.
z See iv. 2.
a Mt. xxvi. 60. Cf. Acts vi. 13, μαρτ. ψευδεις; -ρειν, Mk. x. 19; -ρια, Mt. xv. 19.
b N.T. h.l. Cf. καταμαρτ., Mt. xxvi. 62; also Mk. xiv. 56 f. For vb., 2 Cor. viii. 3; Rom. iii. 21, x. 2; Gal. iv. 15; Col. iv. 13; 1 Tim. v. 10, vi. 13; in Acts and Heb. freq. in Mt. and Lk. once each; Rev., 4 exx.; Gosp. and Epp. of Jo. passim.
c Cf. Acts iv. 26, vi. 13; Mt. xii. 32.
d See vi. 14. Cf. Mt. x. 8, xi. 5; Mk. xii. 26; Lk. vii. 22, x. 37; Jo. v. 21; Acts xxvi. 8.

[1] ℵ*E, with several minn., om. ει . . . εστιν, the copyist's eye skipping from ver. 12*b* to ver. 13*a*. Several such omissions occur, in important ancient copies, in the duplicated clauses of this context.

[2] αρα και (?): ℵ*AD^gr.GKP, some 25 minn. So Tisch., Lachm., and Nestle (bracket); Tr. and W.H. marg. See ver. 18.

[3] Om. δε pre-Syrian uncc. and verss.

[4] ημων (?): BD*, 17, 67, sah. basm., Cyr.-Hier., Epiph., Ruf.—witnesses few, but varied, and forming a strong group. So W.H. txt. and R.V. marg.
υμων, as in all other witnesses, R.V. retains in txt., W.H. relegate to marg. Ver. 11 speaks for πιστις υμων.

[5] ειπερ . . . εγειρονται omd. by D, 43, sah. basm. syr^sch.; some latt. codd.
ει . . . εγειρονται omd. by P, 123, and two chief codd. of vg. See note 1 above.

Acts xvii. 18, 1 Peter iii. 18, 21, etc.). For the pf. ἐγήγερται, see ver. 4.—If this is so, "how (is it that) amongst you some say?"—a crying contradiction, that Christ is preached as risen and is so believed by the readers, and yet some of them say, Ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν, "There is no (such thing as a) resurrection of dead (men)!" (cf. the modern dogma, "Miracles never happen"),—a sweeping denial of anything of the kind. The doctrine of the Sadducees (Acts xxiii. 8); cf., for the Greeks, out of countless parls., Æschylus, Eumen., 639, ἅπαξ θανόντος οὔτις ἔστ' ἀνάστασις. —The deniers are "some" (not many), quidam, quos nominare nolo (Mr.: cf. 2 Cor. x. 2, etc., Gal. i. 7): "were they the 'few wise men' of i. 26?" (Ed.). Their maxim belonged to the current "wisdom of this age" (i. 20, iii. 19 f.). —πῶς, of surprised expostulation, as in Gal. ii. 14; for the emphasis on ἐν ὑμῖν, cf. John xiv. 9, πῶς σὺ λέγεις;

Ver. 13 opposes (δὲ) the thesis of the τινὲς by a syllogism in the modus tollens —"sublato genere, tollitur et species" (Gr.): if bodily resurrection is per se impossible, then there is no risen Christ (so Bg., Mr., Al., Bt., Ed., El., etc.); the abstract universal negative of the deniers ver. 16 will restate in the concrete. Hn. and Gd. (somewhat similarly Cm., Cv.) hold, on the other hand, that P. is making out the essential connexion between Christ's rising and that of the Christian dead—in which case he should have written ἡ ἀνάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν; he speaks of "the dead in Christ" first in ver. 18. Hn. and Gd. justly observe that the τινὲς might have allowed Christ's resurrection as an exception; but the point of Paul's argument is that this is logically impossible, that the absolute philosophical denial of bodily resurrection precludes the raising up of Jesus Christ; on the other hand, if He is risen, the axiom Ἀνάστασις οὐκ ἔστιν is disproved, the spell of death is broken, and Christ's rising carries with it that of those who are "in Christ" (18, 20-23, 1 Thess. iv. 14; cf. John xi. 25, Heb. ii. 15).

Vv. 14, 15. The implicit affirmative conclusion just intimated P. will develop afterwards. He has first to push the opposing axiom to further consequences. (1) if the fact is untrue, the testimony is untrue—"But if Christ is not raised, vain therefore is our proclamation, vain also your faith".—κενός (see note on οὐ κενή, 10; and cf. κενόω, i. 17, etc.) signifies void, unsubstantial (inanis, Vg.)—a hollow witness, a hollow belief, while μάταιος (17; see parls.) is "vain" as ineffectual, frustrate. For κήρυγμα, see note on i. 21; on its distinction from λόγος (2), see ii. 4: ἡμῶν includes P. and his colleagues (11). For ἄρα, see v. 10.—If "the message is empty," declaring a thing that is not, "the faith is also ρονται[1]· 16. εἰ[1] γὰρ [d] νεκροὶ οὐκ [d] ἐγείρονται,[1] οὐδὲ [u] Χριστὸς [u] ἐγήγερται· 17. εἰ δὲ [u] Χριστὸς οὐκ [u] ἐγήγερται, [e] ματαία ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν,[2] ἔτι[3] ἐστὲ [f] ἐν ταῖς [f] ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν· 18. ἄρα καὶ οἱ [g h] κοιμηθέντες [h] ἐν

e See iii. 20.
f Jo. viii. 21, 24, ix. 34.
g See vii. 39.
h 1 Th. iv. 16. Cf. i. 2.

[1] ειπερ . . . εγειρονται omd. by D, 43, sah. basm. syr[sch.]; some latt. cod. ει . . . εγειρονται omd. by P, 123, and two chief codd. of vg. See note 3 above.

[2] Ins. εστιν (?): BD*. Lachm. and W.H. bracket. If original, easily dropped in view of ver. 14.

[3] και ετι: ℵ*A, 31, sah. basm. syr[sch.]; vg., adhuc enim. οτι ετι, 37, 43, Tert. τι ετι, d e (quid adhuc).

empty," building on the thing that is not; preaching and faith have no genuine content; the Gospel is evacuated of all reality.—For the character of P. and his fellow-witnesses this conclusion has a serious aspect: "We are found moreover (to be) false witnesses of God"—men who have given lying testimony, and that about God, "the worst sort of impostors" (Gd.)! τοῦ Θεοῦ is objective gen., as the next clause shows; it is always "God" to whom P. imputes the raising of Christ, who by this act gave His verdict concerning Jesus (Rom. i. 4, Gal. i. 1, Eph. i. 20; Acts ii. 36, xiii. 30-39, xvii. 31).—δὲ καὶ calls emphatic attention to another and contrasted side of the matter in hand.—εὑρισκόμεθα approaches the sense of ἐλεγχόμεθα or ἁλισκόμεθα (see parls.)—"discovered" in a false and guilty position.—Nothing can be stronger evidence than this passage to the objective reality, in Paul's experience, of the risen form of Jesus. The suspicion of hallucination, on his own part or that of the other witnesses, was foreign to his mind; the matter stood on the plain footing of testimony, given by a large number of intelligent, sober, and responsible witnesses to a sensible, concrete, circumstantial fact: "Either He rose from the grave, or we lied in affirming it"—the dilemma admits of no escape.—ὅτι ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν κ.τ.λ.: "in that we testified against God that He raised up the Christ—whom He did not raise, if indeed then (as 'some' affirm) dead (men) are not raised up". κατὰ τ. Θεοῦ, adversus Deum (Vg., Est., Mr., Hn., Gd., Ed., Sm.), as always in such connexion in N.T. (see iv. 6 and parls.), not de Deo (Er., Bz., Al., El., A.V.); the falsehood (ex hyp.) would have wronged God, as, e.g., the ascription of miracles to God traduces Him in the eyes of Deists.—ἤγειρε τὸν Χριστόν, "the Messiah," whom "according to the Scriptures" (3 f.; cf. Luke xxiv. 46, Acts xvii. 3, xxvi. 22 f., etc.) God was bound to raise from the dead.—εἴπερ ἄρα, si videlicet (Bz.), supposing to be sure; see viii. 5; and v. 10, for ἄρα.

Ver. 16 restates the position of the τινές (13; see note), in order to press it to another, even more intolerable conclusion: (1) vv. 14, 15 proved the witness untrue, if the fact is unreal; (2) vv. 17, 18 conclude the effects unreal, if the fact is unreal.

Vv. 17, 18 unfold this latter consequence in a form parl. to the former: εἰ δὲ . . . ἄρα (14). For ματαία (syn. with ἀργή, James ii. 20; with ἀνωφελεῖς, Tit. iii. 9), see note on κενόν (14); a faith is "frustrate," "null and void," which does not save from sin; now "Christ died for our sins" (3), but His resurrection makes His death valid, publishing it to men as accepted by God and availing for redemption (Rom. iv. 25, viii. 33 f., x. 9; Luke xxiv. 46 f.; Acts xiii. 32-38—observe the γνωστὸν οὖν ἔστω); it is hereby that "God gives the victory" over both sin and death (57). In Christ's resurrection is the seal of our justification, and the spring of our sanctification (Rom. vi. 4-11); both are wanting, if He is still in the grave. The absence of both is implied in being "yet in your sins"—unforgiven, unrenewed. Now this is contrary to experience (i. 30, vi. 11); the Cor. readers know themselves to be saved men, as Paul and the App. know themselves to be honest men (15). P. leaves the inference, which observes the strict method of the modus tollens, to the consciousness of his readers (cf. 20): "We are true witnesses, you are redeemed believers; on both accounts it is certain that Christ has risen,—and therefore that there is a resurrection of the dead".—A further miserable consequence of the negative dogma emerges from the last: ἄρα καὶ οἱ κοιμηθέντες . . . ἀπώλοντο. "Then also those that were laid to sleep in Christ perished!"—perished (ptp. and vb. both aor.) when we laid them to rest, and with the

[h] Χριστῷ [i] ἀπώλοντο· 19. εἰ ἐν τῇ [k] ζωῇ ταύτῃ [lm] ἠλπικότες [1] ἐσμὲν [1] [l] ἐν Χριστῷ [1] μόνον, [n] ἐλεεινότεροι πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἐσμέν. 20. Νυνὶ δὲ [o] Χριστὸς [o] ἐγήγερται [o] ἐκ νεκρῶν, [p] ἀπαρχὴ τῶν

i See viii. 11.
k Phil. i. 20; Jas. iv. 14; 1 Pet. iii. 10 (Psa. xxxiii. 12)
l Eph. i. 12; 4 Kings xviii. 5; cf. ελπιζ. εις, 2 Cor. i. 10.
m Pf., 2 Cor. i. 10; 1 Tim. iv. 10, v. 5, vi. 17; Jo. v. 45.
n Rev. iii. 17; for compar. with παντων, see xiii. 13.
o See vv. 4 and 12.
p xvi. 15; Rom. viii. 23, xi. 16, xvi. 5; 2 Th. ii. 13 (?); Jas. i. 18; Rev. xiv. 4; Exod. xxiii. 19, etc.

[1] εν Χριστῳ ηλπικοτες εσμεν (in this order): all pre-Syrian uncc.

"perishing" which befalls those "yet in their sins" (cf. i. 18, viii. 11, Rom. ii. 12, vi. 23, etc.; also John viii. 21, 24). They were "put to sleep in Christ" (cf. 1 Thess. iv. 14), as the sense of His presence and the promises of His gospel turned their death into sleep (John xi. 11, etc.). The ματαιότης of being lulled to sleep when falling into utter ruin! They thought "the sting of death" drawn (56), and lay down to rest untroubled: cruelly deceived! For the unclassical position of ἄρα, see Wr., p. 699.

Ver. 19 expresses the infinite bitterness of such a deception. In the right order of words (see txtl. note), μόνον is attached to ἠλπικότες (cf. Luke xxiv. 21): "If in this life we have only had hope in Christ"—no present deliverance from sin, no future inheritance in heaven—"we are more than all men to be pitied". For a hope without legitimate basis or ultimate fruition, Christians have sacrificed all material good! (cf. 30 ff., iv. 11 ff.; Heb. x. 32-46, Luke xviii. 22, etc.). ἠλπικότες ἐσμὲν = ἠλπίκαμεν (1 Tim. iv. 10), with stress laid on the actual condition of those who have formed this futile hope. ἐν Χριστῷ points to Christ as the ground of Christian hope (cf. Phil. ii. 19). ἐν τῇ ζωῇ ταύτῃ brings to mind all that the Christian forfeits here and now—losing "this life" for the vain promise of another, letting earth go in grasping at a fancied heaven; no wonder the world pities us!—Ed. ad loc. answers well the censure passed on the Ap., as though he made the worth of goodness depend on its future reward: (1) P. does not say "we are more worthless"—a good man may be very "pitiable," and all the more because of his worth; (2) on Paul's hypothesis (17), moral character is undermined, while future happiness is destroyed, by denial of the Resurrection.

§ 52. The Firstfruit of the Resurrection and the Harvest, xv. 20-28. Paul has proved the actuality of Christ's personal resurrection by the abundant and truthful testimony to the fact (5-15), and by the experimental reality of its effects (17). In ver. 20*a* he therefore affirms it unconditionally, having overthrown the contrary assertion that "there is no resurrection of the dead." But Christ never stands alone; He forms "a body" with "many members" (xii. 12); He is "firstborn among many brothers" (Rom. viii. 29, Col. i. 18, John xv. 5, etc.). His rising shows that bodily resurrection is possible; nay, it is inevitable for those who are in Him (18, 20*b*, 23). In truth, the universal redemption of Christ's people from the grave is indispensable for the realisation of human destiny and for the assured triumph of God's kingdom (24-28). The Ap. thus advances from the experimental (§ 51) to the theological proof of his theorem, much as in Rom. v. 1-11, 12-21.

Ver. 20. Νυνὶ δέ (cf. xii. 18) marks the logical point P. has reached by the reductio ad impossibile of the negative proposition attacked in ver. 12. Christ has been raised; therefore there is a resurrection of the dead (12-18): "now" the ground is cleared and the foundation laid for the declaration that the Christian dead shall rise in Him—"Christ has been raised from the dead, a firstfruit of them that have fallen asleep"; He has risen in this character and purpose, "not to remain alone in His estate of glory" (Gd.).—ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων (pf. of abiding state: cf. John xi. 11 f., Matt. xxvii. 52) = ἀρχή, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν and πρωτότοκος τῶν νεκρῶν (Col. i. 18, Rev. i. 5).—Cm. and Bg. are surely right in seeing here an allusion to the first harvest-sheaf (ἀπαρχὴν του θερισμοῦ ὑμῶν, Lev. xxiii. 10: cf. in this connexion Matt. xiii. 39 ff. with John v. 28 f. and Rev. xiv. 14 ff.) of the Passover, which was presented in the Sanctuary on the 16th Nisan, probably the day of the resurrection of Jesus; this allusion is in the Easter strain of v. 6 ff. (see notes). The first ripe sheaf is an earnest and sample of the harvest, consecrated to God and laid up with Him (cf. Rom. vi. 10 f.) in anticipation of the rest. The Resurrection has begun.

Vv. 21, 22 explain the identification of

[q] κεκοιμημένων ἐγένετο.[1] 21. [r] ἐπειδὴ γὰρ δι' ἀνθρώπου ὁ[2] θάνατος, καὶ δι' ἀνθρώπου [s] ἀνάστασις [s] νεκρῶν· 22. [t] ὥσπερ γὰρ [u] ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ πάντες ἀποθνήσκουσιν, [t] οὕτω [t] καὶ [u] ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ πάντες [v] ζωοποιηθήσονται· 23. ἕκαστος δὲ ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ [w] τάγματι· [p] ἀπαρχὴ

q See vii. 39.
r See i. 21.
s See ver. 12.
t xi. 12, xvi. 1; 5 exx. in Rom.; Gal. iv. 29; Jas. ii. 26; Jo. v. 21, 26.
u vii. 14; 2 Cor. v. 19; Gal. ii. 17; Eph. i. 4, iii. 11; Acts iv. 2.
v Rom. iv. 17, viii. 11; Jo. v. 21; 4 Ki. v. 7.
w N.T. h.l.; 1 Ki. iv. 10; 2 Ki. xxiii. 13. See -ξις, xiv 40.

[1] Om. εγενετο all pre-Syrian witnesses. [2] Om. ο ℵABD*K, 17, 67.

the risen Christ with those sleeping in death, which was assumed by the word ἀπαρχή. It rests on the fact that Christ is the antitype of Adam, the medium of life to the race as Adam was of death. This parl. is resumed in vv. 46 ff., where it is applied to the nature of the resurrection body, as here to the universality of the resurrection. These two passages form the complement of Rom. v. 12-21; the antithesis of Adam and Christ—who represent flesh, trespass, death and spirit, righteousness, life respectively—is thus extended over the entire career of the race viewed as a history of sin and redemption.—"For since through man (there is) death, through man also (there is) a resurrection of the dead": δι' ἀνθρώπου, "through a man (qua man)"—through human means or mediation. For ἐπειδή, quandoquidem (Cv.), see i. 21 f.; the first fact necessitated and shaped the second: man was the channel conveying death to his kind (Rom. v. 12), through the same channel the counter current must flow (Rom. v. 15, etc.).—This goes deeper than ἀπαρχή; Christ is the ἀρχή, the principle and root of resurrection-life (Col. i. 18).—"Through man" implies that Death is not, as philosophy supposed, a law of finite being or a necessity of fate; it is an event of history, a calamity brought by man upon himself and capable of removal by the like means.—ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ κ.τ.λ.: "For just as in the Adam all die, so also in the Christ all will be made alive". The foregoing double δι' ἀνθρώπου opens out into "the (representative) Adam and Christ"—the natural and spiritual, earthly and heavenly counterparts (45 ff.), the two types and founders of humanity, paralleled by ὥσπερ . . . καὶ οὕτως (cf. Rom. v. 12 ff.).—The stress of the comparison does not lie on πάντες, as though the Ap. meant to say that "all (men)" will rise in Christ as certainly as they die in Adam (so, with variations, Or., Cm., Cv., Mr., Gd., Sm., El., referring to John v. 28 f., Acts xxiv. 15): as Bt. says, the absence of ἄνθρωποι tells against such ref. to the race (contrast Rom. v. 12, 18), also the use of ζωοποιέω (see below). The point is that as death in all cases is grounded in Adam, so life in all cases is grounded in Christ (cf. John vi. 53, xi. 25)—no death without the one, no life without the other (Aug., Bg., Hf., Ed., Hn., Bt.). πάντες = οἱ πολλοί (Rom. v. 18 f.), as set in contrast with ὁ εἷς ἄνθρωπος.—Ζωοποιέω is narrower in extension than ἐγείρω (20), since the latter applies to every one raised from the grave (15 f., 35); wider in intension, as it imports not the mere raising of the body, but restoration to "life" in the full sense of the term (Hf.; cf. 45, Rom. vi. 8, viii. 11; John v. 21, vi. 63),—an ἀνάστασιν ζωῆς (John v. 29). A firm and broad basis is now shown to exist for the solidarity between Christ and the holy dead (οἱ κεκοιμημένοι) affirmed in ver. 20.

Ver. 23. But ἀπαρχή implies difference in agreement, distinction in order along with unity in nature and determining principle. Hence the added qualification, ἕκαστος δὲ ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ τάγματι, κ.τ.λ.: "But each in his proper rank—Christ (as) firstfruit; thereafter, at His coming, the (people) of Christ". τάγμα signifies a military division (cf. xiv. 40). There are two τάγματα (cf. Matt. xiii. 8) of the resurrection host; the Captain (ὁ ἀρχηγός, Heb. ii. 10; cf. ἀπαρχή above), in His solitary glory; and the rest of the army now sleeping, to rise at His trumpet's sound (52, 1 Thess. iv. 16).—It is incongruous to make a third τάγμα out of τὸ τέλος (ver. 24) as Bg. and Mr. would do, paraphrasing this as "the last act (of the resurrection),"—viz., the resurrection of non-Christians. Their introduction is irrelevant: P. has proved the resurrection of Christ, and is now making out that the resurrection of His sleeping ones is bound up with His own. Christ and Christians are the participants in the resurrection of life. ἔπειτα, opp. of πρῶτον (cf. 46) implied

Χριστός, ἔπειτα [x] οἱ [x] Χριστοῦ [1] [y] ἐν τῇ [y] παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ [2]· 24. [z] εἶτα τὸ [a] τέλος, ὅταν [b] παραδῷ [3] τὴν [c] βασιλείαν τῷ [d] Θεῷ καὶ [d] πατρί, ὅταν [e] καταργήσῃ πᾶσαν [f] ἀρχὴν καὶ πᾶσαν [f] ἐξουσίαν καὶ x For gen. constr., see i. 12.

y 1 Th. ii. 19, iii. 13, v. 23; 1 Jo. ii. 28. The noun freq. with this ref. Cf. xvi. 17.
z Single, in temp. sense, Jas. i. 15; Mk. iv. 17, viii. 25; Lk. viii. 12; Jo. xiii. 5, xix. 27, xx. 27.
a 1 Pet. iv. 7; Mt. xxiv. 6, 14. See i. 8.
b Cf. Mt. xi. 27; Lk. iv. 6.
c See iv. 20. Abs., Acts xx. 25; Lk. xii. 32, xix. 15; Rev. i. 6, v. 10.
d 2 Cor. i. 3, xi. 31; Rom. xv. 6; Gal. i. 4; Eph. i. 3, iii. 14; Col. i. 3; 1 Pet. i. 3; Rev. i. 6.
e See i. 28.
f All three, Eph. i. 21. αρχ. and εξουσ., Eph. iii. 10, vi. 12; Col. i. 16, ii. 10, 15; Tit. iii. 1. αρχ. and δυν., Rom. viii. 38. εξουσ. and δυν., 1 Pet. iii. 22; Rev. xvii. 13.

[1] του Χριστου: all Gr. MSS. The early printed texts omd. του by error.

[2] Ins. ελπισαντες (οι εν τῃ παρουσιᾳ αυτου ελπισαντες): G, with several latt. codd. Hil., Ambrst.,—also qui in adventu ejus crediderunt; instances of Western license.

[3] παραδιδῳ (?), ℵADP, 67. Or παραδιδοι (?), BG.; so Lachm. txt. and Tr. txt., Nestle, R.V. See Wr., p. 360; Bm., p. 46.

in ἀπαρχῄ, is defined by ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ. Some attach the latter phrase to οἱ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, referring it to the first advent; but Christ's παρουσία in the N.T. always signifies His future coming. There is nothing to exclude O.T. saints (see x. 4; Heb. xi. 26, 40, John i. 11), nor even the righteous heathen (Acts x. 35, Matt. xxv. 32, 34, John x. 16), from the τάγμα of "those who are Christ's".

Ver. 24. εἶτα τὸ τέλος: "Then (is) the end"—sc., "at His coming". Christ's advent, attended with the resurrection of His redeemed to eternal life, concludes the world's history; then "the harvest" which is "the end of the world" (Matt. xiii. 39 f., 49; cf. Rev. xiv. 15 f.), "the end of all things" (1 Pet. iv. 7), the dénoûment of the drama of sin and redemption in which "the Adam" and "the Christ" have played out their respective parts, the limit of the human horizon.—As ἔπειτα was defined by ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ, so εἶτα by the two ὅταν clauses: "when He yields up the kingdom to His God and Father, when He has abolished every rule and every authority and power". The two vbs. denote distinct, but connected and complementary acts. παραδιδῷ (the reading παραδιδοῖ is sbj., not opt.: Bm., p. 46) is pr. sbj., signifying a proceeding, contingent in its date and manner of occurrence, but concurrent with εἶτα, which again rests upon ἐν τ. παρουσίᾳ. The aor. sbj. καταργήσῃ (Lat. futurum exactum) signalises an event lying behind the παραδιδῷ and by its nature antecedent thereto, —"when He shall have done away, etc."; every opposing force has been destroyed, then Christ lays at the Father's feet His kingdom. "Cum tradat (not tradiderit: so Vg., reading παραδῷ) regnum, etc., cum evacuerit omnem principatum, etc."—The title τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί, "to Him who is God and Father," contains the reason for this παράδοσις: Christ's one aim was to glorify the Father (Luke ii. 49, John iv. 34, vi. 38, xvii. 4, etc.); this end was reached proximately at the cross (John xix. 30), and will be so ultimately when our Lord, having "subdued all things to Himself" (Phil. iii. 21), is able to present to the Father a realm dominated by His will and filled with His obedient sons (cf. Matt. vi. 9 f.). This is no ceasing of Christ's rule, but the inauguration of God's eternal kingdom: παραδιδῷ does not connote the losing of anything (see John xvii. 10); it is just the rendering to another of what is designed for Him (cf. 3, v. 5, Rom. viii. 32, Luke iv. 6, x. 22, etc.). "The end" does not mean the termination of Christ's sovereignty, which in its largest sense began before the world (John i. 1-3, xvii. 5) and is its goal (Col. i. 16); but the termination of the reign of sin and death (Rom. v. 21; cf. John vi. 37 ff.). At the συντέλεια "the throne of God and of the Lamb," "the kingdom of Christ and of God," fills the N.T. horizon (Eph. v. 5, Rev. xi. 15, xxii. 3).—ἀρχὴν, ἐξουσίαν κ.τ.λ., should not be limited (with Ff. generally, Est., Ed., Gd., El., Sm.; Everling, Paulin. Angelol. u.s.w., p. 44, in view of Eph. i. 21, vi. 12, Col. ii. 15, etc.) to angelic powers, or demons; nor (as by Cv., Gr.: cf. ii. 6) to earthly rulers: πᾶσαν . . . πᾶσαν . . . (see πάντας τοὺς ἐχθρούς, 25; πάντα ὑπέταξεν, 27; also Rom. viii. 37-39) embraces all forces oppugnant to God (Bg., Cr., Hn., Hf., Bt.), on earth or above it, whether they exercise princely sway (ἀρχὴν) or moral authority (ἐξουσίαν) or active power (δύναμιν). Death is a βασιλεὺς amongst these (Rom. v.

[f] δύναμιν· 25. [g] δεῖ γὰρ αὐτὸν [h] βασιλεύειν [i] ἄχρις [i] οὗ ἂν[1] [k] θῇ πάντας τοὺς [k] ἐχθροὺς[2] ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ· 26.[3] ἔσχατος ἐχθρὸς [e] καταργεῖται ὁ θάνατος. 27. "[l] πάντα" γὰρ "ὑπέταξεν ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ·"[3] ὅταν δὲ εἴπῃ ὅτι[4] "[l] πάντα ὑποτέτακται" ([m] δῆλον g See viii. 2.

h See iv. 8.
i See xi. 26.
k Ps. cix. 1; Acts ii. 35; Heb. i. 13, x. 13; Mt. xxii. 44.
l Ps. viii. 6. In like connexion, Eph. i. 22; Phil. iii. 21; Heb. ii. 8; 1 Pet. iii. 22; see xiv. 32.
m Gal. iii. 11.

[1] Om. αν all pre-Syrian codd. Cf. xi. 26.

[2] Insert αυτου AG, 17, sah. cop. syr[sch].

[3] ℵ*, 17, om. εσχατος . . . ποδας αυτου (26, 27*a*), by skipping from the ποδας αυτου of ver. 25. See notes on vv. 13-16.

[4] Om. οτι (?) B d e, vg., and several Ff. Lachm. brackets; W.H. om. in marg.

14); and behind death Satan (Heb. ii. 14 f.), "the prince" and "god of this world" (2 Cor. iv. 4, John xiv. 30). On καταργέω, see note to i. 28.

Ver. 25 sustains the representation of the τέλος just given by prophetic words of Scripture (cf. 3 f.): "For He must needs reign, until He has put all the enemies underneath His feet". Not till every enemy of God is vanquished can Christ's existing kingdom reach its end. P. is thinking of the culmination, not the cessation, of Christ's kingship (see note on παραδιδῷ, 24).—πάντας is added to the text of the Psalmist, as if to say: "Every one of the foes proscribed in the Messiah's charter must submit, before He can present to His Father a perfect kingdom"; see parls., for other applications of this cardinal O.T. dictum.—On δεῖ, see note to viii. 2.—ἄχρις οὗ—radically "up to," rather than "until, (the time at) which"—in later Gr. takes sbj. of future contingency dispensing with ἂν (Wr., p. 371)—.The words of Ps. cx. are freely adapted: θῇ gets its subject from αὐτόν, viz. Christ—not God, as imported by Est., Bz., Bg., Hf., Gd., to suit the Ps.; it is parl. in tense-construction to καταργήσῃ (24, see note).

Ver. 26. ἔσχατος ἐχθρὸς καταργεῖται ὁ θάνατος: "(As) last enemy death is abolished"—in other words, "is abolished last among these enemies".—ἔσχατος is the emphatic part of the predicate; and καταργ. (see i. 28) is in pr. tense, of what is true now in God's determination, in the fixed succession of things (cf. iii. 13). Death personified, as in ver. 55, Isa. xxv. 8, Rev. xx. 14. If all enemies must be subdued, and death is last to fall, then "the end" (24) cannot be until Christ has delivered His own from its power and thus broken Death's sceptre.—This ver. should close with a full stop. Καταργεῖται ὁ θάνατος is the Christian counter-position to the 'Ανάστασις οὐκ ἔστιν of Cor. philosophy; the τινὲς of ver. 12 say, "There is no resurrection"; P. replies, "There is to be no death". The dogma of unbelief has been confuted in fact by Christ's bodily resurrection (13 ff.); in experience, by the saving effect thereof in Christians (17); and now finally in principle, by its contrariety to the purpose and scope of redemption (21-26), which finds its goal in the death of Death. Hofmann makes τὸ τέλος in ver. 24 adverbial to ver. 26 ("at last," cf. 1 Peter iii. 8), with the ὅταν clauses as its definitions and the γὰρ clause parenthetical: "then finally, when etc., when etc. (for etc.), as last enemy death is abolished". His construction is too artificial to be sustained; but he sees rightly that this ver. is the climax of the Apostle's argument.

Vv. 27, 28 are a supplement to vv. 20-26. They reaffirm, in new words of Scripture, the unlimited dominion assigned to Christ (25-27*a*), in order to reassert more impressively the truth that only through His absolute victory can the kingdom of God be consummated (24*a*, 28*b*). The opening γὰρ adduces, by way of comment, a prophecy parl. to that cited in ver. 25 and specifically applied in ver. 26. Psalm viii. promised to man complete rule over his domain (cf. Heb. ii. 5 ff.); as man Christ here stands forth the countertype of Adam (21 f.) who forfeited our estate, winning for Himself and His own the deliverance from death (Heb. ii. 9, 14 f.) which seals His conquest and sets "all things under His feet". But (δὲ . . . δέ) this subjection of all things to Christ is no infringement of God's sovereignty nor alienation of His rights; on the contrary, it is the means to their perfect realisation. Such is the purport of the two ὅταν sentences, the second of which repeats in another way, after the interposed δῆλον ὅτι clause, what the first has announced, τότε αὐτὸς

[m] ὅτι [n] ἐκτὸς τοῦ [1] ὑποτάξαντος αὐτῷ τὰ [1] πάντα), 28. ὅταν [1] δὲ [1] ὑποταγῇ αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα,[1] τότε καὶ [2] αὐτὸς ὁ υἱὸς [1] ὑποταγήσεται τῷ [1] ὑποτάξαντι αὐτῷ τὰ [1] πάντα, ἵνα [o] ᾖ ὁ Θεὸς τὰ [3] [o p] πάντα [o] ἐν [p] πᾶσιν.

n In this sense, Acts xxvi. 22; Isa. xxvi. 13. Cf. vi. 18, and xiv. 5.

o Col. iii. 11; Herod., iii., 157, παντα ην εν τοις Βαβυλωνιοισι Ζωπυρος (Al.).

p See xii. 6.

[1] οταν . . . παντα omd. by ℵ*, and a few others, skipping from τ. παντα of ver.

[2] Om. και BDG, 17, 67, latt. vg. Lachm. and W.H. bracket; Tr. omits.

[3] Om. τα ABD*, 17. So Lachm., Tr., W.H., Nestle. Tisch. retains.

ὁ υἱὸς furnishing their common apodosis (cf. 54); so Hf., R.V. marg., after the Vg. and Lat. interpreters. The two vv. then read as follows: "For 'all things did He put in subjection under His feet'. But when He hath said, 'All things are brought to subjection' (manifestly, with the exception of Him that put all things in subjection to Him)—yea, when all things have become subject to Him, then shall (also) the Son Himself become subject to Him that made subject to Him all things, to the end that God may be all in all".—God is the tacit subject of ὑπέταξεν, as supplied by the familiar Ps. and brought out by the ptps. in vv. 27*b*, 28*b*; but Christ is subject to εἴπῃ—not God speaking in Scr., or at the end of the world (so Mr., Ed., El., etc.), nor ἡ γραφή (D.W., and others), nor propheta (Bg.). "All things are subdued!" is the joyful announcement by the Son that the grand promise recorded in the 8th Psalm is fulfilled; "the ὑπέταξεν of God affirms the purpose, the ὑποτέτακται of Christ attests its accomplishment" (Hf., Hn.). Thus ὅταν εἴπῃ is simultaneous with ὅταν καταργήσῃ (24) and ὅταν θῇ ὑπὸ τ. πόδας (25): Christ proclaims the victory at last achieved; He reports that, with the abolition of death, His commission is ended and the travail of His soul satisfied. For anticipatory sayings of His, giving an earnest of this crowning word, see Matt. xi. 27, xxviii. 18, John iii. 35.—ὅταν ὑποταγῇ κ.τ.λ. (28) reassumes objectively, as matter of fact, what was given subjectively in ὅταν εἴπῃ κ.τ.λ. as the verdict of Christ upon His own finished work. Those who read δῆλον ὅτι κ.τ.λ. as a principal sentence, the apodosis to the first ὅταν clause (A.V., Mr., El., etc.), borrow from the protasis πάντα ὑποτέτακται—more strictly ὑποτετάξεται or (by zeugma) ἔσται, after the virtually fut. εἴπῃ (cf. 28*b*, 54*b*); this, however, makes a halting sentence: "But when He [God] says, 'All things have been made subject,' it is evident [that this will be, or that all things will be subjected] with the exception of Him, etc."—an affirmation of quite subsidiary importance, on which the writer has no need to dwell. The non-inclusion of God in the category of "things subjected" is rather a self-evident assumption made by the way, and serving to prepare for and throw into relief the real apodosis, "then shall the Son Himself also become subject, etc.," to which both the ὅταν clauses press forward. The advl. use of δῆλον ὅτι (perhaps better written δηλονότι = δηλαδή), signifying manifestly or to wit (sine dubio, Vg.), is familiar in Attic Gr.; no other certain instance occurs in the N.T. The remark that He who gave dominion is not Himself under it, reserves behind the Messianic reign the absolute supremacy of God, to which Christ will conform at the plenitude of His kingship.—τὰ πάντα (equivalent to "the universe") gathers into a totality the πάντα otherwise separate and diverse: cf. Col. i. 17, τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνέστηκεν.—ὑποταγήσεται (mid. in force, like the 2nd aor. pass. in Rom. x. 3, in consistency with the initiative ascribed to Christ throughout) has often been explained away, to avoid Arian or Sabellian inferences from the text; it affirms no other subjection of the Son than is involved in Sonship (see note on 24). This implies no inferiority of nature, no extrusion from power, but the free submission of love (αὐτὸς ὁ υἱός, "the Son of His own accord will subject Himself"—not in addition to, but in distinction from the πάντα), which is the essence of the filial spirit that actuated Christ from first to last (cf. John viii. 29, xii. 27, etc.). Whatsoever glory He gains is devoted to the glory and power of the Father (John xvii. 2, etc.), who glorifies Him in turn (John xvii. 5; Phil. ii. 9 ff.). ὑποταγήσεται speaks the closing word of Christ's mission, as Ἰδοὺ ἥκω τοῦ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου was its opening word (Heb. x. 7).—It is hard to say whether ἵνα ᾖ ὁ Θεὸς κ.τ.λ. is dependent

29. [q] Ἐπεὶ [r] τί [r] ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι [1] ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν,[1] εἰ [s] ὅλως [t] νεκροὶ οὐκ [t] ἐγείρονται [1]; [u] τί [u] καὶ βαπτίζονται ὑπὲρ τῶν [2] νεκρῶν [2]; 30. [u] τί [u] καὶ ἡμεῖς [v] κινδυνεύομεν [w] πᾶσαν [w] ὥραν;

q See v. 10. r Acts xxi. 13; Mk. xi. 5; Jo. xi. 47; in LXX, Jer. iv. 30, v. 31; Hos. ix. 5. s See v. 1. t See ver. 15. u Here and Rom. viii. 24 (?) only. v Acts xix. 27, 40; Lk. viii. 23 (abs. as here); Isa. xxviii. 13; Jonah i. 4; -νος, 2 Cor. xi. 26. w N.T. h.l.; Ex. xviii. 22, 26; Lev. xvi. 2. Cf. Rom. viii. 36.

[1] Lachm., Tisch., Al., W.H., El., Nestle, and others, place the interrog. sign after νεκρων, attaching ει ολως κ.τ.λ. to the following sentence. Tr. puts it as far back as βαπτιζομενοι. See note below.

[2] αυτων, all uncc. but DcL.

on ὁ υἱὸς ὑποταγήσεται (so most commentt.) or on τ. ὑποτάξαντι (so Hf., and some others). This solemn conclusion most fitly attaches to the princ. vb.; it expresses the loyal purpose of the Son in His self-subjection, whose submission exhibits the unity of the Godhead (cf. John x. 30-36, xvii. 23), and constitutes itself the focus and uniting bond of a universe in which God's will is everywhere regnant and His being everywhere immanent.—πᾶσιν neuter, like πάντα.

§ 53. THE EFFECT OF UNBELIEF IN THE RESURRECTION, xv. 29-34. To clinch the argument for the truth and the necessity of the Christian resurrection and to bring it home to the readers, the Ap. points out how futile Christian devotion must be, such as is witnessed in "those baptised for the dead" and in his own daily hazards, if death ends all (29-31); present enjoyment would then appear the highest good (32). The effect of unbelief in the future life is already painfully apparent in the relaxed moral tone of a certain part of the Cor. Church (33 f.).

Vv. 29, 30. There are certain conditions of interpretation bearing on the sense of the much discussed expression οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν which bar out a large number of attempted explanations: (a) οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι, unless otherwise defined, can only mean the recipients of Christian baptism, in its well-understood sense as the rite of initiation into the Christian state administered upon confession of faith (i. 13 ff., xii. 13, Rom. vi. 3 f., Gal. iii. 27, etc.). (b) ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν (not ὑπὲρ νεκρῶν, "on behalf of dead persons" as such: cf. 12, etc.) points to a specific class of "the dead" interested in the baptism of the living—presumably to "the (Christian) dead" of the last §, and probably to those amongst them who were connected with "the baptised" in question. (c) In following up ver. 29 with the words of ver 30 (τί καὶ ἡμεῖς κινδυνεύομεν;) P. associates himself with the action of "those baptised for the dead," indicating that they and he are engaged on the same behalf (for καὶ ἡμεῖς associating "we" with persons aforementioned, cf. 2 Cor. iv. 13, Gal. ii. 16, iv. 3, Eph. ii. 3, etc.). This last consideration excludes the interpretation, at present widely adopted (Ambrst., Anselm, Grot., Mr., Holsten, Al., Hn., Bt., El., Sm.), that P. alludes to a practice then (it is conjectured) in vogue at Cor., which existed much later amongst the heretical Cerinthians and Marcionites (see Cm. ad loc. in Cramer's Catena; Tert., De Resurr. Carnis, 48, adv. Marc., v., 10; Epiph., Hær., xxviii., 6), viz., that of the vicarious baptism of living Christians as proxies for relatives or friends dying unbaptised. With such a proceeding P. could not have identified himself, even supposing that it existed at this time in the Church (of which there is no evidence), and that he had used it by way of argumentum ad hominem. An appeal to such a superstitious opus operatum would have laid the Ap. open to a damaging retort. Gd. justly asks, ' A quoi eût servi ce procédé de mauvaise logique et de bonne foi douteuse?" This objection tells less forcibly against the view, lately suggested, that P. alludes to some practice of substitutionary baptism observed in the Pagan mysteries, finding thus a witness to the Resurrection in the heathen conscience, καὶ ἡμεῖς adding thereto the Christian practical testimony; but condition (a) forbids this solution. As El. admits, condition (b) also bears strongly against the prevalent exposition. (b) moreover negatives the idea of Cm. and the Gr. Ff., maintained by Est. and Ev. (see the ingenious Addit. Note of the latter), that ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν means, as Thp. puts it, ὑπὲρ ἀναστάσεως, ἐπὶ προσδοκίᾳ ἀναστάσεως: if P. meant this, why did he not say it? The fol-

31. [x] καθ᾽ [x] ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω, [y] νὴ τὴν [z] ὑμετέραν [1] [a] καύχησιν [2] ἣν [a] ἔχω [a] ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν· 32. εἰ [b] κατὰ [b] ἄνθρωπον x 2 Cor. xi. 28; thrice in Heb.; 13 exx. in Lk. and Acts; Mt. xxvi. 55. y N.T. h.l.; Gen. xlii. 15 f. z = obj. gen., Rom. xi. 31; so ἡμετ., Rom. xv. 4. See note below. a Rom. xv. 17. For the noun, Rom. iii. 27; 6 exx. in 2 Cor.; 1 Th. ii. 19; Jas. iv. 16. -ημα, see v. 6; -αομαι, see i. 29. b See iii. 3, and note below.

[1] ημετεραν: A, and many minn., Or., Thdrt. So Stephens and Beza, but not Elzevir.

[2] Ins. αδελφοι ℵABKP, and 15 minn., sah. cop. vg. syrr. Om[d]. by the Western and Syrian codd.

lowing ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν indicates that by ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν definite (dead) persons are meant. Ed. notices with approval the rendering of John Edwards (Camb., 1692), who supposed these "baptized" to be men converted to Christianity by the heroism of the martyrs; somewhat similarly, Gd. This points in the right direction, but misses the force of ὑπέρ (on behalf of; not διά, on account of), and narrows the ref. of τῶν νεκρῶν (cf. 18, 20, 23); there is no indication in the ep. of martyrdoms at Cor. (see, on the contrary, iv. 9 f.). P. is referring rather to a much commoner, indeed a normal experience, that the death of Christians leads to the conversion of survivors, who in the first instance "for the sake of the dead" (their beloved dead), and in the hope of reunion, turn to Christ—e.g., when a dying mother wins her son by the appeal, "Meet me in heaven!" Such appeals, and their frequent salutary effect, give strong and touching evidence of faith in the resurrection; some recent example of the kind may have suggested this ref. Paul designates such converts "baptised for the dead," since Baptism seals the new believer and commits him to the Christian life (see note, xii. 13) with all its losses and hazards (cf. 30). The hope of future blessedness, allying itself with family affections and friendship, was one of the most powerful factors in the early spread of Christianity. Mr. objects to this view (expounded by Köster) that τ. νεκρῶν needs definition by συγγενῶν καὶ φίλων, or the like, to bear such meaning; but to each of these βαπτιζόμενοι those who had thus influenced him would be "the dead". The obscure passage has, upon this explanation, a large, abiding import suitable to the solemn and elevated context in which it stands; the words reveal a communion in Christ between the living and departed (cf. Rom. xiv. 9), to which the hope of the resurrection gives validity and worth (cf. 1 Thess. v. 10, 2 Thess. ii. 1).—For ἐπεί, since otherwise, else (alioquin, Vg.; Germ. da sonst), see note on v. 10.—τί ποιήσουσιν; (see LXX parls.) indicates that the hope on which these baptisms rest will be stultified, without a resurrection; it will betray them (Rom. v. 5).—εἰ ὅλως νεκροὶ κ.τ.λ., "If absolutely (omnino, Vg.: see note, v. 10) dead men are not raised" (the axiom of the unbelievers, 12, 15, etc.), unfolds the assumption involved in ἐπεί as the protasis of τί καὶ βαπτίζονται ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν; which repeats, with emphasis on the pronoun, the former question—"Why indeed are they baptised for them?" how can they be interested in the baptism of survivors, if they have perished (18)? On this assumption, converts would have been gained upon false hopes (cf. 19), as well as upon false testimony (15).—"Why also do we run hazard every hour?"—further consequent of εἰ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται: "our case (that of the App. and other missionaries, braving death unceasingly: see 11; iv. 9 ff., 2 Cor. iv. 10 ff., xi. 23 ff.; John xv. 18-xvi. 22) is parl. to theirs; as they, in love for the dead whom they hope to meet again, take up the cross of Christian profession, so we in the same hope face hourly peril".

Vv. 31, 32*a*. In no slight jeopardy do P. and his comrades stand; for his part he declares, "Daily I am dying; my life at Ephesus has been that of a combatant with wild beasts in the arena—for what end, if there is no resurrection?" With καθ᾽ ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω cf. 2 Cor. iv. 10, xi. 23, Rom. viii. 36; referring to his present "affliction in Asia," P. writes in 2 Cor. i. 8 f., "We have had the sentence of death in ourselves". Ed. softens the expression into "self-denial, dying to self and the world": better Cv., "obsideor assiduis mortibus quotidie"; and Gd., "Not a day, nor an hour of the day, when they might not expect to be seized and led out to execution".—P. had not been in this extreme peril at c H.l.; see note below. d Jas. ii. 14, 16; Job xv. 3; cf. xiv. 6, xiii. 3. e Isa. xxii. 13. f Adv., Jas. iv. 13; Acts xxiii. 20, xxv. 22; Lk. xii. 28, xiii. 32 f.; Mt. vi. 30; Exod. viii. 29.

[c] ἐθηριομάχησα ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, [d] τί μοι τὸ [d] ὄφελος; εἰ [b] νεκροὶ οὐκ [b] ἐγείρονται, [e] Φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν, [f] αὔριον γὰρ ἀποθνήσκομεν.

Cor. (see Acts xviii. 9 f.), and his readers might think the description overdrawn; so he exclaims, νὴ τ. ὑμετέραν καύχησιν κ.τ.λ.: "Yea, by the glorying over you, brothers, which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord!" cf. the protests of 2 Cor. i. 18, 23, xi. 10 f., 31, Rom. ix. 1. He protests by this καύχησις as by that which is dearest to him: cf. i. 4 ff., iv. 14, 2 Cor. vii. 3, 14 ff.; similarly in 1 Thess. ii. 19 f., 2 Thess. i. 4, Phil. iv. 1, etc. For this rare use of the pron., cf. xi. 24, τ. ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν (and note), 2 Cor. ix. 3. νή (= ναί) with acc. of adjuration, a cl. idiom.—Paul's "glorying" he "holds in Christ Jesus our Lord" (cf. i. 7); it is laid up with Christ as a καύχημα εἰς ἡμέραν Χ. (Phil. ii. 16; cf. iii. 8, iv. 3 ff. above, 1 Thess. ii. 19, Col. i. 4, etc.).—"If in the manner of men I have fought with wild beasts in Ephesus, what is the profit?" κατὰ ἄνθρωπον bears the stress, "humanitus—spe vitæ præsentis duntaxat" (Bg.: cf. iii. 3 f.); seeking the rewards—applause, money, etc.—for which men risk their lives. Instead of these, P. earns poverty and infamy (iv. 9 ff., Phil. iii. 7 f.); if there is no "day of Christ" when his "glorying" will be realised, he has been befooled (cf. 19 and note, Phil. iii. 14, 2 Tim iv. 8; Matt. xix. 27 ff., Luke xiv. 14, xxii. 28 ff.).—ὄφελος (from ὀφέλλω, to increase; nearly syn. with μισθός, iii. 8, etc.; or κέρδος, Phil. i. 21) signifies the consequent advantage accruing to P. from his fight; that it brings present moral benefit is obvious, but this is not the point (cf. ix. 24-27; see Ed. ad loc., touching the diff. of pagan and Christian morality). — ἐθηριομάχησα is probably figurative, though Gd., Weizsäcker (Apost. Zeitalter[2], pp. 325 f.), McGiffert (Christianity in the Apost. Age, pp. 280 f.), with some older expositors, take it that P. had been actually a θηριομάχος in the Ephesian amphitheatre, despite his Roman citizenship. But no such experience is recorded in the list of his woes in 2 Cor. xi.; moreover it appears from Acts xix. 31-40 that P. had friends in high quarters at Eph., who would have prevented this outrage if attempted. Ignatius (ad Rom., v.; cf. ad Smyrn., iv.) applies the figure to his guards, borrowing it probably from this place. The metaphor is in the strain of iv. 9 (see note); cf. also Ps. xxii. 12, 16, etc., and the use of θηρίον in the Rev.—In view of this last parl. and of 2 Tim. iv. 17, Krenkel in his Beiträge, V., finds the "wild beast" of Paul's struggle in the Imperial Power, which K. thinks was already so designated "in the secret language of Christians" (cf. 2 Thess. ii. 5 f.). But nothing in Acts xix. indicates conflict on P.'s part with the magistrates of Eph. (and Lk. habitually traces with care his relations with Roman authorities); it was the city-mob, instigated by the shrine-makers, which attacked him; before the riot he had been probably in danger of assassination from this quarter, as well as from "the Asian Jews," who set upon him afterwards in Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 27 ff.). Bt. observes the climax: κινδυνεύω, ἀποθνήσκω, θηριομαχῶ.

Ver. 32*b* states in words of Scripture the desperation that ensues upon loss of faith in a future life: "If (the) dead are not raised (the Sadducean dogma repeated a sixth time), 'Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die!'" εἰ νεκροὶ κ.τ.λ. is rightly attached by the early Gr. and most modern commentt. to the following clause. Paul is not drawing his own conclusion in these words, nor suggesting that the resurrection supplies the only motive against a sensual life; but he points out (cf. 33 f.) the patent fruit of the unbelief in question. This is just what men were saying on all sides; the words quoted voice the moral recklessness bred by loss of hope beyond death. Gr. and Rom. literature teem with examples of this spirit (see Wisd. ii. 6; Herod., ii., 78, Thuc., ii., 53, and other reff. furnished by Ed. ad loc.); indeed Paul's O.T. citation might have served for the axiom of popular Epicureanism. Hn. describes ancient drinking-cups, recently discovered, ornamented with skeleton figures wreathed in roses and named after famous philosophers, poets, and gourmands, with mottoes attached such as these: τὸ τέλος ἡδονή, τέρπε ζῶν σεαυτόν, σκηνὴ βίος, τοῦτ' ἄνθρωπος (written over a skeleton holding a skull), ζῶν μετάλαβε τὸ γὰρ αὔριον ἄδηλόν ἐστιν. Cf. our own miserable adage, "A short life and a merry one!"

Vv. 33, 34 deliver Paul's judgment

33. [g] μὴ [g] πλανᾶσθε· "[h] φθείρουσιν [i] ἤθη [k] χρήσθ' [1] [l] ὁμιλίαι κακαί [m]". 34. [m] ἐκνήψατε [n] δικαίως καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε, [o] ἀγνωσίαν γὰρ [o] Θεοῦ τινες ἔχουσι· πρὸς [p] ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λέγω.[2]

35. [q] Ἀλλ' [q] ἐρεῖ [q] τις, "Πῶς [r] ἐγείρονται οἱ [r] νεκροί; [s] ποίῳ δὲ

g See vi. 9. h See iii. 17. i N.T. h.l.; Sir. xx. 26. k Elsewhere in N.T. of persons (cf. Jer. xxiv. 2); Rom. ii. 4; Eph. iv. 32, etc. -ευομαι, xiii. 4; -οτης, 2 Cor. vi. 6, and eight times besides in P. l N.T. h.l.; Ex. xxi. 10; Prov. vii. 21; Wisd. viii. 18. m N.T. h.l.; Gen. ix. 24; 1 Ki. xxv. 37; Joel i. 5, ανανηφω. n 1 Th. ii. 10; Tit. ii. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 23; Lk. xxiii. 41; Deut. xvi. 20. o Wisd. xiii. 1. αγνωσ., 1 Pet. ii. 15; Job xxxv. 16. p See vi. 5. q Jas. ii. 16. r See ver. 15. s Rom. iii. 27; Jas. iv. 14; 1 Pet. i. 11, ii. 20; Rev. iii. 3; oftener in GG. and Acts.

[1] χρηστα, all uncc., many minn., and nearly all Ff. Printed χρησθ' for sake of metre. Read, doubtless, with elision of the α.

[2] λαλω, ℵBDP. λεγω, AGL, etc. A freq. variation; cf. vi. 5.

upon the situation: the disbelief in the Resurrection declared in the Cor. Church is of a piece with its low ethics (iii. 1 ff., iv. 18-v. 2) and its heathen intimacies (viii. 10, x. 14-22, 2 Cor. v. 14-vii. 1); it springs from ἀγνωσία Θεοῦ, from a feeble religious consciousness.—μὴ πλανᾶσθε (see parls.), "Be not misled (seduced)": the seduction lay in the specious philosophy under which sceptical tenets were advanced, concealing their demoralising tendency. The line the Ap. quotes (an ordinary senarius of the dialogue in the Attic drama: χρηστά, so written in the best copies, was probably read χρήσθ', Wr., Hn.) is attributed to Menander (322 B.C.), of the New Comedy and an Epicurean, by Tert. and Hier., followed by most others. But this was a proverbial gnomé, and probably current long before Menander. ὁμιλίαι bears the narrower sense of conversations (A.V.; colloquia, Vg.), or the wider sense, more fitting here, of intercourse, companionships (R.V.).—ἐκνήψατε δικαίως κ.τ.λ. (cf. 32*b*, xi. 21; and parls. for ἐκνήφω): "Rouse up to soberness in righteous fashion, and cease to sin" (the first impv. is aor., of a single action; the second pr., of a course of action)—a startling call, to men fallen as if into a drunken sleep under the seductions of sensualism and heathen society and the fumes of intellectual pride. δικαίως signifies the manner of the awaking; it is right the Cor. should rouse themselves from self-delusion; P. assails their conscience.—ἀγνωσίαν γὰρ Θεοῦ τινες (cf. 12) ἔχουσιν, "For some have (maintain) an ignorance of God" (cf. the use of ἔχω in 31, viii. 1, Rom. iv. 2, v. 1, respecting states of mind); this asserts, beyond τὸν Θεὸν ἀγνοοῦσιν, a characteristic, a persistent condition, in which the Cor. τινὲς share with the heathen (xii. 2, Rom. i. 19 ff., etc.).—πρὸς ἐντροπὴν ὑμῖν λαλῶ, "I say (it) for a shame to you," otherwise than in iv. 14. "Ignorance of God" is a deeper evil than the ingratitude toward the Ap. which he censured earlier; this can only be remedied by a thorough inward reaction—"ad pudorem vobis incutiendum dico" (Cv.). That these wise Cor. should be taxed with "ignorance," and "of God" on the knowledge of whom they flattered themselves above all (viii. 1, 4), was humiliating indeed.

§ 54. THE MANNER OF THE RESURRECTION, xv. 35-42*a*. We enter on the second part of the Apostle's argument touching the Resurrection: see the analysis, Introd. to Div. V. He has established the truth of the doctrine and the certainty of the event, and proceeds consequently to set forth the manner of its occurrence and the nature of the new body to be assumed. P. has still in view the unbelieving "some," and pursues the dialectical and apologetic vein of the foregoing context. The deniers found in the inconceivability of the process (35) a further and, in their eyes, decisive objection against the reality of the fact. In vindicating his doctrine upon this side, P. therefore confirms its truth; he traces its analogies in nature, and its harmony with the order of Divine revelation; and the first half of his grand argument culminates in the second. See Edwards' subtle analysis of vv. 35-44.

Ver. 35. Ἀλλὰ ἐρεῖ τις: this form of interlocution belongs to Jewish dialectic (see parls.); cf. ver. 12, also ἐρεῖς μοι, Rom. ix. 19, and the familiar Pauline challenge, τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν;—"How are the dead raised up? With what sort of (ποίῳ δὲ) body moreover do they come?"—two distinct questions. δὲ might indeed introduce the same question in an altered form (Mr., Bt., El., Sm.), but the vbs. and the interr. prons. are both different. The first (cf. Luke i. 34, John iii. 9, vi. 52, Heb. ii. 3, 1 John iii. 17) σώματι ἔρχονται;" 36. [t]ἄφρον,[1] σὺ ὃ σπείρεις οὐ [u]ζωοποιεῖται ἐὰν μὴ [v]ἀποθάνῃ· 37. καὶ ὃ σπείρεις, οὐ τὸ σῶμα τὸ γενησόμενον σπείρεις, ἀλλὰ [w]γυμνὸν [x]κόκκον, [y]εἰ [y]τύχοι [z]σίτου ἤ τινος [a]τῶν [a]λοιπῶν· 38. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς αὐτῷ[2] δίδωσι[2] σῶμα [b]καθὼς [b]ἠθέλησε, t Thus in Lk. xi. 40, xii. 20; Ps. xciii. 8; five times in 2 Cor. xi., xii. (ref. to P. himself); Rom. ii. 20; Eph. v. 17; 1 Pet. ii. 15. u See ver. 22. v Cf. Jo. xii. 24. w H.l. in this usage. For common use, see 2 Cor. v. 3, etc. x Jo. xii. 24. κοκ., Mt. xiii. 31, xvii. 20. y See xiv. 10. z In like connexion, Mt. xiii. 25, 29 f.; Mk. iv. 28. a See vii. 12, xi. 34. b See xii. 18.

[2] αφρων, all uncc. but KL.

[3] διδωσιν αυτῳ: ℵABP, 17—chief pre-Syrian and non-Western witnesses.

intimates the impossibility of the thing, and is answered in ver. 36; the latter, the inconceivability of the manner, answered in vv. 37 ff. (so Cm., Cv., D.W., Hf., Ed.). The sceptics advance their second question to justify the first: they say, "The resurrection P. preaches is absurd; how can any one imagine a new body rising out of the perished corpse—a body suitable to the deathless spirit?" The vbs. are logical pr., as concerned with general truths (cf. 26); "actio rei declaratur absque significatione temporis" (Er.).—ἔρχονται (cf. John v. 29; 1 Thess. iv. 14, ὁ Θεὸς ἄξει) graphically represents the difficulty of the objectors: "In what bodily form do we picture the dead coming on the scene?"

Ver. 36. ἄφρων (opposite of φρόνιμοι, iv. 10, x. 15) taxes the propounder of these questions not with moral obliquity, but with mental stupidity (see parls.). Wanting the art. (cf. Luke xii. 20), the word is an assertion rather than an exclamation: "Insensé que tu es, toi qui te crois si sage!" (Gd.). Some attach σὺ as subject to ἄφρων, but this weakens the adj., and the pron. is required to give due emphasis to ὃ σπείρεις following. With a little sense, the questioner might answer himself; every time he sows his garden-plot, he assumes the principle denied in regard to man's material form, viz., that death is the transition to a further life—"that which thou thyself sowest, is not made alive except it die". This answers πῶς ἐγείρονται; by ref. to the analogy of nature. P. does not explain, any more than Jesus, the modus operandi of the Resurrection; what he shows is that the mystery raises no prejudice against the reality, for the same mystery is wrapped up in every vegetating seed.—ἐγείρονται in the question is substituted by ζωοποιεῖται in the answer (see note on 22; cf. other parls.), since it is life that rises out of the dying seed, and the Resurrection is an evolution, not a reinstatement. Our Lord uses the same figure with the like implication, but another application, in John xii. 23 f.

Vv. 37, 38 make answer to the second branch of the question of ver. 35, by the aid of the same profound analogy.—καὶ ὃ σπείρεις, οὐ τὸ σῶμα τὸ γενησόμενον σπείρεις, "And what thou sowest—not the body that will come to be dost thou sow". It is the object of the sower to realise a new ποιότης in his seed. If any one interrupted him with the question, "What sort of a body can the grain take that you drop in the earth to rot?" the sower would dismiss him as a fool; he has seen in this case "the body that is to be". Now the actuality of the lower resurrection vindicates the conceivability of the higher.—τὸ γενησόμενον states not merely a future certainty (that shall be; quod futurum sit, Vg.), but a normal process (oriturum, Bz.: quod nascetur, Cv., Bg.).—ἀλλὰ γυμνὸν κόκκον, "but a naked grain"—unclothed with any body, wanting the appearance and furnishing of life (cf. 2 Cor. v. 3, ἐνδυσάμενοι, οὐ γυμνοί).—For εἰ τύχοι ("if it should chance, of wheat"), see note on xiv. 10: the kind of grain is indiff.—"or of any of the rest (of the seeds)". The grain of wheat gives to the eye no more promise of the body to spring from it than a grain of sand.—ὁ δὲ Θεὸς stands in opposition to σὺ ὃ σπείρεις—God the life-giver responding to the sower's trustful act. "But God gives it a body, according as He willed" (ἠθέλησεν)—not "as He wills" (according to His choice or liking), but in accordance with His past decree in creation, by which the propagation of life on the earth was determined from the beginning (Gen. i. 11 f.; for the vb., cf. note on xii. 18). To allege an impossibility in the case is to impugn the power and resources of the Creator (cf. Acts xxvi. 8), manifested in this very way every spring-time. The Divine will is the efficient nexus between seed and plant (cf. xii. 6).—"And (He gives) to each of the seeds a body of its own καὶ ἑκάστῳ τῶν σπερμάτων τὸ[1] [e]ἴδιον σῶμα. 39. οὐ πᾶσα σὰρξ [c]ἡ αὐτὴ σάρξ· ἀλλὰ [d]ἄλλη [d]μὲν σὰρξ[2] ἀνθρώπων, [d]ἄλλη [d]δὲ σὰρξ[3] [e]κτηνῶν,[4] [d]ἄλλη [d]δὲ [g]ἰχθύων,[5] [d]ἄλλη [d]δὲ[6] [f]πτηνῶν.[5] 40. καὶ σώματα [h]ἐπουράνια, καὶ σώματα [h][i]ἐπίγεια· ἀλλ' [k]ἑτέρα [k]μὲν ἡ

c Ver. 23. Anarthrous, Gal. vi. 9; 1 Tim. ii. 6, vi. 15; Tit. i. 3, 12, ii. 19; 2 Pet. i. 20, ii. 16; Acts xxviii. 30; Jo. x. 12. d Phrase, N.T. h.l. e Lk. x. 34; Acts xxiii. 24; Rev. xviii. 13; Numb. xx. 4, etc. f N.T. h.l.; Job v. 7. Prose for πετεινος (Rom. i. 23, etc.), which is poetical in cl. Gr. g Freq. in GG.; h.l. in Epp. h The antith. in Phil. ii. 10 and Jo. iii. 12. επουρ., vv. 48 f.; five times in Eph.; 2 Tim. iv. 18; six times in Heb.; Mt. xviii. 35. Cf. Eph. i. 10; Mt. vi. 9, etc. i 2 Cor. v. 1; Phil. iii. 19; Jas. iii. 15. Cf. τα επι της γης, Eph. i. 10, etc. k This form of antith., h.l. in N.T. For ετερος, see xii. 9.

[1] Om. το all pre-Syrian codd.

[2] Om. σαρξ all uncc., and very many minn.

[3] Om. σαρξ (before κτηνων): the Western witnesses.

[4] κτηνους, Western. K, 37, 47, om. this clause altogether, skipping to πτηνων, hrough homœoteleuton.

[5] πτηνων . . . ιχθυων (in this order): all uncc. but GKL; 17, cop. vg. syrsch.

[6] Ins. σαρξ (before πτηνων) all uncc. but AKLP. Ver. 39*b*, corrected, reads: αλλα αλλη μεν ανθρωπων, αλλη δε σαρξ κτηνων, αλλη δε σαρξ πτηνων, αλλη δε ιχθυων.

(ἴδιον)". This added clause meets the finer point of the second question of ver. 35; God will find a fit body for man's redeemed nature, as He does for each of the numberless seeds vivified in the soil. "How unintelligent to think, as the Pharisees did, that the same body that was buried must be restored, if there is to be a resurrection! Every wheat-stalk contradicts thee!" (Mr.)

Ver. 39. The rest of the § goes to sustain ver. 38*b*, showing the inexhaustible variety of organic forms in the Divine economy of nature and the fitness of each for the life it clothes. This is manifest, to begin with, in the varied types of animal life: οὐ πᾶσα σὰρξ ἡ αὐτὴ σάρξ, "All flesh is not the same flesh"—in the zoological realm there is no uniformity, but endless differentiation. (Ed. makes πᾶσα σὰρξ predicate—"the same flesh is not all flesh," i.e., physical assimilation means differentiation—getting out of the sentence a physiological idea obscure in itself and not very relevant to the context). Instead of men, cattle, birds, fishes, with their heterogeneous natures, being lodged in the same kind of corporeity, their frame and organs vary with their inner constitution and needs. If God can find a body for beast and fish, in the lower range, no less than for man, why not, in the higher range, for man immortal no less than for man mortal?—κτῆνος (from κτάομαι), denoting cattle as beasts of purchase in the first instance, is applied to four-footed beasts at large: cf. Gen. i. 25 ff., ii. 20.

Ver. 40. The possibility of a future body unimaginably diff. from the present is indicated in the contrast suggested by the diff. regions of the two: "Bodies also heavenly there are, and bodies earthly". The σὰρξ of ver. 39 is now dropped, for it belongs only to the σῶμα ἐπίγειον. What does P. mean by his σώματα ἐπουράνια? The previous context and the tenor of the argument lead us to think of bodies for celestial inhabitants, sc. the angels (Luke xx. 36, Matt. xxviii. 2, etc.), as suitable to their condition as the σώματα ἐπίγεια are for the forms of terrestrial life just enumerated (so Mr., D.W., Al., El., Sm.); moreover σῶμα is never used elsewhere in Bib. Gr., and rarely in cl. Gr., of inorganic bodies. On the other hand, ver. 41 in connexion with ver. 40*b* strongly suggests the sun, moon, etc., as the "heavenly bodies" in Paul's mind (so Bg., Hf., Hn., Ed., Bt., Gd., and most moderns). The former considerations preponderate, esp. when we find P. in vv. 47 ff. (see notes) resuming the same contrast in the antithesis between "the earthy man" and "the heavenly". Paul is thinking of the risen Christ whom he had seen, more than of the angels, as supplying the type of the σῶμα ἐπουράνιον; cf. Phil. iii. 20 f. Gm., Hilgenfeld, Holsten, Everling (Die paul. Angelologie u.s.w., pp. 46 ff.) combine the above interpretations by attributing to P. the belief of Philo and the Jewish mystics that the stars are animated, and are to be identified with the O.T. "angels," as by the heathen with their gods. This τῶν [h] ἐπουρανίων [l] δόξα, [k] ἑτέρα [k] δὲ ἡ τῶν [h l] ἐπιγείων. 41. ἄλλη δόξα [m] ἡλίου, καὶ ἄλλη [l] δόξα [m] σελήνης, καὶ ἄλλη [l] δόξα [n] ἀστέρων· [n] ἀστὴρ γὰρ [n] ἀστέρος [o] διαφέρει ἐν [l] δόξῃ. 42*a*. οὕτω καὶ ἡ [p] ἀνάστασις τῶν [p] νεκρῶν.

42*b*. [q] Σπείρεται ἐν [r] φθορᾷ, [s] ἐγείρεται ἐν [t] ἀφθαρσίᾳ· 43. [q] σπείρεται ἐν [u] ἀτιμίᾳ, [s] ἐγείρεται ἐν [l] δόξῃ· [q] σπείρεται ἐν [v] ἀσθενείᾳ, l Thus in 2 Cor. iii. 7, 18; Lk. ix. 31 f.; Ex. xvi. 10. Cf. ii. 7 above.

m Acts ii. 20; Mt. xxiv. 29; Lk. xxi. 25; 4 exx. in Rev.
n Jude 13 (fig.); Mt. ii. four times, xxiv. 29; 14 exx. in Rev. o In this use, Gal. iv. 1; Dan. vii. 3 (Theod.). Cf. Rom. ii. 18, etc.; also iv. 7 above. p See ver. 12. q Ver. 36; see note below.
r Ver. 50; Rom. viii. 21; Gal. vi. 8; Col. ii. 22; 2 Pet. i. 4, ii. 12, 19; Jonah ii. 7. s See vi. 14.
t Rom. ii. 7; Eph. vi. 24; 2 Tim. i. 10; Wisd. ii. 23, vi. 18 f. u See xi. 14. v See ii. 3; and for antith., 2 Cor. xii. 9 f., xiii. 4 f., Heb. xi. 34.

notion is wanting in Biblical support. P. asserts that there are "bodies" for heavenly beings, just as there are for earthly (cf. 49); the adj. ἐπουράνια supplies the ποιότης desiderated in ver. 35. The heavenly and earthly bodies, alike as being "bodies," are far diff. in "glory".—ἀλλὰ ἑτέρα κ.τ.λ. traverses the mistaken inference as to the identity of nature in the two kinds of organism, which might be hastily drawn from ver. 39*b*: "But the glory of the heavenlies is indeed one (glory), and the (glory) of the earthlies another".—ἑτέρα (cf. note on xii. 8 ff.) implies a diff. wider, or at least more salient, than that connoted by the ἄλλη of vv. 39 and 41; where the two are distinguished in cl. Gr., ἄλλος marks a generic, ἕτερος a specific diff. How utterly diff. was the glory of the risen Lord, who appeared to P. (Acts xxvi. 13), from that of any earthly Potentate!

Ver. 41. Even amongst the σώματα ἐπουράνια there are varieties, just as amongst the ἐπίγεια (39), such as are indicated by the diff. of aspect in the visible celestial objects: "There is one glory of sun, and another glory of moon, and another glory of stars—for star differs from star in glory". While these luminous orbs are not to be identified with the "heavenly bodies" of ver. 40 (see note), they serve to symbolise the diversity of glory amongst them; all are glorious, but in degrees.—ἄλλη, as in ver. 39 (contrast 40), indicates diff. within the same order. The frequent symbolic association of sun and stars with God, the angels, the righteous, and with the glorified Jesus, may account for the asyndetic transition from ver. 40*b* (signifying persons) to 41. From the distinctions manifest amid the common glory of the visible heavens we may conjecture corresponding distinctions in the heavenly Intelligences and in the bodies appropriate to them.

Ver. 42*a* sums up what has been advanced in vv. 36-41, and presents it in six words: οὕτως καὶ ἡ ἀνάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν, "So indeed is the resurrection of the dead". It is as possible as that plants of wholly diff. form should shoot from the seed sown by your own hand; and the form of each risen body will be determined by God, who finds a suitable organism for every type of earthly life, and can do so equally for every type and grade of heavenly life, in a region where, as sun, moon, and stars nightly show, the universal splendour is graduated and varied infinitely.

§ 55. The First Adam and the Last, xv. 42*b*-49. The Ap. has now removed à priori objections, and brought his theory of bodily resurrection within the lines of natural analogy and probability of reason. He has at the same time largely expounded it, intimating (1) that the present is, in some sense, the seed of the future body, and (2) that the two will differ as the heavenly must needs differ from the earthly. He goes on to show that this diff. has its basis and pattern in the diff. between the primitive Adam and the glorified Christ, who are contrasted in condition (42*b*, 43), in nature (44 ff.), and in origin (47 ff.).

Vv. 42*b*, 43. Σπείρεται ἐν φθορᾷ . . . ἐν ἀτιμίᾳ . . . ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ: "The sowing is in corruption (perishableness) . . . in dishonour . . . in weakness". It is better, with Cv., Wr. (p. 656), and Hn., to regard σπείρεται and ἐγείρεται as impersonal, since no subject is supplied; the vbs., thrice repeated with emphasis, are contrasted in idea; the antithesis lies between two opp. stages of being (cf., for the mode of expression, Luke xii. 48). σπείρεται recalls, and applies in the most general way, the ὃ σπείρεις and σπέρματα of vv. 36 ff. To interpret this vb. as figuring the act of burial ("verbum amœnissimum pro sepultura," Bg.; so Cm., Gr., Mr., Bt., El., and many others) confuses the analogy (the "sowing" is expressly distinguished from the "dying"

[s] ἐγείρεται [w] ἐν [1] [w] δυνάμει· 44. [q] σπείρεται σῶμα [x] ψυχικόν, [s] ἐγείρεται σῶμα [y] πνευματικόν. ἔστι[1] σῶμα [x] ψυχικόν, καὶ[2] ἔστι[2] σῶμα[3] [y] πνευματικόν· 45. [z] οὕτω καὶ [s] γέγραπται, "[a] Ἐγένετο ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος[4] Ἀδὰμ [a] εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν·" ὁ ἔσχατος Ἀδὰμ

w See iv. 20.
x See ii. 14.
y See ii. 15.
z Mt. ii. 5; Lk. xxiv. 46. Cf Acts xiii. 47; and ix. 14 above.
a Gen. ii. 7; Rom. xi. 9; 1 Pet. ii. 7; Mt. xxi. 42 and Acts iv. 11 (Ps. cxvii. 22); Acts v. 36; Lk. xiii. 19.

[1] ει εστιν: all pre-Syrian codd., and all ancient verss. exc. syrr.
[2] εστιν και: all uncc. but KL. [3] Om. σωμα pre-Syrian codd.
[4] BK, and several minn., om. ανθρωπος.

of the seed, 36), and jars with ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ (a sick man, not a corpse, is called weak), and with ψυχικὸν in ver. 44; cf. also vv. 50-54, where ἡ φθορά, τὸ φθαρτόν, τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο are identified with the living ἡμεῖς. Our present life is the seed-time (Gal. vi. 7 ff.), and our "mortal bodies" (Rom. viii. 10 f.) are in the germinal state, concluding with death (36), out of which a wholly diff. organism will spring. The attributes φθορά (cf. δουλεία τ. φθορᾶς, Rom. viii. 21), ἀτιμία (cf. Phil. iii. 21), ἀσθενεία (cf. 2 Cor. xiii. 4)—summed up in the θνητὰ σώματα of Rom. viii. 11 and μορφὴ δούλου of Phil. ii. 7—are those that P. is wont to ascribe to man's actual physique, in contrast with the ἀφθαρσία, δόξα, δύναμις of the post-resurrection state: see 2 Cor. iv. 7, 10, 16, v. 1, 4, Rom. i. 4, viii. 18-23. Thus, with variety in detail, Est. ("moritur corpus multis ante mortem miseriis et fœditatibus obnoxium, suscitabitur idem corpus omni ex parte gloriosum"), Cv., Hf., Hn., Ed. Gd. refers the threefold σπείρεται to the three moments of burial, mortal life, and birth respectively; van Hengel identifies it with procreation, quite unsuitably.

Ver. 44. "There is sown a psychic body; there is raised a spiritual body." This dictum grounds the antithesis unfolded in vv. 42 f. upon its proper basis; the diff. is not a matter of condition merely, but of constitution. Corruption, dishonour, feebleness are, in great part, penal inflictions (Rom. v. 12 ff.), signalising not a natural defect, but a positive subjection to the power of sin (53-56); man, however, is essentially ψυχὴ under the present order (45), and his body therefore is essentially ψυχικὸν as determined by that order (cf. vi. 13, and note; Col. ii. 20 ff., Matt. xxii. 30, etc.), being fitted to and expressive of the "soul" wherein his earthly being centres; see the note on ψυχικός, ii. 14. Though inadequate, "natural" is the best available rendering of this adj.; it indicates the moulding of man's body by its environment and its adaptation to existing functions; the same body is χοϊκὸν in respect of its material (47).—ψυχικὸν is only relatively a term of disparagement; the "psychic body" has in it the making of the "spiritual"; "its adaptation for the present service of the soul is the sowing of it, that is the initial step in its adaptation for the future uses of the spirit. An organism fitted to be the seat of mind, to express emotion, to carry out the behests of will, is in process of being adapted for a still nobler ministry" (Ed.): "he that sows to the Spirit (in the natural body), will reap of the Spirit (in the spiritual body)," Gal. vi. 8.—"If there is a psychic body, there is also a spiritual": a frame suited to man's earthly life argues a frame suited to his heavenly life, according to the principle of ver. 38*b* (cf. the argument from lower to higher in Matt. vi. 30); and the σῶμα πν. lies, in some way, germinally hidden in the σῶμα ψ., to be unfolded from it under "the universal law of progress" (Ed.).—ἔστιν (existit) bears emphasis in each clause; from the fact of sense P. argues to the fact of faith. Observe txtl. notes 1-3.

Ver. 45 puts into words of Scripture the law of development affirmed, thereby showing its agreement with the plan of creation and its realisation in the two successive heads of the race. Into his citation of Gen. ii. 7 (LXX) P. introduces πρῶτος and duplicates ἄνθρωπος by Ἀδάμ (ha'adām), to prepare for his antithetical addition ὁ ἔσχατος Ἀδὰμ εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν. On the principle of ver. 44*b*, the Adam created as ψυχὴ was the crude beginning of humanity (the pred. ψυχὴ ζῶσα is shared by A. with the animals, Gen. i. 20, 24)—a "first" requiring a "last" as his complement and explanation. The two types differ here not as the sin-committing and sin-abolishing (Rom. v. 12 ff.), but as the rudimentary and finished man respectively, with their physique to match.—

εἰς πνεῦμα [b] ζωοποιοῦν. 46. ἀλλ' οὐ πρῶτον τὸ [y] πνευματικὸν ἀλλὰ τὸ [x] ψυχικόν, ἔπειτα τὸ [y] πνευματικόν· 47. ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος [e] ἐκ [e] γῆς, [d] χοϊκός· ὁ δεύτερος ἄνθρωπος ὁ Κύριος [1] [e] ἐξ

b See ver. 22.
c Jo. iii. 31,—same antith.
d H.l.; see note below.
e 2 Cor. v. 2; Gal. i. 8; 1 Th. i. 10; 2 Pet. i. 18; freq. in Rev.; Mt. xxviii. 2; Lk. iii. 22, x. 18, xi. 13; Jo. i. 32, xii. 28; Acts ii. 2. Ref. to Chr., Jo. iii. 13, etc., vi. 31 ff.

[1] Om. ο Κυριος ℵ*BCD*G, 17, 67, latt. vg. cop., many Ff.
Ins. ο Κυριος ℵcADb,cKLP, and syrr. Tert. censures this reading in Mcion. An instance of the Syrian readings followed by A, even in Paul.

Αδὰμ is repeated in the second clause by way of maintaining the humanity of Christ and His genetic relation to the protoplast (cf. Luke i. 23-38), essential as the ground of our bodily relationship to Him (48 f.; cf. Heb. ii. 14 ff.).—The time of Christ's γενέσθαι εἰς πν. ζωοπ., in view of the context and esp. of vv. 42 ff., can only be His resurrection from the grave (Est., Gr., Mr., Hn., Hf., El.), which supplies the hinge of Paul's whole argument (cf. Rom. i. 4, vi. 4 ff., x. 9, etc.); not the incarnation (Thp., Bz., Baur, Ed.), for His pre-resurrection body was a σῶμα ψυχικόν (Rom. viii. 3, etc.; 2 Cor. xiii. 4, Phil. ii. 7, etc.). By rising from the dead, Christ ἐγενήθη εἰς πνεῦμα—He entered on the spiritual and ultimate form of human existence; and at the same time, ἐγενήθη εἰς πν. ζωοποιοῦν—He entered this state so as to communicate it to His fellows: cf. vv. 20-23, Col. i. 18, Rev. i. 5; also Rom. viii. 10 f., 2 Cor. iv. 14; John vi. 33, xi. 25, xiv. 19, etc. The action of Jesus in "breathing" upon His disciples while He said, "Receive the Holy Spirit" (John xx. 22 f.), symbolised the vitalising relationship which at this epoch He assumed towards mankind; this act raised to a higher potency the original "breathing" of God by which man "became a living soul". "Spirit is life-power, having the ground of its vitality in itself, while the soul has only a subject and conditioned life; spirit vitalises that which is outside of itself, soul leads its individual life within the sphere marked out by its environment" (Hf.); cf. John iii. 34, iv. 14, v. 25 f.; Heb. vii. 25.—ὁ ἔσχατος ἄνθρωπος recalls the Rabbinical title, ha'adām ha'acharōn, given to the Messiah (Neve Shalom, ix. 9): Christ is not, however, the later or second, but the last, the final Adam. The two Adams of Philo, based on the duplicate narrative of Gen. i., ii.—the ideal "man after the image of God" and the actual "man of the dust of the earth" —with which Pfleiderer and others identify Paul's πρῶτος and ἔσχατος, χοϊκὸς and ἐπουράνιος 'Αδάμ, are not to be found here. For (a) Philo's first is Paul's last; (b) both Paul's Adams are equally concrete; (c) the resurrection of Christ distinguishes their respective periods, a crisis the conception of which is foreign to Philo's theology; (d) moreover, Gen. i. 26 is referred in xi. 7 above to the historical, not the ideal, First Man.

Ver. 46 might have been expressly aimed at the Philonian exegesis; it affirms a development from lower to higher, from the dispensation of ψυχὴ to that of πνεῦμα, the precise opp. of that extracted from Gen. i., ii. by Philo. (ἀλλ' οὐ) "Nay, but not first is the spiritual, but the psychic—after that (ἔπειτα: cf. 23) the spiritual". P. states a general law (σῶμα is not to be understood with the adjs.): the ψυχικὸν as such demands the πνευματικὸν to follow it (44); they succeed in this order, not the reverse. "The Ap. does not share the notion, long regarded as orthodox, that humanity was created in a state of moral and physical perfection. . . . Independently of the Fall, there must have been progress from an inferior state, the psychic, which he posits as man's point of departure, to a superior state, the spiritual, foreseen and determined as man's goal from the first" (Gd. ad loc.: see the whole passage).

Vv. 47-49 draw another contrast between the two "men," types of the two eras of humanity, which is suggested by the words χοῦν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς ('aphār minha'adamāh) of Gen. ii. 7. The first is ἐκ γῆς, χοϊκός (terrenus, Vg.; more literally, pulvereus, Bz.); the second is ἐξ οὐρανοῦ (om. ὁ Κύριος). The former epithets, and by antithesis the latter, point to bodily origin and substance (cf. 40, also 2 Cor. iv. 7, ἐν ὀστρακίνοις σκεύεσιν), but connote the whole quality of the life thus determined.—The expression ἐξ οὐρανοῦ (e cœlo, Bz.; not de cœlo, Vg.) has led to the identifying of the δεύτερος ἄνθρ. with the incarnate Christ (see Ed.), to the confusion of [e] οὐρανοῦ· 48. [f] οἷος ὁ [d] χοϊκός, [f] τοιοῦτοι καὶ οἱ [d] χοϊκοί· καὶ οἷος ὁ [g] ἐπουράνιος, [f] τοιοῦτοι καὶ οἱ [g] ἐπουράνιοι· 49. καὶ καθὼς [h] ἐφορέσαμεν τὴν [i] εἰκόνα τοῦ [d] χοϊκοῦ, [h] φορέσομεν[1] καὶ τὴν [i] εἰκόνα τοῦ [g] ἐπουρανίου.

50. Τοῦτο δέ[2] [k] φημι, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι [l] σὰρξ καὶ [l] αἷμα [m] βασιλείαν [m] Θεοῦ [m] κληρονομῆσαι οὐ [n] δύνανται,[3] οὐδὲ ἡ [o] φθορὰ τὴν [p] ἀφθαρσίαν

f In this order, 2 Cor. x. 11; Mt. xiii. 19. οιος besides, 2 Cor. xii. 20; Phil. i. 30; 1 Th. i. 5; 2 Tim. iii. 11; Rev. xvi. 18

Mk. ix. 3. g See ver. 40. h Rom. xiii. 4; Mt. xi. 8; Jo. xix. 5; Jas. ii. 3; Prov. xvi. 23. i See xi. 7. k See vii. 29. l Eph. vi. 12; Heb. ii. 14; Mt. xvi. 17; Sir. xiv. 18; cf. Lk. xxiv. 39. m See vi. 9 (with κληρονομ.). n δυναται, for the compound subj. and sing. vb., cf. Mt. v. 18; there the pred. precedes. N.T. h.l. for such a constr. ad sensum, in this order. o, p See ver. 42.

[1] φορεσωμεν, all uncc. but B, with 46, and many minn. W.H. retain -ομεν in marg., R.V. and Weiss in txt., referring -ωμεν to marg.; other crit. edd., -ωμεν.

[2] γαρ, DG, Tert. [3] δυναται, ℵBP, 73, Or.

Paul's argument (cf. note on 45). This phrase is suggested by the antithetical ἐκ γῆς: the form of existence in which the risen Jesus appeared was superterrestrial and pneumatic (cf. 2 Cor. v. 2); it possessed a life and attributes imparted "from heaven"—by an immediate and sovereign act of God (Rom. i. 4, vi. 4, 2 Cor. xiii. 4, Eph. i. 19 f., 1 Peter i. 21, etc.). This transformation of the body of Jesus was foreshadowed by His Transfiguration, and consummated in His Ascension; P. realised it with the most powerful effect in the revelation to himself of the risen Christ "from heaven". The glorious change attested, indeed, the origin of Christ's personality, but it should not be confused with that origin (Rom. i. 4; cf. Matt. xvii. 5). From His resurrection onwards, Christ became to human faith the ἄνθρωπος ἐπουράνιος (Rom. vi. 9 f., Rev. i. 17 ff.), who was taken previously for a θνητὸς and χοϊκὸς like other men.—Baur, Pfleiderer, Beyschlag (N.T. Theology), Sm., and others, see in the ἄνθρωπος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ the pre-existent Christ, whom they identify with Philo's ideal or "heavenly man" of Gen. i. 26 (see note on 45 above); on this interpretation an entire Christology is based —the theory that Christ in his pre-incarnate state was simply the Urmensch, the prototype of humanity, existing thus, either in fact or in the Divine idea, with God from eternity, and being in this sense the Eternal Son. Doubtless the "second man" is ideally first and reveals the true end and type of humanity, and this conception is, so far, a just inference from Paul's teaching. But what P. actually sets forth is the historical relation of the two Adams in the development of mankind, Christ succeeding and displacing our first father (46, see note; 49), whereas the Baurian Urmensch is antecedent to the earthly Adam.

The above χοϊκὸς and ἐπουράνιος have severally their copies in χοϊκοὶ and ἐπουράνιοι (48). Is this a purely physical distinction, between pre- and post-resurrection states of the same men (cf. 44)? or is there a moral connotation implied, as Hf. and Ed. suggest? The latter seems likely, esp. on comparison of Phil. iii. 18 ff., Col. iii. 1-4, Rom. vi. 4, and in transition to the exhortation of ver. 49. Those who are to be "heavenly" in body hereafter already "sit in heavenly places" (Eph. ii. 6), while those are "earthy" in every sense "whose flesh hath soul to suit," οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια φρονοῦντες. — Admitting the larger scope of ver. 48, we accept the strongly attested hortatory φορέσωμεν of ver. 49: "Let us wear also the image of the Heavenly One". The εἰκὼν embraces the entire "man"—not the body alone, the σχῆμα and σκεῦος ἀνθρώπου (Phil. ii. 7, 2 Cor. iv. 7, 1 Thess. iv. 4)—in Adam and Christ respectively (cf. xi. 7, 2 Cor. iii. 18, Rom. viii. 29, Col. i. 15 iii. 10); and we are exhorted to "put on Christ" (Rom. xiii. 14, Gal. iii. 27), realising that to wear His moral likeness here carries with it the wearing of His bodily likeness hereafter: see vv. 20-23, Rom. viii. 11; 1 John iii. 2 f.

§ 56. Victory over Death, xv. 50-58. The second part of the argument of this chapter has now reached the same platform as the first (cf. §§ 51 and 54). The Resurrection of the Body, it has been shown, is an essential part of the Divine world-plan and necessary to the fulfilment of God's kingdom through Christ (20-27); and the transformation of the q See ii. 7. r See vii. 39. s Rom. i. 23 (Ps. cv. 20); Gal. iv. 20; Heb. i. 12 (Ps. ci. 26); Acts vi. 14; Lev. xxvii. 33. t Bibl. h.l.

[m] κληρονομεῖ.[1] 51. ἰδοὺ [q] μυστήριον ὑμῖν λέγω· πάντες μὲν[2] οὐ[3] [r] κοιμηθησόμεθα,[3] πάντες δὲ [s] ἀλλαγησόμεθα,[3] 52. ἐν [t] ἀτόμῳ, ἐν παντες κοιμηθησομεθα ου παντες δε αλλαγησομεθα: ℵ(A)CG, 17, Gr. codd. mentioned by Hier. and by Aug. So Lachm. and Tr. marg. A* reads παντες κοιμηθ. οι παντες κ.τ.λ., afterwards correcting οι to ου, but then inserting ου before κοιμηθ. as well.

[1] κληρονομησει: C*D*G, vg. cop. syrr. [2] Om. μεν BC*D*.

[3] παντες ου κοιμηθησομεθα παντες δε αλλαγησομεθα (as in T.R., om. only μεν): BDbcKLP, etc., cop. syrr., Or., Cyr., Greg.-Nyss., Chr., Thdrt. So Tisch., Tr. txt., Al., R.V., W.H., El., Nestle.

παντες αναστησομεθα ου παντες δε αλλαγ.: D*, d e f, vg. (omnes quidem resurgemus [or resurgimus], sed non omnes immutabimur); latt. codd. mentioned by Hier., by Aug. and Pelag., Hil. Hier. writes (Ep. 119): "Quæritis quo sensu dictum sit et quomodo in 1 ad Cor. ep. Pauli apost. sit legendum: Omnes quidem dormiemus, non autem omnes immutabimur, an juxta quædam exemplaria: Non omnes dormiemus, omnes autem immutabimur; utrumque enim in Græcis codd. invenitur". The Patristic authorities from the 3rd to the 5th century stood in doubt as to the true reading, and the Gr. MSS. then presented great confusion. Intrinsic considerations are decisive in favour of the T.R., in adopting which the Syrian edd. showed excellent judgment. The unusual position of ου (after παντες), and the fact that ου κοιμηθησ. appear to express an anticipation that failed of fulfilment, led to the shifting of the ου. αναστησομεθα is a bold Western paraphrase. The reading of B and the T.R. alone agrees with Paul's situation (cf. 1 Th. iv. 15), and with the tenor of this passage. See note below. For full textual evidence and discussion, see Tisch.[8], ad loc., also W.H., vol. ii., p. 118.

earthly into the heavenly, of the psychic into the pneumatic form of being, is involved in the present constitution of things and accords with the lines of development traceable in nature and revelation (36-49). In a word, P. holds the Christian resurrection to be grounded in the person and mission of Christ, as He is on the one hand the Son of God and mediatorial Head of His kingdom (24-28), and on the other hand the Second Adam and Firstborn of a spiritual humanity (22 f., 45-49). He finds the key to this great controversy, as to so many others, in the supremacy of Christ, the "one Lord, through whom are all things and we through Him" (viii. 6). It remains for him only to state the practical conclusion of this reasoning (50), to describe our anticipated transformation and victory over death (51-57), and to urge his readers in this confidence to accomplish worthily their life's work (58).

Ver. 50. Τοῦτο δέ φημι, ἀδελφοί (see note, vii. 29) introduces, with a pause, an emphatic reassertion of the ruling thought of the previous §—that of the opposition between the psychic body of the First Adam and the spiritual body of the Second; manifestly the former is unfit for God's heavenly kingdom—with the latter, it is assumed (48*b*; cf. Luke xx. 34 ff., 1 John iii. 2 f.), we must be clothed to enter that diviner realm: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit God's kingdom; nor indeed doth corruption (perishableness) inherit incorruption (imperishableness)". The second assertion explicates the first: σάρξ κ. αἷμα = φθορά (cf. 42, and note), since decay is inherent in our bodily nature; ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος διαφθείρεται (2 Cor. iv. 16; cf. Rom. viii. 10 f.). "Flesh" is the matter and "blood" the essence and life-vehicle of man's present corporeity. Nature forbids eternal life in this earthly dress (cf. note on 46). "Inherit" points to the kingdom as the right of the sons of God (Rom. viii. 17, etc.; cf. Matt. xxv. 34), but a heritage unrealised during the "bondage of corruption" (see Rom. viii. 21 ff.). Another, but removeable, disability of "flesh and blood" appears in Matt. xvi. 17.

Vv. 51, 52. This bodily change, indispensable in view of the incompatibility just affirmed, is the object of a momentous revelation communicated to P., to which he calls our earnest attention: "Lo, I tell you a mystery!" On μυστήριον, see note to ii. 1. P. began by demonstrating the historical fact of Christ's resurrection (1-11); he then reasoned upon it, in its bearings on religion and nature (12-49); now he adds a new specific

[u] ῥιπῇ[1] ὀφθαλμοῦ, ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῃ [v] σάλπιγγι· [w] σαλπίσει γάρ, καὶ οἱ [x] νεκροὶ [x] ἐγερθήσονται[2] [y] ἄφθαρτοι, καὶ ἡμεῖς [a] ἀλλαγησόμεθα. 53. [z] δεῖ γὰρ τὸ [a] φθαρτὸν τοῦτο [b] ἐνδύσασθαι [y] ἀφθαρσίαν καὶ τὸ

u Bibl. h.l. Eur. Iph. Tr., 885; -ιζειν, Jas. i. 6. v See xiv. 8. w Mt. vi. 2; Rev. ten times. x See ver. 15. y See ix. 25. z See viii. 2. a See ix. 25. b 2 Cor. v. 3; Rom. xiii. 12, 14; Eph. iv. 24, vi. 11; Col. iii. 10; Ps. cxxxi. 9.

[1] D*G, 67, and some others, read ροπῃ. Hier.: "εν ριπῃ sive εν ροπῃ οφθαλμου, utrumque enim legitur, et nostri interpretati sunt in momento et in ictu oculi".

[2] αναστησονται, ADGP.

revelation to crown his teaching. In doing so, P. challenges his opponents in the right of his inspiration and authority, hitherto in the background in this chap. Ver. 15 only vindicated his honesty.

In ver. 51*b* ἀλλαγησόμεθα (required by 50 and repeated in 52) bears the stress; to it the first πάντες (reiterated with emphasis) looks forward; οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα is parenthetical: "We shall all—not sleep, but—we shall all be changed". ἀλλάσσω is interpreted by ἐνδύομαι of ver. 53 and μετασχηματίζω of Phil. iii. 21. As much as to say: "Our perishable flesh and blood, whether through death or not, must undergo a change". That such a change is impending for the dead in Christ is evident from the foregoing argument (see esp. 22 f., 36, 42 f.); P. adds to this the declaration that the change will be universal, that it will extend to those living when the Last Trumpet sounds (52), amongst whom he then hoped that many of the present generation would be found: cf. i. 7; also 1 Thess. iv. 15 ff., where the like is affirmed ἐν λόγῳ Κυρίου. This hope dictates the interjected οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα, which disturbs the grammar of the sentence and necessitates the contrastive δὲ attached to the repeated πάντες (see txtl. note; Wr., p. 695; also El. ad loc.). There is no need to suppose a trajection of οὐ (as if for οὐ πάντες, or οὐ μὲν πάντες κοιμηθησ.), nor any diff. between the sense of ἀλλαγησ. in vv. 51 and 52: the certainty of change in all who shall "inherit incorruption" is declared (51), and the assurance is given that while this change takes place in "the dead" who are "raised incorruptible," at the same time "we" (the assumed living) shall undergo a corresponding change (52; cf. 2 Cor. v. 2 ff.). Thus in "all" believers, whether sleeping or waking when Christ's trumpet sounds, the necessary development will be effected (53 f.).—The critical moment is defined by three vivid phrases: ἐν ἀτόμῳ (cl. Gr., ἐν ἀκαρεῖ), ἐν ῥιπῇ ὀφθαλμοῦ (in ictu oculi, Vg.; in a twinkling), ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῃ σάλπιγγι—the first two describing the instantaneousness, and the last (with allusion perhaps to the saying of Matt. xxiv. 31: cf. 1 Thess. iv. 16) the solemn finality of the transformation. The former idea is emphasized, possibly, to preclude the fear of a slow painful process. The σάλπιγξ was the war-trumpet, used for signals and commands (cf. ἐν κελεύσματι, 1 Thess. iv. 16); and σαλπίσει (sc. ὁ σαλπιγκτής) is indef. in subject, according to military idiom (cf. Xen., Anab., I., ii., 17). 1 Thess. iv. identifies the "trumpet" with the "archangel's voice": any such description is of course figurative.

Vv. 52, 53. The necessity for change, negatively declared in ver. 50, is now reaffirmed positively, as a necessity lying in the nature and relations of the changed: "For this corruptible (perishable) is bound (δεῖ: cf. xi. 19) to put on incorruption (imperishableness), and this mortal to put on immortality". The double τοῦτο speaks, as in 2 Cor. v. 2, Rom. vii. 24, out of P.'s painful self-consciousness: cf. 2 Cor. iv. 10, Gal. vi. 17.—τὸ θνητὸν and τὸ φθαρτόν (concrete, of felt necessity: ἡ φθορά, 50, abstract, of general principle) relate, as in vv. 42 ff., to the present, living body of the ἡμεῖς, not to the dead body deposited in the grave. The aforesaid "change" is now represented as an investiture (ἐνδύσασθαι) with incorruption and immortality; the two ideas are adjusted in 2 Cor. v. 4, where it is conceived that the living Christian will "put on" the new, spiritual body "over" (ἐπ-ενδύσασθαι) his earthly frame, which will then be "absorbed" (καταποθῇ) by it.

Ver. 54. This clothing of the saints with immortality fulfils a notable O.T. word respecting the Day of the Lord: "Then will be brought to pass the word that is written, Death has been swallowed up (κατεπόθη, the vb. adopted in 2 Cor.

c 2 Cor. iv. 11, v. 4; Rom. vi. 12, viii. 11.
d 1 Tim. vi. 16; Wisd. viii. 13, etc.
e Ver. 28, xvi. 2; 2 Cor. xii. 10; Col. iii. 4; 1 Th. v. 3; Lk. v. 35; Jo. viii. 28.
f Mt. v. 18; Mk. xi. 23.
g Isa. xxv. 8 (see note below); in this sense, 2 Cor. v. 4, also ii. 7; Mt. xxiii. 24; Heb. xi. 29; 1 Pet. v. 8; Rev xii. 16.
h Mt. xii. 20; 2 Ki. ii. 26; Job xxxvi. 7.
i Hos. xiii. 14; Acts xxvi. 14; Rev. ix. 10.

[c]θνητὸν τοῦτο [b]ἐνδύσασθαι [d]ἀθανασίαν· 54. [e]ὅταν δὲ[1] τὸ [c]φθαρτὸν τοῦτο [b]ἐνδύσηται [p]ἀφθαρσίαν καὶ[1] τὸ [c]θνητὸν τοῦτο [b]ἐνδύσηται [d]ἀθανασίαν,[2] [e]τότε [f]γενήσεται ὁ λόγος ὁ γεγραμμένος, "[g]Κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος [h]εἰς [h]νῖκος". 55. ποῦ σου, θάνατε, τὸ [i]κέντρον[3]; ποῦ σου, ᾅδη,[4] τὸ [h]νῖκος[3]; 56. τὸ δὲ [i]κέντρον τοῦ θανάτου ἡ ἁμαρτία,

[1] ℵ*C*IM, cop. vg., and several Ff., om. το φθαρτον . . . και, reducing the two οταν clauses to one—οταν δε το θνητον τουτο κ.τ.λ. G om. the entire double οταν clause, skipping from αθανασιαν in ver. 53 to αθανασιαν in ver. 54.

[2] την αθανασιαν: ℵAI, 17; so I in ver. 53.

[3] νικος . . . κεντρον (in this order): ℵBCIM, 17, cop. vg. (BD*I: νεικος, vv. 54 f.).

[4] θανατε twice: ℵ*BCDGI, 67, cop. vg., and many Ff.; ᾳδη in Hosea.

v. 4 as above) unto victory!" ὅταν, with its double clause, recalls the double ὅταν of ver. 24 and of vv. 27 f. (see notes), which are parl. to each other and to this, alike marking the great "when," the epoch of the consummation. The destruction of the "last enemy" secures absolute "victory" for Christ and His own. Paul corrects the LXX txt. of Isa. xxv. 8, which makes Death the victor,—κατέπιεν ὁ θάνατος ἰσχύσας; he appears to have read the Heb. passively bulla', for Massoretic billa': Theodotion's translation is identical with Paul's. lanetsach (for ever) is often rendered εἰς νῖκος (later Gr. form of νίκη) by the LXX, according to the Aramaic sense of the noun; its Heb. sense implies a final and unqualified overthrow of the King of Terrors, and therefore admits of P.'s application. "This is the farthest reaching of all O.T. prophecies; it bears allusion to Gen. iii." (Dillmann; see also Delitzsch, on the Isaianic txt.), and reverses the doom there pronounced.

Vv. 55-57. At this climax P. breaks into a song of triumph over Death, in the strain of Hosea's rapturous anticipation of Israel's resurrection from national death. [Many interpreters, however, put the opp. sense on Hos. xiii. 14, as though God were summoning Death and the Grave to ply all their forces for Israel's annihilation, and this accords with the prophet's context; but violent alterations of mood are characteristic of Hosea: see Nowack ad loc. in Handkom. z. A.T., also Orelli's Minor Prophets, or Cheyne in C.B.S.] The passage has the Hebraistic lilt of Paul's more exalted passages; cf. xiii. 4 ff., and parls. there noted.

> "Where, O Death, is thy victory?
> Where, O Death, is thy sting?
> Now the sting of Death is Sin, and the strength of Sin is the Law;
> But to God be thanks, who gives to us the victory
> Through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

P. freely adapts the words of Hosea, repeating θάνατε in the second line, where Hosea writes sh'ôl (LXX ᾅδη), since death is the enemy he pursues throughout (Ed. notes that ᾅδης never occurs in Paul's Epp.); and he substitutes syn. terms for each of the other nouns to suit his own vein, νῖκος being taken up from ver. 54, and κέντρον preparing for the thought of ver. 56.—τὸ δὲ κέντρον κ.τ.λ. throws into an epigram the doctrine of Rom. iv.-viii. and Gal. iii. respecting the inter-relations of Sin, Law, and Death: "Mors aculeum quo pungat non habet nisi peccatum; et huic aculeo Lex vim mortiferam addit" (Cv.). Sin gives to death, as we mortals know it, its poignancy, its penal character and humiliating form, with the entire "bondage of corruption" that attaches to it: see esp. Rom. v. 12, 17, vi. 10, 23, vii. 24, viii. 10, 20 ff., Heb. ii. 14 f. Apart from sin, our present bodily existence must have terminated in the course of nature (44-46); but the change would have been effected in a far diff. way, without the horror and anguish of dissolution—as indeed it will be for the redeemed who have the happiness to be alive at the Second Advent (see 51 f., and parls.).

ἡ δὲ δύναμις τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ νόμος· 57. τῷ δὲ Θεῷ [k] χάρις τῷ διδόντι ἡμῖν τὸ [h] νῖκος διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 58. Ὥστε, [l] ἀδελφοί μου [l] ἀγαπητοί, [m] ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε, [n] ἀμετακίνητοι, [o] περισσεύοντες ἐν τῷ [p] ἔργῳ τοῦ [p] Κυρίου πάντοτε, εἰδότες ὅτι ὁ [q] κόπος ὑμῶν οὐκ ἔστι [r] κενὸς ἐν Κυρίῳ.

k See x. 30.
l As form of address, h.l. in P. Jas. i. 16, 19, ii. 5.
m See vii. 37.
n H.l.; cf. Col. i. 23.
o See viii. 8; in like connection, 2 Cor. viii. 2, 7, ix. 8; Rom. xv. 13; Phil. i. 9; Col. ii. 7; 1 Th. iii. 12, iv. 1, 10. p xvi. 10; Phil. ii. 30; cf. Rom. xiv. 20 (τ. εργ. τ. Θ.).
q See iii. 8.
r See ver. 10.

For those who "fall asleep in Christ" (18, 20; 1 Thess. iv. 14), death, while it is still death and naturally feared (οὐ θέλομεν ἐκδύσασθαι, 2 Cor. v. 4), is robbed of its "sting" (cf. 1 John iv. 18; also John v. 24, viii. 51 f., xi. 25 f., 2 Tim. i. 10; Rev. xx. 6), viz., the sense of guilt and dread of judgment—"tametsi adhuc nos pungit, non tamen letaliter, quia retusum est ejus acumen, ne in animæ vitalia penetret" (Cv.).—κέντρον is sting (as in Rev. ix. 10), not goad (as in Acts xxvi. 14); Death is personified as a venomous creature, inflicting poisoned and fatal wounds. Here Death reigns through Sin, as in Rom. v. 17; Rom. v. 21 pictures Sin reigning in Death: the effect through the cause, the cause in the effect.—While Death gets from Sin its sting, Sin in turn receives from the Law its power. ἡ δύναμις τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ νόμος condenses into six words Paul's teaching on the relation of Sin to Law (see Rom. iv. 15, v. 20, vi. 14, vii.; Gal. ii. 16, iii., iv. 21-v. 4)—the view, based on his experience as a Pharisee, that the law of God, imposing on sinful man impossible yet necessary tasks, promising salvation upon terms he can never fulfil and threatening death upon non-fulfilment, in effect exasperates his sin and involves him in hopeless guilt; ἡ ἁμαρτία . . . διὰ τ. ἐντολῆς . . . με ἀπέκτεινεν (Rom. vii. 11).—The exclamation of relief, "Thanks be to God, etc.," is precisely parl. to Rom. vii. 25*a*, viii. 1 f.—The believer's "victory" lies in deliverance through Christ's propitiatory death (Rom. iii. 23 f.; cf. i. 17 f., 30, vi. 11 above) from the condemnation of the Law, and thereby from "the power of Sin," and thereby from the bitterness of Death. Law, Sin, and Death were bound into a firm chain, only dissoluble by "the word of the cross—God's power to the saved" (i. 18; cf. Rom. i. 16 f., viii. 1 ff.). Thus the Ap. finally links his doctrine of the Bodily Resurrection and Transformation of Christians to his fundamental teaching as to Justification and the Forgiveness of Sins; ch. xv. is a part of the λόγος τ. σταυροῦ which alone P. proclaims at Cor. (ii. 1 f.).—God "gives to us the victory," won for us by "our Lord Jesus Christ," which otherwise Sin, strengthened (instead of being broken) by the Law, had given to Death. The pr. ptp. τῷ διδόντι τὸ νῖκος asserts the experience of redemption (cf. i. 2, vi. 19; 2 Cor. v. 21, xiii. 5, Rom. v. 1 f., Eph. i. 7); similarly ὑπερνικῶμεν, Rom. viii. 37, declares the continuous triumph of faith: for the sentiment, cf. Rom. v. 2-11, 1 Thess. v. 16 ff., Phil. iv. 4, 1 Peter i. 3-9.

Ver. 56 is set aside by Sm., and Clemen (Die Einheitlichkeit d. paul. Br., ad loc.), after Straatmann and Völter, as a "marginal note" of some early Paulinist, on the ground that it is out of keeping with the lyrical strain of the passage, and with the absence of the anti-legal polemic from this Ep. But the ideas of this ver. fill the contemporary Rom. and Gal. Epp., and are uppermost there in Paul's highest moods (see Rom. viii. 31 ff., 2 Cor. v. 13-21); they are expressed with an originality and pregnant force unmistakably Pauline, and in a rhythmical, imaginative turn of expression harmonising with the context. In this Ep., which "knows nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified," the Ap. was bound to link his theology of the Resurrection to the doctrine of salvation by the Cross: see vv. 17 f., in proof that the λόγος τῆς ἀναστάσεως is one, in Paul's mind, with the λόγος τοῦ σταυροῦ.

Ver. 58 briefly directs the previous teaching against the unsettlement caused by Cor. doubts. This unbelief was taxed in vv. 32 ff. with sensualism and ignorance of God; its enervating effect on Christian work is here indicated. For ὥστε with impv., cf. iii. 21, iv. 5, etc.—ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε, "show yourselves steadfast": see note on vii. 23, also x. 32, xi. 1; for the adj., see parls. In Col. i. 23 the combination ἑδραῖοι, ἀμετακίνητοι ("not-to-be-moved") is almost identically repeated; similarly in Aristotle, Nic. Eth., II., iv., 3, τὸ βεβαίως καὶ ἀμετακινήτως ἔχειν is specified as a con-

XVI. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῆς [a]λογίας[1] τῆς εἰς [b]τοὺς [b]ἁγίους· [c]ὥσπερ [d]διέταξα [e]ταῖς [e]ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ποιήσατε.

a H.l. b See vi. 1, and note below.
c See xv. 22.
d See vii. 17.
e See vii. 17; for pl. in local use, ver. 19; 2 Cor. viii. 1; Gal. i. 2 (τ. Γαλ.), 22; 1 Th. ii. 14; Rev. i. 4.

[1] λογειας (?): B*or and I.

dition of all right and virtuous doing.—περισσεύοντες κ.τ.λ. adds the positive to the foregoing negative side of the injunction: "abounding (overflowing: see parls.) in the work of the Lord always". τ. ἔργον τ. Κυρίου (cf. ix. 1; Col. iii. 23 f., Matt. xxi. 28, Mark xiii. 34) is "the work" which "the Lord" prescribes, while "the work of God" (Rom. xiv. 20: cf. iii. 9 above) is "the work" which "God" does: contrast xii. 5 and 6 above.—"Knowing (as you do) that your toil is not empty in the Lord." εἰδότες implies assured knowledge, such as springs from the confirmation of faith given in this chap. On κόπος, see note to iii. 8; and on κενός, ver. 14: the "toil" is "empty" which is spent on illusion; "ce n'est pas là une activité d'apparat, accomplie dans le néant, comme si souvent le travail terrestre, mais un sérieux labeur, accompli dans la sphère de l'éternelle réalité" (Gd.); hence the pr. ἐστὶν rather than ἔσται.—ἐν Κυρίῳ: in the sphere of Christ's authority, wrought under His headship, which supplies the basis of all Christian relations and duties; cf. ver. 36, iv. 17, vii. 22, etc.

Division VI. Business, News, and Greetings, xvi. The Ap. has delivered his mind to the Cor. upon the questions which prompted this great Ep. He had reserved to the last the profound and solemn problem of the Future Life, in its treatment of which the conceit of intellect and the moral levity that spoiled this powerful Greek Church found their most characteristic expression. To the defence and exposition of the Christian hope of the Resurrection of the Body P. has devoted in chap. xv. all his powers of dialectic and of theological construction, bringing his argument to the glorious conclusion with which, in § 56, the thought of the Ep. culminates. He has thus carried his readers far away from the Cor. atmosphere of jealousy and debate, of sensuality and social corruption, infecting their Church, to seat them in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. There remain a few matters of personal interest, to be disposed of in two or three paragraphs—concerning the collection for Jerusalem (1-4), his own and Timothy's intended visits, and the invitation declined by Apollos (5-12). These are followed by an energetic final exhortation, into which is woven a commendation of Stephanas and other Cor. now with P. (13-18), and by the epistolary salutations which are full and animated, a word of severe warning being attached to his own affectionate greeting and autograph signature (19-24).

§ 57. Concerning the Collection, xvi. 1-4. During his Third Missionary Journey P. was collecting money for the relief of the Christian poor in Jerusalem. Two chaps. in the middle of 2 Cor. are devoted to this business, which, as it seems, had moved slowly in the interval between the two Epp. The collection had been set on foot some time ago in Galatia (1); in Macedonia it had been warmly taken up (2 Cor. viii. f.); from Acts xx. 4 we learn that "Asians" also (from Ephesus and the neighbourhood) accompanied P. in the deputation which conveyed the Gentile offering to the mother Church. A little later, in writing to Rome (xv. 25-32), the Ap. refers to the collection, with great satisfaction, as completed. Every province of the Pauline mission appears to have aided in this charity, which, while it relieved a distressing need, was prompted also by Paul's warm love for his people (Rom. ix. 3), and by his desire to knit together the Gentile and Jewish sections of the Church, and to prove to the latter the true faith and brotherhood of the converts from heathenism (2 Cor. ix. 11-14). P. had taken part in a similar relief sent from Antioch many years before (Acts xi. f.); and in the Conference of Jerus., when the direction of the Gentile mission was committed to him, the heads of the Judæan Church laid on him the injunction to "remember the poor" (Gal. ii. 10). Foreign Jews were accustomed, as an act of piety, to replenish the poor-funds of the mother city. The Christian community of Jerus. suffered from chronic poverty. With little natural or commercial wealth, the city lived mainly upon its religious character—on the attractions of the Temple and the Feasts

2. [f]κατὰ [g]μίαν [h]σαββάτων[1] ἕκαστος ὑμῶν [i]παρ' [i]ἑαυτῷ τιθέτω, [k]θησαυρίζων ὅ,τι ἂν[2] εὐοδῶται[3]· ἵνα μή, [m]ὅταν ἔλθω, [m]τότε

f Distrib., see xiv. 27, xv. 31. g Acts xx. 7; Mk. xvi. 2; Lk. xxiv. 1; Jo. xx. 1, 19. h In this sense, Mk. xvi. 9; Lk. xviii. 12. i Mt. xxi. 25. παρα, cf. 2 Tim. iv. 13; Lk. xix. 7, etc. k 2 Cor. xii. 14; Rom. ii. 5; Jas. v. 3; 2 Pet. iii. 7; Mt. vi. 19 f.; Lk. xii. 21; 4 Ki. xx. 17. l Rom. i. 10; 3 Jo. 2; Gen. xxxix. 3, 23. m See xv. 54.

[1] σαββατου, all uncc. but ℵ* (σαββατω), ℵcKLM.

[2] εαν (?), BIM. So W.H., uniformly. [3] ευοδωθη, ℵcACIKM, etc.

thronged by Jews from the whole world; and the Nazarenes, while suffering from the intense bigotry of their compatriots in other ways, would find it esp. difficult to participate in employments connected with religion. 1 Thess. ii. 14 intimates that the Judæan Churches had recently undergone severe persecution.

Ver. 1. "But about the collection that (is made) for the saints" (τῆς εἰς τ. ἁγίους). This clause might be construed as subordinate to the following ὡς διέταξα; it reads more naturally as a detached title to the par.—indicating this, seemingly, as another topic of the Church Letter (cf. vii. 1, viii. 1, xii. 1). The subject is alluded to as one in which the Cor. were already interested (see 2 Cor. ix. 2).—λογία (more correctly spelt λογεία) = cl. Gr. συλλογή, or ἔρανος (club-contribution); elsewhere in Paul χάρις (3), εὐλογία (2 Cor. ix. 5), λειτουργία (2 Cor. ix. 12), κοινωνία (Rom. xv. 26). Till the other day this word counted as a h.l. in Gr. literature; but the Egyptian Gr. papyri furnish instances of it as a business term, denoting, along with λογεύω (from which it should be derived), the collecting of money either in the way of imposts or voluntary assessments: see Deissmann's Bibelstudien, pp. 40 ff., Hn. in Meyer's Kommentar ad loc.—The Cor. understand from previous communications who are meant by "the saints" (cf. Rom. xv. 31): Hf. thinks that the Christians of Jerus. are so called by eminence, but such a distinction is un-Pauline (Gal. iii. 28); rather, the fact that the collection is made for the saints commends it to saints (i. 2: cf. 2 Cor. ix. 12 ff.). Such ministry is part of "the work of the Lord" in which the Cor., a moment ago, were bidden to "abound" (xv. 58).—ὥσπερ διέταξα κ.τ.λ.: "Just as I gave order to the Churches of Galatia, so also do you act". This direction was either given by P. personally on his last visit to Gal. at the outset of the Third Missionary Journey (Acts xviii. 23), more than two years before, or through letter or messengers from Ephesus at a later time. This ref. fairly implies that the arrangement made had been successful in Gal.; the business being completed there some while ago, the Ap. makes no observation upon it in the extant Ep. to the Gal., which was probably contemporary with 1 and 2 Cor. (See Lt., Introd. to Gal.). On the question as to the part of "Galatia" intended, see Introd. to Gal. in this Comm., and notes on the relevant passages in Acts.

Ver. 2 rehearses the rule previously laid down for Galatia: "On every first (day) of the week let each of you by himself (= at home) lay up, making a store (of it), whatever he may be prospered in".—μίαν σαββάτου—'echād shabbath or bashshabbāth—according to Hebrew idiom (see parls.) for the days of the week, the term κυριακὴ ἡμέρα (Rev. i. 10) not being yet current, while the heathen name (dies solis) is avoided. The earliest mention of this Christian day, going to show that the First Day, not the Sabbath, was already the Sacred Day of the Church (cf. Acts xx. 7), appropriate therefore for deeds of charity (cf. Matt. xii. 12).—παρ' ἑαυτῷ, apud se, chez lui (see parls).—θησαυρίζων, "making a treasure," describes each householder "paulatim cumulum aliquem faciens" (Gr.), till at the end the accumulated store should be paid over.—εὐοδῶται (from εὖ and ὁδός, to send well on one's way) is pr. sbj., with ἂν of contingency and ὅ, τι in acc. of specification: any little superfluity that Providence might throw in a Cor. Christian's way, he could put into this sacred hoard (cf. 2 Cor. viii. 12). Many in this Church were slaves, without wages or stated income. The Vg. renders, "quod si bene placuerit," as though reading ὅ, τι ἐὰν εὐδοκῇ; and Bg. wrongly, "quod commodum sit".—ἵνα μή, ὅταν ἔλθω, τότε κ.τ.λ.: "that there may not be, when I come, collections going on then". P. would avoid the unseemliness and the difficulty of raising the money suddenly, at the last moment; and he wishes when he comes to be free to devote himself to [n] λογίαι γίνωνται. 3. ὅταν δὲ [n] παραγένωμαι, οὓς ἐὰν [o] δοκιμάσητε,[1] [p] δι᾽ [p] ἐπιστολῶν[1] τούτους πέμψω [q] ἀπενεγκεῖν τὴν [r] χάριν ὑμῶν εἰς Ἰερουσαλήμ· 4. ἐὰν δὲ ᾖ[2] [s] ἄξιον[2] τοῦ κἀμὲ πορεύεσθαι, σὺν ἐμοὶ πορεύσονται.

5. Ἐλεύσομαι δὲ πρὸς ὑμᾶς ὅταν Μακεδονίαν [t] διέλθω, Μακεδονίαν γὰρ [t] διέρχομαι· 6. [o] πρὸς ὑμᾶς δὲ [u] τυχὸν [v] παραμενῶ,[3] ἢ καὶ[4] [w] παραχειμάσω, ἵνα ὑμεῖς με [x] προπέμψητε οὗ ἐὰν πορεύωμαι· n Absol., Heb. ix. 11; Acts passim; Lk. xii. 51, xix. 16; Jo. iii. 23; Gen. xiv. 13. o In this sense, 2 Cor. viii. 8; Rom. i. 28, xiv. 22; 1 Th. ii. 4. Cf. iii. 13. p 2 Cor. x. 11; 2 Th. ii. 2, 15, iii. 14. q Rev. xvii. 3, xxi. 10; Acts xix. 12; Lk. xvi. 22; Mk. xv. 1. r In this sense, 2 Cor. viii. 6 f., 19. s With gen. of thing, Rom. i. 32; 1 Tim. i. 15, iv. 9, v. 18, vi. 1; 11 exx. in Lk. and Acts; Mt. iii. 8. Here only with inf.; cf. Lk. xxiv 25. t See x. 1. u Bibl. h.l.; cl. idiom; cf. xiv. 10. v καταμενω, Acts i. 13; παραμενω, Phil. i. 25; Heb. vii. 23; Jas. i. 25; Gen. xliv. 33. w Tit. iii. 12; Acts xxvii. 12, xxviii. 11. x 2 Cor. i. 16; Rom. xv. 24; Tit. iii. 13; 3 Jo. 6; Acts xv. 3, xx. 38, xxi. 5.

[1] Lachm., Tisch., Tr., W.H., R.V. marg., place the comma after δι᾽ επιστολην, attaching this adjunct to δοκιμασητε: see note below.

[2] αξιον ῃ: ℵcABCIMP. So critt. edd., exc. Tisch.

[3] καταμενω (?): BM, 67. So W.H. and Weiss: παραμ. looks like an assimilation to παραχειμασω; the stronger καταμενω is intrinsically fitting, by contrast with εν παροδῳ: see note below.

[4] Om. και (?) BM; W.H. txt.—και in marg.

higher matters (cf. Acts vi. 2)—"tunc alia agens" (Bg.).

Vv. 3, 4. The Cor. are to choose delegates to bear their bounty, who will travel to Jerus. with P., if this be deemed fit. Acts xx. 1-4 shows that in the event a large number of representatives of Gentile Churches voyaged with P., doubtless on this common errand.—δι᾽ ἐπιστολῶν may qualify either δοκιμάσητε (Bz., Cv., Est., A.V. and R.V. txt., Ed.) or πέμψω (R.V. marg., with Gr. Ff., and most moderns). Being chosen by the Cor., the delegates surely must have credentials from them (cf. 2 Cor. iii. 1, and Acts xv., for such letters passing from Church to Church; also 1 Clem. ad Corinth.). At the same time, as P. is directing the whole business, he will "send" the deputies and introduce them at Jerus. On δοκιμάζω, see note to iii. 13.—ἐὰν δὲ ἄξιον ᾖ κ.τ.λ., "But if it be worth while that I should journey too, they shall journey with me"—a hint that P. would only take part in presenting the collection if the character of the aid sent made it creditable; otherwise the delegates must go alone; he will not associate himself with a mean charity. The inf. (in gen. case), τοῦ κἀμὲ πορεύεσθαι, depends on ἄξιον—"worthy of my going," "si dignum fuerit ut et ego eam" (Vg.); it can hardly be softened into "if it be right (seemly on any ground: as in 2 Thess. i. 3, where ἄξιον is unqualified) that I should go" (Ed.)—as though the Ap. deprecated being obtrusive; he is guarding his self-respect, being scarcely sure of the liberality of the Cor. "Justa estimatio sui non est superbia" (Bg.).

§ 58. Visits to Corinth, xvi. 5-12. The arrangements for the Collection have led P. to speak of his approaching visit to Cor., and he explains more definitely his plans in this respect (5-9). Timothy's coming, though not certain, may be looked for speedily; and the Ap., with some solicitude, asks for him considerate treatment (10 f.). Apollos is not coming at present, as the Cor. seem to have desired and as Paul had urged upon him; he prefers to wait until circumstances are more favourable (12).

Vv. 5, 6. "But I will come to you, when I have gone through Macedonia." The Ap. writes from Ephesus some time before Pentecost (8), probably before Easter (v. 8; see note); he intends to traverse Macedonia on his way (διέρχομαι, repeated with emphasis, regularly denotes in the Acts an evangelistic tour: see xiii. 6, xvi. 6, xx. 25, etc.), completing the work of his mission, there so abruptly terminated (Acts xvi. f.). This task will require considerable time (it occupied the months of summer and autumn, during which the Ap. penetrated beyond Mac. into Illyria; Rom. xv. 19), so that P. expects to see Cor. not much before winter (6). He adds therefore in explanation, "For I am going through Macedonia (travelling over the region:

7. [y] οὐ [y] θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς [z] ἄρτι ἐν [a] παρόδῳ ἰδεῖν· ἐλπίζω δὲ [1] χρόνον τινὰ [b c] ἐπιμεῖναι [c] πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος [d] ἐπιτρέπῃ.[2] 8. [b] ἐπιμενῶ δὲ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἕως τῆς [e] Πεντηκοστῆς· 9. [f] θύρα γάρ μοι [f] ἀνέῳγε μεγάλη καὶ [g] ἐνεργής,[3] καὶ [h] ἀντικείμενοι πολλοί. 10. ἐὰν δὲ ἔλθῃ Τιμόθεος,[4] [i] βλέπετε ἵνα [k] ἀφόβως [c] γένηται [c] πρὸς ὑμᾶς· τὸ γὰρ

y See x. 20. z See iv. 11. a N.T. h.l. Gen. xxxviii. 14. b In this sense, Gal. i. 18 (with προς); Phil. i. 24; Acts six times. c See ii. 3; also 1 Th. iii. 4; 1 Jo. i. 2; Jo. i. 1; Mt. xiii. 56. d See xiv. 34. e Acts ii. 1, xx. 16; Tob. ii. 1; 2 Macc. xii. 32. f 2 Cor. ii. 12; Col. iv. 3; Acts xiv. 27; Rev. iii. 8, 20, iv. 1; Isa. xlv. 1. For θυρα (fig.), Lk. xiii. 24; Jo. x. 9; Hos. ii. 15. For the vb., 2 Cor. vi. 11; Rom. iii. 13; Rev. iii. 7; Mt. vii. 7 f., etc. g Phm. 6; Heb. iv. 12; -γειν, -γημα, see xii. 6; -γεια, Eph. i. 19, etc. h Gal. v. 17; Phil. i. 28; 2 Th. ii. 4; 1 Tim. i. 10, v. 14; Lk. xiii. 17, xxi. 15; Zech. iii. 1. i See i. 26. With ινα, Col. iv. 17; πως, see iii. 10. k Phil. i. 14; Jude 12; Lk. i. 74; Prov. i. 33; Wisd. xvii. 4.

[1] γαρ, all uncc. but KL, and all anc. verss. but syrp. aeth.

[2] επιτρεψῃ, ℵABCM (P -ψει); -πῃ, Western and Syrian.

[3] εναργης, some latt. and vg., evidens; no extant Gr. codd.

[4] Τειμοθεος, a favourite itacism of B*D*.

pr., of imminent purpose); but with you haply I will abide (καταμενῶ, as in Acts i. 13, signifies, by contrast to διέρχομαι, keeping to Cor. instead of touring through the province), or [even] spend the winter". Paul will time his visit, if possible, so as to make his winter-quarters in Cor.; in any case, when he arrives, he will give the Cor. the full benefit of his presence. He did so stay for three months (Acts xx. 3). For πρὸς, in converse with, see vv. 7, 10, ii. 3, and parls.—τυχὸν (acc. abs. of neut. ptp.) = εἰ τύχοι (see parl.)—another of the cl. idioms confined to this Ep.; it indicates the uncertainty of human plans, and is piously replaced by ἐὰν ὁ Κύρ. ἐπιτρέψῃ in ver. 7.—In this plan P. has a further aim, which he mentions to show his dependence on the Cor.: "in order that you may send me forward, wheresoever I may go"—i.e. probably, though not certainly, to Jerus. (4); cf. ver. 11, 2 Cor. i. 16, Rom xv. 24. It would help P., whose infirmities required friendly attentions, to have a good "send-off" on his leaving Europe. A generous "collection for the saints" would be a welcome lift (1, 4).

Ver. 7. "For I would not see you now, in passing; for (γὰρ) I hope to stay some length of time (χρόνον τινὰ) with you, if the Lord permit." P. could have crossed by sea and taken Cor. on his way to Mac. (cf. 2 Cor. i. 15 f.); the Cor. had requested his speedy coming, which might have been so arranged. But such a visit could only have been ἐν παρόδῳ (explaining the ἄρτι), "in the way-by," as the summer must be devoted to Mac.; this flying visit would not be of service; there is much to be done at Cor. (xi. 34, etc.), and when the Ap. does come he means to stay "some time". His recent short visit had been very unsatisfactory (see Introd., chap. ii.).—For ἄρτι, see note on iv. 11; it is in tacit contrast with the future, as in xiii. 12. For ἐπιμεῖναι, "to stay on" (in time)—distinguished from καταμένω, "to stay fixedly" (in place or condition: 6), see parls.—ἐὰν ὁ Κύρ. κ.τ.λ., see parls., also to iv. 19,—pia conditio (Bg.): Paul's plans have been repeatedly overruled (Acts xvi. 6 f.; 1 Thess. ii. 18). He says "if the Lord permit," thinking of his visit as a pleasure; but "if the Lord will," in the parl. clause, iv. 18 f., viewing it as a painful duty.

Vv. 8, 9. "But I stay on in Ephesus until the Pentecost"—τῆς πεντηκοστῆς (ἡμέρας), "the fiftieth day" from the 16th Nisan in the Passover Feast (see parls.). This suggests that P. is writing not very long before Whitsuntide; v. 6 ff. indicated a date for the Ep. immediately antecedent to Easter. Ver. 9 explains why the Ap. must remain at Eph. some time longer, although required at Cor.: "for a door is open to me, great and effectual, and (there are) many adversaries". This θύρα is defined in Col. iv. 3 (cf. 2 Cor. ii. 12) as a θύρα τοῦ λόγου—a door open to the preacher; in Acts xiv. 27 it is seen from the other side, as θύρα πίστεως—a door for the entrance of the believing hearer; see parls. for kindred applications of the figure. The door is μεγάλη in respect of its width and the region into which it opens, ἐνεργής in respect of the influence gained by entering it.—ἀντικείμενοι πολλοί (cf. xv. 32): an additional reason for not retreating; cf. Phil. i. 28. The terrible riot that shortly

[l] ἔργον [l] Κυρίου [m] ἐργάζεται ὡς καὶ ἐγώ[1]· 11. μή τις οὖν αὐτὸν [n] ἐξουθενήσῃ· [x] προπέμψατε δὲ αὐτὸν [o] ἐν [o] εἰρήνῃ, ἵνα ἔλθῃ πρός με· [p] ἐκδέχομαι γὰρ αὐτὸν μετὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν. 12. Περὶ δὲ Ἀπολλὼ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ· [q] πολλὰ[2] [r] παρεκάλεσα αὐτὸν [r] ἵνα ἔλθῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς μετὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν· καὶ [s] πάντως οὐκ [t] ἦν [t u] θέλημα [u] ἵνα νῦν ἔλθῃ, ἐλεύσεται δὲ ὅταν [v] εὐκαιρήσῃ.

l See xv. 58.
m Acts xiii. 41 (Hab. i. 5); Jo. iii. 21, vi. 28, ix. 4; Mt. xxvi. 10; Ps. xliii. 1.
n See i. 28.
o See vii. 15.
p See xi. 33.
q Adv., ver. 19; Rom. xvi. 6, 12, xv. 22 (τα π.); Jas. iii. 2; ten times in Mk.
r See i. 10.
s See v. 10.
t Mt. xviii. 14.
u Jo. vi. 39 f. Cf. θελω ινα, Mt. vii. 12; Mk. vi. 25, x. 35; Lk. vi. 31; Jo. xvii. 24.
v Acts xvii. 21; Mk. vi. 31. -ρος, Heb. iv. 6; Mk. vi. 21; -ρως, 2 Tim. iv. 2; Mk. xiv. 11; -ρια, Lk. xxii. 6.

[1] καγω: ℵACKLP, and some minn.: so most crit. edd. και εγω: DG, etc. εγω (simply): BM. So W.H. txt.
The last reading best accounts for the others. It appears to be Neutral; καγω Alexandrian, και εγω Western and Syrian. The emphasis given by και is scarcely in keeping here, while it is perfectly suitable in vii. 8 and x. 33 (which may have suggested καγω to copyists here), and in 2 Cor. xi. 12; cf. Gal. iv. 12.

[2] ℵ*D*G, with corresponding latt. and some anc. codd. of vg., preface this clause with δηλω υμιν οτι (πολλα κ.τ.λ.)—an ex. of Western license.

afterwards drove Paul from Eph. verified this statement (Acts xix.). Evangelism flourishes under fierce opposition; "Sæpe bonum et, contra id, malum simul valde vigent" (Bg.).

Vv. 10, 11. ἐὰν (not ὅταν) δὲ ἔλθῃ Τιμόθεος: "But if Timothy come"—his coming is not certain. He and Erastus have been before this sent to Macedonia (Acts xix. 21 f.) in advance of P., with instructions to go forward to Cor. (iv. 17 above); he might be expected to arrive about the same time as this letter. But local circumstances, or even the report of the unfriendly attitude of the Cor. (Ed.), might detain him in Mac. He is found in Mac. with P. when some months later 2 Cor. is written: there is no explicit ref. in that Ep. to Timothy's presence at Cor. in the interval; but Titus' visit and report are largely in evidence. Ed. says, "In point of fact he (Tim.) did not come" (cf. Lt., Journal of Sac. and Cl. Philology, ii., 198 ff.; also El.). But this assertion is too positive. In iv. 17 above P. announced Tim.'s coming definitely and laid stress upon it. Tim. shares in the Address of 2 Cor., and the fact that he is associated by the Ap. with himself in the significant "we" of vii. 2 ff. (cf. ii. 5-11) points to his being involved in some way in the "grief" which P. had suffered from Cor. subsequently to the writing of 1 Cor. Very possibly Timothy was the ἀδικηθεὶς of 2 Cor. vii. 12, in whose person, seeking as he did to carry out the directions of 1 Cor. iv. 17, Paul had been insulted by some prominent Cor. Christian (ὁ ἀδικήσας).—If this actually happened, the apprehensions expressed here about the treatment Tim. might receive, proved only too well-founded: "see (to it) that without fear he may be with you" (or hold converse with you: γένηται πρὸς ὑμᾶς, see ii. 3, and parls.) . . . "let no one then set him at naught". These words point to Timothy's diffidence, as well as to his comparative youth: see 1 Tim. iv. 12, and the vein of exhortation in 2 Tim. ii. 1-13 and iii. 10-iv. 18. Tim. was P.'s complement, as Melanchthon was Luther's—gentle, affectionate, studious, but not of robust or masculine character. The temper of the Cor. Church would be peculiarly trying and discouraging to him. Paul hopes that regard for him will have some restraining effect upon the Cor.—τὸ γὰρ ἔργον Κυρίου (cf. xv. 58) κ.τ.λ. identifies Timothy in the strongest way with P. himself: cf. iv. 17, Phil. ii. 20; similarly respecting Titus, in 2 Cor. viii. 23. For ἐξουθενέω, see parls.—"But send him forward in peace"—for if Tim. attempts the task indicated in iv. 17, a rupture is very possible, such as, we gather from 2 Cor. ii. and vii., actually ensued.—From the following words, "that he may come to me, for I am awaiting him," it appears that P. expects Tim's return before he leaves Eph.: cf., for the vb., xi. 33.—It is doubtful whether μετὰ τῶν ἀδελφῶν qualifies the subject—"I with the brethren"—those of vv. 12-18, the Cor. brethren now in Eph. and interested in Tim's success at

13. [w]Γρηγορεῖτε, [x]στήκετε ἐν τῇ πίστει· [y]ἀνδρίζεσθε,[1] [z]κραταιοῦσθε· 14. [a]πάντα [a]ὑμῶν ἐν ἀγάπῃ [b]γινέσθω. 15. [c]Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί—[d]οἴδατε τὴν [e]οἰκίαν Στεφανᾶ,[2] [d]ὅτι ἐστὶν [f]ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας καὶ [g]εἰς [h]διακονίαν τοῖς [i]ἁγίοις [g]ἔταξαν ἑαυτοὺς— 16. [c]ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς [k]ὑποτάσσησθε [l]τοῖς [l]τοιούτοις, καὶ παντὶ τῷ

w Col. iv. 2; 1 Th. v. 6 10; Acts xx. 31; 1 Pet. v. 8; thrice in Rev.; 14 exx. in Syn. GG.
x In this sense, Rom. xiv. 4; Gal. v. 1; Phil. i. 27, iv. 1; 1 Th. iii. 8; 2 Th. ii. 12; Jo. viii. 44.
y N.T. h.l.; Josh. i. 6.
z Eph. iii. 16; Lk. i. 80, ii. 40; Neh. ii. 18. -αιος, 1 Pet. v. 6.
a This constr. of πας, h.l. b See ix. 15.
c See i. 10; ver. 12.
d See iii. 20; with οιδα, 2 Cor. xii. 3 f.; 1 Th. ii. 1.
e Phil. iv. 22; Jo. iv. 53; Gen. l. 8.
f See xv. 20.
g Acts xiii. 48; cf. 2 Macc. vi. 21, προς and dat. For vb., Rom. xiii. 1; Acts xv. 2; Mt. viii. 9, etc.
h See xii. 5.
i See vi. 1.
k See xiv. 32.
l See v. 5.

[1] Ins. και AD, cop. vg. syr^sch.

[2] Στεφανα και Φορτουνατου: ℵ^cD and some minn., vg. (oldest codd.), cop., Dam.. Ambrst. C*G add και Αχαΐκου besides.

Cor., who are delaying their return until he brings his report (so Hf., Gd.); or the object—"I await him with (= and) the brethren," i.e. those, including possibly Erastus, whom P. expects to arrive at Eph. from Cor. along with Tim. (so most interpreters). The relevancy of the words on the latter construction is not obvious. On the former view, "the brethren" of vv. 11 and 12 are the same, being the deputies who had brought over the Cor. Church Letter to P., and who are now awaiting Tim's return before they themselves return home. This hints an additional reason why the Cor. should with all speed send Timothy back to Paul "in peace".

Ver. 12. The manner in which the clause Περὶ δὲ Ἀπολλὼ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ is loosely prefixed to the statement of this ver. ("Now about Apollos the brother"—) suggests that Apollos' coming had been mentioned in the Church Letter: cf. ver. 1, vii. 1, etc. Respecting Apollos, see notes to i. 12, and Acts xviii. 24 ff.—Considering the way in which Ap. had been made a rival to P. in Cor., it shows magnanimity on Paul's side to desire his return, and a modest delicacy on the side of Apollos to decline the request: καὶ πάντως οὐκ ἦν θέλημα ἵνα κ.τ.λ., "And there was no will at all (it was altogether contrary to his will) that he should come now".—εὐκαιρέω (see parls.) denotes "to have good opportunity". The present ferment at Cor. affords no καιρὸς for Apollos' coming. For πάντως, and θέλημα ἵνα, see parls.

§ 59. Concluding Homily, xvi. 13-18. According to the Apostle's wont, at the end of his letter he gathers up the burden of his message into a single concise and stirring exhortation (13 f.). Watchfulness, steadfastness, manly vigour, above all Christian love, were the qualities in which this Church was lacking. Their "love" they would have a particular opportunity of showing to the family of Stephanas, who had been foremost in works of benevolence (15 f.); for St. is now returning home in charge of this Ep. with his two companions, after they had brought the letter of the Church to P. and cheered him by their society. The deputation has done a timely public service in the best spirit; their kindly offices must be duly acknowledged (17 f.).

Vv. 13, 14. Γρηγορεῖτε, στήκετε belong to a class of vbs. peculiar to later Gr.—presents based on older perfects; the former from ἐγρήγορα (ἐγείρω), the latter from ἕστηκα (ἵστημι). The first exhortation recalls xv. 33 f., the second iv. 17, x. 12, xv. 2, 11 ff.—ἀνδρίζεσθε, "play the man," viriliter agite (Vg.), adds an active element to the passive and defensive attitude implied in the previous impvs.; it looks back to xiii. 11 and xiv. 20 (relating to the glossolalia), but exhorts in general to the courageous prosecution of the Christian life by the Cor., who were enfeebled by contact with heathen society (x., 2 Cor. vi. 11 ff.). This word is common in cl. Gr.; cf. 1 Macc. ii. 64, ἰσχύσατε κ. ἀνδρίζεσθε ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, also the Homeric ἀνέρες ἐστέ.—κραταιοῦσθε enjoins manful activity, in its most energetic form (see parls.). κράτος, from which, through κραταιός (1 Peter v. 6), the vb. is derived (cl. Gr. κρατύνω), signifies superior power, mastery (see Col. i. 11, 1 Tim. vi. 16): "be [not merely strong, but] mighty". The four impvs. of ver. 13 are directed respectively against the heedlessness, fickleness, childishness, and moral enervation of the m 2 Cor. vi. 1; Rom. viii. 28; Jas. ii. 22; Mk. xvi. 20; 1 Esdr. vii. 2; 1 Macc. xii. 1.

[m] συνεργοῦντι καὶ [n] κοπιῶντι. 17. [o] Χαίρω δὲ [o] ἐπὶ τῇ [p] παρουσίᾳ Στεφανᾶ καὶ Φουρτουνάτου [1] καὶ Ἀχαϊκοῦ, ὅτι τὸ [q] ὑμῶν [2] [r] ὑστέρημα οὗτοι [3] [s] ἀνεπλήρωσαν· 18. [t] ἀνέπαυσαν γὰρ [4] τὸ ἐμὸν [u] πνεῦμα καὶ τὸ ὑμῶν· [v] ἐπιγινώσκετε οὖν [1] τοὺς [1] τοιούτους.

-γος, see iii. 9. n See xv. 10. o See xiii. 6. p In this use, 2 Cor. vii. 6 f.; Phil. i. 26, ii. 12; 2 Macc. viii. 12, xv. 21. Cf. xv. 23. q υμετερον, see xv. 31. r 2 Cor. viii. 13 f., ix. 12, xi. 9; Phil. ii. 30; Col. i. 24; 1 Th. iii. 10; Lk. xxi. 4; Judg. xviii. 10. -εω, see i. 7. s See xiv. 16; in this antith., Phil. ii. 30. t 2 Cor. vii. 13; Phm. 7, 20; Mt. xi. 28; 1 Chron. xxii. 9, 18. -σις, Mt. xi. 29, xii. 43; Rev. iv. 8, xiv. 11. u See xiv. 15. v 2 Cor. vi. 9; Deut. i. 17, xxxiii. 9. Cf. 1 Th. v. 12.

[1] φορτουνατου, all uncc. but KMP;

[2] υμετερον, all uncc. but ℵAKL.

[3] ουτοι, ℵBCKLP. αυτοι, ADGM, with vg. syrr.; so Lachm., Tr. marg.

[4] Ins. και DG, latt. vg., Ambrst.

Cor.: the fifth—"All your doings, let them be done (or carried on: γινέσθω) in love"—reiterates the appeal of chh. viii. and xiii. touching the radical fault of this Church; see also ii. 3, iv. 6, vi. 1-8, xi. 21 f., xii. 21, etc.

Vv. 15, 16 urge particular instances of the above ἐν ἀγάπῃ γινέσθω. The ἵνα clause of ver. 16 is complementary to παρακαλῶ (see note on i. 10), and is suspended to make room for the explanatory οἴδατε . . . ἑαυτούς: "you know that the household of Stephanas is the first-fruit of Achaia, and that they set themselves for ministering to the saints".—τὴν οἰκίαν κ.τ.λ., acc. by attraction to οἴδατε, according to the well-known Gr. usage with vbs. of this class (Wr., p. 781). There were earlier individual converts in Achaia (see Acts xvii. 34), but with this family the Gospel took root in the province and the earnest appeared of the subsequent ingathering: cf. Rom. xvi. 5; also i. 16 above, and note. The St. family must have been of independent means; for ἔταξαν ἑαυτοὺς (they arrayed or appointed themselves—made this their business) implies a systematic laying out of themselves for service, such as is possible only to those free to dispose, as they choose, of their persons and their time; see this idiom in Plato, Rep., ii., 371C.—"The saints" can hardly be the Jerus. saints of ver. 1, since εἰς διακονίαν is quite general, and the last words of ver. 16 imply manifold Christian labour; the present commission of St. to Eph. is an instance of "service to the saints".—P. "exhorts" his "brethren . . . that you also (in return for their service to you) submit yourselves to such as these (τ. τοιούτοις, referring to the interpolated οἴδατε κ.τ.λ.), and to every one that shares in the work and labours". These persons did not constitute a body of Church officers; we find no traces as yet of an official order in the church of Cor.: the Ap. enjoins spontaneous submission to the direction of those able and disposed to lead in good works. The prp. in συν-εργοῦντι refers not to St. specifically, still less to P., but generally to co-operative labour in the Church, while κοπιῶντι implies labour carried to the point of toil or suffering (see note on κόπος, iii. 8; also xv. 58). Loyal and hard work in the cause of Christ earns willing respect and deference in the Church: cf. 1 Thess. v. 12 f.

Vv. 17, 18. "But I rejoice at the presence (or coming) of Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaïcus." The stress lying on παρουσίᾳ explains the introductory δέ: "You must show respect to such men, when they reach home; but I am glad that just now they are here".—Fortunatus (Lat. name, and common) and Achaïcus (Gr., and rare) are Stephanas' companions in the deputation; the three will speedily return to Cor. Since P. thus commends them at the end of his Ep., written in reply to the Letter they had brought from Cor., perhaps they were to be its bearers also.—On Stephanas, see i. 16. The two latter names are also h.ll. in N.T.; a Fortunatus appears in Clement's list of emissaries from Rom. to Cor. (ad Cor. § 65). Ed. supposes all three to be slaves (Achaïcus, at least, resembles a slave-name), and identifies them with οἱ τ. Χλοῆς of i. 11; but this does not comport with the position given to Stephanas in vv. 15 f.; see, further, note on i. 11.—("I rejoice at their presence), because the (or my) lack of you these have filled up". ὑμέ-

19. [w]Ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς[1] αἱ [x]ἐκκλησίαι τῆς [x]Ἀσίας· [w]ἀσπάζονται[2] ὑμᾶς [y]ἐν [y]Κυρίῳ [z]πολλὰ Ἀκύλας καὶ Πρίσκιλλα,[3] σὺν [a]τῇ [a b]κατ' [b]οἶκον αὐτῶν [a]ἐκκλησίᾳ[4]· 20. [w]ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἀδελφοὶ πάντες.

w Finis of P.'s Epp., exc. Gal., Eph., 1 and 2 Tim. of other Epp., exc. 2 Pet., 1 Jo., Jude. x See ver. 1. y Rom. xvi. 2 ff.; see vii. 22 above, etc. z See ver. 12. a Rom. xvi. 5; Col. iv. 15; Phm. 2. b Acts ii. 46, v. 42; cf. εν οικῳ, xi. 34 above.

[1] CP, syr.sch. ins. πασαι.

[2] ασπαζεται, ℵCDKP. ασπαζονται: BGLM, etc.

[3] Πρισκα, ℵBMP, 17, vg. (best codd.) cop. See note below.

[4] DG, latt. vg., Clem., Pelag. add παρ' οις και ξενιζομαι (apud quos et hospitor)—an ancient gloss, contradicting the απο Φιλιππων of the Subscription.

τερον represents the objective gen. (cf. xv. 31): the presence of the three with P. could not make up any lack in Cor., but it made up to P. for the absence of the Cor., supplying him, representatively, with their desired society. El. and others read the poss. pron. subjectively—"what you were lacking in (i.e., your want of access) towards me": this constr. is consistent with the usage of ὑστέρημα (see parls.); but the former suits better the antithesis to παρουσία (Ed.), and Paul's fine courtesy.—"For they refreshed my spirit—and yours." ἀναπαύω (see parls.) describes the restful effect of friendly converse and sympathy. Paul adds καὶ ὑμῶν, realising that the comfort of heart received by himself will react upon his friends at Cor.: the Cor. will be cheered to know that their fellowship, in the persons of S., F., and A., has so greatly cheered him at a time of weariness and heavy trial (cf. 2 Cor. ii. 3, vii. 3).

Ver. 18*b* repeats in another form the advice of ver. 16: "Acknowledge (know well) then such men as these". For τοὺς τοιούτους, see parls., and ver. 16.—ἐπιγινώσκω (see parls.) denotes strictly accurate knowledge, of persons or things; but knowledge of personal qualities implies corresponding regard to and treatment of those who possess such qualities: cf. 1 Thess. v. 12 f.

§ 60. Final Greetings, xvi. 19-24. The Ep. closes with three public salutations from the Christians surrounding P. at Ephesus to their brethren at Cor. (19, 20*a*), followed by a request to the latter, such as appears besides in 1 Thess., 2 Cor., Rom., and Phil., to "salute one another" in token of brotherly union, and of communion with those who now send their greetings (20*b*). The letter is then sealed with the writer's personal salutation (21-24) penned by his own hand, and stamped with a characteristic double motto peculiar to this Ep., which expresses the supreme peril and supreme consolation of the Christian calling (22).

Vv. 19, 20*a*. Three successive clauses, headed by ἀσπάζομαι: "There salute you the Churches of Asia. There saluteth you in the Lord abundantly Aquila and Prisca, with the assembly (church) at their house. There salute you all the brethren". The pl. expression, αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τῆς Ἀσίας, accords with what appears elsewhere as to the general diffusion of the Gospel in the province of Asia during Paul's three years' ministry at Eph. (Acts xix. 10, 26; Col. i. 6, ii. 1, iv. 13, 16), and as to the solidarity of the Asian Churches gathered round Eph., to which collectively the Revelation of John, and probably the (so-called) Ep. to the Ephesians, were addressed. While P. had not personally visited all these communities (Col. ii. 1), he was in touch with them and knew their mind towards their brethren in Greece. Desiring a more catholic feeling in the Cor. Church (see note on i. 2), P. makes the most of these Church greetings.—The second salutation has a note of personal warmth, as the first of catholic breadth: Aq. and Prisca "send much greeting" (πολλά—cf. 12, etc.—in requests and wishes, implies frequency or intensity, or both); and "in the Lord"—not as a matter of ordinary friendship, but in the way of love and service to Christ. This worthy pair entertained the Ap. in Cor. when he first came there (Acts xviii. 1 ff.); on some occasion (perhaps about this time at Eph.) they risked their lives for his (Rom. xvi. 4). They had now migrated to Eph., where they reappear some years later in 2 Tim. iv. 19; see notes on Rom. xvi. 3 ff., for their further history. Thrice their names figure in the Acts, and thrice in the Epp.—Prisca first ("Priscilla" only in Acts) four times: see Hort's Prolegom. to Rom. and Eph., pp. 12 ff., Sand.-Headlam, Romans, pp.

ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν [c]φιλήματι [c]ἁγίῳ. 21. Ὁ [d]ἀσπασμὸς, τῇ [e]ἐμῇ [d e]χειρί, ΠΑΥ'ΛΟΥ· 22. [f g]εἴ [f]τις [g]οὐ [h]φιλεῖ τὸν [h]Κύριον

c 2 Cor. xiii. 12; Rom. xvi. 16; 1 Th. v. 26; 1 Pet. v. 14. φιλημα besides, Lk. vii. 45, xxii. 48; Prov. xxvii. 6; Cant. i. 2. φιλεω in this sense, Mt. xxvi. 48, etc.; καταφιλεω, Acts xx. 37; 5 exx. in GG. d Col. iv. 18; 2 Th. iii. 17. The noun besides. Mt. xxiii. 7; Lk. i. 29, etc. e Gal. vi. 11; Phm. 19. f 2 Tim. iii. 10; Mt. xvi. 24; Rev. xiv. 11. g See vii. 9. h Jo. xxi. 15 ff. Cf. note c above.

418 ff., also Rom. ad loc. above, on the conjectures associated with this lady's name. The vb. is sing., the two sending one greeting.—The "ecclesia at their house" can scarcely mean the whole Eph. Church, but some neighbouring part of it accustomed to gather, more or less formally, at Aquila's hospitable hearth. If P. lodged with A. (see txtl. note), as he had done in Cor., the house would be a rendezvous for Ephesian Christians: cf. Rom. xvi. 5, Col. iv. 15, Philem. 2, Acts xii. 12.—οἱ ἀδελφοὶ πάντες comprise the whole body of Ephesian believers, in distinction from the smaller circle of Aquila's house, and from the mass of the Asian Christians.

Ver. 20*b*. ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ = ἐν φιλήματι ἀγάπης (1 Peter v. 14). This Heb. custom of the sacred kiss is retained, at Communion, by the Greek and Eastern Churches; it died out in the West from the 13th cent., after having been the subject of many Conciliar limitations, occasioned by its abuse in the decline of Christian simplicity. ἁγίῳ by position is predicative—"in a kiss that is holy". See Art. Kiss in Dict. of Christian Antiquities.

Vv. 21-24. Paul's autograph salutation, which authenticates the letter (cf. 2 Thess. iii. 17), includes the title of the greeting (21), the double motto (22), and the greeting proper—in two wishes (23 f.).

Ver. 21. ὁ ἀσπασμὸς τ. ἐμῇ χειρί,—ΠΑΥ'ΛΟΥ: "the salution, with my own hand,—of PAUL".—Παύλου apposed to τῇ ἐμῇ, and inscribed with the distinction of a personal signature. Up to this point, the Ep. was presumably written by another hand (cf. Rom. xvi. 22).

Vv. 22, 23. With pen in hand, Paul must needs give expression, in two words, to the pent-up feeling under which he has written—a fiery seal burnt upon the last leaf of the Letter; ch. vi. 12-17 of Gal. occupies a like place in that Ep. The sentiment, or motto, of the ἀσπασμὸς forms two clauses: (a) "If any one loves not the Lord, let him be anathema".—οὐ (instead of μή) in hypothetical clauses may rest upon the vb., constituting it a negative term—sc., "hates the Lord" (so Ed.: cf. vii. 9, xi. 6, xv. 13; and Rom. vii. 20, where οὐ θέλω = nolo); but Wr. (pp. 599-602) rightly distinguishes such instances as this and ix. 2 (cf. note) from the above class of combinations, accounting for the οὐ as contradictory to some tacit assertion—"if any one does not love the Lord" (as he ought, or pretends, to do): it is a spurious love that is accursed—a cold, false heart which, knowing the Lord, does not really love Him (cf. viii. 1 ff., xiii. 1 f.). The use of φιλέω for ἀγαπάω (only in Tit. iii. 15 elsewhere in P.: cf. the interchange in John xxi. 15 ff.) is noticeable: for the distinction, see Gm., s.v. φιλέω; Cr., s.v. ἀγαπάω; Trench, N.T. Syn., § 12.—οὐ φιλεῖ strikes a deep note of accusation; it is a charge of heartlessness—human affection to the Master is wanting, to say nothing of higher feeling, as with Judas and his traitor kiss (see Mt., xxvi. 47 f.); perhaps ἐν φιλήματι just above suggested this φιλεῖ.—Paul's curse on the Lord's false lovers recalls xii. 3 (see note on ἀνάθεμα): the haters of Jesus outside the Church, inspired by Satan, call Him "anathema" instead of "Lord"; and those who bow the knee to Him with a feigned heart are themselves anathema—this cry a retort to that.—ἤτω for ἔστω (see Wr., p. 85) prevails in N.T.; it is common in later Gr.

(b) The second clause of the motto, Μαρὰν ἀθά, is Aramaic transliterated into Gr.; the original cannot be quite certainly restored.—Μαρὰν, it is fairly certain, represents Marán (Syrian) or Maran'a (Aramaic: the final 'a of the suffixed noun having coalesced with the initial 'a of the vb.), and ἀθά the pf. Peal of 'ᵃtha', to come. But it is doubtful whether 'ᵃtha' is strictly past—"our Lord hath come" (so Cm. and the ancients, with the Syriac Vers.; and Kautzsch in his Gramm. d. Bib.-Aramäischen, pp. 12 and 174; see also Field's Otium Norvic., iii., pp. 110 f.); or whether the pf. should be rendered proleptically—"Our Lord cometh," "will come," "is at hand," after the manner of Phil. iv. 5, 1 Thess. iv. 14 ff., James v. 7 ff., Rev. i. 7, iii. 11, xxii. 20. The latter sense accords with the context, with the strain of ch. xv., and with the N.T. attitude towards our Lord's return: see i. 7, xi. 26, 1 Thess. i.

Ἰησοῦν[1] Χριστόν,[1] [l]ἤτω [k]ἀνάθεμα· [l]Μαρὰν ἀθά.[2] 23. Ἡ [m]χάρις τοῦ [m]Κυρίου[3] Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ[4] [m]μεθ᾽ ὑμῶν. ἡ [n]ἀγάπη [n]μου μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀμήν.[5]

Πρὸς Κορινθίους πρώτη ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Φιλίππων διὰ Στεφανᾶ καὶ Φουρτουνάτου καὶ Ἀχαϊκοῦ καὶ Τιμοθέου.[6]

l Jas. v. 12; Ps. ciii. 31; 1 Macc. x. 31.
k See xii. 3.
l H.l.; see note below.
m 2 Cor. xiii. 13; Rom. xvi. 20, 24; Gal. vi. 18; Phil. iv. 23; 1 Th. v. 28; 2 Th. iii. 18; Phm. 25; Rev. xxii. 21. Without μεθ᾽ υμ., 2 Cor. viii. 9; Acts xv. 11.
n Subj. gen., Phil. i. 9; Col. i. 8, 13; 1 Th. iii. 6; 2 Th. i. 3; Phm. 5, 7; Rev. ii. 4, 19; Mt. xxiv. 12; Jo. xv. 9 f. H.l. for this form of wish; cf. 2 Cor. xii. 15.

[1] Om. Ιησουν Χριστον ℵ*ABC*M, 17. KP, syr^sch., Victorin., Pelag. add ημων to Κυριον. Ιησ. χρ. is a Western and Syrian addition. The arm. vers., one cod. of vg., and a few Ff., add Ιησουν alone.

[2] Some edd. write μαρανaθa as a single word.

[3] ALP, many minn., cop. syr^sch., several Ff., ins. ημων.

[4] Om. Χριστου ℵ*B, 17, 73, oldest vg. go., Thdrt. So the crit. edd., exc. Lachm. and R.V., who retain Χρ.

[5] Om. αμην BFM, 17. So all crit. edd.; only Lachm. brackets. A liturgical addition.

[6] The Subscription, as in other Epp., varies much in form. ℵABC* read προς Κορινθιους α̅, as at the beginning of the Ep. The received Subscr., due probably to a misunderstanding of ver. 5 (Μακεδονιαν γαρ διερχομαι), appears first in the Syrian uncc. KL. B³P and a few others have, more correctly, εγραφη απο Εφεσου.

10, etc. So most moderns. Bickell, Gd., and a few others, would read Maran'a tha', making the vb. impv.—"Our Lord, O come!"—in keeping with Rev. xxii. 20; but this is questionable in grammar, and less appropriate. The exclamation, like Ἀββᾶ (Rom. viii. 15, Gal. iv. 6) and Ἀμήν, was probably caught up by Gentile Christians from the first preachers, who in moments of rapture naturally reverted to their mother tongue; cf. Ed. ad loc. Such salient and mystic phrases might serve as watchwords, or on occasion as passwords, amongst the early Christians. In Didaché, x. 6, Μαρὰν ἀθὰ stands as the closing formula of the Thanksgiving Prayer at the Eucharist, apparently in the sense of xi. 26 above. For other interpretations, numerous and often fanciful, see the digest in Mr.-Hn. ad loc., also N. Schmidt in the Journal of Bibl. Liter., 1894, i., ii., 50 ff.

Vv. 23, 24. Having uttered the great watchword of the waiting Church, Paul has only to add his personal benediction upon the readers: (1) in his favourite phrase of farewell, desiring them Christ's grace—a wish expanded in 2 Cor. into the Trinitarian blessing of ch. xiii. 13; (2) in the further wish, peculiar to this Ep. and fitting in view of the frequent censures of the letter, which might seem to indicate alienation on the writer's part (cf. iv. 14 f., 2 Cor. xi. 11, xii. 15; Gal. iv. 16 ff.)—"My love be with you all in Christ Jesus". Many Cor. Christians ranged themselves under other leaders, many criticised and opposed the Ap., some he has been obliged to threaten with the "rod" (iv. 21); nevertheless he desires his love to "all,"—and that abidingly, "with you all, in Christ Jesus," who is the basis and bond of love amongst His people. Mr., Hn., Bt. read the last sentence as a matter-of-fact, not a wish, understanding ἐστὶν instead of εἴη—"My love is with you, etc."; but this destroys the parallelism with ver. 23 (see El.). The sentence expresses an aspiration rather than an actuality. Paul's "love in Christ Jesus" is not, strictly speaking, with those who "love not the Lord" (21), nor with those who "destroy the temple of God" (iii. 17), nor with the culprit of v. 1-5.

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN BY THE ABERDEEN UNIVERSITY PRESS